22230. But from your knowledge of the cost of the Poor Law in Sligo before the change took place and the cost at present, do you think there is any marked difference in regard to it—has it gone up or come down?—Yes means the whole expense of the union. I think the whole expense of the union has gone up somewhat, but of course that is not so much the fault of the Guardians as it is of the Local Government Board, because the Local Government Board have compelled us, perhaps rightly, I would say rightly, to make changes and give further accommodation, and to better the condition of the people in hospitals and all that sort of thing, and consequently the expense of working the institution has increased.

22233. But still you must have noticed that when you confine the area the supervision is much keener and closer than if you extend it. Did not the Guardians take a closer and keener interest in the granting of out-door relief under the old system than under the new?—Well, I don't know. Individual Guardians belonging to the union might do so. He might be more economical of his division than he would be of the union at large. That is what you mean, I suppose. I have seen no symptoms to that effect. My experience of the Guardians as a rule is that they are anxious to conserve the rates.

22234. But they don't take that active and keen interest in the question of out-door relief that they formerly did?—I think they do take a keen interest, and do not at all like to see extravagance, and I must say they very frequently rebel against the expenditure forced upon them by the Local Government Board.

22235. You think the Local Government Board is the chief offenders?—I don't think the chief offender. On the contrary, I think it is a very useful cog in the wheel, but there is no doubt they have gone in for changes in the condition of the poor and in the condition of the hospitals that probably the Guardians, if they were left to themselves, would be slow to adopt. That is my view of the matter. At the same time you must take me as believing that the changes are for the better. Individually that is my opinion, because I think the improvement of the condition of the hospitals and everything of that kind is decidedly in accordance with the times, and the improvement ought to have taken place.

22236. Now you stated in the beginning that you were in favour of amalgamation to a certain extent. How far would you go in relation to that matter. I think you have told the chairman that you would consider it a hardship to remove the old and infirm any distance from their own locality?—Yes, I would.

22237. There would be no intention of removing the sick if the infirm were retained where they are present, but what hardship would you see in sending a person in fair health, say fifty-five or sixty years of age, a distance of twenty-five to thirty miles to an institution where they could be classified better, and perhaps looked after better than they are at present. Could you see any hardship in that?—No, I would keep none in these hospitals but those who would be really fit for hospitals, and if a man of fifty-five or sixty or seventy was capable of being brought to a central hospital I see no reason why he should not.

22238. Some people object, and say the people would think it a great hardship to be taken from their home surroundings. Do you think that sentiment is well-founded, or not—do you think these people in the workhouse are visited by their friends regularly once they stay in a number of years. Don't you think they are deserted altogether by their friends as a rule?—I don't think that would tell so much once they enter the walls of an institution of that kind. I have no doubt their friends say from time to time wish to see them, but I don't think it would tell very much.

22239. You think there is not very much in that point?—I don't think so. Supposing you take a person from Tubercular to Sligo, or from Sligo up to Tubercular, I don't think their friends would rebel much in that respect against it, because, of course, very often the person whom you would take would have no friends at all. It might be one out of twenty that would have any person that would be interested about them.

22240. In regard to the asylum you say they return to the workhouse those people once they become quiet, and their reason for that is that they have not sufficient space?—I think it is in want of room and the great pressure and want of accommodation. I don't know who exercises the authority; I am not a member of the Asylum Board.

22241. I notice in the last report that the number of lunatics in the workhouse of Sligo is only sixteen in all the workhouses. That is a small number. Do you think there could not be accommodation for that sixteen in the asylum?—From what I am told the asylum is very full. The asylum is accommodating two counties, and there is a very large increase in the number of commitments. At first when the asylum was built the number in it (of course I talk from my recollection) would not have been more than 200 or 300. I am told there are over 600 there now.

22242. Have you ever considered the advantage or disadvantage of an auxiliary asylum as compared with an asylum itself. Some of the witnesses who came before us in other places advocated the establishment of an auxiliary asylum in preference to the asylum, while other witnesses insisted that the asylum itself was the better method. Have you any views in that respect?—If you had accommodation in the asylum here you might not require an auxiliary asylum, but if, for instance, you required an expenditure as was stated of £30,000 to increase the accommodation in Sligo, I think it would be much better to have an auxiliary asylum than to add such an enormous expenditure to the present establishment. At all events I think there is too much spent on the ornamentation of the present asylum.

22543. You think they are kept up at too high a standard?—I think a reedier building would be an advantage.

22545. On the whole, now, you would be in favour of getting the different classes out of the workhouse, keep sufficient accommodation for the sick of the locality, and board out the children where it was possible to do so?—I would be in favour of relieving the establishment, but there is a point which you have not, I think, touched on, and that is how we could get undesirable at present out of the workhouse. It is one of the difficulties that presents itself to every Board of Guardians. Take, for instance, now we have an annual training of militia here, and when the militia has been trained and the men disbanded whatever money they get they spend it, and then they present themselves at the workhouse and our relieving officer says he has no option but to give them a ticket. We pass a resolution and turn them out and in a day or two they return again to us.

22546. If this reformatory that was mentioned were established, would not that be the place to send these people to?—Yes. I think if you could capture some of them for that it would be very desirable.

22547. And if they were turned over to the attention of the police, altogether outside the scope of the Poor Law, would not that be desirable. Let it be the duty of the authorities rather than of the Poor Law Guardians to look after these people?—The authorities cannot take any cognizance of these unless they commit some crime.

22548. CHAIRMAN.—Unless the law was amended? Unless the law was amended.

22549. Mr. MRANAGHAN.—They are offenders to a certain extent, because they pay upon the public, not giving any value and getting a living for nothing either out of the kindness of the people, or simply because the people don't like to make enemies of them. If these people in future were turned over to the police, then that would relieve the Guardians of any trouble?—I daresay it would, and one then also of attempting to force themselves on the Guardians.

22550. And don't you think it would be a very suitable thing for the authorities to pay for the care of these people, just as they do for the care of the jailbirds?—I am sorry to say the authorities are inclined to throw too much upon the local rates, and many things that the Imperial Government ought to pay for are put on the local rates. In fact it is becoming a serious burden. That very thing you talk of, reformatories and industrial schools, we have to contribute to all these. For every child committed here to an industrial school the county has to pay 2s. 6d. I think all these ought to be kept up by the State.

22551. But, considering that this class is recruited largely from the militia, do you not think it is a good reason why the people should make a demand on the Government to provide for their maintenance without putting it on the local authorities?—But as the law exists there is no use in demanding from the Government, because they consider they have no responsibility once they disband them and give them 21s. or 30s. They go and spend that money on the spree or something of the kind and the next thing is they come to the workhouse. If we then apply to the authorities they tell us they have no responsibility.

22552. Don't you think it is a claim that is very strong; it is a claim that the people could advocate very strongly, on the ground that this class is recruited largely from the militia and their having done Governmental service?—I think so.

22553. And, therefore, the Government should look after their maintenance and not place it on the local authorities?—I think the Government should look after those and devote some means by which they would not be a burden on the rates, because the very fact of joining the militia gives them certain idle habits and makes them in a great measure habituate of the workhouse. I know some of them who live their whole life in the workhouse until the militia is called out and out they come and join the militia and use all the best they get and all the other good things, and then when they have it all gone they return back to us again. It is a crying hardship, and one of the things that the Guardians have frequently tried to see how they could keep them out and they could not.

22554. Not under the existing law, but you think it is a thing that ought to be remedied if it could be remedied?—I think it ought to be remedied, and very necessary.

22555. They have a law in England that enables Guardians to take over the control of dissipated persons. Do you think that would be a proper thing for the Irish authorities to have that power?—What to do with them?

22556. They can take away from the parents their children if the parents are dissipated or rotten and refuse to support them and they can adopt the children and send them out to board; but then you go back to where you start, relieving the improvident parents of their children. Don't you think some punishment should be meted out to the parents of these children. If you take the children from the parents the parents—I think if that was adopted, it might be of some use, but very many of these misdoings are only glad to get rid of the children. If they are punished themselves severely they would not be so fond of the offence. At present there is no penalty unless it can be proved that they are neglecting them. There is a remedy if the parents are absolutely neglecting their children by which they can be brought before the magistrates and punishment awarded. We had a case of that in this town not long ago.

22557. What was the punishment?—The mother was the father was working—but the mother was sent to prison. The father was not so much to blame. I was not on the bench at the time, but my recollection of it is that the mother was sent to prison for the offence. The husband was working earning money and she was spending it in drink and otherwise, and she was brought up before the magistrates and got some severe punishment.

22558. Dr. BROWNE.—You are a member of the County Infirmary Committee?—Yes.

22559. And take a great interest in the County Infirmary. Do you know that we heard when we were visiting there that they are rather hampered for means. They could not take in all the cases that applied, and that might have been taken in if they had a large amount?—I think the County Infirmary, which is an admirable institution, is too small, and there is not accommodation for all that require to go into it.

22560. Would you be in favour of enlarging their income from the county?—I would be in favour of adding some means to it.

22561. Does it serve the whole county?—Oh, yes.

22562. Do persons come from all over the county?—All over the county, but what happens is this. For instance, several tickets are issued, they go back to the doctor, the doctor has not room for them. No doubt he prescribes for many of these and all that, but he has not room to take them all in. He does not take one out of every three tickets he gets. Mr. Vernon, who is the secretary of the institution, would tell you, but I don't think out of every three or four tickets issued to him he takes more than one into the institution, because he has not room for them.

22563. Is not that a great hardship for these people?—There are some cases where he might not require to take them in. A great many go to him because he is a very eminent man in order to get his opinion and perhaps do not want to remain in, but I know myself that the institution is too small, because it is a very popular institution for the whole county.

22564. You have known of cases that really did require treatment there being turned away owing to the beds being full or being hampered in the way of funds?—I am inclined to think so.

22565. I think the income from the county is £1,000 a year?—That is the amount the old Grand Jury paid and the amount the County Council still contributes.

22566. Would you be in favour of increasing that to whatever the necessary outlay on the epidemic would amount to?

22567. CHAIRMAN.—The same as the Guardians with their hospital?—Of course, to make an increase you would have to put a large addition to the rating. Is not that what you mean?

22568. Dr. BROWNE.—They might require that, to keep the beds full that are there. There are wards in which every bed was not occupied on account of not having the means to pay for them—I have not heard that any were kept out of it for want of means.

CHAIRMAN.—We rather formed that impression at the hospital.

Sept. 28, 1904.
Mr. Bernard
Celtory.

22260. Dr. BROSSE.—I thought that they were keeping down the number that were admitted, so as to keep within their limit?—No doubt we are trying, of course, to cut our cloth according to our measure; but I have not heard that for want of means any really deserving case was kept out of the institution. There is no doubt that if the institution was larger, and had more money to be expended on it, it is quite probable that the doctor would take in cases that at present he has to turn away.

22270. CHAIRMAN.—Do you see any reason why the chief hospital of the county should be limited in expenditure and all the other hospitals unlimited?—I believe under a recent Act of Parliament, the County Council can vote a larger sum under certain conditions.

22271. Would you approve personally of those conditions being complied with?—Most decidedly. I think I expressed that view at a public meeting more than once.

22272. That is rather a little bit clumsy, that method; that would be reimbursing the expenditure?—I think he was not the most brilliant fellow in the world that drafted it.

22273. Would it be simpler, in your opinion, if all funds were taken away, and if the County Infirmary, like any other hospital in the county supported out of public funds, were allowed its necessary touched and unfixed expenditure?—I think the County Council could be safely entrusted with the necessary expenditure as an institution like that without limiting it to £1,400; but I don't believe the present County Council, as it exists, of which I happen to be a member, would be willing to expend the necessary sum in enlarging the institution, because I know that they are all well pleased with the working of it, and see the necessity of it.

CHAIRMAN.—I think they have reason to be very proud of its appearance, so we all thought; it is a most creditable hospital.

22274. Dr. BROSSE.—With regard to the treatment of consumptive patients, you have no provision in the county for treating them, apart from the workhouse hospitals?—No, we have not.

22275. And they are very often not admitted for that purpose?—I believe so.

22276. Would you be in favour of making some provision for their treatment?—It is a great question in the county?—I don't know; it is for the doctors.

22277. Not for your own county alone but comprising two or three counties, and have a consumption hospital, pure and simple?—That is my view exactly. I think that is what ought to be done. There is one at present, to which I contribute a small sum myself annually, in the County Workhouse, Newcastle.

22278. Yes, that is a long way for patients to go.—Yes; I am told it does very admirable work. If there were central ones, something of that kind, it would be a great matter for three or four or five counties.

22279. CHAIRMAN.—According to the population and requirements?—Yes.

22280. Dr. BROSSE.—If Tisbury County Workhouse were done away with, and, say, Domesday West, you would be in favour of leaving a hospital at those places?—I would.

22282. You would rather bring into touch those small hospital with the county hospital to make them work more in unison, so that they could transfer a patient easily from Tisbury or Domesday West to the county infirmary?—I think that would be very useful. If there was a patient in Domesday West that it would be necessary to operate on, I think there ought to be a sort of combination between the central hospital and those outer ones.

22283. It would also bring the medical men more in touch with the infirmary; they could follow their patients?—Yes.

22285. It is, but they can only pay according to the case charge. Would you be in favour of having different charges—20s or 3s, or 1s a week, according to their means?—I don't think so. I think there ought to be a ward or two, probably in the institution, where people should pay the cost. Now most people who fall sick are anxious to go into institutions of the kind where they could pay, but I think myself such what you call small farmers, or a moderate class of people in the county or towns, I would not have them to pay anything.

22286. CHAIRMAN.—At all events, would you see any hardship in giving the governing body of the hospital, the District Council, or whoever governs it, would you see any hardship in giving them the discretion to charge anything they pleased, from 5s. to 1s. a week up to the actual cost incurred, giving them power to recover that if they thought fit, leaving it open to them not to charge if they wished?—Without at all saying anything against the officers, which my answer does not imply, I would not approve of it.

22287. It would be the managing body, the Council. The position is this, that at present, in a great number of cases, people who are very well-to-do would come in, and, perhaps, an additional sum would have to be procured for the sole charge of one case. At present the Guardians have no power to recover anything but the average cost of maintenance, a few shillings a week, whereas they may be at an expense of some £2 or £3 a week?—Are you talking of the workhouse hospital? I was talking of the county infirmary.

22289. It has worked wonderfully well at your neighbouring county, in the town of Emswiler; there the result has been remarkable. The committee of the county infirmary there, in conjunction with their medical officer, consider the circumstances of each person who is admitted, and they make a charge there, according to the means; they have no power to recover that; but really the amounts that are paid under that head at present are very large and considerable; and, as well as my recollection goes, more than enough to pay the doctor's salary, and the people like it better. They are paying their way there as well as they can, and the patients seem to prefer it?—I think that the governing body ought to have power to recover from people who are not absolutely able to pay, and I would fix that at a certain sum.

22290. Why would you not leave that to the discretion; as time goes on the price of commodities and everything else falls, and would it not be better to leave the discretion to the local body?—You mean for them to fix a tariff.

22292. What happens in Emswiler is this, that the Governor or County Councillor who gives the ticket for admission indicates on it what he thinks would be a fair amount, does not say that it is definitely the amount, but suggests something; that is looked into by the doctor and officials of the place, and the committee then fix the amount, or the doctor, in some cases, is allowed to fix the amount; the man on coming in signs an undertaking to pay so much; that is generally the amount recommended by the person who gives the order for admission?—I have no doubt that works very well, but I am largely in favour of free hospitals, I must say.

22293. On you not see the advantage, on the other hand, of giving people something that they can pay for, and would value more?—Down from a certain standard I would have free hospitals, but a person who could pay £1 a week, for instance, I think they should be charged.

22294. Dr. BROSSE.—You need not force the obligation on them; they may want hospital treatment, but at the same time don't want it for nothing; they are willing to pay?—I think that should be done. The class that is able to pay £1 a week, I would make them pay, but I would not go under that.

Sept 30, 1904.

Mr. Bennett

22329. CHAIRMAN.—Take one of your quack-laborers. Suppose a child of his gets a harm, that child will, at all events, consume provisions to the amount of 6d. a week. He is a man earning 15s. a week; would there be any hardship in saying, "We will ask that man to pay what he would have to pay for the child if it were at home, 6d."?—I think it would be; I think either the State or the county should really provide for the relief of that man, and not alone of that man, but of the man who holds ten or twelve acres of land and has two or three cows. I think it is a hardship on them, if one of them got sick, to make them—it never was the case—the class I am talking of never paid to the county infirmary.

22330. No, but they way they slipped in for free treatment in the workhouse was by coming in as paupers; if that qualification was abolished, and they came into the district hospital?—You think they would be classed as paupers?

22331. They have been up to this; until 1860 they did come in actually as paupers?—Not in county infirmaries.

22332. Dr. BROWN.—If you take away the workhouse and make them district hospitals, it will increase the number seeking hospital treatment, why not, at the same time, take something in aid of the rates when a person has no objection to it, but would rather prefer it; a great many would rather pay something than have the idea of getting "off the rates"?—I would not be aware to any person who voluntarily wished to pay.

22333. CHAIRMAN.—But you would not be in favour of giving the governing body discretion to charge?—I would not approve of it; I would give the power to a certain extent and to a certain class, but beyond that I would not.

22334. Dr. BROWN.—It has been suggested to us that the county infirmary supplies the want of the immediate neighbourhood in excess of what it does for remote parts of the county—for instance, Tobarcurry does not get the same benefit from the county infirmary as Sligo itself may get?—I quite agree with you, because, of course, the centre of population is more about Sligo.

22335. And not only that, but on account of its being nearer, they will go there more readily?—There is the very reason why I would have a hospital at Tobarcurry.

22336. It has been suggested to us that the rate for the hospitals should be on one basis, out of one rate; that is, the county infirmary, Tobarcurry and Droemore West should be taken out of a county-at-large charge?—That is the case at present.

22337. That is not so, exactly; it is for the county infirmary, but not for the hospitals. Would you be inclined to put those hospitals on the county rate?—Sligo would be paying for Tobarcurry in the same way as Tobarcurry is paying for the county infirmary?—I would not object to it; but I fancy Tobarcurry and Droemore West would object to it.

22338. Why, it would be to their interest to get it?—If it was a county-at-large charge Droemore West would be paying for 50 per cent. of Sligo, while she had only ten of her own.

22339. She is doing that at present, and getting no relief for her tent?—I am talking after the change takes place.

22340. CHAIRMAN.—At present Droemore West, Tobarcurry, and Boyle No. 2 pay for the county infirmary?—They do, and at times very largely avail themselves of it. I frequently hear tickets from Boyle No. 2, Tobarcurry and Hollymont and all parts of the county very largely avail themselves of it.

22341. Not to the same extent as Sligo Union does?

—I should say not.

22342. Would you give them the sort-of making their district hospitals in the future supported out of a county-at-large rate in the same way as the county infirmary is, and, of course, your Sligo District Hospital would also be a county-at-large charge; would you make all public hospitals under the County Councils or District Councils county-at-large charges for the sick only?—I don't know. What would arise from your suggestion is, that each district of the county should pay for its own hospital.

22343. That is the present arrangement?—I know it is, and that it should continue.

22344. No, no, but that the county-at-large should pay for the future, instead of the district.

Dr. BROWN.—There would be another advantage from it; and that would be in case Droemore West wanted an extra nurse she might be supplied from the county infirmary instead of sending to Dublin and getting a nurse?—I think I started with saying that I would be in favour of a county-at-large charge for all hospitals. Let all be paid for out of a common fund.

22345. Mr. MURPHY.—Where do you see the advantage, because that is the place you and I would split?—I don't know exactly. You would have the people in Sligo paying for Droemore, and vice-versa. You would have the larger valuation in Sligo, and the larger number of ratepayers, but Sligo Union would be contributing much more than Droemore West, and that would be quite right, because Droemore West is not anything like the size of the Sligo Union.

22346. Sligo has 403 inmates in the workhouse, whereas the other two have only 174; you would be asking the outlying districts to share in the cost of Sligo?

CHAIRMAN.—It would not apply to the workhouse?—I am not referring to the workhouse, but to the county infirmaries.

22347. Mr. MURPHY.—Why should it not apply to the workhouse? Are you not aware that it is generally accepted as a fact, that by widening the area of charge you at once lessen supervision and discrimination, and there is never so careful an eye kept on expenditure if you extend the limits of charge?—Yes, I think that each district paying for its own institutions would be more conservative of its expenditure.

22348. Yes; because it would know the amount it needed and the relief that would be given; whereas, in the wider area, there would not be that knowledge at all?—You think they would be more extravagant. I would be hardly inclined to credit them with that, because I believe myself if we had a hospital in Tobarcurry the people managing that institution would not spend more on it in consequence of the county-at-large being paying for it than if their own district were paying for it.

22349. Is not that the outcry against union rating, that the Guardians don't care what a thing costs when the charge is union-at-large?—I think I did not state that.

22351. Dr. BROWN.—You attribute any laxness to the better treatment of the inmates?—I do, entirely to the changed system. Take, for instance, in my young days, I remember the workhouse thirty years ago. I don't think there were three paid nurses in the whole institution, and if they were paid at all, they were pauper nurses, that got about 24 or 25 a year. I think all the nurses that were paid in the workhouse 220 a year would cover them. What happens now. We have an array of nurses, and you must bear in mind that that has been put on us by the changed times, and, of course, that has created expenditure.

22352. Mr. MURPHY.—While that may be the experience of Sligo it is not the experience of other places. Generally out-door relief is higher than in 1850, and in some places it is 50 per cent. higher?—That is not the case here.

22353. And it is stated, and, I believe, stated with very considerable truth, that this is due to the fact that nobody cares particularly now who is put on or who is put off. Formerly the Guardians used to scrutinise with the greatest care anybody that went on, and try to cut off anyone that was on as soon as it was possible for them to do so. Now, you see, if you adopt county rating in regard to infirmaries and district hospitals in the future you will begin and introduce the very same system with the danger that you increase the cost?—But you must bear in mind that I don't agree with you in that at all.

22354. You don't agree with me in what?—With the effect of having what is called union-at-large rating. I take it you say that union-at-large rating has caused the Guardians to be less conservative of the rates?—Is not that your theory?

22355. It is not my theory; that is the evidence we have had in other places, and, I may add, agrees with my own experience. When you advocate the adoption of that system to the infirmaries of the county, I want to put this before you, and ask you if you think it would be a wise thing after the experience of out-door relief?—Yes, based on the same principle that the union-at-large charges have not at all increased our expenditure; that the union-at-large charge for our hospitals would not increase our expenditure either. Our expenditure, as I before stated, has increased owing to the changed times and the changed condition of the institutions.

22322. The change insisted on for the better nursing in hospitals, and the employment of paid labour, would hardly cause the increase?—I think it would.

22323. It would hardly be responsible for the whole increase?—I have not the statistics beside me, but if you take the Sligo Union alone and set the amount of money we pay for hospital arrangements and accommodation, and compare it with twenty or thirty years ago.

22324. Who would you leave to manage these district hospitals if you made the rate a county one; would you take it out of the hands of the Guardians, the management of the district hospitals, or put it in the hands of a committee appointed by the county?—I would have a committee, as a matter of course, in Tobaruary and a committee in Droemore West that would manage it, and make their suggestions and their demands on the County Council for the expenditure.

22325. Dr. BOOCAN.—And visit the hospitals?—As a matter of course.

22326. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You would continue the local management and change the area of rating?—Oh, no, I did not suggest a change; it is a union rate at present.

22327. I thought you said it should be a county rate instead of a union rate?—Oh, yes, county expenditure.

22328. A county rate for hospitals instead of a union rate, as at present. At present the infirmaries are under a union rating, under the system suggested it would become a county rate. My question is, what advantage do you see in the change, because experience teaches me that the moment you widen the area you begin to expend far more money?—I don't know that there would be very much advantage in it, but I cannot quite agree with you that by widening the area we would expend more money. I think, taking all in all, the County Council that has to do with the funds is very anxious about these.

22329. You would still leave the management of the district hospitals to the local bodies?—I would leave the management to the local bodies, under the control of the County Council, who have to pay for it.

Mr. ROGER DAVY examined.

22330. CHAIRMAN.—I think there was one part of the evidence about the county infirmaries on which you were rather anxious to mention some facts within your own experience?—Yes; what I wanted to mention was that I think one of your Commissioners was asking questions of Mr. Colley about the state of the county infirmary, whether it required to be enlarged or not. I have known cases that applied for admission to the county infirmary, actually outpatients, and they were sent down to the union hospital; they were not admitted.

22331. What was the reason given?—I don't know the reason.

22332. Was it to keep down the expenses, or because there was no bed available?—I could not tell you what reason; I am not a member of the Infirmary Committee.

22333. You did not hear from the people what the reason given to them was?—No, I did not hear it.

22334. But you just know, as a matter of fact, whatever the reason may be, that some people do apply, hoping to get in and don't?—A number of outpatients apply, and they have either got no admittance or else go to the union hospital.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—There are some classes of cases that will not be admitted to an infirmary.

CHAIRMAN.—It may have been a chronic case.

22335. Dr. BURGESS.—Do you know the nature of the case?—I did not know the nature of the case.

22336. Did you know of many cases like that?—Yes, I did know of some cases that had to go down to the workhouse hospital, and it was some kind of a chronic case—some affection of the toes or feet.

22337. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Sligo Board of Guardians?—Yes.

22338. And the opinion of the Board of Guardians is that it would be desirable to amalgamate the Union 22339. The County Council have nothing to do with the Poor Law at present?—I think not.

22340. Why should the County Council come into the business at all, has it not enough on hands at present?—Of course they would have to provide the funds; and then, of course, they would have either less or more supervision over them. For instance, the County Council provides the funds for the asylums, and they have as much control over them that they appoint the committees.

22341. Have they not the supervision at present to the extent of having a representation on the Council in the Chairman of the District Council, who is a member of the Board of Guardians?—Quite so.

22342. Where do you see the advantage to be gained in the change?—I don't say that there is a very great advantage in the change, nor would I be very strongly in favour of it. I would have an open mind as to how these district hospitals would be managed, as far as that is concerned, whether they would be managed as union district hospitals or as county-at-large district hospitals; but I have this view, that I think that if they were amalgamated, so to speak, of the county infirmary it would be to their advantage.

22343. If they were run in conjunction with the county infirmary?—For instance, if there was a very bad case that needed special treatment, or something of that kind, the people of Droemore could remove it to the county infirmary, and have power also to pay the expense of the removal.

22344. Dr. BOOCAN.—And it would be a saving to have the instruments belonging to the county rather than having each hospital having a separate set of instruments?—I think so. It would not be an easy matter to get up an operating theatre in small hospitals.

22345. If there was a patient requiring a large operation that could not be removed from Tobaruary or Droemore West the county surgeon could be telegraphed to, and he would bring down his instruments from the county infirmary, and you would be saved keeping up stocks of instruments, and he might take a nurse with him, as a Dublin surgeon does when he is going to perform an operation. He takes his instruments with him to a country town, and brings back the instruments with him; the same thing would apply to your county infirmaries?—That is one of my reasons for being in favour of their being amalgamated.

22346. It would be a great saving and also of some service to those requiring them?—I think so.

of Droemore West and Tobaruary with the Sligo Union?—They have no objection to amalgamation.

22347. They have passed a resolution in favour of it?—Yes.

22348. And you agree with that resolution?—Yes.

22349. Are there any reasons you would like to give us in favour of that resolution?—I think the Guardians were under the opinion that it might be a saving to the ratepayers if they got amalgamated, and I think they were also of opinion that the sick poor and inmates would not suffer in any way; it would be no hardship.

22350. Do you think it would be desirable to keep a small hospital in those places if the big workhouse was closed?—Well, I am delicate in giving an opinion on that question; but I think if the workhouse was closed, and the Tobaruary Guardians and ratepayers were satisfied to amalgamate with Sligo, it could be turned into some more useful purpose than to have a hospital there.

22351. Do you think if you closed the Droemore West Workhouse it would not be a hardship to oblige sick people to be taken such long distances, people that were really sick—a man with pneumonia or inflammation of the lungs or a broken leg?—It would be a hardship, but they have to be removed in many cases. I don't think it would be a great hardship. There is a useful use for the purpose; except that there are actually not able to leave their bed. There are some harmless lunatics in Sligo Workhouse. I don't know whether there are any in Tobaruary; but if Tobaruary were made an auxiliary for harmless lunatics, and Droemore West people were satisfied to amalgamate with Sligo Union, that could be turned into something for children or young people.

22352. Were you here when we had a conversation with Mr. Colley about children?—I was.

Sept. 20, 1904

Mr. Bernard Colley

Mr. Roger Davy

Sept. 20, 1904.

Mr. Roger Dwyer.

22353. Do you think it would be better to have them boarded out or put into a central institution?—I have some experience of boarding out children that are over two or three years old, and they made very good members of society after being boarded out and reared outside; but it is not so with children reared in the workhouse.

22354. You would be more in favour, on the whole, of the boarding out system?—I would, if it could be carried out properly. They have not the tendency to run to the workhouse after being boarded out.

22356. Would you be in favour of having them taken up and put into an institution, where they would be taught habits of industry?—If they could be improved in any way in the world to make them more industrious and possible members of society, it would be a good thing. If there was any remedy to prevent people running into a workhouse and coming out when they like, perhaps going back drunk, it is very demoralising to the rest of the inmates. Once they would go in I think they should be prevented running out and going back. If they are really destitute they ought to stay within.

22357. Would you be in favour of separating hospitals for the sick from the workhouses as much as possible, and establishing pay wards for those who could afford to pay?—Yes, I think I would leave a discretion in the hands of the local representatives. They will know every person who is able to pay and entitled to pay.

22358. And give them power to recover whatever they thought right?—Quite so. Give them power to assess whatever they think right and recover what they can.

22359. You heard our conversation about the rating. Have you formed any opinion about the union at large so distinguished from electoral division charges?—Yes, I have. My opinion is that divisional rating for divisional paupers and out-door relief would be more economical.

22360. Dr. BARNES.—Out-door relief?—Yes, and any other small items that would interest the division rather than the district.

Mr. DOMINGO HANCOCK, Chairman,

22361. Chairman.—What is the view of the Tobarcurry Guardians as regards amalgamation. You had a division on the question?—Yes, sir. There were only seventeen members present, and the majority voted for amalgamation.

22370. Were you in the majority?—No, sir, I was in the minority, although I am chairman of the Guardians.

22371. You would be in favour of keeping the house?—Yes, sir. I would be in favour of no change except divisional rating for out-door relief and maintenance.

22372. What is your reason for that?—I think there are abuses. We are a curiously constituted board in Tobarcurry. We have two different parties, you know.

22373. Most boards have only one party?—We have two different parties although we are all Nationalists.

22374. But of various complexion?—Yes, and I think there are abuses in the line of out-door relief.

22375. Is out-door relief under a party question at all?—Sometimes, and when a member of one party would be defeated on out-door relief to-day he would bring it on on the next Board day and might get a favourable majority. In my opinion a divisional charge would be the most economical and the most just.

22376. You heard the evidence given by Mr. O'Leary. Would you approve of the removal from the workhouse of the various classes there spoken of?—No, sir, I would not.

22377. Children?—I would be in favour of boarding out children. I don't like the atmosphere of the workhouse.

22378. What do you think of mothers of illegitimate children; do you think the workhouse is a suitable place for them?—I don't think it is; in some cases they cannot be reclaimed.

22379. Would you agree for the future to send all cases of first offenders?—Yes; but chronic cases I would not.

22380. As regards cases in the past, it would not be hopeful to deal with them in that way?—No, sir.

22381. But for future cases, would you be in favour of sending such cases in future to penitentiaries or reformatories?—I would; where they could be kept.

22361. CHAIRMAN.—Would you have the rating electoral for any other purpose?—I would. I would say the maintenance of divisional paupers. Of course the union establishment charges should remain as they are. I have had some experience of old inmates, and I always found the Guardians took more interest in them and things when it was divisional rating than they do now, and I think it would be a little saving also. I think it would be a saving in the way of out-door relief. There are a number of Guardians that might recommend out-door relief, but if they had to answer to their constituents for it they might be a little delicate in doing it. When it is a union charge they are not so particular.

22362. Mr. MURPHY.—Then there is the other advantage, that only the deserving would get the relief?—Quite so. I don't say there are any abuses in that way, but I think it would be some saving to the rates in general.

22363. CHAIRMAN.—If there is no abuse, would not that be an argument for keeping the present union-at-large charges?—I don't think there is any abuse. As far as I am aware there is not.

22364. Mr. MURPHY.—But still there is not that tendency to watch things that there was before?—There is not so much anxiety about taking an interest in those things. Of course the Guardians from the outside districts of the union do not know the actual deserving cases. They only go according to the Guardians that recommend it.

22365. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think there would be a saving if you went back to the electoral division rating?—I think there would.

22366. But if there is no abuse at present in the union-at-large rating, would you not have an abuse in the refusal of proper cases, if you put it back to the electoral division?—I don't think there would be an abuse in that way either. Every Guardian would be satisfied to give relief where it was really required.

22367. Do you think that relief is given in some cases now where it is more a question of charity than necessity?—I dare say. There is very little done in that way either. There might be a little generosity, that is all.

22368. Is there anything else you would like to add?—No. I think I agree with Mr. O'Leary's evidence except as far as I have mentioned.

Tobarcurry Union, examined.

22369. And reclaimed?—And not to meet the associates they meet in workhouses. You explained there about a girl of eighteen years; she may make a mistake, and it would send her from her home to a workhouse.

22370. Then, as regards lunatics and feeble-minded people, do you think the workhouse is the proper place for them?—I think for the class of those that are in Tobarcurry Workhouse it is a proper place; they can get on very well; there are some of these harmless lunatics; they work well.

22371. They are useful in the house?—Yes.

22372. Then you don't see that there would be any hardship in leaving them in Tobarcurry?—No, sir.

22373. As regards tramps and casuals?—We are infested with them.

22374. Would you be in favour of any legislation to stop that evil?—Yes; there has been a suggestion that there should be some place like a convict prison for them, to get a trade in.

22375. Well, some place, not so much of punishment as of detention?—Yes, if they got a trade. There is many a man knocking about the country, and if he could get employment—

22376. If he was employed on a building, and got his arms and hands and back accustomed to work?—And, more than that, if he was taught shoemaking.

22377. Do you think it would be a wise thing to give trades?—Yes, I would to the young tramps.

22378. Do you think it would be a wise thing to give these people trades, such as could not be obtained by the poorer ratepayers for their children; do you think it might not be better to bring them up as labourers?—I don't think there would be so much expense in giving them a trade, and it would not be any hardship on the ratepayers.

22379. Do you think it would not be putting these people into a better position than the children of a great many ratepayers could hope to be?—It would not.

22380. There are a good many honest labouring men who keep out of workhouses, who could not make their children shoemakers or tailors?—They could if they wished.

Mr. DOMINGO
HANCOCK

Sept. 20, 1904.
Mr. Donald Heery.

22394. They could not pay a fee—No, but they would be generally taken without a fee.

22395. They could not afford to keep them when they were getting no wages?—Some of them could not.

22396. Is it not your experience that at present labour is very scarce for farming purposes?—Yes, but these cramps would not labour on a farm.

22397. Not unless they were trained to it?—Then I don't think they would work on a farm. They could, any moment, get labour on a farm.

22398. But they are going about with hands as fine as clerks; they have no muscles?—They have no muscles, it is true; and I don't think they would ever make farm labourers no matter how trained.

22399. You would be opposed to closing Tobacerry Workhouse except keeping the hospital open for the sick?—I think the present Poor Laws just as good a method as can be adopted. In Tobacerry, if a poor person gets his leg broken, would he not bleed to death before he got to Sligo.

22400. Such a case as that would go to the Tobacerry Hospital?—Then it is no economy in the work, because you would have to keep up a staff of officials in Tobacerry for the hospital.

22401. You would only have to keep up the doctor, nurse, and chaplain; you would have no master, matron, porter, or waste people?—Supposing you amalgamate Tobacerry and Sligo, won't you have to put up more buildings in Sligo.

22402. Hardly. I think if you took the children, lunatics, tramps, and mothers of illegitimate children out of Sligo Workhouse there ought to be room then for all other classes?—That is so; however, in my opinion, and I think it is the opinion of the body of ratepayers, there would be no economy as far as Tobacerry is concerned.

22403. They don't want to lose their little workhouse?—They don't want to mix with the Sligo people; we can steer our own little ship.

22404. You were in a minority on that question at the meeting held for the purpose?—I was.

22405. And we have not any of the majority here to express their views?—No, they fell back since.

22406. Do you think some of the ratepayers told them they made a mistake?—I believe that; and the whole body of ratepayers is against amalgamation with Sligo.

22407. Even if it was an economy?—Even if it was an economy, because I think it would be a hardship on some of the sick poor.

22408. The sick poor will be left there in any case, according to this idea that was suggested?—There are about 124 paupers in Tobacerry, and they are mostly all old and decrepit people, and it would be a very great hardship to remove them to Sligo; they are among their own people in Tobacerry, and are visited from time to time.

22409. That is, the sick are visited. Have you ever found out, as we have, that the number of visits paid to the aged and infirm is very small, indeed?—I know it is small, but the unfortunate old men of eighty-eight years of age, or eighty, or very old men like that, it is death to them to remove them from Tobacerry; it is their native place; they have a home made there, and it would not be any sort of charity at all to remove them; it would be a heartless evasion to take and cart them here to Sligo.

22410. Mr. MURKIN?—If the Guardians could give them out-door relief in their own locality, that hardship would be removed?—Some of them have no place of residence.

22411. It is a very cheerful thing for old people to be confined in the thick atmosphere of the workhouse day-room the greater part of the year. Better give 3s. or 4s. a week, and let them live outside?—I don't think it would be much economy, because no person stays, in my opinion, in Tobacerry Workhouse who has any other place to stay in. We generally give them out-door relief if they have any place to stay in.

22412. These old people cost the ratepayers about 7s. or 8s. a week in the best?—They don't cost that much; 3s. 6d. is the average in Tobacerry.

22413. That might be simply for the food, but when you take in all the other charges, you find they cost £17 to £19 a year. Those poor people could live nicely on 4s. a week; they would have some freedom and some little comfort, that they don't enjoy at present. Don't you think it would be a good thing if the Guardians had the power to board these people out on those conditions?—Certainly; no people would be a better judge than the Guardians; but I would say every decision should pay for itself, as in all times.

22414. Many witnesses agree with you in that?—Because no member of a Board of Guardians knows where the destitution comes in or where there is need more needed than the member elected for the division; he knows the amount that is required, and when he knows it is rated on the division he represents he will not recommend to the board to give any more than he thinks is necessary.

Mr. WILLIAM MITCHELL, J.P., examined.

22415. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of Drogheda West?—Yes, sir.

22416. What is the opinion of the Guardians on the question of the keeping up of their workhouse?—Well, I think the opinion of the majority of the Guardians is against amalgamation.

22417. Have there been any advocates of amalgamation there?—There have been some.

22418. Are there many?—They are in a very small minority.

22419. If a hospital for the treatment of the sick were left at Drogheda West, and if only those people who are able to travel or could be brought distances without risk to them, if only those people were removed to Sligo, do you think the Drogheda West people would still have the objection to closing the great part of their workhouse, leaving the provision for the treatment of the sick there still?—I think they would.

22420. What would the objection be?—The distance is very far from Drogheda West to the workhouse of Sligo, it is twenty-four miles; the union extends twelve or fourteen miles farther away, nearly forty miles, and I don't see myself how any poor or anybody could be benefited by bringing them so far into Sligo.

22421. What part of the union would be as much as forty miles away?—Ardrinnee.

22422. There are in Drogheda West Union?—They are not at present; you can take two miles off thirty-seven, thirty-five miles.

22423. Is Bannacree in your union?—It is.

22424. Moyview, I believe, is in Ballina?—That is in Ballina.

22425. Would the Devil River be the boundary?—I could not tell you. I am at the extreme Sligo end. I live only ten miles from here. I am the furthest off Guardian from Drogheda West; I live at Ballina, part of Donard.

22426. There is very little population on the road between Drogheda West Workhouse and the main road to Ballina?—I am with you there; it is a small population, but from the workhouse to Sligo it is thickly populated.

22427. And there is a thick population between Keshmonee and Eskelley?—Very thick; it is congested.

22428. I suppose the most distant populous place if the Drogheda Union was broken up would be Keshmonee from Sligo?—And Castlesmonee.

22429. How far is Keshmonee?—Over thirty miles, that is the shortest road; in fact it is from there we are getting all our peapars, and all our out-door relief nearly comes from there.

22430. That is very largely a fishing population—a population that depends on summer earnings through visitors, and things of that sort?—Yes; it is a resort for people coming there for bathing.

22431. And help?—Yes, they make help along the shore.

22432. You have a good deal of poverty there?—There is a good deal of poverty; the holdings are small and the people are poor in consequence.

22433. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you wish to say anything as to out-door relief, or the question of using?—I have ready, sir, an objection against the present system, because cases come up there for relief; I know nothing at all about them; I don't know who they are; I am dependent upon the Guardian of that district; I will ask him: "Is this man entitled to relief?" That man may have a big heart, he does not like to refuse, he cause he knows he will pay very little of it, it will all go on the union, and I would be for the smallest ratings area that could be made, because people take more interest. Like Mr. Callery, I am a long time a Guardian, about thirty years, and I am now Chairman of the District Council. I was in Sligo Union, too; rated for both unions. Mr. Callery's opinions represent the opinions of the Sligo people. Under the old system, when Sligo was 2s. or 3s. in the £, we were only 2d. or 3d.; and now that we are asked to help the Sligo people so, I don't wonder at Mr. Callery giving that evidence; it is good enough for the Sligo people.

22434. Mr. Callery said the increase in Sligo was not due to out-door relief, it was due to the system. I agree with him it is the system; it is the system of union rating that makes them richer and us poorer.

22435. You think, in any case, there is close supervision when the area of change is small?—I am perfectly aware of it; I know it for a fact.

22436. You have experience of both methods, and you think the advantages are on the side of the smaller area?—The smaller the area the more attentive he is to his business; that is my experience.

22437. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think there would be any hardship by the refusal of relief if the area was small?—I never knew of any hardship.

22438. We had a suggestion from a witness in another part of the country that it would be a fair thing to find out and ascertain, by inquiry or some formal way, what would be the average or fair out-door relief, and to fix that amount; say, for your electoral division £1 a week, or 10s., or whatever it would be, and then to say, "Well, now, we consider that is the fair thing," and that might be put on the union-at-large; but if you exceed that, anything that goes over 10s. or £1 a week, or whatever the fixed sum may be that will have to be paid by the electoral division, that would go part of the way to prevent any further abuses, would it not?—It would be a good thing for the purpose, I am sure, because they were sure of getting it whether we liked it or not.

22439. Oh, no, you would not be bound to give it, you could pay less—I thought it would be a sliding scale.

22440. You would not be bound to pay them anything?—We would have to pay them that or nothing. 22441. Supposing it was found out on inquiry that in your electoral division the people were getting 15s. a week, and supposing it were proved or established satisfactorily that 5s. of that 15s. was considered unnecessary, and 10s. a week would be ample, then what would happen would be the Guardians would know that they could not exceed 10s. a week for out-door relief on the union-at-large in that division; but if that division wanted any increase of the 10s., then they would have to pay 5s. or 10s. extra out of the pocket of the electoral division?—I would be for taking it all out of the electoral division. I believe it was the best system, and worked better than the system at present. It made Guardians be more particular; it made them attend our meetings better, and they took more interest in the working of the Poor Law Board than they do at present; that is my experience of matters, and I have been in the room all the time. 22442. You think there was a better attendance under the old system?—A better attendance. It is very hard to drum up a quorum at present. What is everybody's business is nobody's. I have been at Boardroom several times in the past year, but could not get a quorum—could not get three. In old times I never saw a board without a quorum.

22443. What would be your average attendance about, when there was not an appointment—what would be your average attendance at the present time for ordinary business?—We sometimes have a full board when there is something very exciting going on. 22444. I am not including the fixing of rate, or anything like that?—I would say four or five.

22445. How many Guardians have you on the board?—Thirty-seven. We require seven for a quorum in the District Council; I am only Chairman of the District Council; it is seldom I can get a quorum at all; we can get three for the Board of Guardians well enough.

Mr. JOHN CONWAY, Chairman, Drogheda West Union, examined.

Mr. John Conway.

22446. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Drogheda West Board of Guardians?—Yes.

22447. You have heard the evidence of the Chairman of the Rural District Council?—Yes.

22448. Do you agree with him generally in his evidence?—I do.

22449. Is there anything he said in which you would differ from him?—Scarcely anything.

22450. You think the union ought to stay as it is?—That is our belief; that is the feeling of the members of the board and of the ratepayers at large.

22451. You prefer electoral division rating to union rating?—I do, by all means.

22452. Is your board practically unanimous on that?—Practically; they passed a resolution the first time the matter came up before them, and were unanimous when the full board was summoned.

22453. Keshay and Rannicmore are the only places that are any approach to a town in your union?—Yes.

22454. Would the Guardians prefer union or divisional rating for these places?—I believe the bulk of them would prefer divisional rating. I am paying rates on a valuation of £60 in two divisions, Keshay and Killyglass; they were the two highest-rated divisions when it was divisional rating; consequently, when I am saying I would be in favour of divisional rating, I am speaking against my own interest.

22455. It would be against your own interest in Keshay?—It would, and in Killyglass, or rather Carteenmore West, where I am paying on another farm, and they were the two highest rated divisions almost in the union, but all the same I would be in favour of divisional rating.

22456. Do you think that the present union-at-large rating or expenditure is higher than under the old electoral division rating?—I don't see how I can answer that question very well; it is going up.

22457. Has the expenditure increased under the head of outdoor relief or any other head since the Act of 1882?—Very little under the head of outdoor relief.

22458. And you have not done much to your hospital to cause expenses there?—No, not so much indeed.

22459. So I suppose your expenses have not gone up very much?—Very little; the feeling of the members of the Board and of the ratepayers at large is that things should be left as they are.

22460. Even if there was a hospital left, you think it would be better to keep all the inmates?—That is the belief of the ratepayers and the representatives.

22461. Is there anything you would like to add?—No, except that with regard to the removal of the poor, it would be a great hardship if they had to be removed thirty miles; the bulk in the workhouse at present are in hospital.

22462. They are aged, and infirm, and chronic people?—Yes.

22463. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you board out any children?—Only two. I am a member of the Board for the last twenty-five years, and I have only known of two or three being boarded out.

22464. You have a number in the house just now?—A small number.

22465. Twelve or so?—Scarcely twelve.

22466. Do you not think they would be better out side?—Perhaps so, indeed.

22467. Learning the life of the ordinary farmer?—Yes. I am sure it would be a better life for them.

22468. There is a great need for domestic help in the country?—A great deal.

22469. It would benefit the ratepayers and give them some interest in the money they spend in the support of the house?—Yes, I would approve of it.

Sept. 29, 1896.

Dr. MacDowall, Surgeon, Co. Infirmary, examined.

Dr. MacDowall.

22476. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Surgeon of the County Sligo Infirmary?—I have been the surgeon since 1876.

22477. Would you kindly just mention, in your own way, any points you would like to bring before the Commission about the infirmary?—I have been surgeon since the year 1876; previously Dr. Little was the surgeon, and when I came here in 1876 it was a very popular institution. I think it has certainly kept up its popularity since—in fact, steadily gained in the confidence of the public. In recent years there have been an increasing number of patients; last year, for example, we treated over 600 intern patients.

22478. And how many externs?—They amounted to somewhere about 1,700. Of those 600 intern patients, the remarkable fact is that an enormous number come from outside of the ten-mile area; of the extern patients of the infirmary very nearly a half come from outside the five-mile area, and a larger proportion still come from outside the ten-mile area.

22479. Have you got any table in your annual report showing the results?—Yes, I could produce those. Of these 600 patients a large number are important surgical cases, accidents and a good many urgent medical cases. The infirmary, in my opinion, at present is in much too isolated a position. I think it does not occupy really the important position it should occupy in the county. We are governed by some twenty-six gentlemen, twenty-three of whom are selected by the County Council, and three of whom are chosen from the old governors every three years. We are under no scheme of inspection whatever; that is Governmental inspection; nor is there any central authority, so as to see that the hospital is thoroughly well-equipped, and able to look after sanitary matters.

22480. Would you be in favour of an inspection by the Local Government Board?—I certainly would; it would keep up the efficiency of the place. Our staff is also too small; a staff that does as much medical and surgical work as we do should have a resident medical surgeon, who would devote all his time to the hospital.

22482. Would they have a right of transferring patients that were suitable cases?—All acute cases or cases amenable to treatment. The infirmary should, I think, be treated also more generously. In Sligo we have an annual grant of £1,400 per annum, and I certainly think we could do very much more good if we had a few hundreds more a year. Modern surgery, for example, requires modern appliances, which are very expensive—surgical appliances are very expensive, and surgery is much more expensive than some time ago, when people were content to work with flinted steel and carbide oil and gasps; the nurses are now more expensive.

22483. Would you say that county infirmaries should be allowed to incur such necessary expenditure as would be required, subject to audit?—I would be quite content to leave the matter in the hands of my own Board, if they had the power. I would like to give them the power to spend as much as they thought was absolutely necessary. The infirmaries, I think, should form part of a general comprehensive scheme; in the infirmaries I think only really acute cases should be treated, and cases amenable to treatment that we could keep in for a short time and send out again; all surgical cases and accidents; for example, we ought to treat acute lung cases—but all chronic cases of the lungs and heart, and chronic obstruction of the legs, should be treated in the district hospitals. Infirmaries, I think, should be always ready, thoroughly equipped, to treat at any time any surgical emergency and surgical operations except such as might be necessary to be treated by specialists—eye operations and peculiar diseases of women. If the infirmaries were placed under a sanitary authority, and made a unit in a general and comprehensive scheme, it would be a very important matter. I am quite sure that most, if not all, the infirmaries, would very soon reach a higher standard and be very much more efficient than they are at present.

22484. You have nothing to do with any fever hospital, but I suppose what you say about the county infirmary would equally apply to the fever hospitals?—Yes, it is hanging in the air by itself too, a thing under no authority; no new infirmary appointments, I think the central authority should have a vote in the interests of the poor and of the public, so that really only men sufficiently qualified should be appointed.

22485. You mean a man should not be appointed surgeon to the infirmary who had not operative experience?—I would put in a clause that no man should be appointed who had not been a house surgeon in some of the large metropolitan hospitals, and I would also have a similar veto in the appointment of matrons and nurses. In my infirmary at present I am sure my Board would not appoint nurses not properly qualified, but we have no rule to that effect. If it was done there would be no power of appeal, and one could quite imagine such a thing might be done. The district hospitals, I think, on the other hand, should be equipped for the treatment of diseases of a chronic type; they should be worked independently of the workhouse.

22486. They might have emergency operations that could not be removed further?—Then the infirmary surgeon, under the new scheme, should be called in; it ought to be part of his work, if properly paid, as infirmary surgeon.

22488. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Gellery mentioned there was a great improvement?—I was doing duty there on two occasions, and the kind treatment I think the patients receive there now has done much to remedy old evils, but much has to be done yet in thoroughly popularizing the workhouse infirmaries. Then, on the other hand, the dispensaries do an immense deal of valuable outdoor work. We are not supposed in the infirmary to give medicine or prescriptions to extern cases except in special cases.

22489. Do you give dressings?—Yes. I would like to see more combined work between the dispensary medical officers and the infirmaries. It is impossible for the poor to be treated really in their homes without proper nursing and constant supervision, and such nursing as they have in hospital is very necessary. They get some really in their own homes, which are often cold and noisy, and devoid of proper bedding.

22490. Have you any knowledge of the system that exists at Enniskillen and Lisburn for paying patients?—I have.

22491. There the governing body get each patient to sign an agreement on coming in to pay whatever the governors and medical officers, in consulting with members of the committee, think the man could fairly pay; it might be as little as 6d. a week, or the full cost of maintenance, and we received very interesting evidence from both these infirmaries, showing that there is a very large annual revenue at each from the pay patients, and the evidence was that the patients themselves were better pleased to pay a little and enjoy the independent position of pay patients rather than go in as free patients: how anything of that kind been tried in Sligo?—Not yet, although ultimately, for the sake of the rates, I think we will have to do it. A great many patients come in to us from the adjoining counties just over the boundaries of Mayo and Leitrim, and we charge them a day, and they are very pleased to pay it; we only do that in exceptional cases. In surgical cases, for instance, in Leitrim, they have a long way to go to Carrick-on-Shannon, and we charge them 1s. a day, and they have always paid that without any grudge.

Sept. 20, 1904.

Dr.

22490. The Keshilleen evidence was that they look on it rather that even a labouring man who makes 12s. to 15s. a week, if a child of his should get ill, the keep of the child would come to certainly 6d. a week, and they assess that sum, or something like that, and then if a trader of the town comes in who can pay they ask him to pay the full cost of his maintenance, including perhaps an extra nurse—they might ask a man to pay from 22 to 25 s. a week, or in some cases as little as 6d. a week, and their revenue from that source is considerable. I think even at pays the surgeon's salary?—We want to increase our revenue very badly; we are not able to carry on with £1,400 a year. I will speak over the matter with my governors.

22491. Dr. BROWN.—You mentioned about a comprehensive scheme of reform: would you give us some of the details of what you refer to?—I mean making the infirmary a unit, as a sort of centre, the district hospitals sending in cases to it as that varied acute treatment, and also the Dispensary men.

22492. You would allow the dispensary men the power to send a patient to the county infirmary?—Yes.

22494. It is a common thing in Dublin and large cities for a surgeon to take his own nurse to private cases; you could do the same in a poor case?—I say that entirely in the interests of the public, because I have been sent long distances like Drogheda West and received a large fee for going there, but I think it should be part of the scheme that the county infirmary should be the central institution, and the county surgeons, acting in union with distant parishes. In Drogheda West people complain they are too far off, and don't receive sufficient benefit from the county infirmary; I think that is a fair complaint, therefore, I think the benefits of the infirmary should be increased in every way.

22495. You think the salary of the surgeons should include that he should go to those distant places without any extra fee?—Yes, or for a nominal fee.

22496. And in that way those districts would gain the advantage and the experience of the county infirmary?—They would.

22498. I mean such a change as that would be welcomed by the local doctors; they would be very glad to have an operating surgeon coming from the county infirmary and conducting it with them?—I think it would be well received; on the other hand, I do know some men who are most skilful and only too glad when they do get an operative case, but I think that the number is relatively small; men may be extremely good physicians, but the hand is not constantly in practice for surgery.

22499. Dr. BROWN.—I suppose you have frequently come across patients who would rather pay than not?—Yes, a complaint was made to me only to-day by a man who wanted his wife taken into the infirmary as a paying patient; I could not take her in; I have no isolation ward nor sufficient nursing; if we had more staff and a few wards we could take in such cases and treat them.

22500. In Omagh, for example, Dr. Thompson has a large number of private wards, and for £1 a week he takes in any people that like to come in for the benefit of the place. The county infirmary in Sligo is very near the County Leitrim; you said something about taking in patients from Leitrim—would it not be better if there was some arrangement with Leitrim that the county should pay for those patients?—Yes. Mr. Dolan wrote to me some time ago suggesting such a thing. Drogheda is within an hour from Sligo by railway; it is a very populous district, but it is literally cut off from Carrick-on-Shannon; the people there have no benefit from their own county hospital.

22501. CHAIRMAN.—There are even more remarkable cases—there is Donaghy, where the county infirmary is on the edge of the county, not a bounded parish from the boundary, and there are doctors in that county of fifty or sixty miles. It is greatly used by the people of Tyrone on the other side of the river.

Dr. BROWN.—About the consumptive patients, could you give us any evidence?—It is a very great difficulty with me. A large number of consumptive cases have come to my hospital. I think it was your Chairman took the matter up in the last instance. We used to have to frequently refuse to take in cases of advanced phthisis; I used to recommend them to go to the workhouse where they would be well looked after under the care of the nurse. They had an objection to do so, but under the new arrangement they have an excellent ward at the workhouse; I have frequently advised patients to go, and they seemed very glad to go. I refuse to treat any cases but incipient phthisis. It is most important that in the district hospitals there should be accommodation for these cases, otherwise they remain at home expectorating over the road floor and spreading the disease.

22502. Do you not think that there should be some arrangement for two or three counties?—Yes. I hear from the number of people trying to go to Newmarket that if there was any properly-equipped place for the treatment of phthisis it would be made very great use of.

22503. These district hospitals often require an extra nurse; do you think it would be a saving to the ratepayers of the County generally if there was some arrangement with the county infirmary where they would have extra nurses that one could be drafted to Drogheda West or Tubercular?—That is my idea; I think these institutions should be all interdependent, working together.

22504. CHAIRMAN.—Talking of what Dr. Bigger is speaking of, would you be in favour of establishing a nursing scheme for the county which would mean the training of these nurses locally at your infirmary in conjunction with your infirmary and the workhouse, as at Waterford, and establish a trained staff of nurses, of Sligo girls, here, and then send them backwards and forwards to assist the nurse in the workhouse and in the district hospitals when required?—I think it would be a very good plan.

22505. Dr. BROWN.—They would also be available for private cases on payment of fees. It would be a source of revenue for the infirmary itself, as Dr. Thompson does in Omagh?—Yes, I often get his nurses in my part of the county.

22506. Is it not unfair to the Sligo girls to bring in Tyrone girls?—We have no way of training them here.

22507. CHAIRMAN.—If that was got over?—Yes, certainly.

22508. You could easily, with the number of medical men in Sligo, arrange for a system of lectures, and you had a house surgeon?—I think a house surgeon is very necessary in a hospital to be always on the spot when the surgeon is away.

22509. They have such a scheme started in Waterford, and it is working extremely well, the county infirmary and the workhouse joining?—Yes. You get the best class of men—young men who come fresh from the schools; it is very good to rub them up against old surgeons and keep them up-to-date.

22510. Dr. BROWN.—Good for both?—Good for both.

Mr. HENRY BARNHAM, Vice-Chairman, Co. Council, examined.

Mr. Henry
Barnham.

22511. CHAIRMAN.—Are you connected with any of the local bodies?—With all of them—County Council, District Council, Poor Law Guardians, District Asylums, County Infirmary, and Fever Hospital.

22512. We have not had any evidence yet about the Fever Hospital; it is managed by a committee of 20 members?—Yes. I am not so conversant with the Fever Hospital, I am not a member of it, although the County Council appoints the members, I am not a working member.

22513. Do you know much about that hospital?—No.

22514. The county infirmary has been wonderfully improved of recent years?—I believe it has.

22515. Great structural improvements and general improvements; is there anything about that that you

Sept. 20, 1904.
 Mr. Henry

but like to say I—What I would like to mention about the county infirmary is that I think the sum that the Act of Parliament states is entirely too small—£2,400. I would like to see the County Council have power to increase that sum, that is provided the necessity arises for the increase. I think myself from my experience of the working of the county infirmary that sometimes serious cases, and patients have not been taken in on the ground that there are insufficient funds. I have seen patients myself, and they have to be told to wait until a vacancy comes.

22513. Would you be in favour of limiting the amount or allow them, like a Board of Guardians, to spend as much as would be necessary subject to audit?—Yes; in fact I have a resolution to that effect, practically coming on, that we appoint an auditor and avail ourselves of the power which the enactment of Dr. Thompson brought in, that we would get the power to increase.

22514. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't you think that would be giving the committee a large power considering that so few outside people attend the meetings?—I would not.

22515. Very few people from Tisbury and outlying places attend the meetings?—I have so far away a Tisbury, and I think it would be the duty of a man who undertook the responsibility to attend.

22516. CHAIRMAN.—How far do you come?—Fifteen miles, from Chisworthy. I don't think that—it may curtail the power of the committee, but I have never found the committee since the Local Government Act has been in operation exceeding that power; on the contrary, they are more for reducing it, keeping down the rates. An instance may occur when the rates unaccountably must be raised. I dare say it may have a tendency to increase the power, but I think the power of the committee is crippled, and it would be a step in the right direction.

22517. Would you give the same power of expenditure as the Board of Guardians possess?—The Board of Guardians is entirely under the control of the Local Government Board.

22518. Their expenditure is practically in their own hands subject to audit and compliance with statutory provisions such as all bodies have?—I would, of course; I would be inclined to give them that; we have the same power in the asylum.

22519. What is your view about the amalgamation of unions?—I would approve of amalgamation of unions with a provision that there would be added to the union that you amalgamate with, where the numbers increase, some industrial houses to train the paupers of that institution in some trade or mode of making a livelihood, and also some means of giving employment to the able-bodied people, and particularly to the tramps who are becoming in Silke Union exceedingly numerous. Efforts have been made again and again and resolutions passed that they do a certain amount of labour—I am referring to the tramps—that they do a certain amount of stones and manual labour that never can be done with the officials. I think they have not sufficient power; there should be some veto put on their admission. If you take a tramp from twelve or fourteen miles from here he gets on and locates himself in the nearest poorhouse: he goes through my place to Ballyshannon possibly, and one week, and he continues that, particularly in the winter months, daily. What I would suggest is that some provision should be made that he would be kept there until he would earn, in manual labour, if he is a labourer, or some other thing, what his cost would be, or that he should not be admitted without some card of admission. If he applies to the relieving officer, or at the gate of the house saying he is destitute, in his case; you cannot put him out. If he applies to me as a Guardian for a ticket, and says if he does not get a ticket he will sleep out, and may be lose his life if it is a frosty night or a wet night.

22520. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you be in favour of having the English law, which enables Guardians to detain tramps several days?—The cure would be worse than the disease in that case; if you had not some remunerative employment for him you would see too much of him.

22521. The idea was that there should be a real workhouse, where tramps could be employed?—That would be my idea.

22522. And paid for the work they did?—If they did more work than the cost of their food, I would certainly give them a start; if they earned four half-crowns in four days and their food only cost two half-crowns, I would give them the balance. Then as regards the workhouse hospitals, I would prefer them to become district hospitals.

22523. CHAIRMAN.—You would cut them off from the workhouse?—Yes.

22524. I don't know whether you were present this morning when we went into that question with Mr. O'Leary, and showed that one way of cutting them off the workhouse would be by taking out of the workhouse all classes except the sick and infirm?—If you had a rural district hospital, that would take away the taint of pauperism; you would get a sick person to come in there and pay for his maintenance; we have no place for them but the county infirmary, and the county infirmary sometimes is crowded, and they have not sufficient attendants there; they have only one doctor, and I think about four nurses; they have forty-five beds.

The Sitting terminated.

Sept. 21, 1904 FORTY-FIFTH PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21st, 1904.

At the Court-house, Carrick-on-Shannon.

Present:—MR. MICKS, (Chairman), MR. MURNAGHAN, and DR. COET BIDDER.

MR. T. W. DELANEY appeared for the Mohill Rural District Council.

MR. JAMES A. KIERMAN appeared for Ballinamore Council.

MR. C. W. ALLYPOE appeared for Carrick-on-Shannon Board of Guardians.

MR. PATRICK MAGUIRE, Vice-Chairman, Co. Council, examined.

MR. PATRICK
MAGUIRE.

22522. CHAIRMAN.—You are a County Councillor?—I am Vice-Chairman of the County Council; I never acted as a Poor Law Guardian, and consequently I will express my views in general terms. I consider one workhouse in South Leitrim ample for the accommodation of all the poor in Mohill, Carrick-on-Shannon, and Bawnboy, who number less than 200. Mohill was built to accommodate 600 or 700; twenty years ago it contained over 200; to-day the number is thirty-eight, and the officials to-day number more than twenty years ago. It follows that the staff there could easily look after the poor of South Leitrim. I believe amalgamation would result in a substantial saving to the ratepayers; the district asylum has about 140 or 150 in excess of the proper number.

22523. That is in Sligo? That is in Sligo. There are about 250 harmless lunatics; these could be transferred to a disused workhouse which would relieve forever—I hope at least it would relieve forever—the existing congestion; I consider, also, that it would decrease the demand on the Irish Taxation Account by £1,300 a year, which would be a step in the right direction.

22524. Decrease your Parliamentary Grant?—Decrease the demand on the Irish Taxation Account; in point of expenditure it would be only 2s. in the auxiliary.

22525. You then think that 2s. would be enough?—I do think so; I certainly do.

22526. Because you are the first witness we have met who has given evidence to that effect?—I am partly aware since I came here that some go for 4s.; I do not. The Irish Taxation Account is a purely Irish fund, with about £70,000 or £80,000 of a contribution from the Treasury. Let me assume for a moment that there are about 4,000 imbeciles in the Irish workhouses; if these were transferred to a fully-equipped asylum they would increase the demand on the Irish Taxation Account by about £42,000 a year, and that would render that account insolvent, and there is a clause in the Local Government Act that when that happens the deficit would be made up by direct taxation—the 2s. would be made up. For that reason I think it would be only right to go in for 2s. of a capitation, besides I believe a disused workhouse is ipso facto ready for the reception of these harmless patients on inmates.

22527. When you speak of South Leitrim I suppose you mean the part south of Lough Allen?—I do.

22528. And you think one workhouse would be enough for that?—One workhouse would be enough, and from the geographical position Mohill should be the workhouse, and all the poor now in Carrick-on-Shannon and Bawnboy could be easily looked after there.

22529. You contemplate the abolition of Bawnboy?—And Carrick-on-Shannon; and I would be in favour of withdrawing Carrick-on-Shannon for the reception of the harmless lunatics now in the asylum.

22530. Mohill has railway communication with Ballinamore and also with Carrick-on-Shannon?—Well, yes.

22531. And then from Ballinamore you have the railway to Dromahaire?—Yes.

22532. For that reason you think Mohill is a better centre than Carrick?—Oh, yes; Carrick being on the borders of Roscommon it would be inconvenient to send the poor from the extreme south-east of Leitrim over here—I suppose it would mean about twenty miles. From Sligo here the railway accommodation is very good.

22533. Is there any other matter that you wish to speak on?—I don't think so; of course being a Poor Law Guardian I don't wish to go into details.

22534. Have you ever been a Poor Law Guardian?—No; that is what I have not been; I wish to give my views generally.

22535. What is your general opinion as a ratepayer?—On the question of amalgamation, I believe it is very essential, and more especially it makes it do so; so on account of the congestion of the asylum, if we have not amalgamation there will have to be about £50,000 expended on building the wings at Sligo.

22536. You propose Carrick-on-Shannon as an auxiliary asylum?—Yes, that is what I advocate; it is on the line to Sligo and it would be very advantageous to transfer them up here, not that I have any interest in Mohill, but it is the centre of the South Leitrim, and it is ample, having been built to accommodate 600 or 700; the accommodation is better now than it was forty years ago, and consequently seeing that we have less than 200 poor in South Leitrim there is ample space there for them.

22537. Would you prefer not answering any questions about the treatment of the destitute in workhouses?—I will answer anything as far as I know.

22538. You are aware now that there are a large number of different classes maintained in each workhouse?—Yes.

22539. You know that you have in Mohill, for instance sick, aged and infirm, lunatics, and even who come in to be confined of children, and children and tramps and casuals?—Yes.

22540. And hardly any of any other class; but virtually takes in the whole, and you have this large number of different classes of people grouped together in one building; a great many witnesses, in various parts of the country, have given evidence to the effecting to that system and suggesting that methods might be taken for having a better classification of the inmates by removing them from a workhouse—to instance sending all the lunatics either to the present asylum or to an auxiliary asylum—would you approve of that?—That would have my approval undoubtedly; that is in an auxiliary asylum; because if they were sent from Mohill and every other asylum in Ireland they would cost too much in a fully-equipped asylum.

22541. Do you think the cost of the asylum is very much more than in a workhouse; take the Sligo Asylum; do you think an inmate costs much more in Sligo than in the Mohill workhouse?—I certainly do, except in this instance; in our workhouses we have a larger staff at the moment than twenty years ago, whereas we have not half the number of patients; it is the staff adds on the money; they are looking after each other; they have very little else to do.

Sept. 21, 1904

Mr. Patrick Maguire.

22543. The increase is chiefly in the nursing staff looking after the sick?—Yes.

22544. You would not cut down the nursing attention to the sick?—No, I would not.

22546. People are rather surprised when they look closely into it, the cost in the asylum is not so much more than in the workhouse; the Poor Law Guardian, when showing the cost of an inmate, only shows the cost of his food, and sometimes of his clothing, whereas as far as an asylum they take the whole annual cost of the asylum under every heading and divide that by the number of patients, and that gives you the yearly cost; if you adopt the same principle in the workhouse and divide the entire cost in the workhouse by the entire number of inmates you will find it a very much higher cost than is shown under the present statistics?—I am aware of that, but I am still of opinion, on account of there being so few patients, it is the establishment that takes up the money.

22547. You would rather increase the number in suitable cottages?—Quite so. I am well aware that at the present time the average cost in Mohill, taking everything into account, is £25 for each pauper, and I should say it would not be very much more in the asylum proper, including the Capitalist Grant.

22548. You are aware that a number of women enter the workhouse with the object of having illegitimate children?—Yes, sir.

22549. It has been suggested, in some places, that that is a fruitful source of increase of pauperism, that these women have more children after a time and that their own children in turn become what you might call hereditary paupers; and suggestions have been made to us that it would be a very suitable thing that a girl, on the occasion of her first fall, instead of coming to the workhouse should be sent, at the expense of the rates, to a religious penitentiary, managed by whatever religious community the girl might belong to, and efforts should be made to reclaim her and start her as quickly as possible in some employment, and that her child should be retained for a year and a half or whatever the time might be before it could be turned out; the child should be boarded out if possible at the expense of the girl or of the father of the child, and that that class should in future be altogether excluded from workhouses and in the same way all children would disappear from workhouses by being boarded out; would such a change meet with your approval?—I think it would be most desirable and would be a great protective; the present system encourages the getting of illegitimate children; that would be a very good thing if it could be legally carried out.

22550. That would take out three classes from the workhouse—the lunatics, the mothers of illegitimate children, and the children themselves?—That, I believe, would be an excellent thing if it could be carried into effect.

22551. Then your suggestion about having one workhouse in South Leitrim would mean that all the sick and infirm for that district would go into one workhouse, be it Carrick, Mohill, or wherever it would be?—Yes.

22552. You would have them classified according to their condition and so forth?—Quite so.

22553. Would you propose to remove the sick from the hospital in their own neighbourhood, or would you think that an unfair hardship, putting Carrick out of the question for the moment, because here you have a county infirmary, but suppose a place, where there is no county infirmary like Manchesterhamilton or Mohill, if you were chosen to either of these workhouses do you think it would be a fair or proper treatment of the sick of the locality to oblige them to go very long distances, or would you keep open a small hospital there for the acutely sick that could not be removed?—As I understand permanently ill or curable.

22554. Curable, or at least amenable to cure?—There should be a local infirmary where they would be cured and then transferred.

22555. A district hospital?—A district hospital.

22556. Mr. MURKHAM—Here?—I may mention now, the county infirmary; I don't think the northern portion of the county—although they contribute a sum for its maintenance—wants a single individual here. There are a lot from Roscommon looked after here, and it is very little good to this county except Carrick-on-Shannon.

22557. Do they get any payment from Roscommon?—In very few cases, I think.

22558. We had evidence in Sligo that the Manchesterhamilton people who go to the Sligo Infirmary do pay it, a day?—That may happen here, but I am not aware of it.

22559. Do you think it would be a proper thing for us to recommend that patients coming from Roscommon across the water here, and in the same way from Manchesterhamilton to Sligo, that they should pay to the institution of the other county?—I think they should undoubtedly pay when going to another county.

22560. If the people themselves could not pay that it would be a proper case for the county to pay?—Precisely; it should be put on the rates of the district from which the patients come.

22561. About cessals or tramps, you see something of them?—Very often; I think amalgamation would decrease those.

22562. Would you adopt any stronger methods with them?—On that subject I have given very little attention; I would not like to give a personal opinion.

22563. It has been suggested—I am not now speaking of what you might call the itinerant poor of the parish or neighbourhood; there are certain old folk or people who go about and are welcome from house to house very much; excluding that class altogether and dealing with the professional tramps or vagrants—it has been suggested to us that these people are living on society and giving nothing for it, and in some cases bringing up families in idle courses to become tramps themselves; it has been suggested that these people might be taken and put into an institution, call it a workhouse proper, some people call it a labour colony, an institution where they would have to labour and labour for their support, and put them in there until such time as the magistrate might think fit, and in that way remove from the county all itinerant tramps who are, I think, pretty generally objected to?—That is so.

22564. Put them in there, not so much as a punishment but with a view of teaching them habits of industry, and as soon as they do know some occupation or have been taught to handle a spade or shovel then send them out with a written permission to go, and if they are found tramping about again then put them in for a longer period?—I consider that would be a very good thing.

22565. There are such institutions in Belgium and other places that are practically self-supporting, as far as possible; the idea is this, that these people should live in an institution by the efforts of their own labour?—In that case there should be a tract of land.

22566. Yes and a place for making rough clothing with a view of as little as possible of outside supplies going in?—I believe that would be an excellent thing if it were carried into effect.

22567. Mr. MURKHAM—In the scheme you have outlined you have not taken into consideration the other portion of the county; there is a large portion of the county represented by Manchesterhamilton as a centre; what would you suggest should be done to give it accommodation?—I would prefer the Chairman of the County Council, who represents that portion of the county to answer that. From conversations I understand there is only going to be one workhouse in North Leitrim, and I would leave it to him to deal with; I only deal with South Leitrim, the other part has very little connection with the south; so far as Poor Law business is concerned it can be taken independently I should say.

22568. You think where the workhouses exist at present there should be retained some accommodation for the sick of the locality?—I would be of that opinion—a district hospital, I should say, in each town.

22569. Have you any view to offer on the question of out-door relief as regards its extension or otherwise?—With regard to that I would suggest town ratings. I may again mention I have never been a Poor Law Guardian and consequently don't pretend to know minutely all in connection with Poor Law matters but I am aware very often the majority of the out-door relief is given in towns and the money expended in towns, and consequently there should be a town rating to meet that, and I believe if there was you would not have so much out-door relief.

Mr. Patrick
Maguire.

22570. Do you think that the old system of electoral division rating was a safer one than the union-at-large?—I am not aware what was the custom.

22571. The old system was to make each electoral division responsible for the poor of its area?—I believe that would be the best system; it would concentrate attention upon the different districts, and, of course, bring home to the District Commissioners or Guardians representing the particular districts the amount of out-door relief given in the district; make them personally responsible. At the present time, when it is divided over a union, what is so man's particular business is not looked after.

Mr. PATRICK GATFORTH, J.P., Chairman, Co. Corneil, examined.

Mr. Patrick
Gatforth.

22572. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the County Leitrim County Council?—Yes.

22573. Are you in the Manchesterham Union?—Yes.

22574. You have heard your Vice-Chairman's evidence?—Yes, sir.

22575. What is your view about the Poor Law system in North Leitrim?—If you would not mind I would give you a statement of my own as to what I might think would be desirable with regard to the county-at-large, as I have a practical knowledge of a large portion of it and a limited knowledge of the other part, at least a fairly good geographical knowledge of the entire county. Of course I believe that the present Poor Law system in the County Leitrim could be improved without causing any hardship or inconvenience, and ultimately result in a saving to the ratepayers. Of course under no circumstances would I sacrifice efficiency for economy; I believe two workhouses would be quite sufficient to meet the needs and requirements of the County Leitrim, one situated in North Leitrim and the other in the South. Of course, you see, owing to the geographical formation of Leitrim, as anybody by a glance at the map can see, it is absolutely impossible to do without having two workhouses. Manchesterham Workhouse, in my opinion, should be maintained on account of its central position; it is perfect—sanitary, and with water and hospital accommodation. The Keshmull rural district, that part of Leitrim attached as present to the Ballyshannon Union, should be amalgamated with the Manchesterham Union; the District Council have already passed a resolution asking to be amalgamated with Manchesterham, the County Council have unanimously passed a resolution endorsing that of the District Council.

22577. Under the dispensary doctor?—Yes, sir. Keshmull and Ballymore, and, I think, although no such facilities exist, for Drumshambo or Drumkieran, for they are very badly situated with regard to convenient hospital accommodation. Manchesterham Workhouse was built to accommodate 750; there are at present in it only 102. As to the actual number that is in Ballyshannon Union, from Leitrim, I am not actually certain, but I am of opinion, from what I learned last year, that it should be between twenty and twenty-five, so there is no fear of overcrowding. Mahill Workhouse had been built to accommodate 600 originally; there were 86 in it at the end of July, and in Carrick, at the end of July 1903 inmates, that means of course, I presume, the entire number, portion of which had come from Roscommon; in Bawnbeg, from Leitrim, there were only twenty-three, so there is no danger of overcrowding. The Carrick hospital should be merged in the county infirmary, and it discontinued as such.

22578. What discontinued as such?—The county infirmary. I come from North Leitrim, and I never send a patient to it.

22579. Your people go to Sligo?—No, to the union hospital.

22580. The great number go to Sligo Infirmary, we get evidence yesterday?—No patients are admitted into Sligo Infirmary except under assumed names—apparently resident in County Sligo.

22581. They admit them?—Yes, but they must be paying patients, not otherwise.

Oh, yes, it is as paying patients at 1s. a day.

22582. Dr. Briggs.—It is a day does not cover their cost?—It covers the establishment cost.

22583. It does not cover the whole cost?—They might have a vacant bed.

22584. CHAIRMAN.—No, the other is larger?—They are making improvements at present.

22585. They would rather the Leitrim patients paid their way?—They are the only patients who do pay. If Carrick-on-Shannon Workhouse were closed I believe an auxiliary asylum for harmless lunatics should be established either in the workhouse or jail. The number of harmless lunatics in Sligo Asylum at present, fit to be removed, is between sixty-five and seventy, and as the greater majority of those are males—there are 210 males and 97 females—I believe a lunatic asylum should be confined to one sex alone. There is no overcrowding of females in the asylum at present. The primary reason for establishing an auxiliary asylum is that the asylum is at present overcrowded to the extent of 255 patients, for which, of course, the joint committee will have to provide accommodation, which, I understand from the estimate made out, will cost something about £20,000, without taking into consideration the furnishing of it, and that would, in my opinion, be a very serious charge—the repayment and interest—upon the mortgage of Leitrim and Sligo. It must be faced very soon, because at the last Board meeting we had a letter from the Board of Control threatening to withdraw the grant in aid unless we made ample provision for the lunatics committed to the asylum. To turn Carrick into an auxiliary asylum would be much cheaper; in fact I saw an estimate, that between £4,000 and £5,000 would make ample accommodation for as many patients as are at present in excess of the number which the asylum is able to accommodate, and, of course, Carrick-on-Shannon, besides, is within easy reach of almost any part of Sligo, and it is within reach of all parts of Leitrim, by railway communication. At present, in Leitrim, there are not a large number of harmless lunatics and imbeciles; in Leitrim the total number of imbeciles and epileptics does not number twenty, and those, of course, should be removed to the auxiliary asylum. I have seen the proposal of boarding out harmless lunatics as an experiment; it would meet with my approval, though I have not much belief in its ultimate efficiency. I know there are a number of patients in Sligo Asylum who are quite capable of taking care of themselves, but they happen to be committed there and nobody will take charge of them and they remain there; they do daily labour and are sent out into the town without anybody in charge of them; they are known as "lone patients," but they cannot be discharged as no one will take charge of them. As to the deserving and poor, I believe a grant should be made by Parliament in order to assist in supporting the deserving and poor without coming into the workhouse.

22586. Relief out of doors?—I would consider the term out-door relief objectionable. As a matter of fact the Government gives grants in aid of the maintenance of criminals, and I don't see why the Government, who have worked all their lives as best they could to make a living and are then unable to maintain themselves, should have recourse to the workhouse and be branded as paupers.

22587. But the relief, call it what you like, would be administered by the local Poor Law authorities. By the existing staff; I would not be in favour of increasing it; it is already embarras enough.

believe patients, who are in immediate necessity of the careful supervision of a doctor, should be admitted to the workhouse without having to go through the body of the board.

22558. You would make it a district hospital without any connection with destitution at all?—Yes, sir, I believe, I believe, should be committed to the reformatory or labour colony; that is at the beginning whenever they visited any workhouse officer than twelve months, and as it would be an experimental thing it should be a limited period.

22559. Would that be in order to test whether a man was really a tramp or not; if he came back a second time you would treat him as a real tramp?—Yes; that is the best test that he is a tramp; any of us might be tempted on the road and unable to obtain a decent lodgings and have to take the best shelter we could.

22560. In order to get rid of that union test, if a man knew if he went to the same workhouse in twelve months he would be locked up, it would make him enlarge his circle, but, all the same, he would be just as great a tramp. We have had the suggestion made to us that a bona fide man, really looking for work, should get some testimonials from some persons in his own neighbourhood, in a recognised position for giving such a testimonial, that he was out of work in his own locality, and had to go elsewhere looking for work, and a man having such a certificate would be afforded aid and shelter and lodging, but a man who could not show such a certificate would be treated as a simple tramp?—That is a question, to my mind, considering the present position of the country, that is a complicated one. There are reasons why I would withhold giving a certificate to a man and give it to another man who was not equally deserving.

22561. As a magistrate, you would not refuse a certificate to a man you knew was deserving of it?—Certainly not.

22562. But if you gave a certificate to a man, no matter what you thought of him, if you knew he was a labouring man, and could not get labour in the locality, you would give a certificate that he was going from Manchester to Sligo in search of work, or from Manchester to Belfast in search of work, that would protect him along his road, and enable him to find and shelter until he reached the place?—Yes, sir; but I may speak of the County Leitrim as I know it. I perfectly know of a deserving man leaving a place under in a position to carry himself along.

22563. The inference is, that there are only regular tramps to be dealt with?—And my suggestions would deal with them.

22564. No, because you would let the tramp go off until he came a second time?—I said so an experimental.

22565. You would only penalise him when he came back the second time, but he would take care not to come back the second time?—The First Offenders' Act might be applied in that case.

22566. This legislation would have the effect of making them enlarge their walking tour. The thing is to catch the man who really are living on other people without doing any work for it themselves; catch these people, and try and give them habits of industry; would you approve of it?—I would approve of the idea as I suggested; people look at the same matter in a different light. I am not in favour of a man going about with a pouch in his pocket; it is in the fashion of a ticket-of-leave.

22567. It is more on the ground of a passport?—I think it objectionable.

22568. No man would require to have such a passport but a man who had no money in his pocket?—It might happen I would get into one workhouse on a passport, and before I got to the next I might lose it. Where would I be, then? I would be in the same position as if I had not one at all. I consider it would be the duty of the workhouse officials or the police to inquire into it. The police inquire into far more trivial things, and spend their time in not very profitable employment when they should look the tramps up; they can have his photograph, and there can be a mouse, without any stretch of imagination, to get a hold of him.

22569. Would not that be more objectionable, as regards paying into and interfering with these people, if they were to be policed and in the Run-and-Cry, and photographed, and all that, would not that be a greater interference with the liberty of the people?—My suggestion is with regard to the person who might apply at the same workhouse under an assumed name twice in twelve months, which is common at present. I believe that children should be boarded out whenever a suitable opportunity arose, but not under the age of three years.

22570. Why do you say three instead of two, for instance?—A child of two years is hardly able to be entrusted where it might be occasionally without anybody in charge of it. At three years it is stronger, and the chances are it is better able to take care of itself when you cannot have the careful eye of somebody over it, as, generally, you cannot under all circumstances. I believe the mothers of illegitimate children should be sent to religious refuges, as it would tend to diminish the first cases and abolish second cases. Convicts should be sent to central institutions, maintained by the State. With regard to the maintenance of patients in auxiliary asylums, I believe the same grant should be made as in the ordinary asylum. That is a highly important thing, in view of the proposed changes, as from information, I learn there is some friction about the matter with regard to the present one at Yeaghal. I believe they ultimately succeed in getting the 4s.

22572. You think if there were any shortage of money to pay the difference between the 2s. and 4s. grant, a further grant should be made?—Yes; in fact, I consider that we should claim the aid not as a matter of justice but as a matter of right.

On Infirmary, examined.

22573. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to say something about the county infirmary?—It was more about the workhouse. My idea is, after a very long experience, that the time has come for the lessening the number of workhouses in the county. When I was appointed, thirty-nine years ago, we had 400 inmates in Quirk's Workhouse, and at that time we had more children in the house than the entire population there now; and I think that it would be a very beneficial thing to close one house, at all events, in the county; and, instead of crowding any of the others with patients from a distance, I would be very much inclined that the old, aged, and infirm people should get an allowance—out-door relief, in fact; and I think it would be equally advisable that the children should be in a separate school, where they can get industrial training, and everything else, and in that way, of course, it would lessen the number which you would have to find room for; but I should say, judging from my own workhouse, that either of the other workhouses almost would contain all that would be necessary; but, of course, Bradshaw, distance has to be taken into consideration; and, therefore, I would say it would be necessary to have a workhouse at Manchester and another at Mohill, that is, provided that this was made an assistant asylum.

22574. And the county infirmary would look after the acutely sick?—Yes, as usual. We have been up to this admitting a number of our neighbouring Roscommon patients.

22575. Do you get any payment from them?—No; we asked, but we did not get it.

22576. You know the practice in Sligo?—I have heard it. They pay 1s. if they pay the same in our hospital it would be very well worth their while to do so, for the accommodation, and to be so near home. It would cost them to go up to Roscommon with a patient 12s.

- Sept. 21, 1904
Dr. Headshaw.
22607. For a car, and there is plenty of accommodation in our workhouse.
22607. You get them from as far as Elphin?—Nearly to Elphin. We have the same staff; in fact it is a bit increased, for we have an extra nurse, an extra sister.
22608. Then your suggestion would be that Carrick-on-Shannon might be closed as a workhouse and made into an auxiliary lunatic asylum?—Decidedly.
22609. And the county infirmary would be sufficient for the requirements of the sick in the neighbourhood?—Yes; the only thing would be that the committee would have to be a little more careful in paying their tickets—not give them to people who did not want them.
22610. At present you are aware that in workhouse infirmaries you are at liberty to incur all necessary expense, and treat all the patients who come there?—Quite so.
22611. You are not limited by any annual financial grant?—I am not; but I am in the county infirmary.
22612. Then, when you come to the county infirmary, what is your annual grant?—£600.
22613. Could you spend more, and would you spend more, and do you think more ought to be spent?—I do.
22614. Would you approve of a variation in the law that would permit the committee of the county infirmary to spend on the same basis as the workhouse hospital?—I would, and not to be cramped.

Mr. J. G. KERR, F.R.C.S., Chairman, Manohamilton Union, examined.

Mr. J. G. Kerr.

22615. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Manohamilton Guardians?—Of the District Council and Board of Guardians.
22616. What is the view of the Guardians on the question of amalgamation so far as it affects either North Leitrim or the whole of Leitrim?—The Guardians think two workhouses would be sufficient in Leitrim, and the Guardians of Manohamilton are very anxious to get the part taken from them which was added to Ballyshannon, the Kinlough division; and the Kinlough District Council passed a resolution to that effect, asking to be taken back to Manohamilton.
22617. Are any of the Kinlough Guardians here to-day?
- Mr. Gaffney.—They were here in Ballyshannon.
22618. CHAIRMAN.—Do you happen to know what that resolution of the Kinlough Council carried by a large majority?—It was unanimous as far as the District Council was concerned.
22619. Then you would leave Manohamilton and one in South Leitrim?—I think that would be sufficient.
22620. Manohamilton and Kinlough take in the whole of North Leitrim?—Yes; and we have splendid facilities and a splendid water supply, and good railway facilities. We are in a very healthy position; and, as far as the management of the Manohamilton Union is concerned, it is about as good as there is in the county.
22621. Are you so much cut off from South Leitrim as to make it impossible, in your opinion, to have any question of amalgamation of Manohamilton with Carrick-on-Shannon?—The county is so situated that I 22622. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you not think that when the county infirmary would become the union hospital it would be a proper thing for the Guardians to take over the management of the infirmary, and conduct it as at Mohill and Manohamilton?—I don't see why the present committee who manage it should be displaced with.

22623. And why should the present Board of Guardians be displaced with?—Because the home is not necessary.
22624. You ask them to furnish all the money?—It is the County Council and all the money for the undertakings.
22625. I understood you to say that this county infirmary would do for all the needs of the sick in the union?—Yes.
22626. That being so, you are changing it from a county infirmary and making it a district hospital; therefore, why should it not be handed over to the Guardians when this workhouse is taken from them? This institution is to be put in place of the workhouse hospital, then should not the proper authority to manage it be the Guardians?—I cannot say, because the others pay money.
22627. They won't pay money under the altered circumstances?—Of course, if there was a change, instead of being paid by the county it was paid by the union; of course, then, I would say, naturally, that the Guardians would have the right to be the managers.

- think it would be impossible, seeing the distance it would be from one end of North Leitrim to the other part in South Leitrim; it would be impossible to have amalgamation with Carrick-on-Shannon.
22628. That is, on the present lines of union management. You would be in favour of removing lunatics or feeble-minded persons from a workhouse to an auxiliary asylum?—Yes; I think they could be better treated in an auxiliary asylum, unless the workhouse was specially fitted up for that purpose.
22629. As regards women with illegitimate children, would you be in favour of having these dealt with in penitentiaries?—I think where it would be a first one, the women should be taken in hand, and tried to be reformed, and the child taken from her, and either boarded out or reared in the workhouse; fortunately, we have very few in Manohamilton.
22630. As regards tramps?—They are the worst we have to deal with. If there could be any law in the world to do away with tramps it should be passed, because certainly they are a nuisance.
22631. You would like to make them industrious members of the community?—If it could be done, but I have my doubts. All the tramps I see won't work. I was trying to get the master to give them a cold bath to try to make them keep away.
22632. You might kill a man with a weak heart after a day's work, and then you would be in a awkward position?—Yes; but certainly there should be a law passed to deal with them in some way; the present system is not a good one; it is good enough for the tramps, but not for the people, who have to keep them.

Mr. PATRICK ROONEY examined.

Mr. Patrick Rooney.

22633. CHAIRMAN.—Now will you give us your views?—I scarcely have anything to add to the evidence of the Chairman of the County Council and the Chairman of the Guardians.
22634. You pointed out to us very clearly the advantageous situation of your workhouse as regards its sanitary position?—I believe there could be nothing got to exceed it; and I pointed it out to you as well as I could when you were there. It is on an eminence, and Manohamilton is becoming a very important town; and I may say food stuffs are to be got there as cheap as in any other town in Ireland.
22635. You think you get your food and coal cheap in Manohamilton?—There is such keen competition that I believe nowhere you go can you get better value for the money. To prove my argument, the cost of an innale with us is less than generally in other unions, and we treat them better, I believe. Well, we have also the advantage of excellent water, I believe it could hardly be surpassed, taken from a spring some miles away and brought to the town. We have railway accommodation just within a stone's throw of the place—In fact, we have every accommodation. But there is one thing I have to complain of—it is the county infirmary here. We make no use of it, and pay for it, and I don't see that we have a right to pay for what is not useful.

22636. Really, the infirmary some of your people use is illegal?—They have to pay when they go there.

22637. Dr. Broome.—Portion of the cost?—Well, I am not in a way to be accurate. Our patients are treated in the workhouse hospital with us, I believe successfully, too, and we are most anxious that the Leitrim portion of our county that goes down to Ballyshannon would be with us. They are anxious themselves.

advis, as the last witness has explained to you; and I believe it would be to their interest and to ours that they would amalgamate with us.

22638. That is the Kinsalegh portion?—Yes.

22639. You don't offer any opinion about South Leitrim; you let them manage their own affairs?—I know nothing about them; they are able to take care of themselves, I am sure.

Sept. 22, 1904

Mr. Patrick Rooney.

Mr. BERNARD KEAN examined.

22640. CHAIRMAN.—What is the view of the Ballinamore Council—are you in favour of breaking up Bawnboy Union?—No.

22641. You wish it to continue; you don't wish to join with Mohill or Carrick?—No; Mohill would be out of the way, and Carrick-on-Shannon would be very inconvenient for the destitute.

22642. Would you object to join with Mohill?—I would rather not join; I would rather stay with Bawnboy, considering my experience of the way it is managed. There is part of the Banniskillen Union—the Glen portion, in Cavan—that could very readily be added to Bawnboy, because it comes very close to it. Lanesboro Union, that I believe will go, comes within a short distance of Ballymacnall; a great portion of these two unions could be added to Bawnboy; there is also portion of Mohill, in the immediate neighbourhood of Carrigallen, that would be more convenient to Bawnboy than Mohill.

22643. Then you want to break up Mohill?—As between Carrick-on-Shannon and Mohill, in South Leitrim, I think Mohill would be the most suitable union; it is all situated in the county, and is more easily got at than Carrick.

22644. I forget whether you came to Banniskillen to the inquiry?—No, sir. Then, as to these hospitals, I think it would be necessary to retain some of these hospitals at the workhouse. If Bawnboy Union was closed you would have to go within four miles of Bawnboy, and being there either to Carrick or Mohill.

22645. If there was a hospital at Ballinacree?—Yes; if there was one established there, or leave the hospital at Bawnboy. Ballinacree would be very central, and then, if Bawnboy was done away with, it could accommodate a good part of the present Mohill Union; it comes within three miles of it.

22646. Is there anything else?—On this question of tramps, I would make a suggestion. Tramps generally make a point of coming to workhouses a night or two before fair or market.

22647. Those are generally the travelling musicians?—Yes, and pickpockets. I would keep them in the workhouse for two or three days, and make them do work.

22648. They do it in England now, but find it does not stop them?—They did it once in Mohill, and it had a very salutary effect.

22649. They have not power to do it in Mohill?—These tramps won't take you to courts at all.

22650. You would bring in the English provision, about keeping them longer?—I would, certainly, if the Guardians wished, and I think it would have a very good effect—it would leave them scarcer.

22651. That would cost you more?—It would in the beginning, but ultimately it would cost less.

22652. Mr. Delany.—Apparently, you think that Bawnboy ought not to be broken up?—Yes; I give my reasons for it.

22653. Have you considered what effect the breaking up of Bawnboy would have on the rates if you were amalgamated with Mohill?—Of course, if workhouses are done away with for the present it will have the effect of increasing the rates for some time.

22654. What rate do you pay now in Bawnboy?—A poor rate of 6d. or 9d.

22655. You don't happen to know that it is 1s. 1d.?—I don't know this year's rate.

22656. As a matter of fact it is 1s., and it is only 8d. in Mohill?—I can account for that. We had a lot of hospital repairs to get done for the last couple of years in Bawnboy, and had a great number of cases of fever from the Cavan portion of the union; and there is another cause of the rate being a bit higher. When the standard rate was made in Bawnboy our poor rate was very low. We got an Agricultural Grant of £36, in the £; the Mohill rates were high, they got 1s. 6d., and in Carrick 1s. 8d.

22657. You have no railway accommodation to Bawnboy from Ballinacree?—Yes, within about a mile.

22658. The railway takes you into the town of Mohill?—It does. Personally, as far as I am concerned, I would just as soon go to Mohill as Bawnboy; but I am calculating the distance sick people in the manimans would have to go to get to Mohill.

22659. How many miles would they have to go?—Six or seven Irish miles to Ballinacree, and also to Mohill.

22660. You don't happen to know the furthest portion of the Mohill district at Carrigallen; you would not be surprised to hear it is fourteen miles to Mohill?—I would not be surprised; but the distance to Bawnboy is not anything like that.

22661. You think if any union should be retained in South Leitrim it should be Mohill?—I believe Mohill would be the most central.

22662. The balance of convenience would be in favour of Mohill?—Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL MARTIN examined.

22663. CHAIRMAN.—Now you have heard your colleague's evidence; is there anything you would like to add to that?—I believe in the amalgamation of unions, and I wonder very much that they have not been amalgamated long ago. When those unions were built to accommodate 600 or 700 people the population of Ireland was over eight millions, now we have not got half the people, and I don't see how it is that so many unions are maintained for the accommodation of fifty or sixty people.

22664. What change would you make in your own county of Leitrim?—I would say that one auxiliary asylum and hospital would do the whole county of Leitrim, and the sanitary inmates of the union should get a weekly allowance, and let them board out, and do away with all the unions except one.

22665. Which would you retain?—That would be a difficult question for me to say, what point would be more central, and I would leave that to some eminent man and better judges than I am.

22666. But you think one ought to remain and two might be closed, and one of those converted into an auxiliary asylum?—I think they should all be closed, and there should be only one auxiliary asylum and hospital for the whole county, and that would be sufficient for the small population we have now got.

22667. How would you deal with the sick poor of North Leitrim, supposing you closed Manamagallon Workhouse and made it an auxiliary asylum—what would you do with the sick poor?—If they were not very sudden cases, or cases of contagious disease, they could travel a journey.

22668. You will always have a certain number of sudden cases every year?—For keeping an establishment open for the accommodation of a few people you pay almost as much as you do if the whole house was filled.

22669. Would you be willing that those people in North Leitrim should have no hospital accommodation nearer than Carrick or Mohill?—I would be very sorry to deprive the sick poor of accommodation, but I think under the present circumstances it is very badly managed, to the great expense of the ratepayers.

22670. How would you improve matters in North Leitrim?—I would say if there was a temporary hospital with eight or ten beds, and very bad cases would be left in those places, with a nurse and dispensary doctor.

22671. You would leave a small hospital, under the dispensary doctor?—Very small; and all other cases could go into the general hospital for the county.

22672. What you might call the general infirmary; would it be too great a distance to bring people from Manamagallon or Killybegher to Carrick-on-Shannon

Mr. Bernard Kean.

Mr. Michael Martin.

Mr. Michael

or Mohill?—That would depend on the nature of the disease, and it would take a doctor to answer the question.

22673. Looking at it as an ordinary, common-sense man, do you think that would be a very long distance to remove sick people by road?—If there was a proper means of conveyance I would not, provided the disease was not a very dangerous one.

22674. And if it were you would put it in the small hospital?—Yes.

22675. Mr. MURKHAM.—You think under the scheme you outline for giving out-door relief to the aged and infirm, due provision could be observed that only the deserving would get it?—I think the healthy inmates could be boarded out, and the relieving officer could look after their welfare once a week.

22676. Do you not think there would be a tendency to give money to poor people if the Guardians had a free hand, and owing to that tendency the care might be worse than the disease?—There are a good many houses in the country that would be very glad to take in those inmates at whatever money would be allowed them weekly, and they would be well looked after.

22677. How would you provide that only the deserving cases should get the money?—How do we provide for the cases that are admitted to the union at present?

22678. In some places there is a great outcry that out-door relief is given in cases where it ought not to be given; under the system that you suggest it might be enlarged. Have you any suggestion to make how to guard against that?—The Guardians of the district should look after that part, and see no one should get it except those who are entitled. No matter what business we enter into we will find great arguments and contradictions. I don't believe everything I hear myself.

22679. Are you a Guardian?—Yes.

22680. What is your experience with regard to out-door relief—is it larger than it was five or six years ago in your own particular union?—I don't believe it is; I am not sure.

22681. How do you manage at the Board meetings when a claim is put forward?—We inquire from the Guardians for the district and the relieving officer to know if it is a competent case for relief, and find it out in that way.

22682. No discussion about the subject?—Oh, yes, 22683. Do outside Guardians interfere, and say, "We are not quite satisfied that that person is entitled to it," or is it taken as a matter of course when the relieving officer recommends it?—No; they converse with one another, and find out whether the party is a fit subject. I have often seen them refused.

22684. Don't you think Manxhamilton would require a hospital there, at least with twenty or twenty-five beds, to accommodate the sick of that district?—How many in the infirmary altogether now in Manxhamilton?

22685. There is a large number—fifty-two by the last report?—A good many of them could be in the body of the house, perhaps.

22686. No doubt; I am allowing for more than half in the body of the house; but, even then, would you not require an infirmary of some kind?—You would; but a very small one would accommodate it under the rules I suggest.

22687. Don't you think it would be expensive and dangerous, too, to be sending away the sick to a great distance?—A good deal would depend on the mode of conveyance.

22688. By any means of conveyance; it would be costly and dangerous in some cases?—Look at the cost of the officials in each of those unions, where there are only sixty-three inmates in some of them. The cost of sixty-three inmates for their food and clothing for the year would only come to something about £570, roughly speaking. Where does the rest of the money go to?

22689. Under a scheme for a small hospital you would not require the great staff you have at present?—No; but it will take as much cost to stave an empty ship as if all her compartments were filled.

Mr. Charles
Cock B.
Whelan.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I have not very much evidence to give, but I approve of amalgamation; I believe, under existing circumstances, it is absolutely necessary; and I approve strongly of Mohill and Manxhamilton as centres. I think they would accommodate the county.

22690. Chairman.—You agree with Dr. Bradshaw's view?—I think there was a little confusion in his evidence about the infirmary and the hospital in the workhouse. But, with regard to the infirmaries, I think the county infirmary is a misnomer. I think the districts should be completely changed. I don't see why a man, because he breaks his leg in Roscommon, should have to pay for a week, when a man on this side can get in free. I think if they were called district infirmaries instead of county infirmaries it would be much better.

22691. In some cases, where the county town is in the centre of the county, county infirmary is a rational name, but not when the county infirmary is on the borders, between two counties?—From the infirmaries I know—Sligo, Roscommon, and this infirmary—if the districts were changed it would be a great advantage.

22692. Putting Manxhamilton into a County Sligo district?—Yes, for infirmary purposes, and changing the districts that are eligible for claiming the use of the hospital.

22693. And keep the area rigidly round the infirmary as the maintaining area?—That would be my suggestion. I was very glad to hear you mention the matter of a certificate for tramps; it has been a pet scheme of mine for some time. I mentioned it a short time ago to Mr. Lynch. Mine differs a little from what you suggested. My idea would be that a bona fide working man, who could not find work at home, should be provided by the head constable of his district with a book, and a photograph of the individual fixed in the first page of that book, so put in that it could not be easily tampered with, and to be initialed by the head-constable.

22694. A signed photograph?—Yes; and when the tramp arrived at the town where there was a workhouse, and wanted assistance, he should have his book vised by the head-constable of the town, who should then refer him to the relieving officer to get relief. To any ordinary vagabond or tramp I would certainly give the benefit of the prison. But as you suggest that certain homes should be opened for such people, where they could get work and be fed, if they chose to do work, I think that would be a very good idea, indeed. As to statistics in connection with the working of workhouses, I have been out of touch with them for some time, and really could not enter into the matter; but I think amalgamation is absolutely necessary. I know the county very well; I am not aware whether Keshigo is in the Ballyshannon Union.

22695. It is?—Because I was going to suggest that if Ballyshannon remained a workhouse in the future that Keshigo should be added on, and taken of Manxhamilton.

22696. It is in the Ballyshannon Union, and you think it ought to stay there?—I think so. All the district between Keshigo and the far side of Lough Melvin is too far from Manxhamilton, and there is a difficulty of transit.

22697. Garrison is in the County Fermanagh?—That would be in Ballyshannon, but should be added to Manxhamilton.

22698. The most distant part would be Colonel Dickson's, of Tullaghan?—Yes.

22699. Then they would have to come up from the Glenside Valley?—Yes; whereas from Garrison there is a road to Longnabey, and it is not such a long way to Manxhamilton.

22700. How far from Tullaghan to Manxhamilton?—Sixteen or seventeen miles.

Mr. Robert Wallace.

22701. CHAIRMAN.—You are CHAIRMAN of the Mohill Guardians?—Yes.

22702. Mr. Deasy.—Are you in favour of the breaking up of the Carrick-on-Shannon Union?—Yes, and the Manchesterhamilton Union. The Mohill Board of Guardians are unanimously in favour of amalgamation, and the scheme was agreed on was to take in the Letham portion of Burnley and Carrick-on-Shannon to Mohill. The valuation of the Letham portion of Burnley is about £2,700, and the valuation of the Carrick portion is £20,000.

22705. You have identified yourself that the workhouse in Mohill is ample to provide the accommodation?—Yes.

22706. How have the Guardians been keeping their workhouse?—Well, we adopted everything Mr. Lynch recommended, and carried it out. We spent a good deal of money on it last year, and have a fully-equipped workhouse. We have a special meeting summoned for to-morrow to consider Dr. Smyth's report, and we will adopt it. I approve of it.

22707. From a financial point of view, what do you think would be the effect of amalgamation?—It would be a decided benefit to the ratepayers of Carrick and Manchesterhamilton. The union rate in Mohill is coming down since the Local Government Act, but the union rate in Carrick is going up, and the increased valuation would bring it down much more.

22708. As regards the average cost of maintenance, how does Mohill stand?—Mohill was 3s. 3d., and Carrick 3s. 9d., but the union rate in Mohill is 2s. 6d., Carrick 2s. 10d., and Burnley 2s. 6d. The district rate is 9d. in Mohill, 10d. in Carrick, and 9d. in Burnley.

22709. As regards the added area, what would be the greatest distance—I think that would be from Drumilly?—From twelve to fourteen miles. There are parts of Carrigallen at present fourteen miles from Mohill, and they don't complain that they suffer any inconvenience.

22710. From Carrigallen there is no railway communication?—No; but we have the railway direct from Ballinacorney, and from Carrick-on-Shannon also.

22711. I believe your board passed a resolution giving certain answers to the queries sent out?—Yes, sir, we did.

22712. On the question of rating, what is the view of your board?—They are in favour of reverting back again to divisional charges. The tendency is, since it became a union charge, for cut-door rates to increase.

22713. As to some of the people who are in the workhouse not able to work, have you any scheme for dealing with these?—I think if they were boarded out it would be a very good idea; and the children, I think, should be sent to industrial schools out of the workhouse.

22714. You also think there should be an auxiliary asylum?—Yes, I am strongly in favour of an auxiliary asylum being established in Carrick-on-Shannon. There are at present 250 inmates in the District Asylum at Sligo, and I heard the Medical Superintendent say he would certify them to be fit subjects for an auxiliary asylum; those with the idiots in the workhouse would make about 300, and I think that would make a fair auxiliary asylum; but I am strongly of opinion that the Capitation Grant should be increased from 2s. to 4s. As the district asylum is in the County Sligo, it would be only just and right that the auxiliary asylum should be in the County Letham.

22715. CHAIRMAN.—And a great many of the Sligo people yesterday were of the same opinion?—I am glad to hear that. For the tramps, I think labour colonies, somewhat similar to what I read about lately in Switzerland, should be established. There is plenty of waste land in this country on which their labour could be utilized, say, for arterial drainage; there is nothing so necessary in Ireland.

22716. As regards the infirmary in Carrick-on-Shannon, do you agree with Dr. Brodshaw?—I do; I believe it should be converted into a district hospital. I would have a joint committee, with some of the local gentlemen and clergy; some of them give good attendance, and take a great interest in it.

22717. Mr. Delany.—In Mohill, are you aware there is an anxiety on the part of farmers, and people of that class, to use the hospital in case of sickness in their family?—I am; I believe there should be wards set apart for paying patients in the hospital.

22718. Dr. Brodshaw.—In all the hospitals?—In all the hospitals, and a regular scale of charges made out for those; they should not be in at all with the poor.

22719. Would you separate the hospital from the workhouse?—I would.

22720. Mr. Delany.—And the country people should be induced to use the hospital?—Certainly; and make a moderate scale of charges for those who could pay, and let them go into the pay ward, and not to be mixed up with the chronic people.

22721. Is there any other matter you want to mention to the Commission?—No; except that I think the area of rating should be changed from union rating. I have an idea that dispensary districts would make a very nice area, provided that towns like Carrick, Ballinacorney, and Mohill should be made separate areas.

22722. CHAIRMAN.—You want to give the towns a great bluster?—The people of the country would complain if they had a town on them.

22723. Are not many of the people in the town people who come in from the country?—Yes; but in the towns they have the benefit of their labour.

22724. You would make the towns pay for all the cut-door relief they give?—I would.

Mr. PATRICK FITZGERALD, J.P., Chairman.

22725. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Carrick-on-Shannon Rural District Council and Board of Guardians?—Yes.

22726. What is the view of your board on the question of the dissolution of the Carrick Union?—The vast majority of both the Council and the Guardians would be in favour of a scheme of amalgamation provided it was consistent with relieving the present rating.

22727. If you got a substantial economy, without impoverishing seriously the sick poor, you would be in favour of amalgamation?—Certainly, sir.

22728. What use would they suggest that their workhouse might be turned into?—An auxiliary asylum, in order to prevent an expenditure of £40,000 on the Sligo Asylum; and, further than that, they are of opinion that they could get a Capitation Grant of 4s.

22729. They think they ought to get that?—Yes.

22730. Then we may take it that a large majority of the Carrick-on-Shannon Guardians are in favour of the dissolution of the union on that basis?—Yes. I remember it was unanimous at our board, for the simple reason, that so far as their position goes, representing the sick poor and the ratepayers of the district, we had by statistics that we are paying something like £45 per head for the maintenance of paupers. The valuation is something like £45,000.

22731. Is that the Clerk of the Union's estimate?—Yes, sir; those figures are correct.

22732. Did you get them from him?—Yes; I got them from the Local Government Board's report, the last report.

22733. Did you include in those returns the cost of dispensary administration?—I did.

Carrick-on-Shannon Union, examined.

22734. That would be an unfair charge against the Carrick-on-Shannon Union, you would have that charge, in Flynn.

22735. That would not be the basis to make the calculation on?—Whether it is or it is not, it is an extraordinary fact that it exists all the same.

22736. No, no; the cost of the dispensary has no relation whatever to the workhouse?—It is for the relief of the sick poor, whether in the dispensary or workhouse, I take it.

22737. We are not dealing at all here with the Medical Charities Act, we are only dealing with Poor Law administration?—You can, of course, strike out half the cost of the medical officers.

22738. That is a very large item, dispensary administration?—It would be an extraordinary thing to be paying £90 per annum for the maintenance of a pauper.

22739. That is not the case?—With the exception of half the salary of the medical officers.

22740. The dispensary medical officers for the entire union and the cost of medicine?—Half the salaries are paid by the Treasury.

22741. That completely puts out your whole calculation?—It would take £5 per annum, I think, of the estimate of £45.

22742. You must not take me as agreeing on that?—I don't wish to make any point of that; but workhouses generally are too well officered for the number of inmates, and too much gone to the expense of the establishment. It may have been right enough when we had 400 inmates, but that is not as now.

22743. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think the county requires two workhouses?—I don't believe that we

Sept. 21, 1904

Mr. Robert Wallace.

Sept. 21, 1904

Mr. Patrick Ryan.

could do with one, considering the geographical position of our county. It is not very easy to get at Carrick-on-Shannon from the extreme northern position; railway communication is a difficult matter.

22752. The number is so small in the county—something under 300?—Yes.

22753. CHAIRMAN.—Any other matter you wish to refer to?—I desire to express the opinion of the Council that I preside over that unless an auxiliary asylum was established we would oppose any form of amalgamation.

22754. Why do you take that position?—On account of the rate. We expect to relieve the rate by doing this. At the present moment we pay something about 1s. in the £ for the Sligo Lunatic Asylum; if we could prevent a further expenditure of £40,000 by having this auxiliary asylum established here we consider it would be a great relief.

22755. Supposing the auxiliary asylum was established at Manorcunningham instead of Carrick-on-Shannon, and a reduction of the rating would take place by such an establishment as that, would you be in favour of breaking up the workhouse then?—I hardly think it would be feasible or reasonable to do that.

22756. But supposing it were done?—It might alterate the rate as far as the lunatics are concerned.

22757. What would then be your view as regards the workhouse at Carrick-on-Shannon?—I should say Carrick-on-Shannon would then be the centre.

22758. Geographical centre?—I would not say geographical so far as Manorcunningham is concerned, but as far as North Leitrim is concerned.

22759. Unless the Carrick-on-Shannon Workhouse were filled with some other class of inmates?—I think we would be financially at a loss if it was not.

22760. You mean the trades in the town would?—I don't mean the trades at all; I don't represent them at all.

22761. What class of people would be at a loss—the carpenters would get the benefit of the change if the surplus of the inmates were put at Manorcunningham?—They would, so far as that would be concerned; then we would have to tide over a great difficulty so far as sending our representatives to other districts; that might be, in some cases, twenty-five miles.

22762. Would you not have that even if you had the lunatics in the asylum here?—I don't say we would, but the difference in the rating would compensate us.

22763. The difference in rating would disappear even if they went to Manorcunningham?—Well, yes, it would, so far as the asylum is concerned. On the question of tempest, I heard some gentleman in the witness-box expressing a view that there should be something done to remedy that. I consider it a great evil in the country, not so much on account of the money spent on them in the workhouses; there is a great deal more mischief done in the country than that—the example set by them in towns that they come into, and where they remain, when sent out of the workhouses, and very often those people are the cause of spreading disease.

22764. And they have families with them brought up badly?—There is nothing in connection with the Poor Law that requires more to be remedied than that evil; there should be some form of registration or some place provided for these.

22765. You would not hesitate to deprive these men of their liberty—they would be deserving of nothing more than strict consideration?—The majority of them would be better off in jail; there may be exceptions; it may occur that a man gets out of work, and has to travel to some neighbouring town for work.

22766. That man could be segregated?—But it is an established system now, a sort of profession. I should like to say a word, in case the result of this Commission of Inquiry was that there would be amalgamation, and that our union would be amalgamated with Mohill. I am directed to express the view that we are entitled to what you call district rating, or union rating, that our portion of the union would have a separate rate, on the ground that in 1900 the rate was 1s. 3d., whereas Mohill rate was 3s. 3d., and in the year 1904 the rate for Carrick-on-Shannon—22767. Are you again taking in expenditure outside Poor Law expenditure?—I am not—union expenditure.

22768. Are you taking in the cost of roads?—Nothing but union expenditure.

22769. No union ever struck a rate of 3s. 3d. for Poor Law purposes?—That is embodied in a report of the Local Government Board. At the present moment there is a difference of 7d. in the £, and we don't object to a scheme of amalgamation with Mohill on the grounds laid down, but we do ask that we would be entitled to union rating.

22770. Do you think you would gain or lose by that?—We would gain; that is my opinion.

22771. It would look as if the joint expenditure would be reduced, and if the joint valuation was very much raised, on an increased valuation, you would imagine at first sight that you would have a reduced rate?—It would be an average rate then, and we would have to bear the burden of the existing rate at present to make it average.

22772. We can hardly talk of that without going into it, but we will go into it very carefully?—There are a great many other matters, but I would be only repeating the evidence already given. With reference to the overcrowding of Sligo Asylum, it is not necessary for me to make any remark. There was a matter that cropped up in the evidence given by Dr. Bradshaw with regard to the representation on the county infirmary. I desire to say that the management at present is represented by the county-at-large, and if you were to put the management into district bodies they would have the responsibility.

22773. You think, if it was converted into a district hospital, the management should be district?—Yes, and a district charge, whereas it is county-at-large at present.

22774. You are not claiming for Carrick-on-Shannon—a : you—the position of paying all the cost of the infirmary?—Oh, no; I don't wish to interfere with that at all. It is a county infirmary, supported by the county, and it is a very well-administered institution; £600 per annum is not a very big amount; it relieves a great number of people, and they are very well looked after, as far as I know, and that is the report of the Governors for years; the only thing I have to say on it is that if you were to leave it in the hands of our District Council they would have all the responsibility.

22775. Dr. Bradshaw.—They would have all the payments, too?—Yes; that is what I object to.

22776. You would rather see it as it is?—Certainly.

22777. Mr. MURKIN.—But if it does not serve all the county, is it fair that portions of the county that it does not serve should pay for it?—That is the point. The gentleman who made the statement that North Leitrim got no benefit from it was inaccurate. The only portion of North Leitrim that we do not get inmates from to the county infirmary is the Union of Manorcunningham.

22778. CHAIRMAN.—Is not that nearly the whole of North Leitrim?—No; North Leitrim goes down to Down district—ten miles long and six or seven miles across.

22779. What part of North Leitrim is in the Carrick Union?—From here to Down Bridge, and there is ten miles of that in North Leitrim—from Drumahaire to Down. We get a number of patients from Drumahaire.

22780. You admit the Manorcunningham and Keshbeg districts don't send many?—We get very little from Manorcunningham Union. I should say the majority of patients in the county infirmary are from North Leitrim. Some arrangement for pay patients in the county infirmary would be a very useful and necessary thing, or otherwise legislation on the subject, so that portion of our union in the County Roscommon would be compelled to pay a reasonable amount to compensate for any loss we sustain by having their inmates there. The County Council, up to the present, have refused to contribute anything, and for a number of years we have been maintaining them free of charge—up to two years ago.

22781. Mr. MURKIN.—They have no power to pay under the existing law?—That settles that part of it.

22782. Dr. Bradshaw.—You would recommend that they should?—I would, strongly. It is a great hardship for people to have to travel from the extreme end of one county to their capital town; they might die on the way.

Mr. ALLEN.—With reference to that remark about the contribution, I have looked into the matter of law, and I understand they can contribute; and it is in the Local Government Act that they can contribute to the infirmary.

Mr. MURKIN.—The question was raised elsewhere, and the opinion of counsel was taken on the subject, and he advised that the County Council could not pay towards the support of an infirmary in another county.

Mr. Allyne.—I have looked into the matter, and I thought they could.

CHAIRMAN.—It is very possible, for legal opinions often turn out wrong.

WITNESS.—There is just another little matter. You have the replies to the queries on the sheet before you, and I venture to express the opinion that those are subject to the conditions already expressed—that is to say, if the Commission decide on having the auxiliary asylum established here, we would waive any claim we have to the union; but I would wish to remind you we have other available premises about the town—the present county infirmary and an old military barracks, in the best of condition, just as good as the jail premises—that could be utilized for some suitable purposes. In that report the gentlemen representing the County Reformatory made a sort of protest, inasmuch as their patients used to go to Ballinacree; they would quite acquiesce now if, by amalgamation, they were allowed to have these harmless lunatics included in the case of Carrick-on-Shannon—that is, for Leitrim and Sligo.

Sept. 21, 1894

Mr. Patrick
Flynn.

Mr. PATRICK GALLAGHER, P.L.C., examined.

22773. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you wish to add to your chairman's statement?—Nothing. I am in favour of amalgamation if it brings any relief to the insane.

22774. What part of the union do you live in?—In the eastern portion of the union, about seven miles from the town, below Drumana.

22775. You are very near Mohill?—About five miles from Mohill.

22776. You would be quite willing, as a member of the Carrick Board, that the union should go into Mohill if there was a substantial abatement of the rates without any hardship to the sick?—Yes, sir; that, principally, I would like to have taken care of. I certainly would not like to see the union extended in any way to give any inconvenience to the members of the Board of Guardians; I would be afraid that their attendance would not be as good. There was another matter touched on by Mr. Maguire. He said that he would be in favour of town rating; I quite agree with Mr. Maguire in that; it might lead to economy, and to see that no one but those justly entitled to out-door relief would get it.

22777. If there was rating for the towns would you also have rating for the country on the electoral division?—For the division. It looks like divisional rating in the Act when it says each division can appoint two representatives. It would appear that these two representatives ought to have the management of the division, and take care of the division; and it is only under such circumstances that a Guardian can understand how to discharge his duty. I approve of the rule you laid down yourself with regard to the tramps. I would not like to see them punished; but rather sent to a place, and improved.

22778. And try to make them labourers?—Yes, sir. Improve them, and give them a couple of years' industry. It might improve them, and edify them.

22779. Harden the muscles, and make them fit to work?—Yes, and make them take a view of themselves as industrious, respectable men. With regard to the mothers of illegitimate children, too, I think your own statement would be a very salutary one, and I endorse that. But I believe no Guardian can do his duty until he has divisional rating.

22780. Do you think the expenses are increasing?—I believe the expenditure on out-door relief is something higher than it was nine or ten years ago.

22781. Do you attribute that to the union-at-large rating?—I do; but I would like to see the Carrick Workhouses continued.

22782. You would be willing to see it closed if there was a substantial saving?—Yes, if it brought a substantial saving to the ratepayers, provided it did not bring any hardships to the sick poor or any considerable inconvenience to the representatives of the people.

Gallagher.

Mr. THOMAS FLYNN, P.L.C., examined.

22783. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Carrick Board of Guardians?—Yes.

22784. Do you agree with your colleagues that you would be willing to have amalgamation if there was a substantial saving?—Yes; but that was not the conclusion we came to at a joint meeting of the Reformatory and Leitrim Guardians.

22785. Are you a Reformatory Guardian?—No; from Deera. We agreed if we got back the original area belonging to this union prior to 1850, we would be more satisfied with it; and, also, there was a Local Government Board inquiry here in 1893 in reference to parties of this union that went to Strokestown and Boyle. And our agreement was in answer to the question of amalgamation, that if we got the portion of the union back, we would be more satisfied with it than with amalgamation. That would be amalgamation in one way.

22786. Keeping your union on, and breaking up the others, as they were before 1850?—Yes; that was the answer we gave that query, as well as I remember. Supposing this union was done away with, in the district I represent the sick poor would have to go twenty-three miles to Mohill, and we would have to go to Banishton or Manerhamilton. The road to Carrick is level enough, but the road to Manerhamilton is very hilly.

22787. How far are you from Manerhamilton?—About twenty English miles. The same distance as from Carrick, but not as the crow flies. Manerhamilton is nearer across the mountain; we have to go down to Slackton and on by Glenties. I am sure two workhouses are enough for the county.

22789. You think two would be enough?—I would, but the question of the harmless lunatics. I attended a meeting at the Sligo Asylum once about the question of amalgamation. Dr. Pett, the Chief Medical Superintendent, made us believe in the case of an auxiliary asylum, that it would be no saving; and so the Sligo Board would have the election of all officers, and he, or whoever would be the superintendent in Sligo, would have the control of Carrick-on-Shannon, or wherever the auxiliary asylum would be; and we would have to pay his expenses up and down. He told us that distinctly, but I did not believe it. So we left him the lunatics, and him along with them.

Mr. Thomas
Flynn.

Mr. JOSEPH O'BRIEN, P.L.C., examined.

I am a Guardian from the Reformatory portion of Carrick. We had a meeting two months ago, and came to the conclusion to hold the union as it stands, and get back the Strokestown portion of it. We don't want to hold the union if they don't want to hold it themselves; but what we want is, in case it should be dissolved, to be sent to Strokestown.

22790. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing Strokestown does not survive, where would you like to go?—I don't know where we would go, then.

22791. That is a contingency that might happen.

Would you be willing to go to Reformatory?—No, sir. We are willing to stop here; but in case this is amalgamated, they would not wish to go to Boyle; they want to go to Strokestown.

22792. You think Reformatory too far?—It is. It is twenty miles from where I live and twenty-eight from some others.

22793. What you would wish is that either this union should be maintained, or, if it were dissolved, that Strokestown should be maintained, and you should be sent there?—Yes, sir.

Mr. Joseph
O'Brien.

Sept. 31, 1904

Mr. John
Moore.

Mr. JOHN MORAN, F.R.G., examined.

22794. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a Home-member?—Yes, sir.

22795. Do you agree with the last witness?—Because it would be entirely out of the question with my part of the county.

22796. He said Strickstown?—Even Strickstown.

22797. Would you rather keep up Carrick-on-Shannon?—Keep up Carrick-on-Shannon; and all my conscience tells me the same.

22798. Under no circumstances would you approve of breaking up Carrick-on-Shannon?—Not at all. It would not do; because in case of any kind of sickness it would be impossible to go eighteen or twenty miles.

Mr. James
Clarke.

Mr. JAMES CLARKE examined.

22802. CHAIRMAN.—What do you wish to tell us from Boyle?—It is very little. There is plenty of room for improvement in the Poor Law system, to my idea. Of course the classification of inmates of the workhouse at the present moment is urgent, and can be carried out; it is not in keeping with any well-regulated governed country to see imbeciles and inmates in the body of the workhouse with people that have been earning an honest livelihood all their life, and then, through force of circumstances, compelled to go there.

22803. You would remove them?—I would; and I would have the imbeciles classified into one institution.
I would have a desirable home made that it would not have a pauper's brand on it, the same as at the present moment; or I would not have children reared up in the workhouse, the same as they are at present. There should be a central institution for the county to give education to the children, male and female, and by that means I believe the ratepayers would be saved a considerable amount of expense; the inmates would be better looked after by appointing a class of officials, at the same expense, to superintend and look after the different inmates when they would be properly classified.

22804. You would classify them by grouping them together?—Yes; the principle to cover that and protect the ratepayer would be that the Inspectors that would come round would be more stringent in their examination and inspection.

22805. And have larger powers, perhaps?—Have larger powers than they have at present.

22806. What powers would you give them?—That they should see that there would be nobody appointed to superintend or look after those institutions only duly qualified competent people. Of course, by the present state of affairs an incompetent person might be appointed.

22807. Might slip in?—Quite so. There should be some standard of examination for the individual.

22808. For each institution?—For each individual, to be classified as to his competency. It would be false all round to the general public by adopting that idea.
Then, of course, by establishing one school in a centre you save a lot of taxation, because in each workhouse there are two teachers—one for the female and one for the male; by having a competent teacher for one central school you would save a lot of money to the general public. Then there is another point that I would like to draw your attention to, and that is with regard to the hospital. We will take it like this:
there is a certain individual, and he can go into the hospital, and spend down there at the average charge for the dietary without taking into consideration whatever the clothing, fuel, and other necessary charges.
If that individual has money, and goes to a private hospital or lodginghouse, he would pay more than the average cost for the rental of that room, yet he goes in and squanders down at the public expense, and may be making money by coming in and getting hospital treatment. He has the best of nursing and medical attendance and hospital diet, and everything. If a week would not be a proper charge, by making an accurate calculation, and yet once have arisen where they have spent many months in that position.

22809. You would suggest the Guardians should have a discretionary power of assessing how much a man ought to pay?—Quite so. Amalgamation and classification of the inmates are the necessary things required

22799. Supposing they came in here to the building, known as the county infirmary, would you still have the same objection?—I would support my resolution;
I would support what I say.

22800. You say you would not like it on account of the inconvenience to the sick; supposing the sick could come into Carrick all the time, and come to the county infirmary—would that satisfy you?—Certainly. Now is the way I look at it—it would be impossible for a person with a broken bone or any disease to go twenty miles. Of course the other member is very convenient to Strickstown.

22801. He is a neighbour there?—A neighbour, I may say.

at the present moment. I hear a lot with regard to tramps; I heard various theories to-day that I would not agree with. We will have tramps to the end of time. I don't believe in the Russian or German pauper system. I don't see why the public bodies should be turned into Scotland Yard Departments for leaving paupers to poor, unfortunate tramps. They are in every country. Of course, there are some countries that take very stringent measures, where they see there is an individual that makes it a profession. The ordinary law is such that if he cannot show he has visible means of support, they imprison him, and make him work for his support, and he gets tired of that, and thinks it better to work outside than in the prison. They make that prison work remunerative to the general public. He takes the alternative, and prefers to work outside rather than inside for the Government; but I would oppose all the pauper business.

Mr. ALLEGRE.—Archibald Moore, Chaplain to the workhouse, has asked me to hand in this document:—

The Rectory, Carrick-on-Shannon,

20th September, 1904.

DEAR SIR,—I regret I cannot attend before the Poor Law Reform Commission to-morrow, as I will be in Dublin. In case the Commission are willing to receive a written statement, I submit the following suggestions, which it seems to me would be advisable:—

1. Tramps or Casuals.—That some uniform method of treating this class should be adopted by all Boards of Guardians. That they should, in all cases, be made to work before being permitted to leave the house.

2. Children.—(1) That children should be boarded out at as early an age as possible; and that all kind of the house (seminatorial and otherwise) as far as possible removed from them.

(2) That committees of ladies be appointed to inspect such children, in addition to or in lieu of the present inspection.

(3) That the law be relaxed about children not being admitted into the house without their parents or parent; and when such children are admitted, they be sent to industrial schools, or boarded out.
This would substitute in an economy, as such a large proportion of the children of "tramps," &c., become a burden on the ratepayer. Of course, this would have to be carefully safeguarded, as parents able to support their children should be made to do so.

3. Hospitals.—(1) That the aged and infirm be placed in separate wards from those who require surgical or medical treatment.

(2) That separate wards be appointed for pay patients. I am sure many, after a time, would avail themselves of such; and, further, the so-called reasons which now prevent the poor but deserving class from entering a union hospital would eventually be done away.

4. Idiots and Epileptics.—If such are retained at all in the unions, better and separate accommodation should be provided for them.

5. That in the case of the aged and deserving poor who are obliged to enter the house, provision be made for married couples to see more of each other, and, if possible, they be allowed to live together.

If possible some classification be made between the deserving poor and others in the house.

Q. I am in favour of amalgamation of unions, as I think it would result in economy; and probably also reduce the number of "tramps," by making the distances between the houses greater.

Wm. N. Moore, Archdeacon,

C.I. Chaplain,

Carrick-on-Shannon Union.

A. O'Connor, Esq., Carrick-on-Shannon.

Mr. P. Flynn.—In reference to No. 3, every gentleman coming before you would endorse that. We have cases of that description cropping up frequently, and it leads to no end of trouble, and it is a very absurd thing that parents should go into the house and be maintained when they should be made work, and support their children.

Mr. J. Clarke.—Permit me to make one remark with regard to the county infirmary in Roscommon. It is a great injustice on the ratepayers of the Boyle Union that they should have to contribute to the maintenance of the infirmary, whereas they have a completely-equipped and up-to-date hospital, and they have to maintain it.

MR. J. CLARKE.—That objection has been made elsewhere.—It is absurd to say that one portion should be taxed for the benefit of another portion of the same county—each part should be equalised.

Mr. James
Clarke.

The Sitting terminated.

Sept. 22, 1904.

FORTY-SIXTH PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22nd, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Roscommon.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAHAN, and Dr. COVE BAKER.

Mr. S. W. L. Burke appeared for the Fever Hospital.

Mr. John Stanley.

Mr. JOHN STANLEY, F.R.C., examined.

22810. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a member of the Strokestown Board of Guardians?—Yes.

22811. Are you going to speak of the opinions of the Strokestown Board of Guardians or of your own individual views on the subject?—I am sent by the board here to give evidence.

22812. What is the view they asked you to present here to-day?—For general amalgamation of workhouses in Ireland.

22813. They are in favour of the amalgamation of workhouses?—Yes, unanimously.

22814. Have they considered what would be a good arrangement as regards their own workhouse and the workhouse of Roscommon generally?—The board are not unanimous as to dissolving the Strokestown Union, but I myself am, and the majority of the board are—a large majority.

22815. What arrangement then would you make for the treatment of the destitute and the sick if the workhouse there were closed?—To be transferred to the adjoining unions that it would be attached to.

22816. What would be the unions that you would recommend the Strokestown Union should be divided between?—Castleknock and Roscommon, Boyle and Carrick—they are the adjoining unions to the Strokestown Union. The Roscommon Union boundary comes within three miles of the workhouse of Strokestown, and the Boyle Union and Carrick Union come within five miles of the workhouse.

22817. Is Elphin more than five miles from Strokestown?—Just five.

22818. And that is the border part of your union. Some of the Carrick-on-Shannon Guardians, yesterday, that are in the County Roscommon part of the Carrick Union, were in favour of adding their rural district to Strokestown, and were in favour of continuing Strokestown—that would not be in accordance with the views of the Strokestown Guardians?—If you put it that way, if the area of the Strokestown Union was largely increased, I would not be so much in favour of dissolving Strokestown Union then; but it would require to be very largely increased, owing to the great reduction in the population of the union, so that it is not necessary there at all, but at the same time I would not like to see Strokestown Union dissolved without utilizing its buildings for some very useful benefit for the country.

22819. What use would you suggest for these buildings?—I would strongly suggest that it should be used as an auxiliary asylum for Ballinasloe, because the Ballinasloe Institution is a wonderful tax upon the County Roscommon. I think an unnecessarily high tax, and that the usual 4s. per patient should be given for the auxiliary institution.

22820. How far are you from Roscommon town at Strokestown?—Nine miles.

22821. That would involve for every lunatic patient a drive of nine miles, at the least?—There is no asylum in Roscommon.

22822. But the patients would have to drive to get to Strokestown a distance of at least nine miles?—Certainly, and farther.

22823. Nine at the least—Roscommon is your nearest station?—In this direction it is.

22824. In any direction?—There is a station, Drumma, on the Sligo line, eight miles.

22825. Then you would have to have a drive of at least eight miles?—Yes.

22826. That you can see is a drawback against converting Strokestown into an asylum if you have to drive insane patients such long distances?—But we have to drive them further—twenty Irish miles to Ballinasloe.

22827. Do they drive there or go by train?—The train does not suit very well, and they have to drive in nearly all cases from the lower end of the county.

22828. But the Castleknock, Roscommon, and Athlone people would get there by railway?—They would. From the northern portion of the county, on track Carrick-on-Shannon, they would have to go to Mullingar and come back to Athlone, which is a vast about way altogether. I think they nearly all drive from Carrick.

22829. Do they drive in open coach?—No, I think carriages, all I have seen coming. Then, if it was not converted into an auxiliary asylum, the opinion of the country is that it should be converted into an industrial school.

22830. For children?—For children.

22831. Or for a technical purpose?—Either. The institution was fitted up to accommodate 700 inmates, at present there are only seventy in it, and it is admirably situated for either an auxiliary asylum or for an industrial school, because there is a nice piece of land of eight acres, neatly fenced in all round.

22832. We saw that—a very good piece of land?—A very good piece of land, and nicely plotted out. It would be of advantage to either of these institutions, and it is a very nice location.

22833. Do you live in Strokestown or at some distance from it?—I live four Irish miles from it, near Elphin.

22835. If they were made considerably lower, even than they are?—Oh, certainly; as far as the ratespayers are concerned, with the exception of those who are gaining some benefit from the institution, as its officials, they are all for entirely dissolving the Strokestown house. It is under discussion with the object for thirteen years, and I think on one occasion it was dissolved; the order was issued by the Local Government Board dissolving it, but through some political dodgery the order was cancelled.

22836. Was it not a resolution of the Guardians themselves?—Several of them; but I think the order was issued by the Local Government Board, because I am aware the valuer had the order.

22837. The law would require at that time the assent of the Guardians?—On several times—on one occasion the board was unanimous in dissolving it; on other occasions the board had a large majority for dissolving it.

22838. Had they not also once a majority against dissolving it?—Never.

22839. What I was asking you was—you told us just now that if the ratespayers got a substantial reduction in the rates you feel sure they would be in favour of amalgamation, provided, of course, that there was no hardship imposed upon the sick and destitute of the district?—I am satisfied if it was dissolved that there would be little or no hardship.

Sept. 22, 1904

Mr. John
Stanley

22830. If Strokestown Workhouse was closed and the hospital were closed, they would have to come, I suppose, to Roscommon?—I would not be in favour of doing up the hospital wholly.

22831. You would leave a small district hospital there?—Certainly, for urgent cases, or otherwise for contagious cases.

22832. You would leave the fever hospital and a small portion of the workhouse for acute cases?—Yes. In other cases they would be very much inclined to come to the county infirmary here.

22833. Could you offer any suggestion as to what electoral divisions should go to the various unions?—I could, if you would include any portion of the union of Longford; it is in a different county, I know. When we had decided to abolish the union there was a portion of it going to Longford, the divisions which were adjoining the Longford Union—Ternoherry, the two Kilmans, Roscary, and Lonscawry.

22834. Since the establishment of County Councils and District Councils a great many witnesses throughout the country have been in favour of the idea that for Poor Law purposes the county ought to be the unit also?—Yes.

22835. But that is an open question. What is your view on it?—I have not formed an opinion as regards that point. There are some objections by some for the Strokestown Union to be attached to these unions—that the rates are higher than they are in their own.

22836. As regards the aged and infirm, do you think there are many of those that might be provided for under an out-door relief system?—I am very much in favour of out-door relief.

22837. Do you find in the last five or six years any increase in it in your union?—No, I think it has reduced.

22838. Then the effect of the union-at-large charge has not been to increase out-door relief, in your opinion?—Not in our union. There are some members of our board very watchful and very vigilant, and we insist into everything very fully.

22839. Then you have got objection to the union-at-large charge?—No. I am very much in favour of out-door relief, because I think a great many of these poor fellows who have to go into workhouses if they got some reasonable relief outside would remain outside, and be more contented.

22840. Do you suffer much from tramps in your part of the county?—Largely. I think if you dissolve a lot of the workhouses in Ireland you will reduce the tramps very largely.

Mr. T. A. P. MAPORESE, D.D., Chairman, Roscommon Union, examined.

22841. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Roscommon Board of Guardians?—Yes.

22842. And have been for a great number of years?—Yes; I suppose over twenty.

22843. What is the view of the Board of Guardians of the Roscommon Union as regards the closing of some workhouses in the County Roscommon?—The matter came before us in reply to the queries from your Commission, and the reply we made I am afraid you may consider of a vague, colourless character, but it was generally in favour of amalgamation, provided no inconvenience would be suffered by the sick poor, or poor generally. We did not give a more decided opinion than that; but if no inconvenience could result to those who would be the recipients of relief we were in favour of amalgamation generally.

22844. Did you consider the question of closing any workhouse in the county?—No; we thought as we were not in favour of closing our own workhouse we preferred leaving it to the other workhouses to express an opinion.

22845. You are not in favour of closing Roscommon?—No.

22846. But it is your opinion that fewer workhouses ought to be continued in Ireland?—It is an undoubted fact that the population being so much reduced the accommodation provided is far in excess of existing requirements, and fewer houses would supply the accommodation if the difficulty of the distances could be overcome.

22847. Since the time these workhouses were established communication has been very largely facilitated and increased?—It has; but with the centre of our county, the Strokestown district, railway accommoda-

22851. You have no further suggestions to make?—I do believe you will not be able to adopt any effectual plan to check the tramps unless to dissolve the workhouses. I hear them as they pass me, living on a very public road, and I often hear them having new properties or houses that there are not more workhouses to stop at, and they are getting very tired when drawing near Strokestown; which would give me to understand that if you dissolve workhouses you will get rid of the tramps, unless those tramps who are looking for work. There are two other subjects that are rather vexatious with this board—one is the fees given to doctors for examining lunatics. Unfortunately, lunacy is increasing very much in our country, and we think the fee should be charged to low costs, and not come directly out of the rates. And the other is where the medical officers are remunerated by the Crown, we think that the Crown should not alone pay them their fees, but should also pay their substitutes.

22852. These are questions that are connected somewhat with Poor Law, but they don't come directly under the Poor Law. These doctors you refer to are the dispensary doctors?—Or workhouse doctors. I think it should come under the scope of your inquiry; I also think that the dispensary area should be increased.

22853. That is not within the scope of your inquiry—the dispensary. We don't touch the Rural District Councils or the dispensary arrangements, only the Poor Law?—Now you will not touch the chargeability of the relief.

22854. Yes, anything you have to say about chargeability of relief?—It is a union charge at the present time, and I think it should be a dispensary district charge, because there is a sanitary rate, and that is a dispensary charge.

22855. Is that for all kinds of relief?—No, only out-door relief; I would not touch establishment charges.

22856. Or in-door relief?—No, because the Guardians would have more supervision over a dispensary district than they would have over a union; there would be no jobbery then. The country is very much in favour of a general amalgamation.

22857. And to have a reduction of rates?—And to have industrial pursuits placed in their places; until that comes into force we will have a grievance.

22858. Do you think a great deal of the poverty of the country results from a want of industrial occupation?—Largely; and workhouses, in my opinion, have a tendency to create idleness and bad habits.

tion is very deficient. The Strokestown Union is the only union that it is proposed to abolish, and it is just the one town that has no railway accommodation.

22859. There was never then any question of touching Boyle, Charlemore, or Roscommon?—Well, there was never any resolution passed that I know of in favour of amalgamation.

22860. Have you ever considered the question of making the county a comprehensive unit for Poor Law as well as county purposes?—I cannot say I have given much consideration to it.

22862. Not for Poor Law purposes. Some of this county belongs to unions situated in other counties. I really was under the impression they were divided into two portions, these unions. They are divided into District Councils, but the Board of Guardians at Ballinasloe is partly composed of Roscommon and partly of Galway Guardians?—I did not know that; our union is altogether in the county.

22863. Then you have not considered the question?—I have not, indeed.

22864. If Strokestown or any other union in the county were closed, have you any suggestion to make as to the use of the buildings in future?—Our board did not offer any very decided opinion on that point. We suggested two or three different courses. One was the establishment of an asylum for harmless lunatics; and it was suggested by some of the members to apply the building for some industrial purpose. At one time it was suggested, and there was a meeting held in connection with the matter, to have a central school established, to which children might be sent from either unions, and Stocktonhouse was suggested. That was a number of years ago, but since then the boarding-out system has come considerably into use, and, I dare say, that the idea would not now be maintained.

22872. Teaching the boarding-out system, are you in favour of it?—I am in favour of it from the experience I have had.

22873. Have you found in this action that, on the whole, the children are brought up well and healthily?—We have had the system but a very few years established—we have not the finished product of the system yet.

22874. About how many years has it been tried?—Five, at the very outside.

22875. Have you seen any of the children who were put out early?—I have not seen them. We have a committee of ladies, who inspect them regularly, and we receive periodical reports from them.

22876. Are the reports encouraging?—They are, decidedly. In some few instances there are complaints made, but, on the whole, they are encouraging.

22877. Is the feeling of the Board of Guardians in agreement with your own opinion in favour of that?—It is, decidedly.

22878. Would you be in favour of an enlargement by law of the powers of the Guardians to enable them to board out any child that may come into their custody?—I would.

22879. Your Board of Guardians also consider that it would be desirable that power should be given to Boards of Guardians to make provision by a mutual arrangement for such a translocation of persons from one union to another as would secure better classification than that which exists at present?—That was one of our proposals.

22880. Before adopting that general resolution, did you give any suggestions in detail as to how that general idea might be carried out?—No, we did not; it required very small discussion on that point.

22881. Would you have in view, for instance, the idea that if a person, say, at the house of your union—we will say in the Longford direction—were taken suddenly ill, that that patient might be received in other unions on your paying the average cost; would that be an instance of what you mean?—I can hardly say that; it was not discussed.

22882. Or were you thinking of sending all your male infirm to one union, and getting back, say, all their female infirm, so as to have nothing but females in your own workhouse?—I had something in my own mind generally like that, but it was not discussed.

22883. Something that would generalize your classification, so as to make administration within the walls of the workhouse more easy?—Something like that I had in my mind.

22884. You have observed in your long experience that a considerable number of girls come in to give birth to illegitimate children?—Unfortunately, that is so.

22885. We have had suggestions that it would be a good thing to close the workhouse to such cases, and not admit girls who are first offenders into the workhouse to be delivered; it has been suggested to us that they should be sent to some penitentiary male religious management, either Catholic or Protestant, according to the religion of the woman, that she should be there, and efforts should be made for her reformation?—That would be a very good idea.

22886. Is it your experience that when a girl comes in she rarely, if ever, goes out again to any employment in the country?—Well, they do, rarely, sometimes.

22887. As a rule, do a very large number of them go out again, and, perhaps, come back with an illegitimate child?—That has happened. I cannot say whether it has been frequent; I know it has occurred.

22889. As regards tramps, you have got a great many of them in Roscommon?—We have, indeed. It is a very difficult subject. We merely suggested as increased stringency in the law, but we did not make any specific recommendation on the subject. I am not clear myself how the law could be made more stringent.

22890. It has been suggested that men who are wandering through the country and are unable to prove that they are really and honestly looking for employment, should be arrested, and brought before a magistrate, with a view to being sent, not by way of punishment, but by way of reclamation, to some central, licensed workhouse, where they might be employed in real labour, that would be self-maintaining, as far as possible; and that they should not be allowed to leave such an institution until they had, in the opinion of the managers, acquired some habits of industry that would make them likely to look for work when released?—If it could be experimentally tried I would be strongly in favour of it; but if you establish an institution like that, you have it there, and you cannot do away with it afterwards.

22891. Suppose you put them into a licensed workhouse, like Stocktonhouse, where they would be employed, would you be in favour of it?—I certainly would, as an experiment.

22892. Dr. Broom—Are there many cases of consumption in the neighbourhood?—I don't know that we have any at present; we have, of course, from time to time, but I never know of our having very many at one time.

22893. You are speaking of the workhouse?—Yes, here no experience except that.

22894. You really don't know whether there are many cases in the neighbourhood?—Sure that I am aware of. I know of one fatal case that occurred in my own immediate neighbourhood recently.

22895. You have not thought of making any provision for them outside the workhouse?—I have not.

Mr. WILLIAM TULAY, J.P., F.R.S., examined.

Mr. William
Tulay.

22896. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of your chairman; we would be glad to hear from you anything that you would wish to state, if you differ from him in anything?—I don't differ from him in anything.—In fact, I think he has covered almost the entire ground.

22898. In what direction would you improve it?—If a man has been coming into a town without any reasonable prospect of employment and no means whatever of maintaining or sustaining himself in that town, I don't see what business he had to leave the previous town and come to another unless he had some reasonable prospect of getting employment in it; and I think he ought to give a reasonable excuse why he left one town and came to another.

22899. You would put the burden of proof as it is instead of on the Guardians?—Yes. I say it is impossible for the Guardians to prove what his object was. That is only a suggestion of my own; it does not come from the board.

22900. Is that partly due to your experience on the bench?—Yes, partly.

22901. What is your view about the chargeability—the union-at-large as an area of chargeability for all purposes?—I think the present state of the law with regard to making it a union-at-large charge is working satisfactorily.

22902. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you heard out any children in your union?—We do, all the children.

22903. How do you find it worked?—It is working splendidly.

22904. No difficulty in providing homes?—None whatever.

22905. Would you like to see it extended?—Very much.

22906. So as to enable Guardians to board out all children under their care?—That is exactly what we have done at Roscommon—every child that is eligible is boarded out.

22907. But you can only board out a certain number?

22908. CHAIRMAN.—You cannot board out a child whose parent is in the house?—Oh, no.

22909. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you like to see it extended so that the Guardians could board out the children of parents who neglected them?—Yes; and I think it would be well if the Guardians had power to board out the children of inmates of the workhouse.

22910. CHAIRMAN.—Should all children from the workhouse, that is what it would come to?—Yes, all children of a certain age.

22911. As soon as they were able to use their teeth, and eat whatever food was going?—You may extend a little longer the care of the parents.

22912. Do you think the case of the workhouse parent is an advantage?—I think it should be extended for a longer period than you mention. About the transfer of inmates, Mr. Shanley was asked if Strokestown Union were broken up, inmates would have to come an additional ten miles on their way to the asylum; at present they don't; they have to go to Ballinacree, and their nearest way is through Roscommon.

22913. Do they go by road or by railway?—They have no possible means of getting from Strokestown but by road.

22914. In the other case all County Roscommon harmless lunatics would be sent to Strokestown; that would mean that every harmless lunatic would have to drive at least eight miles by road. A very large number get on at Roscommon, Castlebar, and Athlone, and go by railway to Ballinacree; and then, I suppose, in the Boyle district they go down to Mullingar and come back?—Then you are taking the railway station as knowing the route by which the families go back. I know, in Roscommon, we more frequently send them by vehicle direct to Ballinacree.

22915. How many miles?—Twenty Irish miles by road, and the reason why local magistrates—I speak from some little experience—do that is this. The trains, in the first place, do not always start; and, in the next place, sending inmates and police by train is generally objectionable to other travellers by train; it is also a cause of exciting the inmates, changing him from station to station. Then he has to be driven from Ballinacree Station, a distance of two miles, to the asylum. We go direct to the asylum in a covered vehicle; there is no difficulty about it; the expense is about the same.

22916. So that really, as a matter of fact, the inmates, as a rule, are conveyed by road from your unions?—Yes, mostly; of course we send some by rail, when the train suits; but there is nothing gained by sending them by train.

22918. Then, for getting supplies?—It is a sort of asylum we would like to see established for these, relieving the taxation on the different unions by having them all together; by not being bound in each workhouse to have a set of officials to look after those, but to have one set; and in the next place it would be very much more comfortable for the poor afflicted people themselves to have them altogether, under proper supervision; and I think there is no great hardship inflicted on them by asking them to go a few miles extra to one central hospital or asylum.

Mr. JOHN FERGUSON, Chairman, Roscommon County Council, examined.

22919. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the County Council of Roscommon?—Yes.

22920. Would you kindly tell the Commission what the view of the County Council is as regards the maintenance or dissolution of any of the unions in this county?—Perhaps my own views are what I should give more than that of the County Council.

22921. Was there any distinct resolution of the County Council?—Not a distinct; there was a reply to the queries, which, I think, must be in your possession; they were of a very brief nature.

22922. They gave just a simple affirmative to the first query that they are in favour of it—could you give us your view on that?—Speaking in a general way, I consider that the institutions are very extravagantly managed for the amount of the inmates and the amount of relief that we are able to impart. For instance, take the Castlebar Union, of which I am chairman also; there is not more than one-third the number of inmates in the houses that the house is capable of accommodating, and, in fact, the staff that is there would be sufficient for the County of Roscommon. If all the poor in the County Roscommon were placed in our workhouse the staff would be sufficient.

22923. And the same remark, I suppose, would be true about the other workhouses?—As far as I know, I think so.

22924. That would mean that you had three or four times the staff that would be necessary to look after all the inmates if they were together?—I think so. For instance, if the schoolmaster and schoolmistress were dispensed with. The schoolmaster at present has not more than four children, and the schoolmistress about the same number.

22925. And in Roscommon, I believe, practically none?—Yes.

22926. Have you formed any opinion yourself as to what union in the county might be dissolved and the workhouse, to some extent, if not altogether, closed?—No, I have not.

22927. That would depend very largely, I suppose, on considering the circumstances of surrounding counties?—Quite so.

22928. You think it would be difficult for an individual in one county to make an inclusive scheme for his own county without considering other counties adjoining?—Quite so. Germanagh has been often mentioned.

22929. And Carrick-on-Shannon, yesterday, were unanimous in favour of the dissolution of their own union under certain circumstances?—Take Castlebar, I would certainly say that all the aged people in the Castlebar Workhouse could, for instance, come on to Roscommon. I think the Castlebar Workhouse for the old and infirm could be dispensed with. Keep it for the sick; just a hospital; and I think that the remaining portion of the house could be very advantageously used for industrial purposes, or for the education of the destitute poor of the entire County of Roscommon.

22930. When you say the education, do you mean technical and industrial education?—Yes. I heard you questioning Mr. Tully about the boarding out of children; of course, I am in favour of the system in preference to the one that previously existed; but, at the same time, from my experience, you are not certain of placing the child under the most suitable foster-parents, and I think it would be much better if there was one central institution, where they would get a good industrial training. It would be safer, and a better method of bringing up children, and making them useful for the country afterwards.

22931. Do you think a child brought up in an institution is in after life as handy and useful, say, as a farm labourer, as a child that would be brought up in a home where it would be put to work of the same sort from its earliest age?—That is just as I mentioned before. It would entirely depend on the class of home the child is placed in—if you can get a good home it is all right.

22932. Have you tried the boarding-out system very much in the Castlebar Union?—Oh, yes.

22933. What have the results been?—Just mixed.

22934. You have had some good and some indifferent and some bad results?—Quite so.

22935. Do you find out the best sufficiently soon under your system of inspection and observation to remove them at once, and put them in the hands of better people?—I cannot say that any of them were bad, because if they were, we would have them reared; but we have not had to do anything of the kind; but still I am not myself perfectly satisfied that all the children are in proper homes.

22936. Is your object largely to get them with small farmers, who would be able to give them a milk diet and also to employ them, so that they could join the ranks of the agricultural labourers?—There are no other classes.

22938. That class, you think, would not be a promising class?—No. So far, it has worked very well; but simply, I consider, for instance, the attendance at schools in very often not as satisfactory or as constant as we desire. For instance, the school may be a considerable distance from where the child is placed, and if the weather is not fine, it is a pretext for keeping the child at home.

22939. I suppose the attendance of all children in remote parts of the country is a little but uncertain for the same reason?—Yes.

22940. You will find that in the case of the children of small farmers who live at a distance from a school the schoolmaster complains that they don't qualify for results by attending regularly?—That is so; but when we heard out these children there is an undertaking given that their attendance at school will be regular.

22941. As far as you observe, are the children who are boarded out brought up in a healthy way?—Yes, with very rare exceptions.

22942. Labour is scarce in the country?—Yes.

22943. Therefore, it would be desirable that children who are in the hands of the Guardians as paupers should be brought up to be useful agricultural labourers?—It would be, perhaps, very desirable; but still, I would be in favour of giving every child the opportunity of becoming what he is naturally fit for. You will find children in the workhouse that are possessed of the best talents if they only get an opportunity.

22944. A child of exceptional ability will make its opportunity when it comes out?—Not if sent to a small agriculturalist or farmer—he won't have the opportunity.

22945. It may make it?—I don't see where he will have the opportunity.

22946. Mr. MURKIN.—There are notable examples, not in this country, but in others. President Lincoln was not very well equipped in early life?—He lived in a different atmosphere.

CHAIRMAN.—Sir HENRY STANLEY was a workhouse boy. Mr. MURKIN.—You don't think it would be a just thing to put children of the workhouse on a higher level than the children of the industrious poor outside?

22947. CHAIRMAN.—As regards making them trainees?—It is a very humiliating position for a child to be in a workhouse, and I would try, as far as possible, to take from that position by giving them the best opportunities of ascending.

22948. Would you be in favour of giving them better opportunities than small, independent ratepayers could afford to give their children?—If I could do it at the present cost, certainly.

22949. Mr. MURKIN.—Would not that be giving an advantage to children born in the workhouse?—The children are often not accountable for being born in the workhouse.

22950. CHAIRMAN.—Yes may say that no child is accountable for the position?—The workhouse ought not to be a barrier.

22951. CHAIRMAN.—At all events, we do need agricultural labourers in the country at present?—Very much.

22952. And that you would consider an honest and useful employment for workhouse children?—For those that would be naturally suited to it.

22953. Would it not be the natural employment for boys and girls, it would be the most economical, and would it not also be a good, healthy, useful life to give them?—Oh, very good. In your queries you are not inquiring into the working of the Labourers' Act?

22954. Not?—Because we suffer from the delays.

22955. We are not inquiring into that. All of us have a good deal of experience on the subject in various capacities, but we are not authorized to go into that. As regards chargeability, is it your opinion that the existing law of union-at-large chargeability is satisfactory?—Yes.

22956. Whether, having regard to the number, capacity, and situation of the workhouse hospitals, county infirmaries, county fever hospitals, and other hospitals existing in the county, additional accommodation is necessary?—Not in our county.

22958. Then the next query is: "Whether any administrative and financial changes are desirable in order to secure a more economical system for the relief generally of—(a) the sick, (b) the insane, and (c) all other classes of the poor or destitute, without impeding efficiency of administration." You have touched on that already to a large extent—is there anything else you think of adding to that?—Nothing further, than that one of the workhouses in the county could be kept for the children, and another for the aged and infirm. Roscommon, for instance, would suit admirably, because there is railway communication between Carlow and Roscommon.

22959. Have you considered whether if one of the workhouses was dissolved, it might not also be made into a place for treating the infectious disease of phthisis or consumption?—I think there ought to be an institution in Connemara for the province.

22960. And that some distasteful workhouse might be avoided?—Yes, if its situation was suitable. It is very much needed. It has come under my own experience where the patients have made application, and have had to wait.

22961. At Newcastle?—Yes.

22962. And where they have brought the disease, perhaps, to other members of their family?—Yes, and have not been able to get admission; whereas, we see in other cases that have gone there—very bad cases, indeed—they have come home relieved, if not cured.

22963. The question of pay would be, to a large extent, mixed up with district hospitals, and I gather from what you say about Carlow that you are a favourer of a district hospital there?—Yes.

22964. Would you introduce any system of payment by persons who are able to pay?—Oh, yes; as it is, we have such a thing.

22965. But you can only charge the full average cost of maintenance. Would you be in favour of giving the governing body of the district hospital discretionary power to charge the patients such sums as the patient or his friends might be able to pay? For instance, in some districts very small charges are made—5d. or 1s. a week for a child of a person who is not altogether destitute. We will say the child would cost to the extent of 5d. a week, then the hospital authorities would charge him 5d., and up to 5s. or 6s., whatever the full cost of employing an extra nurse would be, or whatever assistance might be desirable; would you be in favour of not obliging them to charge, but giving them discretion to charge if necessary?—I think it would be advisable.

22966. At present they can only recover a fixed sum, and that sum is often quite inadequate. In your last hospital, if you got a well-to-do person in there, the only way you can recover is quite disproportionate to the expenditure—therefore, you would be in favour of such a discretionary power?—Certainly, and having such a discretion, a better class would avail themselves of it.

22967. And there would be no longer the workhouse associations, because all these inmates would be removed?—Quite so.

22968. As regards tramps and casuals, have you any opinion on that?—I think they ought to be widely employed at a central institution; they are a great nuisance.

22969. We will say one for a province or a large area?—Yes, some central position; that is most desirable.

22970. Made self-supporting, as far as possible?—It is most desirable.

22971. Would you send them there by a magistrate's warrant?—I have not formed an opinion as to the mode.

22972. At present you have a great many tramps going about the country, bringing their families with them; that is obviously a great hardship and cruelty

Sept. 22, 1904.

Mr. John Pritchard

to the poor children—would you think it desirable that the law should step in and take the children of such people from them?—Decidedly.

22973. Then, if you take the children from a man and woman trespassing about the country that way, would it not be rather undesirable to leave them at large, perhaps to raise another family of their own children were taken from them?—Before I would have recourse to doing anything of the kind, certainly the authorities in power should be very careful to see—

22974. It would have to be on the fullest investigation?—On the fullest investigation; because that might be the greatest hardship on some, and on others it might be the opposite.

Mr. MURKIN.—With an appeal to the local bench.

22975. CHAIRMAN.—That should be the authority that would send them—the local bench, not the Guardians?—I stated I had not formed an opinion.

22976. Dr. BROWN.—Do you know if the county infirmary at Roscommon is much availed of by people in the County Galway?—Not much; but they would be very much inclined to come to the infirmary.

22977. Are they excluded?—They consider they are, at all events.

22978. Otherwise they would come if you had arrangements made whereby they could be treated there?—Oh, yes, and are very anxious; but, of course, Galway is a very considerable distance, the town of Galway, from that portion of the county that adjoins Roscommon.

22979. Do you think it would be a desirable thing to have some arrangement with the County Galway whereby the County Council could pay for any patients coming from their county into your infirmary?—Most desirable.

22980. Would you apply the same principle to the Carrick-on-Shannon cases going from the other side of the county to the county infirmary of Leitrim?—I would apply it in every case where it is on the border.

22981. It is just on the borders, and we were told yesterday that quite a large number of patients come from the County Roscommon into the county infirmary—you think some arrangement might be made?—Oh, I think so; most desirable and necessary.

22982. Then, also, some objection was raised yesterday that Boyle should not pay for the upkeep of the infirmary at Roscommon—what would you say about that? They said they got so little advantage from it, so few patients come from the neighbourhood of Boyle and that end of the county, that they should not pay for it—An equitable arrangement might be made if the entire scheme were altered.

22983. What would you think of this—that has been raised in several places, and it does apply, to some extent, where the county infirmary is situated at one end of the county and the opposite end does not get the same advantage as the part near the county infirmary—has been suggested that there should be a county rate for hospital purposes, say a district hospital situated at Cheltenham, or even at Boyle, should be supported out of a county rate the same as the county infirmary; what do you think of that?—I think it would be equitable; I certainly think it would be a great convenience; the infirmary would be more availed of.

22984. Do you think it would be a good thing for the people that they should be more availed of?—I do, certainly.

22985. Because they are mostly equipped in a way for performing operations much better than any of the workhouse hospitals, and very often the county surgeon does the larger portion of the surgical operations of that county?—Yes.

22986. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you considered that that would imply taking out of the hands of the Board of Guardians the management of their own particular area and leaving it with the county-at-large?—I have not considered that. The first thing to be considered, of course, is the best method of distributing the relief.

22987. Dr. BROWN.—To get the best value for your money?—Yes.

22988. CHAIRMAN.—Would it not be possible to leave the district hospitals under district management, even though it were a county-at-large charge—would not the committee of management or body of management be a local body?—If it is a county.

22989. Would not the body that would be, most normally, nominated by the County Council be a local body?—Yes.

22990. Would it not be the District Council; would not that be a very proper body for the County Council to place in charge of the local hospital?—Certainly.

22991. Then it would actually be the district hospital, in charge of the District Council?—These could be as other convenient way of managing it.

22992. Mr. MURKIN.—The District Council would naturally want to look after their own particular area, and see that the money raised by themselves would be spent within their own area?—At present, although there are county-at-large charges for the repairing and working of roads, still the District Councils watch and see that they are properly administered.

22993. But the money that they give is spent within their own area?—Oh, yes.

22994. But under the other suggestion the whole thing would be a county rate, pretty much as the infirmary rate or asylum rate is at present?—Yes.

22995. And that would mean the taking out of the hands of the Board of Guardians the management of their own particular area?—I don't exactly follow you. I think the matter would cut both ways, if there be a give-and-take system. I am not far from abolishing hospitals at all.

22996. Dr. BROWN.—You would rather increase their numbers?—Yes.

22997. And get them availed of by the people they are supposed to benefit?—Exactly.

22998. CHAIRMAN.—And make them more used by classes who have hitherto avoided them owing to their connection with workhouses?—Yes.

22999. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think a committee appointed by the County Council could manage the local affairs better than the Board of Guardians in their own districts?—I don't consider that; but I consider the position of Roscommon Infirmary at present. I think the people of Boyle have reason to object, because it is an arrangement that really deserving cases cannot make their way to the infirmary.

23000. I quite agree with you as regards that, but the point raised before was a different point altogether; that is, to take away from the Board of Guardians the management of their own area and place it in the hands of some committee appointed by the County Council?—That is for the infirmaries only.

23001. And workhouse hospitals?—They would remain in the hands of the Guardians or in the Rural District Councils.

23002. CHAIRMAN.—Although the expenditure might be a county-at-large charge, the local body should administer it?—Quite so.

23003. Dr. BROWN.—The idea was to get all the hospitals on one basis and have an interchange for the benefit of the county, and also save the money of the county; because, if you have an interchange, it is not necessary to keep up a large stock of instruments in each little hospital, and the concern might be more availed of, and so on; the same way as your idea about the convalescent hospital being a provincial hospital, paid for by all bodies?—Quite so.

CHAIRMAN.—I have just received a telegram from Mr. Tully, M.P., regretting he is unable to be here to-day. Are there any other witnesses from the County Council present?

Mr. WILLIAM HIGGINS, M.C.B., P.L.C., examined.

23004. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes. I am a member also of the Roscommon Board of Guardians, and I have been appointed by that board, and would prefer speaking in their name.

23005. Were you here when Mr. Magister gave evidence?—No, sir, I was just in when Mr. Tully was speaking.

23006. We went through with them the replies to the queries that were given?—Yes; we decided it would not be to much advantage to abolish our union.

23007. And while passing a resolution generally in favour of amalgamation, you did not indicate any workhouse that should be closed?—Decidedly not; we have not sufficient information to guide us. I think there are a lot of difficulties in the way of amalgamation.

Mr. William
Higgins

Sept. 22, 1904.

Mr. William Higgins.

23008. You don't suggest any workhouse as a workhouse that might be closed up?—No.

23009. Mr. MURKIN.—What are the difficulties you see?—I consider, as Mr. Fitzgibbon says, you require a hospital in every union for the treatment of the sick poor.

23010. But even that the staff of the workhouse would be considerably reduced, with a corresponding decrease in expenditure?—If you reduce the staff you must curtail the inmates of the house to some other union, and you naturally increase the duties of the officials in the next union, and they will expect to be paid for their additional labour.

23011. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think officials whose whole time is at the disposal of the Guardians have any equitable claim for a large increase of salary owing to additional duties?—Judging from the Local Government Act, they have; because there is provided in that Act for an increase of duties, and in every instance it is made compulsory.

23012. That is for certain officials. What would your own opinion be on that point? Do you think if you were paying a man for his whole time that you could not employ him as much as you liked during that time?—I think that would be equitable; but it would be very difficult for me to prove whether he had not enough to do already, and he might apply to me for assistance.

23013. Is there any suggestion you wish to offer as regards any improvement, apart altogether from the question of closing any workhouse. Supposing you were keeping on all the workhouses, have you any suggestion to offer as to any improvement in the law with a view to improving the existing administration?—Well, very little.

23014. Or do you cannot pretty much in what you have heard up to this?—Yes, sir, very much, except that I think it would be very advisable to have boarded-out children sent at an early age.

23015. As soon as they could see the face of the neighbourhood?—Decidedly.

23016. In that way do you think the persons with whom they were boarded out would become more attached to them, knowing them as little children?—Yes; and the children, not having acquired the habits of the workhouse, would become more useful.

23017. As regards the system of rating, are you in favour of the present union-at-large rate for all parishes?—Well, I think that the rates were better looked after before the Local Government Act, when the charge was on the electoral division.

23018. Would that make you in favour of any change in the existing chargeability?—I think when each Guardian looked after the various divisions he was more careful when applications for outdoor relief came before the board; he was more careful in seeing how they were dealt with; he had a keener eye to his own division. The out-door relief has increased between £150 and £300 in our union since the passing of the Act.

23019. Would that make you in favour of reverting to the old area of charge?—It was the only thing, it would not.

23020. Don't you see it would be a handicap on towns to have to support all the people from the country that come into the towns and look for employment?—I think towns are much benefited by the passing of the Act.

23021. Would they not be rather unfairly hit if they had to pay for all the poor themselves?—They had to do it before the passing of the Local Government Act.

23022. But when their rate reached a certain amount they had a contribution-in-aid from the other divisions—would you be in favour of restoring that contribution-in-aid?—Yes, I would give them all the benefit they had before the Local Government Act.

23023. It was suggested by one witness that the amount might be considered, having regard to past experience, say, for a number of years, and it might be determined what was the fair amount that might, one year with another, be paid under the head of outdoor relief, and that that fair amount should be a union-at-large charge, but that any increase over and above that amount per annum should be paid by the electoral division. For instance: if your electoral division paid £1 a week, and if that was ascertained to be the fair amount to be paid one year with another, and if you chose to give another one £2 a week, making in £2s, £2 would go on the union and £2 go on the electoral division—would that be a fair arrangement?—It would complicate the accounts very much; it would be very difficult to get through them.

23024. You prefer a simple reversion to things as they were?—I think so.

23025. Would you be in favour of charging persons who were able to pay such sums as the Guardians or Council thought they were able to pay?—Decidedly.

23026. You would wish the law changed, so as to enable the Guardians to recover?—I think they have it in their power to recover.

23028. What is your view as to transport?—It is a very difficult question as to how they are to be dealt with effectually. Sometimes it used to be suggested in our union that they would be compelled to break stones, do some work, before they leave the house; it is rather difficult, however, to carry out all these suggestions. I have no suggestion to make as to how they should be dealt with.

23029. Mr. MURKIN.—But you do think something ought to be done?—Decidedly.

23030. It has been suggested that power should be given to turn them over to the police once they were proved to be confirmed tramps; do you approve of that?—I cannot say; they suffer a lot of hardships as it is. If they were proved to be confirmed tramps and annoying a union constantly, it would be a proper thing to send out some punishment.

23031. It has been suggested that there should be a central workhouse, either in the province or group of counties, where these people could be sent for a time, and compelled to work; and after they had proved themselves and shown that they were desirous to be reformed, they could be let out and given a chance?—How are the funds to be provided for that?

23032. It has been stated that this system has been tried abroad, and found nearly self-supporting?—By all means, I would have no objection.

23034. But even if it would not be more costly than at present, it would be better than to leave things as they are?—If it would not be more costly. With regard to the hospitals, a county rate would be objectionable, if the hospitals are to be continued in the hands of the Guardians. It would not make the Guardians take the same interest in seeing who the patients should be, as it presently does as to who are to be the recipients of out-door relief.

23035. CHAIRMAN.—You think it would have an extravagant tendency?—I think it would.

Mr. PATRICK CONNOR, F.R.C., Castlebar, examined.

Mr. Patrick Connor.

23036. CHAIRMAN.—You were here when Mr. Fitzgibbon gave his evidence?—Yes, sir.

23037. Would you kindly mention any matter in which you would like to add to or vary his evidence?—There is one matter that would affect as very unevenly, that is divisional rating; because it is on one side a suggested district, and thickly populated, and on the other it is all prime farms; and if it had not been union rating it would come very heavy on those with small holdings and the town generally.

23038. What rating would you be in favour of?—Union rating. In some districts, with regard to outdoor relief, people would be more careful in giving out-door if it was divisional rating, but looking at it generally it would be unfair. Then, with regard to foster-parents, I would be entirely in favour of children being given to foster-parents, but there is a great difficulty in getting proper people to take them in charge.

23039. Have you a ladies' committee in Castlebar?—Yes.

23040. And they are active?—They are active. Great care is required with girls when they grow up to sixteen or seventeen, but it is a great improvement to young boys, because they would be trained in the manual art of going on in the world, and becoming useful citizens; and when they grow up between sixteen and twenty they would be more likely to look out for parents they are obliged to.

23041. They are already trained for labour?—Yes; if they had a taste for trades then it would be seen what they are best suited for.

23042. It might be brought before the Guardians by the committee or their inspectors?—Exactly. When taking them out of the workhouse those who were in the habit of taking them out as servants found they were seldom or never any use at all; they seemed to be quite useless; it is quite different when trained with practical farmers outside.

23043. Is there anything else?—With regard to the tramps, they are a very great nuisance in small towns. They sometimes come down very rapidly, whatever is the cause. Sometimes we don't be troubled with them; other times they are very troublesome.

23044. Before fatal?—Exactly; and they give great trouble in going through the streets looking for money and looking for alms; they then proceed to the workhouse for shelter for the night.

23045. Have you any knowledge of how they get along in the country; are they and to intimidate people into giving them money?—Yes, sir, they do; I have learned that repeatedly; they go about in gangs sometimes, and give great trouble.

Sept. 20, 1894.

Mr. Patrick
Gentry.

Mr. JAMES NEARY, J.P., Chairman, Strokestown Union, examined.

23046. CHAIRMAN.—I don't think you were in when the last witness came forward?—I was not.

23047. The Strokestown people were unanimously in favour of the breaking up of their union?—No, they were not at all unanimous.

23048. A large majority, was it?—No, that meeting was not well attended. I think they might be nearly evenly divided; but if there was a full attendance the majority would be against breaking up the union; but as far as the general question of amalgamation is concerned, I think there would be unanimity on that point.

23049. In favour of some reduction in the number of workhouses throughout Ireland?—A very large reduction.

23050. That would reduce the rating?—There might be a very considerable number of the Guardians in Strokestown in favour of doing away with the workhouse as such.

23051. But they would like the union to remain as it is. Supposing there were a number of the inmates sent to different institutions, according to the class—the children to be sent to an institution for that purpose, the imbeciles might be sent to another place for the same purpose?—If it could be arranged that we would pay so much per head to cover the cost of maintenance in those institutions, I think it would meet more with the approval of the Guardians.

23052. Would you keep any class in Strokestown except the sick?—I don't think any house should be maintained to keep any class unless there was a very considerable number—say 200.

23053. Would you keep a hospital for the sick?—No, I think not.

23054. Would you let the sick follow the same rule as the healthy?—If the workhouse is to be broken up I would break it up altogether. I think out-door relief might be judiciously increased.

23055. Would you establish any general check to prevent any undue increase in out-door relief?—It has not increased very much.

23056. If you make it a general practice with aged people, who would rather get out-door relief than come into the workhouse, would you apprehend that cases might be put forward for old people to get relief who would not otherwise come forward?—That is always done; but, still, I think there is no relief given except in deserving cases.

23057. If you enlarged the class for out-door relief and were enabled to give out-door relief to old people who are now received into workhouses, and if you make these people, and all old people in fact, eligible for out-door relief, would you be afraid that you would receive a great many applications from people who would not dream of asking to be received into the workhouses?—Yes, we have received such applications already; but, then, I think the Guardians would not increase it. And I would be in favour of extending the powers for giving out-door relief slightly. It is limited now to a quarter acre; I don't think that restriction should be.

23058. Would you also enable the Guardians to give out-door relief to all classes of old and infirm people?—Yes, in nearly all cases.

23059. Even if they were what you might call healthy?—Yes, if they were indigent.

23060. And you don't think it would be necessary to safeguard that provision in any way except by the discretion of the Guardians?—Exactly, I don't think so; I think it is the best relief that is administered. I know there is a tendency since the passing of the Act of 1886 to increase the out-door relief in certain divisions. The Guardians wish to get as much as they can as a union charge; but at the same time I think it is better it should continue a maius charge.

23061. Having regard to that, don't you think it would be necessary to have some little safeguard?—Yes; I heard you suggest that; and I think if there was a slight safeguard, and if a certain Guardian wished to have it increased from what the Guardians thought reasonable, it would be well for the division to pay the excess.

23062. Is there anything else that has not been mentioned by previous witnesses?—It is my impression that it would be well for the unions to continue; possibly Strokestown might be discontinued as a workhouse, except we had imbeciles or children to be brought there. With regard to tramps, I think it would be very well if there was a place set apart for what you might call the vicious poor, and those habitual tramps ought to be compelled to go there for some time, until they were self-supporting, or partly self-supporting.

Mr. James Neary.

Mr. TIMOTHY O'LOUGHEE examined.

23063. CHAIRMAN.—You are also from Strokestown?—Yes.

23064. Are you a resident in the town?—No, in the rural district—the Castlewaide side.

23065. What was your individual opinion when you had the division on amalgamation?—I was in favour of amalgamation, and for twenty years.

23066. Did that mean the closing of the Strokestown Workhouse?—I would imagine it would be one of the smallest. Two or three in the county would be quite enough.

23067. If it were closed, you would be very anxious, I understand from the minutes, that some useful purpose should be found for the workhouse?—Quite so.

23068. What would you suggest?—I don't know; there are several matters—an auxiliary asylum.

23069. A place for consumptives?—Yes, or a place for children. An industrial school; whatever would be best.

23070. How would you divide the union of Strokestown—would you send it nearly altogether to one workhouse?—I think it would be better, and Ac-common I would say; it would be very difficult to do it otherwise.

23071. Would you be in favour of enabling Boards of Guardians throughout the country to charge and recover such sums as they in their discretion might think patients or their relatives could afford to pay?—Quite so; I would be strongly in favour of that. Up to this we could only charge the average maintenance.

23072. Are you in favour of the boarding out system for children?—Yes, I think it is very much better.

23073. As regards tramps?—They are a great nuisance, and a great expense.

23074. You would be in favour of detaining them in a union like Strokestown?—They are the worst members of society, I must admit; but there is no use in throwing them out entirely.

23075. You would be in favour of putting them into an institution, where the object would be to try and give them habits of industry, and bring them back to useful life?—Quite so.

23076. Is there any other matter you would wish to mention?—Well, no.

Mr. Timothy
O'Loughlin.

Sept. 28, 1904.

FORTY-SEVENTH PUBLIC SITTING—WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28th, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Belmullet.

Present:—Mr. MICES (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. COEY BIGGER.

Mr. E. N. FLYNN, Clerk, Belmullet Union, examined.

Mr. E. N. Flynn.

23077. CHAIRMAN.—The Union of Belmullet has been in existence since about 1850?—1850.

23078. Have any resolutions been passed for or against the amalgamation or the breaking up of the union?—Yes, sir, there were.

23079. Give us the most recent of those?—About three years ago.

23080. What generally was the effect of the resolution then?—It was a resolution, as far as I remember, that came from another union and recommended amalgamation, and they adopted it.

23081. That did not mean that they were in favour of their own workhouse being broken up, but it meant they were in favour generally of the idea in the case of some workhouses?—Exactly.

23082. Did they ever consider the question of breaking up their own union?—No, sir; they made no definite proposal or recommendation about it that I remember.

23083. What is the valuation of your union?—I think £14,843; the reason I have any doubt about it is that we don't get this from the County Council regularly.

23084. About how much does Ld. in the £ produce?—£45.

23085. So that any expense of £45 or £50 in this union means Ld. in the £ on the ratepayers?—Yes.

23086. I suppose that means that it is almost impossible. Next to Oughterdown you are the lowest valued union in Ireland?—Kilbake is about double.

23087. I think Oughterdown is £9,000?—I think it must be more; we are the lowest in Ireland.

23088. The number of your inmates is at present about?—I think about 60.

23089. Have you considered the question of closing the workhouse, or was it discussed at all by any of the Councils or Guardians?—I was present when they discussed these queries you mentioned, but nothing more than that.

23090. In the event of the workhouse being closed, did they think it desirable that some building should be left for the treatment of the sick, urgent cases?—I think they considered that absolutely necessary.

23091. For fever and urgent sick cases?—Yes.

23092. Have you got many tramps in your union?—No, sir, we are very free from them; we are so remote we have very little.

23093. Are there many cases of illegitimacy in the union?—Well, no, sir; there are some cases.

23094. You have only three or four in the workhouse at present?—Yes.

23095. On the 1st January, when the last statistics were taken, you had 31 sick and 27 infirm—that would be 58 out of the 60. The rest would be very largely children?—Largely children.

23096. And fathers and mothers of babies?—Yes.

23097. As regards inmates, you have only one or two closed in that way?—There at present, not inmates, but inmates, of the idiot class.

23098. What the Councils ask, I gather from their replies, is that owing to the very small valuation of their union they would rather like to see the union increased in size so as to have a larger valuation, or else they would like some arrangement to be made that would save them expense in some other way?—Exactly.

23099. Did you ever hear any discussion or any idea as to how the rating of the union might be lowered?—Oh, no, sir, except in a way.

23100. Except by giving them a larger territory. Is there any other way that occurs to you?—To myself, personally, no, sir; I don't think so.

23101. How much do you get from Parliamentary grants?—Our agricultural grant, do you mean?

23102. Do you happen to know what is the total amount, or approximately, the amount that is paid to your treasurer out of the county-at-large charges in aid of your expenditure?—I really don't know, it is not paid direct to us; it is paid into the County Council. I really don't know; I could send you these figures.

23103. It would be a substantial amount?—It is; we get £750, I think, for the agricultural grant, and then half of what we pay out for medical charges and other expenditure.

23104. How much percentage would £750 mean, 15d. in the £?—A little more than that; I think about 12d. in the £.

23105. What is the highest in recent years that you have known your rate to go to?—Our standard rate would be 3s. 5d. for poor-law purposes, our county rate is 2s. 10d. The standard would be, perhaps, the best test.

23106. We might take it, perhaps, that the public contribution to your rates would be nearly 3s. 1d. I think so; I am sure it would be that.

23107. Then that would leave you to find another 3s. or thereabouts?—Yes; we are paying 6s. 8d. at present for both services. Of course I would have had all these figures for you if I had known about it.

23108. We intend to get it on the 4th from the County Council witnesses at Castlebar, and we just came here as the distance was so far for you to come. They are figures that would be more properly given by the County Council officials?—They would; that is my difficulty.

Mr. ALEXANDER BEELEY, F.R.C.S., examined.

Mr. Alexander Beeley.

23109. CHAIRMAN.—What division do you represent?—Mullingnab.

23110. But you are not resident in it. I believe you reside in Belmullet?—Yes.

23111. How many Councils have you on your Board?—Upwards of thirty.

23112. You have about fifteen divisions?—Fifteen or sixteen, or seventeen divisions; something like that, two to each.

23113. Have you more than two members for Belmullet?—Belmullet returned two members formerly. I think there are only two in it still.

23114. What about the members of your body—do you think you are too numerous, or are you a happy family as you are?—We agree pretty well down here.

23115. You don't find you have too many?—Sometimes it is too few; they have to come a long distance.

23116. I suppose most of the labour falls on the town Guardians?—A good deal.

23117. Except that there is something existing or impending on?—Yes; they become more numerous when there is anything on.

23118. This is not one of the unions in which they feel they have too many Councils?—I don't hear them complaining.

23119. You have plenty of room in the Board-room?—Plenty of room.

23120. Have you at all formed any opinion as to whether it would be well to close at all, wholly or in part, the workhouse here of Belmullet?—I often heard it discussed. We generally say that the rates are high, and we don't see any possibility of keeping them lower, seeing the low valuation, and any change we would think would be almost for the better.

23122. You find the rates very heavy here?—Very heavy, and we cannot get them, unfortunately, reduced, and in the way of appointments and everything else we are met by this Board in Dublin, that does not allow us to reduce them, but in increasing them; houses, doctors, and everything; we have no vote in it.

23123. And you find an increase of expenditure?—An increase, and we cannot help it; the only thing we have any control over is the relief, and that is out done to the very lowest figure.

23124. What are your payments on outdoor relief at present?—I could not exactly say.

23125. I think I am aware that it is about between £200 and £300 a year?—I did not come prepared to give evidence.

23126. Do you know that you look very closely at the expenditure in relief?—Very closely; it is the only thing we have any control over.

23127. As a practical man, if you were to close your workhouse here, do you think it would be possible to safely enlarge the giving of outdoor relief with a view of keeping old people out of the workhouse, and if you could keep the old people out of the workhouse, and in their own houses or locality, do you think that would be a safe thing to do?—Supposing we were amalgamated with some rich union, Ballina or Westport, that would bear part of the burden, we could do that, but Belmullet could not afford it.

23128. If Belmullet remained, the area of charge you could not afford it?—No.

23129. Even if you might get of a considerable expenditure if you closed the aged and infirm part of your workhouse, that would mean that you could dispense with the others that look after that part of the house?—Yes, of course; but I say we should have a kind of temporary hospital here, and we would want a staff there still.

23130. Oh, you would want your hospital staff?—You would, the distance is so long to any place.

23131. You would be afraid that if you started with the idea of giving outdoor relief in the houses of the people that you would find a great many more applicants for outdoor relief than you would for admission to the workhouse?—No doubt of it; those that are refused relief, half of them don't come in.

23132. Would that make you rather afraid of the extension of outdoor relief as a means of dealing with the property of this poor Union of Belmullet?—The Guardians could still exercise their own judgment; they know who is deserving and who is not.

23133. Then don't you think there would be no risk in leaving the question of outdoor relief to the Guardians?—Oh, I think not; the Guardians are very sparing in that respect.

23134. And if you closed the aged and infirm part of the building you think you might very easily discriminate what persons should get outdoor relief and what persons should not?—I think so.

23135. And you would not be afraid of any abuses?—I think not. The Relieving Officer, to a certain extent, can go beyond the control of the Guardians, and the Guardians sometimes curtail the expenses.

23136. That would be in cases of sudden and urgent necessity?—Oh, yes. And if he considers a person is deserving, even though the Guardians don't think so, he can at his own risk give relief.

23137. Only temporary, only for a week?—They can continue it from week to week.

23138. Is that their practice here?

Mr. Flynn.—It is to some extent; they continue it from week to week.

Witness.—And when they come before the auditor it is a question whether they will be sanctioned or not; they can do in and sometimes they do it.

23139. Keep at the Guardians disapprove of the temporary relief that is given, and other than the Guardians?—The officers don't like to go against the Guardians. But sometimes when the Guardians don't see their way and would like to do it, they do it.

23140. That is the Guardians say, "We will leave it to yourselves"—then they don't go against the Guardians?—They do not.

23141. Have you any opinions about keeping lunatics in workhouses?—I think they would be better anywhere than in workhouses.

23142. As regards children, have you had any experience at all of what is known as the boarding-out system. You don't board out any children here?—No.

23143. In a great many unions the children who can be boarded out, that is, the orphans and deserted children, are placed at two or three years of age out in families?—I saw that in the papers; we have none of it here.

23144. And the families in those cases, as far as the experience goes, get attached to those children, and they become in a very large number of cases members of the family?—I believe that.

23145. And contribute to the savings of the family in after-life. Would you be in favour of all of starting such a system as that?—I think it would be a very good system. You would board them out as cheap as you would rear them in the home.

23146. More cheaply?—And they would become better members of society; I never see them doing much good those that are brought up in the workhouse.

23147. When they are boarded out they don't know their way back to the workhouse?—No; I would be inclined to approve of that system.

23148. How that question has brought forward at all at your Board of Guardians?—No; I never saw it in my time.

23149. It would be a useful thing for you to discuss?—I think it would.

23151. Can you tell me what happens to those girls when they come into the workhouse. As soon as they give birth to a child, as a rule do they remain for a considerable period, or perhaps for the rest of their life in the workhouse?—I think very few remain; they go out and mostly go away to America, if they are young girls, and I am afraid sometimes leave the offspring here in the charge of the union. That is the worst of it.

23152. Do you know any instance of these girls coming in a second time to the workhouse to become the mother of another child in the same?—Well, I do not.

23153. It is very frequent in more populous places?—It may be so, but of my own knowledge I don't know. I suspect there are cases of that kind.

23154. It has been suggested to us in various places that we have gone to that it would be a good thing that such girls should not be eligible for admission to the workhouse at all, but that they should be sent by order of the Relieving Officer or by the order of the Guardians to a religious penitentiary or refuge on the condition of their first fall, so that they might be there reclaimed. Would you be in favour of closing the workhouse to such cases?—I think so; reform them, I think.

23155. And give them a fresh start in the world after good influence has been used upon them?—I think so. As far as they are concerned here, I think they are under very good influences, because they have the nurse here who takes good care of that class.

23156. The workhouse, of course, in any workhouse, even where the nurse is, is that the classification of the workhouse makes it very difficult, if not impossible, to exclude this class and keep them by themselves. It is always understood that in treating people of that class that a certain amount of solitude and seclusion is desirable as a means of bringing them to a sense of their condition, that could not be in a workhouse?—I don't know the general arrangement in that respect. I don't see why there could not be a ward for those in the workhouse; our workhouse is very large.

23157. It is very difficult to keep any class apart altogether in a workhouse?—Indeed it is.

23158. Is there any other matter that I have not asked you about that seems to you on which you would like to make any statement?—Oh, no; the only thing I see for us here against amalgamation is that there are no facilities for taking the sick away. If there are a railway to Ballina or Westport there would be no difficulty, but from Blackrock to Ballina it is forty-two miles, and to Westport sixty. If we had facilities that way there is not a Guardian in Belmullet that would not like to have them amalgamated with some place, because we never would get rid of these heavy rates.

23159. Then you go back the distance is the only barrier you see?—That is the great obstacle.

Sept. 28, 1904.

Mr. Alexander Begley.

23159. Have you ever considered the question whether a union like this might fairly ask for some assistance to your local rates?—We may think of it, but I believe it is hard to get it.

23160. You are aware, of course, that very large contributions are given from the public taxation of the county, from Parliamentary grants and Agricultural grants. You are aware that there are very large contributions given?—Very large.

23161. Are you aware that by far the greater portion of these grants is given to the large and wealthy unions?—Of course they get their proportion.

23162. Do you think, or has it at all been considered amongst you here, that a union of a distressed and impoverished condition like this might fairly ask for more than a rich union like Belfast or Dublin would get?—I think so. We often asked when we were in difficulties with fever in Inniskea and other places and we got nothing.

23163. That would be asking for a subscription, but have you thought of the question of getting a larger share of the annual grants than unions which are rich and comfortable?—No, we thought we could not get it, and did not try for it.

23164. If you saw any way of getting that, what would be the opinion of your Board of Guardians?—We would be very glad to accept it, and to look for it if we thought we had a chance of getting it.

23165. Do you think you would be fairly entitled as a very poor union that does not rise above flag and tile floor, and keeps the patients miserably in comparatively uncomfortable quarters. I am not blaming the union at all, because I think your hospital is very creditable, and everything about it very nice, considering your means, but if you had a little more money it would be better?—Certainly, it would.

23166. You would be able to have the hospital better, and up to the average condition of well-managed unions?—Anything that would reduce the rates with us, we would try to pull through without asking any change or amalgamation if we are assisted in any way.

23167. If you had a larger contribution?—Yes.

23168. Do you think it would be reasonable for you to ask it?—I think it, and I am sure we will do so.

MR. JAMES MILLS, J.P., M.C.C., EXAMINED.

Mr. James Mills.

23169. CHAIRMAN.—You are a County Councillor, and you are also Chairman of the Rural District Council?—Yes.

23170. About the number of your Guardians, does the number change any inconvenience, or as it is a convenient number, your present number?—It is a convenient number.

23171. Do you find it more convenient than in the old times?—We have an increased number now.

23172. But the total is small?—The total is small, about thirty-three.

23173. And that, owing to the long distances to be travelled, is not an excessive number?—No; some of them have to come fifteen or twenty miles.

23174. And I suppose the representatives who are living in and near the town have most of the ordinary business to do?—Oh, certainly; you could not expect the Guardians living at long distances to come in except there is something special.

23175. A great many of the distant divisions, I dare say, are represented by Belmullet residents?—Well, no, Mr. Begley represents one of the distant divisions, and Mr. O'Malley, if I don't mistake, a representative of a distant division, lives near the town.

23176. What is the general sentiment of your Board of Guardians and District Council on the question of amalgamation?—They believe that if the union is amalgamated the rates will be less.

23177. And by amalgamation what changes would be carried out?—I have not asked them; the matter was not discussed in that detailed way. They merely said "Give us something."

23178. That will reduce our rates?—Certainly.

23179. They did not think what would follow on amalgamation?—I don't think they considered it.

23180. For instance, did they consider the question, if amalgamation took place, whether a hospital would be left here for the treatment of the sick?—I believe that if that was discussed it would be their own opinion that a hospital should be here for the sick.

23181. You could hardly ask fever patients, and people suffering from pneumonia or broken bones to go to Ballina for treatment?—Not at all.

23182. Therefore, it would be utterly inhuman to take them such distances?—Yes, to take them now from Blackrock to Ballina is something like sixty English miles; that is a long distance; it would be rather inhuman.

23183. That would be quite impossible to consider, so if any change took place here you could not contemplate the closing of the hospital?—Not at all.

23184. We heard from Mr. Flynn that for every £45 that is raised by way of rates in the union it means 1d. in the £1.—That is so; our valuation is so small that the people imagine we would be better off if we amalgamated with other unions.

23185. So as to have a larger valuation over which to spread the expenses?—Exactly so.

23186. If a provision were left here for the sick, do you think there would be very much hardship in moving those who are able to travel to another workhouse?—I think not, if the union is amalgamated, say, with Ballina and Westport; we have a steamer service, so I don't see that we would have much hardship in removing the people. From Bangor they could go to Ballina, and from Blackrock they could go in with Westport.

23187. You have not much connection with Castlebar except for horses?—No.

23188. Do you ever go to the animals?—Very seldom.

23189. When you do go, how do you go?—Go to Ballina and take the train.

23190. Before you had the train from Ballina you went from Corick Bridge?—Exactly; go by road all the way.

23191. What places did you pass?—Corrylea, and Corick; go on straight from Corick, keeping to the south of Nephin.

23192. How far would it be from Corick Bridge to Castlebar. Would Castlebar be a little further than Ballina?—Six or seven miles further; about twenty-two miles, I think, from Corick to Castlebar.

23193. You have a long car daily, or twice a day, to Ballina?—Once a day; we had some time ago a double service, but we lost that.

23194. How did you lose that?—I believe it was not paying; it was a private enterprise.

23195. In competition with the mail car, what is the price of a seat on the mail car?—Six shillings.

23196. What used it to be when you had the competition?—Down to 2s. or 2½. 6d.

23197. If, for instance, Castlebar were selected as a central place for one class of inmates, the proper way to send in inmates from here who could not travel would be by long car to Ballina?—What I mean is that if there is a portion amalgamated with Castlebar or Westport, we have the steamer service to Malinbeg, and it would be very easy taking them to Castlebar.

23198. Is that service sure to come?—They are building piers for it, and I believe they are going to start on shortly; the County Council have given the necessary guarantee.

23199. You have a pier here, and all you want is a pier at Tynkeague?—Yes.

Mr. Flynn.—This pier is not suitable; they intend to build a new pier into deep water here or to dredge.

Witness.—So that they could have a daily service.

23200. CHAIRMAN.—I did not know that it would be possible to get a daily service nearer Belmullet than Cleggan; it would have to be a tidal steamer?—No, sir; we have deep water within a quarter of a mile of the town at any state of the tide.

23201. A very narrow channel?—Very narrow.

23202. A steamer could not turn in it, I suppose?

Oh, yes, up to the end.

23203. That is the channel that brings the water right through to Broadhaven?—No, into Blackrock.

23204. But the water is the water that flows into Broadhaven?—Oh, yes, through the canal.

23205. I suppose it is the fear of that keeps that deep?—It keeps the Blackrock side deep, but fills in the other side.

23206. Do you think that lunatics ought to be kept in workhouses, or that it would be better to send them to an institution kept up purposely for lunatics?—That is my opinion.

23287. As regards children, you have not tried the boarding-out of children?—No, never.

23288. Were you here when Mr. Begley was discussing that question?—I was not in here at that time.

23289. The boarding-out of children is tried in a great many other unions; a child is placed out at between two and three years of age, placed in a small farmer's family where he can get skill, and doesn't fool and trained up to be an agricultural labourer?—I think that would be better than the present system of keeping them in the workhouse.

23290. You have been a long time connected with poor-law administration?—About fifteen years now.

23291. What is your opinion about the rearing of children in workhouses?—I never saw them turn out very good until the nuns came, but since we got the nuns here I must say they are brought up very nicely and make very good servants.

23292. You have seen some of the little girls go into service from here?—Yes.

23293. Have you ever happened to engage one yourself?—No.

23294. You know the people who have?—Yes.

23295. Have they proved handy and useful servants?—Generally.

23296. Are they amenable to discipline?—Very much so, especially since we got the nuns.

23297. They don't take a huff and go off to the workhouse?—No, I don't know of any going back, especially since the nuns came in.

23298. We also had some evidence from Mr. Begley about outdoor relief, and I take it that he considered that the Guardians exercised a very careful and wise supervision in the case of applications for outdoor relief?—That is so.

23299. And that no relief was given except in cases of most urgent necessity?—That is so.

23300. Rather than go long distances to Ballina or any other workhouse, you possibly consider that there would be more applications?—I think so.

23301. Do you think that the Guardians would be able to deal just as satisfactorily with any increased applications as they are able to deal with applications at the present time?—Well, owing to the long distance to Ballina I am afraid of it.

23302. Would you be rather afraid that there would be an increased pressure that it would be difficult to meet?—I think so.

23303. You think if a poor person came in and said "You cannot ask me to go to Ballina away from my locality and people," do you think the Board of Guardians would be more likely to give outdoor relief in that case than if the person was only going to the Belmullet Workhouse?—Undoubtedly.

23304. Would you then apprehend a larger demand on outdoor relief in the event of amalgamation?—Certainly, sir; I believe it.

23305. Do you think it would be very much increased?—Well, I think it would be increased very much.

23306. Do you think people might apply for outdoor relief who would never dream of applying for it at present?—I think so, because the Guardians at Ballina or Westport or Castlebar would be quite ignorant of the cases, and the Guardians could not attend there from home.

23307. You hardly consider it possible that the District Councils should be asked to go such long distances as Ballina or Westport to attend a meeting?—It would be very hard to expect them.

23308. You would be in favour of some body being allowed to operate locally?—Exactly.

23309. I am speaking of such a local body?—That is the body that would have to deal with the applications for relief.

23310. Do you think the local body here, not the Guardians at Ballina or Westport, could deal satisfactorily with applications that were received from the old Belmullet Union?—Certainly.

23311. And you would not be afraid of their yielding?—Certainly not.

23312. Then you entirely agree with Mr. Begley's evidence, that a local body here, dealing with relief, might be trusted only to give it in urgent cases?—I believe they would carry out the intentions of the ratepayers to the letter.

23313. You most likely then would have a less expenditure than you have at present?—That is so.

23314. Because you would be saved the comparatively large average cost of the house, and then you would have the outdoor relief, and it never costs so much as indoor; and you think you would ride on outdoor relief applications with sufficient firmness to save you from spending more than you now spend, and, perhaps, you would be able to save?—I think we would be able to save.

23315. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You make the point that distance is a great obstacle in the way of doing away with the workhouse here for the infirm and aged?—Yes.

23316. Has it ever occurred to you that there is an intermediate course, that is establishing cottage houses for these poor people; the few that are left might be boarded out?—No, sir, I never went into that.

23317. That would be a method of getting over the distance trouble. For instance, now if the Guardians could do with the aged and infirm what they do in some places with the children, that is to say, provide homes for them—houses that would be occasionally inspected and looked after—that, to some extent, would get rid of the distance trouble?—It would.

23318. And the extension of out-door relief would be another aid in that respect; and you think if something like that was done, and an infirmary retained in Belmullet, it would meet all the necessary requirements?—I think so.

Mr. JOHN O'Malley, M.C.C., examined.

23319. CHAIRMAN.—What is the county electoral division you represent?—Belmullet, including The Mullet and the surrounding districts.

23320. Does it take leave in it?—No, the inside of The Mullet, and as far as Gallagher's district.

Mr. FLYNN.—It takes in Binghamtown, Belmullet North and South, Glenties, and Rathill.

23321. Rathill is a place where there is a good deal of poverty?—Very much.

23322. Do they do much labour in England and Scotland?—They maintain their parents by sending home money and paying rents.

23323. Have you many people in receipt of relief?—A great many; it is one of the worst districts in the union.

23324. Have you ever been a Poor Law Guardian?—No.

23325. I suppose you have considered the question of expenditure on poor rate?—I have; I have been thinking over it for a long time.

23326. What do you think about the question of closing, either wholly or partially, the present workhouse in Belmullet?—Well, I believe it is the ambition of all whom I represent that it should be closed, for the reasons Mr. Mullis has explained.

23327. As regards the sick, you would leave a place for treating them?—Yes, I have gone to the trouble in Castlebar of picking out some figures with reference to the union. I find that all it costs for an average—now I am talking of the out-door relief—I add that to the number of papers inside, and it comes to 3s. 11d. per head per week.

23328. That only takes in food and clothing?—Food and clothing are only included in that.

Mr. FLYNN.—I really don't know what figures you are giving.

CHAIRMAN.—It is from the table of the Local Government Report.

Mr. FLYNN.—Our average weekly cost is 4s.—3s. 6d. for food, and 6d. for clothing; but I think Mr. O'Malley is speaking also of out-door relief.

Witness.—I take outdoor and indoor relief, the average for the year; that comes to about £209, roughly speaking. As against that, there are expenditures shown which come to about £2,800.

23329. That is the rate raised?—Yes. So that my idea about it is, that if you had, roughly speaking, one union in the whole county it would be the better way.

23330. Supposing you had one union in the whole county for the class that you have to deal with,

Mr. John O'Malley.

Sept. 28, 1901.

Mr. John

and exclude the sick; the main class that you have in your workhouse, including the sick, are the aged and infirm; they are the bulk of your people, and if you based on the children and send the inmates elsewhere, you, practically, would have nobody left but the aged and infirm—you think it would be possible to manage those in one workhouse in the county?—Certainly; some central workhouse.

23251. Say Castlebar or Claremorris?—Well, Castlebar or Ballina.

23252. Ballina would not be central?—No; I suppose Castlebar or Claremorris.

23254. And you would save the salaries of all the officials in all the other workhouses?—That is the feeling of the County Council of Mayo.

23255. And that is your view, too?—And my view.

23256. Then you would leave the sick in each locality where there is a hospital at present?—For the sick, and you would also require a hospital for contagious diseases; you could not possibly remove those forty or fifty miles.

23257. In your union do you think there is any further provision necessary for the sick than there is now?—No, I think they are very well off here.

23258. The most distant point of your union on the north-east would be beyond Portlaniel?—I think that would be it.

Mr. Flynn.—Craggahog and Ballycastle is the furthest.

23259. CHAIRMAN.—That is a good road; how far would Skraggle be?

Mr. Flynn.—Twenty-two Irish miles.

23260. That would be as distant a part of your union as there is?

Mr. Flynn.—It would be as troublesome.

23261. And there is a fairly thick population at Portlaniel and Skraggle?

Mr. Flynn.—Yes, and round to Portlaniel.

23262. When you come to the south, what is the most distant point?—Doonagh, twelve Irish miles.

23263. Do you cross the Tullaghan ferry?—No, that is the meeting; Westport Union comes there.

23264. Then you have Fallowa?

Mr. Flynn.—That is the most distant point—twelve miles further.

23265. Banger has the thickest population towards Outok Bridge?

Mr. Flynn.—Banger is ten Irish miles.

23266. So those are your chief distances, and you don't think any further hospital accommodation is necessary?—I don't think so.

23267. The sick out at Portlaniel and Portlaniel and round to Rosport are all attended by the Proudhon doctors?—Principally; we have never many from those distant places.

23268. Don't you think, perhaps, that the distance prohibits it? There is at present a nurse at Aghose kept up by the Rosport newspaper—her district is chiefly on this side of the ferry?—Yes.

23269. The people that live on the far side of the ferry, do you think they are sufficiently attended to when they are sick?—We have rarely ever a complaint.

23270. At present the nurse lives at Aghose, that is about twelve Irish miles from here; if she was living at Rosport, or some place in that direction, and if her little cottage had, say, six beds attached to it, so that the sick of all that district beyond the ferry could, wherever there was a serious case of illness go in there, and if they could be kept at a very small expense without any additional medical cost—the little hospital to be looked after by the nurse and by the dispensary doctor, and built on a cheap and economical scale—do you think that that would be a reasonable and far provision for looking after the sick in that distant and cut-off district?—A more humane proposition than taking them into Belmullet.

23271. Do you think they would be entitled to some such consideration?—I think so.

23272. I know that country very well, and I know it is a terrible distance to think of bringing people over bad roads?—That would be the most convenient suggestion in the world.

23273. If you had only a small hospital, with six beds?—That would be quite sufficient at any time, except in the case of an outbreak of fever; you would have to take those in here. If you take the average from the books of the union, you will find that there are hardly ever more than six beyond the ferry.

23274. Is not that largely owing to the fact that they cannot be brought so far?—Perhaps so.

23275. If you look at the nurse's register, you will find she attends a very large number, and some of them very serious cases, that would be in the hospital here if they lived in Belmullet, but there she is attending them in their own homes. A good many of those houses are very primitive dwellings, most prejudicial to recovery. Do you think the Guardians here would look on such a suggestion as being reasonable and fair if the expense was kept within narrow limits?—I am sure it would be the feeling of the whole country.

23276. Was there anything else you wish to add about the financial arrangements that you looked into at Castlebar?—Nothing further. It was a sort of preliminary meeting; I intended to bring it before the Council; Mr. Daly and a few more suggested that if there was a provincial asylum or refuge for all these it would be better; but, at all events, one workhouse in the county would be quite sufficient.

23277. For the main body, excluding the sick?—Yes.

23278. And you would not dream of bringing in the children there if you could board them out, and make good use of them?—No.

23279. You have no transport?—No, thank God.

Mr. MURPHY.—There are few attractions at Belmullet.

Mr. J. T. MURPHY examined.

Mr. J. T.
Murphy.

Having heard the evidence here, I think you have all the particulars that anyone could say.

23280. CHAIRMAN.—It does not occur to you to add anything more?—Nothing that I think of just now; but one remark I may make, I think that, taking the whole thing at one glance, you will find it very difficult to work the business of taking the paupers to a central place. It may, of course, work, but from my view at present I think it would be very difficult to work.

23281. That is such long distances!—The distances would be, of course, the cause. We have to contend with long distances, and we have not a railway or convenience by boat. If they are to go by public vehicles or vans or any form of transit that could be thought of presently, I fail to see how it can be accomplished, but it may be.

23282. It would be people who are able to travel, not the sick, the sick would still remain?—The able-bodied that would be poor, would they be obliged to walk?

23283. No; they would not get money for their conveyance, but they would get a ticket to bring them, and they would be met at Ballina, and forwarded to whatever place they had to go to?—It is quite possible the matter may work out in a feasible way.

23284. But you see difficulties?—I see difficulties.

23285. Explain to us now, you know the country, and all the travelling facilities, and you would see things that we would not see?—It was that which seemed to be clear to my mind; the difficulty in bringing these poor people to any central position in Mayo.

23286. For instance a person from Belmullet comes in here to the local body, and the local body says "We will not give you outdoor relief, but we will give you an order of admission to Castlebar or Ballina workhouse?"—I think they would be very slow in doing.

23287. Suppose that the person's poverty was so great that they would be willing to go?—In cases of that kind I think there should be some provision made for relief, then here; that would be the deserving case for relief.

Sept. 12, 1904.

Mr. J. T. Murphy.

23302. Here is the position you would be in—a person that would be told to go to Castletor either would or would not be in need of relief. If they were in need of relief the Guardians would try, and most probably successfully try, to ascertain that fact—that would be their duty.

23303. And if they were really in need of relief, would they not then get outdoor relief, which would cost less than admission to the workhouse here?—They would be justified in doing it.

23304. And if they thought that a person could hold out outside without getting outdoor relief, then they would offer Castletor or Ballins?—Quite so; that would be the extreme.

23305. And they would not go, and there would be no harm done; it would be merely a good test to save the Guardians, because they would say we are not going to refuse all relief; we don't think you require outdoor relief, but we will give you transference to Castletor or Ballins or Westport Workhouse as the case may be?—Would you convey to him as to how he should go to Ballins?

23306. Give him a ticket on the mail car to go?—Then he would stay at home.

23307. Then there would be no harm done if he was able to stay at home, and if he was not able to stay at home without relief most probably would he not get outdoor relief from the Guardians?—He would most probably take it, did a day from me.

23308. That would be far better for the country?—At present they are getting very snug.

23309. You are short of labourers?—Yes.

23310. Is that the reason you would be glad to see the little boys and girls, of whom there are twenty in the workhouse reared up so as to become labourers in the district?—I certainly would; if I had a casting vote I would give that my first vote.

23311. And the way to secure that would be by boarding them out with small farmers where they would get into the habits of labour and industry?—If these farmers could be got to take them in as members of the family.

23312. Is it not a great thing for a small farmer in Erin to get a certain amount of dry money coming into his house?—It is, and one would imagine an incentive to him to have a little child and its maintenance paid for.

Rev. J. O'Donnell, C.C., examined.

I don't think, sir, I could give you any additional information; I agree substantially with what has been said by the members of the Council.

23313. CHAIRMAN.—You would not be out of accord with the views that have been expressed?—I would not, except that I do not see how Agboson needs any additional accommodation more than Blackod. I think one house with six beds would be sufficient for the whole district, say on the east side of the ferry; those on the west side could go to Belanisset.

23314. Or go to that one on the west side of the ferry?—Quite so.

Mr. Murphy.—There has been no mention made of the Lisbikes Islands.

CHAIRMAN.—There was no mention made of them, but they were in our minds; you could hardly propose any institution for the islands.

Mr. Murphy.—No, but they are very remote.

CHAIRMAN.—And the population is small.

23309. Do you think there would be an anxiety to get such children?—I expect there would be, or there should be.

23310. Especially in a family that might not have too many children?—I may mention we are all well blessed in that way here.

23311. What do you think about the idea of a little hospital of six beds, say with that Hemmell nurse in charge?—I would quite approve of that.

23312. Do you hear of cases of sickness which have to be nursed in their own homes and not removed to Belanisset?—It is an everyday occurrence that when they get sick they must be nursed in their own homes.

23313. Are you aware of many cases that don't come in but remain such in their own homes?—I am not aware, but it is a very large district.

23314. And, of course, there is the ordinary percentage of sick there?—Yes, and as you mentioned a recent one the present nurse is on the other side of the ferry, and the extent of the country down there to Belanisset is a very wide country.

23315. She visits the people on the Bannock side, but not to the same extent as on the other side?—She could not very well, because it is so far, and she must go to the expense of hiring a car or else walk; I think some provision should be made for beyond the ferry.

23316. Similar to what there is at Agboson, with a little cottage attached with six or seven beds?—It need not be very expensive.

23317. And it may be built at a small cost?—It may.

Mr. O'Malley.—That would be in the event of amalgamation, we would never think of having any such home otherwise.

CHAIRMAN.—All our supposition really is in the event of amalgamation; there might be another contingency if the contributions to your expenditure were increased.

Mr. O'Malley.—Quite so.

CHAIRMAN.—You may be quite sure it would be entirely opposed to the view of any member of this Commission to do anything which under any circumstances increase your expenditure here. Our whole object is to try and reduce it materially, and we would not make any recommendation that would not, in our minds, show a substantial reduction on your rates.

Mr. Murphy.—There are fifty-eight families on one island.

Rev. J. O'Donnell.

CHAIRMAN.—When there was a big epidemic I visited the island, and we were able to get possession of two buildings, the Congested Districts Board's for one sex and a school for the other sex; you had a resident doctor and a resident nurse, so that Lisbikes, in any serious outbreak, can be attended to; it possesses buildings that have been used. Was there any idea that any further accommodation would be desirable at Lisbikes?

Mr. Murphy.—It being part and parcel of the union I thought it well to allude to it.

CHAIRMAN.—We have discussed it among ourselves; we have been speaking of Lisbikes, and we are aware how it stands, but for such a very small community as that it would be difficult to propose anything at all, considering that when a difficulty did arise it was successfully met.

The Sitting terminated.

Oct. 4, 1904

FORTY-EIGHTH PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Castlebar.

Present:—Mr. MACKS (Chairman), Mr. MURKAGHAN, and Dr. COBY RIDGER.

CHAIRMAN.—One usual course is to invite witnesses to give their evidence as representatives of the County Council. We have not received any notification from the County Council that any witnesses are coming forward expressly to give the views of the County Council, but there may be some witnesses since nominated, and the Commission would be glad to hear any County Council witnesses if they are in attendance.

Mr. DOWD.—I was deputed by the County Council; I have only a few words to say.

Mr. WILLIAM DOWD, M.C.C., P.L.O., examined.

Mr. William Dowd.

23311. CHAIRMAN.—You came forward as a member of the County Council?—Yes, sir.

23312. Are you also a member of one of the District Councils?—No, sir; but I am a member of the Westport Board of Guardians, which is distinct from the District Council.

23313. Have the County Council nominated any witnesses to attend?—We did not receive any record of it?—Mr. MURKAGHAN, I understand, and myself; we did not discuss it at the County Council; we left it to the District Councils.

23314. Then your views would be individual views?—Yes; I adopt the opinion of the Westport District Council. There is just one particular in which I don't quite agree with them; they seem to think it would be very economical to change back to the divisional rating system; I don't think it would make much change in the way of economy; I think the present system is fair enough, that the deserving poor, and the deserving poor only, should get out-door relief.

23315. You would not go as far as Swinford—perhaps it should be a county-at-large charge?—I should not; I don't see that there will be very much economy; people are crying out for economy, that is the only reason for amalgamation; I don't think there would be much economy in amalgamation. If all the poor-law officers of the Westport Union were dispensed with, ratepayers and all, it would amount to more than £4 in the £. I calculate the salary of the master, matron, porter, and the salaries of the schoolmaster and schoolmistress; I think in all the other departments the officials would have to be provided for under another new scheme.

23316. That is the nurse, doctors, and chaplains?—I don't think you can economize anything in that.

23317. You would keep on the hospital at Westport?—We should. I think you cannot do away with Westport at all; we at present cater for a distance of forty-one miles in the Achill direction.

23318. Do you think any additional accommodation would be desirable in the Westport Union for the sick of the Westport Union—do you think any further accommodation is desirable for the sick?—I think the present system works very well.

23319. You think it is not too far to take a sick person over forty miles?—I have not heard of any hardship in connection with it.

23320. If we were to break up the unions now, do you think it would be any hardship to make the people who have accommodation close by, go forty miles?—Certainly, it would be; you must relieve the hospitals.

23321. In Westport Union you say some people now have to go forty miles; do you think that is a hardship on them?—In the case of a dangerous epidemic like the Achill smallpox we get up temporary hospitals; it is cheaper to do this than to keep on a permanent hospital.

23322. Take the case of fractured limbs and pneumonia—do you think the hospital accommodation is adequate?—There have been no complaints about it; cases of fractured limbs are not numerous in Achill. And in the case of pneumonia you could bring them by train.

23323. Cases of pneumonia, people in high fever?—Not in very high fever; we could have them nursed in their homes.

23324. You are aware there is a name in Achill at present—do you know the kind of cases she attends to?—I think she attends cases generally.

23325. Do you know that she attends a very large number?—I do not.

23326. And the list of sick in her charge in their own homes is very large?—I think that system is good enough.

23327. You would not give them any further accommodation?—People who are able to travel to Westport Hospital do travel; I think the people are very much opposed to any additional hospitals over the union; there have been no cases of hardship arising that I have heard of.

23328. Could you imagine the breaking up of a union and people objecting on the ground that it would oblige the sick to go long distances?—I think each district broken up should retain its hospital.

23329. But you think Achill does not need any hospital?—I have heard no complaints.

23330. How far is Galsboro from Westport?—Ten miles.

23331. How many in Louisburg?—Seventeen Irish.

23332. Is it not seven Irish out?—Yes; there is a very thin population along there.

23333. I was going to ask you whether there was not a large population, at all events you don't think any further hospital accommodation is necessary in the Westport Union?—I don't hear it called for, and I don't hear any complaints about the existing system. I find the average out-door relief has increased comparing the three years since the passing of the Act, and the three years before; the average has increased by £250 in the whole union.

23334. How would you meet that?—I don't see any way out of it, and I think if you go back to the divisional rating system you will have the same expenditure; there may be one or two cases of abuse under any system, but I think generally the system is not abused.

23335. You think the present disbursements for out-door relief are fair?—I think they are fair; I think these getting out-door relief require it.

23336. We had evidence elsewhere from a witness who made the suggestion that as a sort of protection against any possible over-expenditure in the future, that, say, the present expenditure, or whatever might be found by the bodies concerned to be a fair expenditure, should be stereotyped as ordinary union-at-large charge to be paid for out-door relief, and that everything over that, supposing that was found to be in your Electoral Division of Westport £4 a week, supposing that were stereotyped to be levied off the union-at-large, and anything additional, say 2s. 6d. or 5s. or a shilling, or whatever it might be after the 24, that that should become an Electoral Division charge?—I don't think there could be any objection to that.

23337. That would be a guard against future extravagance if it should occur?—I don't think there is any extravagance.

23338. Would you like to see the amount increased beyond what it is at present?—I should not.

23339. Do you think it could be increased?—I don't think it could without extravagant or throwing away money.

23340. But you would be willing to put that safeguard on it—Yes. The Board I am connected with are in favour of a discretionary rating.

23341. Mr. MURKHEAD.—Might there not be a danger in that that each Electoral Division would want the full sum to which they are entitled?—Yes, there is that danger; they get into their heads that they are entitled to have a certain amount. My Board, too, think that if any workhouses are to be done away with Kildare and Chesham would be the most convenient to abolish.

Oct. 4, 1904.

Mr. William Dent.

Mr. MARK C. HENRY, Chairman, Swinford Union, examined.

Mr. Mark C. Henry.

23342. CHAIRMAN.—I have got two documents that were prepared, evidently with great thought, by your Board of Guardians; taking the replies first, you say that, in your opinion, the number of workhouses at present in Mayo, namely, eight, is excessive, "and we consider this number could with great financial advantage, and without entailing any undue inconvenience or hardship on the poor, be reduced to four; we recommend that Ballina, Ballinrobe, Swinford and Westport be retained, and the other four unions be dissolved and amalgamated with those?"—That is the Board's answer.

23343. Then, as regards the workhouses to be closed, you recommend the Castlebar Workhouse be converted into an auxiliary asylum under section 76 of the Local Government Act?—Yes; we consider that an advisable thing to do.

23344. Getting a contribution from the Government for each burrough?—Yes, and partly from the county.

23345. No. 3.—"We consider that the workhouse children should be removed from the workhouse to a central institution or home which could serve a number of counties, and that the children should, as far as practicable, be boarded out amongst the agricultural classes." That is largely in favour of boarding out, but until they reach an age for boarding out you would put them in a central home?—Exactly.

23346. And you think the Claremorris Workhouse would be a good institution owing to its central position for such a children's home?—Yes, it would be.

23347. You are strongly against the boarding out of aged and infirm inmates?—Yes.

23348. Does that mean that you are strongly opposed to give out-door relief rather than indoor?—No, but we think there would be more care taken with the aged and infirm at a central home such as Claremorris.

23349. I suppose you have in Swinford Union at present a good many old and infirm people on your out-door relief list?—We have.

23350. Those are people with some relatives or friends to take care of them?—Not to take care of them; they live independently of their friends, and have to subsist on the relief they get from the union.

23351. And I suppose some charity besides?—Very probably.

23352. Have you considered very closely the question of boarding out the aged and infirm?—We don't believe that would be an advisable step.

23353. Do you think the expense in a union such as yours, where there are so many below the border line of comfort, do you think it would be too great an expense for you to face?—I think it would exceed the cost of keeping them in a central home for the whole county.

23354. I would like to hear your views about the chargeability.—It is an exceptional suggestion you have made?—Are you including the out-door relief in that?

23355. Your reply to query 4 is, "We consider that all poor-law expenditure"—Should be chargeable to the county-at-large. Our union is one of the poorest, perhaps, in Ireland, the valuation being so low and congested.

23356. You mention the ratio between valuation and population?—Exactly, the valuation per head of the county would be £1 11s. 8d., but in the case of our union it is only 15s. 4d.

23357. What is it in the case of the most highly-rated union?—£2 17s. 6d.; that would be Ballinrobe or Claremorris.

23358. What you propose is that all the expenditure of the county should be bulked?—You have richer people at Ballinrobe, and they are paying a smaller rate than our poorer people in Swinford.

23359. If you turn to page 2 of your other document you point out that of that £1 spent by the Poor-Law Guardians, 12s. 9d. comes out of the Government fund, and 7s. 3d. only out of the poor rates, that is correct?—I believe it is; that is the clerk's estimate.

23360. Do you think that any re-apportionment of that grant on the ground of exceptional poverty of the district would be fair. I mean you get 12s. 9d. out of every £1 you have to spend, and then the 7s. 3d. means a very high rate on your district. If your 7s. 3d. were reduced still more by adding more to the 12s. 9d. grant, would that equally meet the views of the Swinford people?—I dare say it would; to be sure if you increase the grant it will meet the views of the people.

23361. If the Government grant were apportioned, having regard to the necessities of the district and the poverty of the district rather than to other considerations?—I dare say it would.

23363. You get 12s. 9d. out of every £1 you spend, and then the 7s. 3d. means a very heavy rate in your union and a still heavier rate proportionately in Belmullet, where the valuations is so very small. You want to throw what you may call the excess of your expenditure on your neighbouring unions; did it ever occur to you that it might be a little more equitable to throw it on a wider area?—I think we would be inclined to stretch it over a greater area.

23364. The Government grants are apportioned over the whole of Ireland, and the question is whether you would suggest that where there are very poor districts those districts ought to receive special consideration in the apportionment of the Parliamentary grant?—So they ought, indeed.

23365. On the ground of their poverty and nothing else?—Poverty and congestion and low rating.

23366. In your next query, coming to No. 6, in answer to the query whether you consider additional hospital accommodation to be desirable for the treatment of the sick, you say that in your opinion there is no necessity for additional hospital accommodation for the treatment of the poor in the County Mayo, not in Swinford particularly. Have you any knowledge of the conditions in West Mayo at all?—Not personally; I am not speaking personally.

23367. You are of opinion that in the nursing arrangements in union hospitals it would be beneficial that nursing should be entrusted to a community of nuns?—Very much so.

23368. And that hospitals should be detached from the workhouses and made distinct hospitals?—Yes.

23369. You have had the Sisters of Mercy for a long time in your workhouses?—Fourteen or fifteen years.

23370. You have seen a great improvement under their care?—A remarkable improvement.

23371. Now as regards the contributions from persons who are able to pay, you say, "We consider that all persons who are able to pay for their maintenance and treatment in union hospitals should be required to pay the entire cost of same." A man might be able to pay something and not pay the entire cost?—We generally take what he is able to pay.

23372. That is what you mean by that?—Yes, as far as we think he is able to pay.

23373. A wealthy farmer, if you have any such, or a comfortable shopkeeper, might get fever and go into your fever hospital, and he might be able to pay the full cost that his treatment would demand; you might have to get an additional nurse to look after him; and you think it would be fair that he should be obliged, in the Guardians' discretion, to pay the full cost?—We go in for his paying the actual cost.

23374. Supposing a labouring man who makes 15s. a week has a child of his hurt, or that for any other reason has to go into hospital for treatment, that child, at all events, consumes 6d. to 1s. worth of food. Would you think it any hardship that the Guardians should be given a discretionary power to charge such a man, we will say 6s., and to go on from that to any other class of persons proportionately to their means, and give the Guardians power to recover it?—I think the Guardians should get that discretionary power; they are a very conscientious body as a rule, and if those means are left in the Guardians' hands they will not treat that labourer badly.

On 4, 1864.

Mr. Mark O.
Henry.

as far as they can, they look on the admission as less of a compliment, and money is earned for the institution and the rates reduced?—That is right.

23376. As regards the tramps and casuals?—It is very hard to deal with those.

23377. Have you any suggestions to offer?—Nothing at all, except merely to make them work in the morning before their discharge.

23378. You still would allow them to come into the workhouse?—I don't see how you could keep them out.

23379. One suggestion made to us is, that a man who is a habitual wanderer, without any pretence to work, that it would be no hardship if that man were obliged to give some work or return for the support he gets from the country?—That is what I say.

23380. If he was put into a closed workhouse that was established for that class of people, and detained there under a magistrate's warrant or order, would you consider that any hardship?—That is a matter I would like to consider; I think there would be a little hardship in that.

23381. The suggestions that were made to us carefully excluded from that class of tramp or wanderer those people who move about in their own parish, and who are welcome at the firesides of their neighbours, and move about from house to house in a very small area—it excluded that class; but the men who tramp the whole country round and have no local attachment to any place, would you consider if any hardship that these men should be put under restraint and obliged to do something for their living, and, if possible, get them into industrious habits, so that they might come out and be working men in the country?—It would require some time to suggest a means to prevent that; you would want to pursue them and find out.

23382. Well, no; the way witnesses suggested was, that if you find a man who cannot satisfy you that he is a bona fide labouring man, and that he is honestly looking for work, if he has no recommendations or evidence to give that he is a man honestly trying to get work, then you would put him into one of these industrial workhouses if he was trying to get his support from the public?—It would be a very good thing; there would not be much hardship in that.

23383. Say a couple for Ireland?—I think that would be a very good thing; either that or make them work next day before being discharged.

23384. It would go farther than that; it would mean he would be detained for a considerable time. The suggestion, if carried out, would mean the absolute exclusion of that class: on the given day any one who presented himself for public assistance would be looked up unless he could show that he was a decent man by evidence from the locality?—That is quite right.

23385. Without having considered the matter your first impression would be favourable to such a suggestion?—Yes.

23386. On page 7 of your recommendations you say, "We think that in any case where a union may be dissolved the hospital of such union should also be discontinued." Is that really your opinion. You suggest that four hospitals should be abolished; you suggest Belmullet should go. Would they not require a hospital there?—Oh, certainly.

23387. Take Glencorris; would they not require a hospital in Glencorris?—I dare say they might; it would be a central home for aged and infirm, and perhaps children.

23388. Would you keep no portion of the premises for a hospital for the sick?—I dare say you could.

23389. It struck me that perhaps it was not thoroughly considered by you. Of course it would mean economy to shut the hospital when you also shut the workhouse; but whether it would be compatible with humane treatment is another question. I really could not tell you that, but the clerk of the union, who carefully considered this matter, will give a better opinion than I can.

23390. You would close Glencorris, and also Cullinbar, and you would have to bring the sick to Seafort or Ballinrobe?—Ballinrobe is about nine Irish miles from Glencorris.

23391. What would be the most distant part of the Glencorris Union?—Ballyvaughan?—That would be very convenient to Seafort, within Irish miles.

23392. Your Board of Guardians is of opinion that all persons of unsound mind should be removed from the workhouse to a central institution, preferably an auxiliary asylum?—Yes.

23393. And you add as regards the children, "We consider the children should be boarded out as soon as, and as far as practicable, and until they are boarded out they should be in some central place." You would board them out with the agricultural classes?—Yes, sir.

23394. And you would not rear them up in trade; you think it would be unfair that the rate-paying community should be compelled to pay for giving them an education or training superior to that which the ratepayers can afford to give their own children?—Yes.

23395. Is there anything else you would wish to mention?—We are entirely in favour of union rating, for we have very little experience of divisional rating.

23396. Contrasting union with electoral divisional rating you are in favour of union?—Yes.

23397. And you want to go a good deal further?—Yes.

Mr. T. Reaghern.—I endorse what the Chairman said.

Mr. Patrick Jones.—I also agree with the Chairman.

Mr. THOMAS BOURGHEEN examined.

Mr. Thomas
Bourghreen.

On the subject of boarding out I may say it is a great benefit to the children; we give the persons who have charge of them 2s. a week, and when they are of the age of fourteen there are a great many looking for them to go to service, whereas if they are kept inside the workhouse they would be good for nothing.

23398. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think many of these children remain on with the families?—They do.

23399. And are virtually absorbed into the families?

Mr. GEORGE O'NEILL, Vice-Chairman, Killalea Union, examined.

Mr. George O'Neill.

23400. CHAIRMAN.—You have been deputed by the Killalea Board of Guardians to give their views?—I have.

23401. You are in favour of amalgamation?—We are in favour of a general scheme of amalgamation.

23402. Would that general scheme close up your own workhouse?—I suppose so.

23403. Would you bow to that?—I believe so; I favoured amalgamation fourteen or fifteen years ago, myself, and carried it by a nice majority, and subsequently it was rescinded; but it was then under the old scheme of divisional rating; but under the present rate I would not be for connecting our union with any others unless we had divisional rating.

23404. You only provisionally would approve of closing Killalea workhouse; you would not approve of —Yes; they have to send them to Mass every Sunday and to school every day, and the teacher has to send it a certificate that they attend.

23405. Do you meet these children yourself?—Yes; and go to the schools to make inquiries.

23406. Are they looked on in any way that makes it unpleasant for them?—Not at all; they fall in with the children of the school and the children of the village.

breaking it up unless you had divisional rating?—Unless we had divisional rating.

23407. Which is your division?—The town of Ballycastle.

23408. What was your average rate under the old electoral division rating?—I can give you the average rate for 1877.

23409. What is the standard rate?—3s. 3d.

23410. That was for all purposes of the Guardians' expenditure?—Yes.

23411. You don't happen to know how much of that was Poor Law proper?—No.

23412. What was the average expenditure since the Act of 1868?—I could not answer that.

Mr. Larnhin.—Gt. Rd.

23413. Did the expenditure seem to you to be up & bit?—I thought so.

33414. You think the rates are up, and you are paying them?—I think so; I am paying them.

33415. Mr. MURKIN.—Why do you wish to go back to electoral division rating?—There is one thing certain: the town Guardians are all entirely for union rating, but these Guardians living in the rural districts are for electoral division rating, because the town papers are the cause of swamping the rates.

33416. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you call Ballycastle a town?—It is a village in reality.

33417. You have not many on outdoor relief?—Not a great many.

33418. Are there many in the town of Killybegs?—Something about double the number in Ballycastle.

33419. The valuation of Killybegs is double?—It is more than double that of Ballycastle.

33420. You are afraid of paying your share of the Ballina outdoor relief?—Unquestionably. I believe it would swamp us in Killybegs; it would be only robbing Peter to pay Paul.

33421. Would you be in favour of uniting with Ballina if you had uniform-large rating for every purpose except outdoor relief?—No, I would be for universal rating all through.

33422. You would not like to see Killybegs Union broken up unless you had divisional rating?—No.

33423. Mr. MURKIN.—You would not mind seeing Killybegs workhouse closed if you had the management of your own affairs, and could fix the rates as you do now?—I believe we would be a lot better off in Ballycastle; I have known Guardians summoned for special meetings, and when the relieving officer's books are going to be ruled they take and leave. It was not so when I became a Guardian twenty years ago; they used to devote their time and attention to one who was entitled to relief and who was not; now they are away unless the clerk, through charity, gets a quorum to wait.

33424. CHAIRMAN.—They leave it to the Killybegs men?—Not altogether.

33425. From the Killybegs workhouse to the Ballina workhouse is only about six or seven miles?—Six miles. In the Ballycastle Electoral Division in 1844 we paid £75 7s. 6d., and the amount collected was £133 13s. 6d.

Mr. WILLIAM McNAMARA examined.

33440. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of Mr. O'Grady; are you from that part of the country?—Ballycastle.

33441. Then your evidence would practically agree with his as regards that cottage hospital we were speaking of?—Certainly.

33442. As regards the question of rating, do you agree with him in thinking it most desirable that you should go back to electoral division rating?—From my experience, I entirely agree with him.

33443. Is that a pretty general view in Killybegs?—It is the view of all the Guardians I had a conversation with.

33444. Was this question discussed at a meeting of your Board of Guardians?—It was.

33445. And were your Guardians practically unanimous in that?—They were; there may have been some dissenters, but they did not express their opinions.

33446. There was no dissent from the town of Killybegs?—I have not heard it.

33447. Do you wish to add anything to what Mr. O'Grady has said?—Very little; I quite agree about having a cottage hospital at Ballycastle under the superintendence of a nurse; it is a most central place, and it is there the workhouse should be.

33448. A small hospital that would not cost much?—A small hospital with eight or ten beds, and under the superintendence of a nurse. Under the present 33436. What is the object of that bit of evidence?—To show the rate is going up by degrees from year to year.

33437. Mr. MURKIN.—Are you aware that in that year an inmate of a workhouse could be kept for 1s. 5d. a week, and now it is 3s. 1s.—I believe they could be kept much cheaper. The clerk of the union was only paid £35 then, and the master £30; well, some of these are up to £800 now.

33438. CHAIRMAN.—Workhouses did not become hospitals until 1850, and the treatment of people in hospitals is much more expensive than in a public institution.

33439. In the event of the Killybegs Union being amalgamated, you say it would be necessary the workhouse hospital should remove or there should be a cottage hospital at Ballycastle?—A cottage hospital at Ballycastle would be more suitable.

33440. Is Belderrig in your union?—It is.

33441. How far is that from Ballycastle?—Eight miles.

33442. And Killybegs is?—Eight miles; so Ballycastle would be most central.

33443. You would not suggest an expensive hospital?—Oh, no, I don't think it would be necessary.

33444. You would only suggest a hospital where there would be from six to ten beds, looked after by a nurse and a dispensary doctor, just for the people who are really so sick that they would require hospital treatment, not for the poor, aged people to spend their lives in?—I am sure ten or twelve beds would be quite enough, and Ballycastle would be the place for that.

33445. What depth of country is there behind; how far back does the union go, and is there much population away from the shore?—There is a pretty large population.

33446. How far back does it go from where you are?—About nine miles, I should say.

33447. Does it go half way to Crossmolina?—It is something about ten or twelve miles. There is a very large population.

33448. Your hospital would be central for those two?—Certainly.

33449. Is there anything else you would like to add? There is nothing else I am aware of.

conditions poor patients coming twenty miles suffer a good deal in having to go to Killybegs.

33449. Do you think that would be better than putting the hospital at Belderrig, which would accommodate people from both unions?—That would not do at all.

33450. You think that could not be availed of by the people between Crossmolina and Ballycastle?—No; it is altogether out of their running.

33451. There is no place, you say, that would be so useful a centre as Ballycastle?—Not that I am aware of; it is there that all the patients go for medicine and to the doctor; the district is about twenty miles square or more.

33452. What do you think about the transport?—We have a little experience of them in Killybegs; a fair share of them pass that way; they are not very desirable for any community.

33453. What was your idea about how they might be dealt with?—Those lads that go through the country without any profession except picking pockets and robbing churches, I would deal arbitrarily with them; I would not encourage them with lodgings in the workhouse.

33454. You would put them in some place where they would have to work for their living?—I would like to see every one of them working.

33455. If they were obliged to work for a while they might get into working habits?—Yes; they won't work in the workhouse.

Mr. MATTHEW J. MURPHY, J.P., examined.

33456. CHAIRMAN.—The Ballina Guardians are in favour of a general scheme?—A general scheme; I am chairman of the District Council.

33457. Are you pretty well unanimous in your recommendations?—We are unanimous entirely, but not in the same sense as suggested by my predecessors here.

33458. What is the view of your Board of Guardians?—My opinion is that you should lay down a map and not take in counties, as one county may join another, as at Ardarae; Downshire Union comes within three miles of the Ballina Workhouse.

33459. You personally would be opposed to a county-union Poor-Law system?—Personally my self I would; I would go in for a general scheme, not looking at it from that point of view.

23460. You would proceed on the lines on which the Poor-Law Unions were originally laid out—ignore the counties and take market places as centres. How would you suggest a reduction of workhouses in Mayo?—It would take half Drogheda to Ballina, and let the other half go to Sligo.

23461. You would take up Ennisey? I would, and on to Drogheda Workhouse itself; also, I would take in the whole of Killybegs and Belderrig.

23462. Did your Board of Guardians think very much of the question beyond Ballina as a centre?—They did on broader views.

23463. What did they say as regards the rest of the county?—We consider about four workhouses ought to do Mayo.

23464. Did you mention what four you thought?—We did not.

23465. But Ballina was to be one!—From its central position.

23466. Did you contemplate the breaking up of the Castlbar Union?—In my opinion the Castlbar Union, from several points of view, should be broken up. We could take Lahardane portion of it. The county is supporting an infirmary in Castlbar that the county pays £1,800 a year to, and we only send about eight to ten or eleven each half-year from my union, while Castlbar supplies some 135 and up to 150, and Westport nearly up to that. Remember, now, that goes to relieve the rates in Castlbar; as far as the Castlbar Union Hospital is concerned, they usually go to the infirmary, not to the union hospital at all.

23467. So that the county-at-large is paying more than its share to Castlbar, you think?—It is the same between eight and 180, and twelve and 150, and that applies also to Killybegs, I may add, four or five half-yearly.

23468. How far does your union go in the direction of Swinford?—It goes on out to the Ox mountains, and to the bridge of Foxford, or near it.

23469. Then a little part of Foxford is in your union?—Yes.

23470. You don't contemplate any breaking up, I suppose, of Swinford Union?—Not presently, that did not occur to us, taking into consideration the population of Swinford Union; it is a congested area, entirely and thickly populated.

23471. You think that would require to stand?—I think it would.

23472. You don't touch Westport at any point?—No, except at Corick.

23473. The workhouses that might be closed you think might be made into auxiliary lunatic asylums?—Yes, particularly Castlbar on consideration that we would get the grant for the support of the asylums.

23474. You want to get the same rate?—I would.

23475. Are there not new buildings being erected at Castlbar?—They have expended £25,000.

23476. And would any auxiliary asylum be necessary now?—I am afraid it would. But with regard to epileptics in workhouses, some of these workhouses that are to be closed should be used for that purpose.

23477. You have not more than sixty in the whole county—for what number are these additional buildings to provide?—I don't know.

23478. Do your Board of Guardians prefer an auxiliary asylum to the enlargement of the county asylum?—I would not like to expend any more money on new buildings as long as we had a workhouse in Castlbar.

23479. You think they might be maintained more cheaply in a workhouse than in an asylum, perhaps?—It is possible they could, but it is a wrong place for them.

23480. Not a suitable place for feeble-minded people?—Not at all; there are several objections with regard to it, and several complaints with regard to it.

23481. You think it would be well to revert to electoral division rating, particularly as regards out-door relief?—With regard to out-door relief it has come to this, that out-door relief is the greatest fraud we have in the country at all.

23482. Are you a town guardian or a country guardian?—I am a country guardian, and chairman of the District Council; I represent a division for six years that has neither a pauper in the workhouse, nor one on out-door relief, and we have to pay at the time of £1,000 a year for out-door relief alone.

23483. And before the Act of 1889 passed you had practically nothing to pay?—Not as regards out-door relief, nor for a number of paupers in the workhouse unless I had them there.

23484. You had only your share of establishment charges, and you had a very low rate?—A very low rate.

23485. What is your present rate?—3s. 6d. on land, and 5s. 4d. on buildings.

23486. What was it for the standard year?—I forget what it was. The rate is going up gradually.

23487. At all events the expenditure is increasing?—There is a tendency in consequence of out-door relief being union rating to corruption in every way.

23488. Are you often asked to put forward people's names for out-door relief?—No, because I represent a division in which I would not allow them to get out-door relief when they don't want it. But there is no check on it.

23489. When an application comes before your Board of Guardians how is it dealt with?—On the day of the particular Guardian of the division. I may have no knowledge or the majority of the Board have no knowledge of this particular case. Well, if I was responsible to my constituents for the amount of relief given in the electoral division, then they would have a say to me on the question of election. I would be the best judge myself whether the particular individual was entitled to out-door relief or not; presently the thing is open to corruption.

23490. Do you think payments are given for out-door relief rather on charitable grounds than on grounds of destitution?—On charitable grounds, I believe, myself, in a great many cases.

23491. You could not give an instance of that?—No; but I have a personal knowledge of it for the last thirty years; my father was a Guardian before me, and he was directly responsible to the ratepayers of the division.

23492. But it was never a division with much poverty?—In his day there were more on out-door relief than now; but he was directly responsible for who did or did not get out-door relief, and it was a check on abuse.

23493. Do you ever object, yourself, to a case?—I do; and did on several occasions.

23494. What happened?—The result was, I might succeed in a particular case to refuse an individual to get it, but notwithstanding that I find the relief going from £5 to £7 a week thirty years ago in my union, to £10 now.

23495. How do the relieving officers stand?—That is open to abuse; you cannot always rely on officers, and in addition to that there is provisional relief; that is open to abuse entirely.

23496. That they give in their own discretion?—Yes, and on the doctor's certificate; he certifies that a certain patient is entitled to certain things.

23497. That is medical treatment?—Yes; and that is open to a lot of abuse; the relieving officer uses very little discretion, in my opinion, to see whether the parties are able to provide it or not.

23498. The doctor's certificate would be that so-and-so is suffering from such an illness and requires beef tea?—Yes; milk, or bread, or mutton, or perhaps brandy.

23499. You were a Guardian before the rating was changed?—I was not myself, my father was.

23500. Have you any accurate knowledge of the way in which applications for relief were dealt with then?—The Guardian of each division was directly responsible to the division and the ratepayers of that division, for if such and such got out-door relief he was responsible to them.

23501. Do you know of any division now, embracing the town of Ballina—do you know any country divisions where the expenditure in old times was very little for out-door relief and where it has become substantial now?—I don't, in the country divisions.

23502. Then you think it is all in the town?—I do, in the town; we were reducing our out-door list the other day, and of the 104 individuals on out-door relief 68 were within the township, and that did not include the whole town, only as far as the bridge of Ardarae.

23503. If Ballina took in the whole of Killybegs and went off as far as Belderrig, do you think it would be reasonable that some little cottage hospital might be established?—I agree with the witnesses in that, but then the question will arise whether it would be a fever hospital or a medical hospital; if the question of the fever hospital arises we would have to have two classes in such an institution.

23504. At present the suggestion made is for an ordinary medical and surgical hospital for urgent cases?—I would agree with that for cases of pneumonia or fracture of bones, that could not go to Ballina.

23505. But you would object to the fever hospital?—It would entail a lot of expense; you would have to have a nurse and a whole staff. With regard to the hospitals, I consider there should be a paying ward attached to each union. We contemplated doing so in Ballina some two years ago, and prepared plans to change the hospital, but in consequence of the present Commission being appointed it lay in abeyance since. In my opinion there should be a paying ward attached to each hospital.

23506. Would you give the Guardians discretion to add out, after careful inquiry, how much could be paid for each patient, if anything, and empower them to recover it?—Yes.

23507. Up to the full amount incurred?—Yes; in case the individual was able to do it.

23508. To give a discretion?—Take Trillick as a rule, they are rather friendly; they are good-natured.

23509. As regards tramps, does your good nature extend to those?—From the tramps I would take out the bone fide man in search of employment; I don't call them tramps. I would adopt the Belgian system with them; I would give them a ticket, and allow them to go on as long as they were in search of work, but the real tramp I would put into a labour colony.

Oct. 4, 1904.

Mr. Matthew J. Melvin.

Mr. JAMES STEWART, P.L.O., examined.

I have nothing to add to our Chairman's statement.

23511. CHAIRMAN.—Are you representing a rural constituency?—Yes; I am almost in the town.

23512. And still you agree with the evidence of your Chairman?—Certainly I do.

Mr. James Stewart.

Mr. W. A. CRAIG, P.L.O., examined.

I have nothing to add to the Chairman's remarks. I think they embrace the views of our Board, as far as they have been discussed a few weeks ago, when we got an intimation from the Local Government Board that the inquiry would be held.

23513. Do you share his opinions about chargeability?—Yes; they all go very strongly for electoral division charges.

23514. Including the Guardians of the town of Ballina?—I cannot speak for them.

23515. They are not here?—There is one for Ardara.

Mr. Stewart.—I have nothing to add.

23516. You would like the electoral division charge too?

Mr. Stewart.—We were all unanimous in that. I represent the rural division of Ardara, but I have a fair knowledge of the urban also, and as far as the out-door relief is concerned, I don't know that it could be brought down any way. The parishes that get it are deserving of it, and they are mostly evicted tenants, who must get some support.

Mr. Craig.—They look on it that the electoral division would be looked after better by the individual Guardians; at the present time they look on it as if the money was coming out of a general pocket and not out of the immediate neighbourhood.

Mr. W. A. Craig.

Mr. CONOR O'KEEFE, M.P., Chairman, Mayo County Council, examined.

23517. CHAIRMAN.—The Commission have not received any expression of opinion from the County Council yet; they have not passed, I think, any resolution. Perhaps you would tell us the line that they are disposed to take?—I will say, in the first place, that I don't represent the County Council at this hearing, because I learn they have not passed a resolution at all on the subject; but there are two or three things I would like to tell you, and I will confine my statement to those. In the first place, I would like to say that the feeling is general in Mayo that there should be some readjustment of the contributions to the Boards of Guardians.

23518. That is from Imperial sources?—Yes; we feel that there are many Boards of Guardians in the country, such as those you find in Meath and elsewhere, who get very large contributions, and are able to make the rates very small because of them. There are some Boards of Guardians, I think, in the Co. Meath, whose rates don't amount to more than 9d. or 10d. in the £.

23519. For Poor Law purposes much less?—And I think there should be some adjustment of those contributions.

23520. You are not going into any particulars about the readjustment of the grant?—No; I merely speak generally that I think there ought to be some readjustment.

23521. The grants that are given to unions now towards payments of salaries, that these should be apportioned; on what grounds?—I have not yet had time to study the subject, but I think that there are many unions in the country—the Belmullet—where a rate of 1d. in the £ only produces 24s.; 1d. in Belmullet would produce 25,000, for they have a million and a quarter valuation.

23522. Was your idea rather that the very poor unions, such as Belmullet, should have a contribution based on their necessity and poverty?—I agree entirely, because there are some of these unions, as you know, that could entirely do without any contribution whatever from Imperial sources.

23523. They would not admit that themselves?—No, of course not, human nature being what it is; but I think the contributions ought to be based on the necessity of the district, and not upon any other artificial basis such as valuations.

23524. Or even expenditure?—Yes. I have in my mind a certain union that I won't mention where a rate, I think, of 9d. in the £ suffices for all their expenditures. I do not think they ought to get the contributions from Imperial sources that they are now enjoying.

23525. Based on their expenditure or any other test?—Necessity, as you said a while ago, ought to be the basis.

23526. Are you aware, from your own knowledge of county government here, in Mayo, that some of the Poor Law unions are unable to meet such expenditure as is considered necessary by their advisers, in the interests of humanity, to bring the hospital up to the proper level—that they are prevented owing to their inability to raise a sufficient rate. A union that can only raise 24s by putting a rate on of 1d. in the £ cannot bring its hospital up to modern ideas of fitness. Are you aware from your own knowledge and observation in county government, that some of the western unions in Mayo are unable to spend enough to bring the hospitals up to the proper standard?—I must confess frankly I have not had anything to do with questions of that kind. I have never been a member of a Poor Law Board, so I don't think I could answer that question. Of course, generally speaking, I know that want of funds has been a great drawback in all these cases. I would like to say, too, that I think that something ought to be done to bring what I may call the tramp nuisance to an end; that is a matter that might be dealt with very effectively by administration or legislation.

23527. What legislation do you think might be asked for?—I am firmly convinced that this tramp nuisance is the greatest nuisance we have in the country, and I, myself, would be in favour of refusing admission to any tramp to the workhouse.

Mr. Conor O'Keefe.

Oct. 4, 1895.

Mr. Chase
O'Kelly.

23523. That is abolishing the tramp or casual ward?

—Entirely.

23524. Then what would you do with him?—I confess I would not have a single tramp go into the workhouse.

23525. They would still tramp about?—Let them tramp.

23526. Would you let them tramp?—I would, of course.

23527. Would you not be rather afraid that the people in the country districts would be unpleasantly visited by these men, burning houses and haystacks?—I would face all that; I have considered that question extremely carefully, and I think the tramps might be allowed to look after themselves. It is a terrible nuisance that these men should go from town to town and have splendid lodgings and splendid attendance.

23528. They don't give them up to the standard of the other inmates; they don't treat them as well?—But I don't think the tramps have any claim on our philanthropy.

23529. I am not standing up for tramps at all; I am rather surprised you are so gentle; if you let them go the road, I am afraid they will go the road?—Let them go the road.

23530. Do you think that is desirable in the interests of the country, that they should be levying their contributions as they go along?—I would let them take their chances.

23531. They are quite willing to do that, because there are a great many parts of the country where there are only workhouses at long intervals, and still they go there?—I have seen these men on the Continent and in America.

23532. A gentleman from Ballina mentioned Belgium. There they put them into a labour colony, a workhouse with land attached, and the idea is that the inmates should be, as far as possible, self-supporting; eat what they produce, and be clothed with what they make, and so on?—I think the tramp system is a reproach. I have had occasion as a magistrate to deal with many of these tramps, and I always send them to jail whenever I find them. But I think this tramp question ought to be settled in a very drastic way; I would not really have a tramp in the workhouse, if I could help it.

23533. You would close the casual ward?—I would close it entirely. A friend of mine, Mr. Daly, and the best way to deal with tramps is to deal with them under the Vagrancy Act. I don't know how far I could agree with him in that. Now, I only want to say one or two words more with regard to the asylum grants. Suppose we closed some of our workhouses. A suggestion has been made that we might turn some of them into an auxiliary asylum. The great objection we have in Mayo to an auxiliary asylum is that we would not be able to get the grant of 4s. that we get in the regular asylum; we only get 2s. in the other. If we could impress on the Government the necessity of giving us the 4s. for the auxiliary asylum I think there would be no difficulty.

23534. You would then prefer the auxiliary asylum?

—It would cost us a lot less.

23535. You can tell me, perhaps, what is the present accommodation of the asylum?—We are expending in this county something like £28,000 or £30,000 in the way of the asylum.

23536. That will give accommodation for how many hundreds extra?

Mr. James Daly.—About 120 extra.

23537. Would that be sufficient for all the requirements?—I think that will be sufficient for our present needs, but at the alarming rate of increase in lunacy I am afraid that soon we will have to make another expenditure.

23538. Would you, in that event, prefer an auxiliary asylum to a further extension of the county asylum?—Our asylum is a very splendid building, and any addition we make to it must be uniform with the general structure of the building; but if we could get from the Government the 4s. capitation grant that we get now for the regular asylum we would be pleased to have an auxiliary asylum, but, as you know, we cannot get more than 2s.

23539. You would be in favour of amending the law so as to enable the Government to pay 4s. to both institutions alike?—Quite so.

After an adjournment for lunch.

Mr. Davis.—You were asking me what additional numbers the new buildings would accommodate in the asylum. The official figure is 250, and the present number is 736. It was contemplated to take in all the lunatics from the unions.

23540. CHAIRMAN.—Then it was not contemplated that there would be any necessity for further accommodation for a long time?

Mr. Davis.—No, it was not.

Mr. JOHN WALSH, Chairman.

23541. CHAIRMAN.—What is the view of your Board of Guardians?—You have a copy of the report.

23542. Are any of the dysentery nominated to attend here?—Yes, Father McDonald, and Father Kelly.

23543. You think two of the existing unions might be broken up?—Yes, that is the opinion of our Board of Guardians.

23544. What part of the union do you represent?—I represent a rural division, Silverman, six miles from Westport on the Clifden side.

23545. Do you reside there?—I live in Westport.

23546. There are no more unions which could be broken up so far as you know?—That is the opinion of our Board.

23547. Do you think any additional accommodation for the sick is necessary in the Westport Union?—I don't believe there is.

23548. You heard the evidence this morning about the dysentery?—I did.

23549. You think places like Dagh are recommended?—In my opinion there is no more accommodation required.

23550. How far is Achill Sound from Westport by road?—Twenty Irish miles.

23551. Then on to Dagh?—About fourteen.

23552. Thirty-four Irish miles—do you think there is no hospital accommodation requisite for people thirty-four miles from a hospital?—I don't think there is; it has worked well in the past, and I believe it will do so in the future.

23553. You know at one time there was only one dispensary doctor in all Mayo—do you think it was desirable to increase the number of dispensary doctors then?—Well, I believe it was.

Westport Union, examined.

23554. You would not propose to go back to the old state of things then?—I would not wish it.

23555. At one time there was only one hospital for Mayo; that was not sufficient; there were no complaints then very likely?—The more hospitals we have the more complaints we have.

23556. The more diseases you have?—No, the more anxiety for hospitals.

23557. If Belmullet was amalgamated with Ballina, would that be too far to take the sick?—I don't think so.

23558. Do you think it would be fair to take sick people such an enormous distance?—If the hospital was retained in Belmullet I don't believe it would be any hardship.

23559. Then you would keep the hospital?—Oh, certainly, in Belmullet.

23560. Taking everything into consideration, your colleagues on the Board of Guardians were of opinion that it would be better not to dissolve Belmullet?—They were of that opinion.

23561. You would only break up the two workhouses, Castlebar and Killybegs—what would you do with the Castlebar Workhouse if closed for poor-law purposes?—I don't believe it would be required for an auxiliary asylum; they have sufficient accommodation; it could be used for a technical school or something connected with that.

23562. And Killybegs?—That is not within my district; I don't know much about Killybegs.

23563. You say, referring to boarding out, "This can only be recommended in the case of children under fifteen years of age, it has always been held that the surroundings and associations of the union workhouse are not calculated to improve the moral condition of children of a tender age; if not boarded out they could be sent to industrial schools, or better still to a central institution especially established for them?"—The Board of Guardians are in favour of boarding out, and not sending these children to any central institution, because they are of opinion that if these children want to get on in the world they must go out into the country, and get the habits of the country people. We have adopted it already.

Mr. John

23564. What is your view about the question of charabancs, union-at-large or electoral division?—Electoral division; that is the opinion of the majority of the Guardians.

23565. Is that your personal opinion as town guardians?—I represent a country division.

23566. But you pay rates in the town?—I do; I am in favour of the electoral division charge.

23567. Is that the general view of your Board of Guardians?—There were one or two dissentients.

Mr. Davis.—The town of Westport would benefit by divisional rating as to out-door relief, they pay so much rates on buildings that if they get the share of the expenditure on out-door relief I believe it would be beneficial to the town.

23568. That is unusual, but I see how you explain it. And all the insane should be removed out of the workhouse?—Yes.

23569. You think that any legislative changes in the direction of improving the condition of the aged and infirm should be in the direction of old age pensions?—Yes, the Board is of that opinion.

23570. What do you think about getting people to pay something for their maintenance in the hospital?—It is very difficult to get people to pay for their maintenance in the hospital; some may be able to pay, but it is very hard to draw the line in a poor district like ours; there may be some, but it is very rare, and the Guardians in all cases when they see they can make a person pay without injury to themselves they do so.

23571. The only other point is as regards tramps?—Certainly, they are a great nuisance, but still they must get accommodation. There are a section of those that are very deserving people that go about through no fault of their own.

23572. You would not call those tramps?—I would not, and I believe they should be accommodated.

23573. People who have no intention of earning anything but simply walk about from place to place as a means of livelihood, putting up at workhouses and then getting donations of food and money from people in that way?—I would get the labour test applied to them.

23574. If necessary, would you bring them before a magistrate and commit them to a place of detention?—I would be very slow in doing that.

23575. How would you get them to work?—The master in all cases gets them to break a box of stones.

Mr. CHARLES McDONNELL, r.s.d., examined.

The principal point is out-door relief; I am one of those who are in favour of divisional rating. When things are on a union rate Guardians take very little interest in out-door relief in keeping it down, because they consider it is everybody's business, and in the result it becomes nobody's business. Some time ago Westport Union was amalgamated with Westport with the result that Westport came under a terrible liability, because when the rates in Westport were only 1s. 12d., Achill used to pay 5s. 10d. in the £.

23576. It was 5s. at the time of the amalgamation. Witness.—And for that reason the majority of the Board are very much in favour of divisional rating.

23577. CHAIRMAN.—You see the hardship of making a very poor district support its own poor altogether?—Taking the divisions by themselves, there are not a great many on out-door relief, but when you come to the whole side of the country ten square miles it comes a very heavy thing for another part of the union to have to pay for them.

23578. You would like to go back to electoral rating for out-door relief, or for all purposes?—For all purposes.

23579. Is there anything else now?—Then as regards the union charges, of course the out-door relief is a very large charge, but at the same time it is very small compared with union charges; for instance, in Westport there are over 350 on out-door relief; the amount is about £20 or a little over in the week, whereas in the union we have 155, and it costs nearly £40 a week taking all charges into consideration.

23580. What class of people get relief in the town?—Practically speaking, in the town the little out-door relief they get half of it goes to their lodgings or rent.

23581. About how much would a single person get there?—3s.

23582. And for two?—1s. 6d.; of course if there were any children there is generally 1s. extra for children, so that really out-door relief is only a small item compared with indoor. As regards tramps, I believe in some parts of England there is a permit given to certain deserving tramps by magistrates who know them to be artisans in search of work.

23583. At all events it is given there?—I believe it is in the North of England, and the result is that people get relief for the night who really deserve it. As regards tramps, I think the Vagrancy Act could be applied in their case; we have them in Westport coming round every three months.

23584. These would not be musicians?—Oh, no, sir.

23585. You would not shut out musicians?—Oh, no; they come from Castlebar to Westport, and by Letterkenny to Galway.

23586. Dr. BIGGER.—Do you know if there is any necessity for increased hospital accommodation for Achill?—No, sir, I don't believe it; they go down to Achill Sound in twenty minutes from Westport by rail.

CHAIRMAN.—That would have to be an extra special, but anyway it is a very big bag.

Mr. Davis.—It is sixty minutes.

Witness.—The farthest point from Achill Sound is fourteen miles.

23587. Dr. BIGGER.—Have you known any patient being admitted to the Westport Workhouse or Hospital from Dagh or Kesh?—Yes; they were brought up by the relieving officer, three for the last year.

23588. What is the population of the whole district? 5,000.

23589. You don't know the population of the whole union?

Mr. J. Walsh.—34,578.

23590. Dr. BIGGER.—Then from that district, which has more than a sixth of the population, there were only three patients admitted to the workhouse last year.

Mr. Walsh.—And even that was the time of the smallpox.

23591. Dr. BIGGER.—That shows how few can avail themselves of the accommodation at Westport; would not that point to the necessity of having some accommodation for these people?—The present system is a great improvement on what it was some ten years ago when they used to come up in a cart.

Mr. Walsh.—They prefer to get 1s. a week in their own place, and remain there, those old people, than come to the workhouse.

23592. Dr. BIGGER.—Are there many on out-door relief?—350.

Mr. Walsh.—There are 294 cases on out-door relief in the union; 445 persons.

Witness.—Certainly, Achill is a poor district, but there are districts just as poor in the Westport Union. Louisburgh is very poor, and also Aghaveer.

23593. Do they avail themselves much of the accommodation at Westport?—They do when sick; we have an ambulance.

23594. Is it not a long distance to some?—Some nine or ten miles.

23595. Is there not a large district beyond Louisburgh?—Sundarra is twenty-three miles.

Mr. Walsh.—We had a number of typhus fever cases from that district; I don't think there are many medical cases; they get treated by the dispensary doctor.

Mr. Davis.—We had sixteen from Dundarra recently in the hospital.

23596. Dr. BIGGER.—Are the people in Westport content with being treated by doctors in their own homes?—They go into the hospital.

23597. Would you allow these people the same privilege as the Westport people?

Mr. Walsh.—If there is a dangerous case we send a nurse from the workhouse; had cases that could not be removed.

Oct. 4, 1904.

Mr. Charles
McDonnell.

Witness.—In a case that has been reported by the relieving officer there is always a man sent down from Westport.

23502. That does not get rid of the fact of the few that come from these out of the way places compared with the large number that come into the hospital from Westport?—Certainly, a good many come from the country districts.

23503. You said it was got fair that a poor district should be put on the union, and made a union-at-large charge; would it not be much heavier to leave that district to pay for its own relief?—The relief in my opinion is allowed, and if they had to pay for their own out-door relief they would be none within bounds.

23504. It strikes me you get more rates from Achill for the support of Westport than the Westport people contribute themselves?—Oh, no; the valuation of Achill is very low indeed.

23505. It looks as if Achill was supporting Westport?—Not at all; if you take what Achill was paying and what it is paying now as a union-at-large charge.

23506. But still the Achill people don't evidently get a return for their rates?—They get it as out-door relief in my point.

23507. I have heard that they don't get more than 55 or 65 a year out of it?—Oh, no, sir; it is nearly 24 a week.

23508. What is the total out-door relief for the whole of the Westport Union?

Mr. Walsh.—21,177.

23509. CHAIRMAN.—That is over £20 a week! Mr. DONA.—In the Westport Hospital there is a loss proportion from the town of Westport than from any other division of the union.

Witness.—Between 24 and 25 a week is expended in out-door relief in Achill.

23510. Dr. RIGGON.—That may be, but I am talking of hospital accommodation, and I see the people of Achill get very little benefit from the hospital in Westport?—As much as they require.

23511. I would not say that, because they don't come to it?—If there is a case of anyone sick it is reported; it is open to all.

23512. The distances are so great. How many trains a day are there to Achill Sound?—Three.

23513. CHAIRMAN.—If you were told that the sick in Westport should in future go to Clonsilla where would you think of that?—If it was a matter of necessity they would have to go; if Westport could not support them it would be another matter.

23514. Do you think it would be a hardship on the sick of Westport?—Well, really, I don't think so in these days of train accommodation.

23515. Supposing they could not go by train, broken legs, &c.?—Then they could have the ambulance.

23516. Then would you think it would be a hardship on the sick of Westport to have to go to Clonsilla? The distance from Keel to Westport is as far as from Ballyhaunis to Westport; I would think it a hardship to go to Clonsilla.

Mr. PATRICK O'DWY, P.L.C., examined.

Mr. Patrick
O'Dwyer.

23517. CHAIRMAN.—You come from Louisburgh district?—Yes.

23518. Do you think the sick in Louisburgh go to the workhouse in sufficient numbers—that there are sufficient cases?—Any of them that are very sick come to the infirmary in Castlebar rather than the workhouse.

23519. These would be farmers' children?—Yes, decent people don't like going into the workhouse.

23520. Does that apply to the country west of Louisburgh?—Oh, yes, several miles behind Louisburgh.

23521. These would be people that could afford to take a seat on a mail car and to go Westport?—Yes, and employ a car and get home.

23522. Now the destitute, who would not have the price of a car or cart, and would be too sick to go by mail car?—The ambulance is always sent for them.

23523. Of course there is a fairly big population out west of Louisburgh?—There is.

23524. Do many of these people go to Westport?—Very few.

23525. Why is that?—They are treated at home.

23526. They prefer that?—Oh, they do, and in a case like that the doctor gives them extra relief when they are poor, extra out-door relief, and they are better off and they prefer staying at home.

23527. You have property yourself in the Tully district?—Yes.

23528. How many miles is that from Louisburgh?—Five miles.

23529. That has a thick population?—Yes.

23530. From that into Louisburgh is all a fairly thickly populated country?—It is; there are five or six villages there belonging to me and they are thickly populated.

23531. What do the people of those villages do when sick?—When they are sick, which is very seldom, they get extra out-door relief; the doctor attends to them, and their friends take care of them; I never knew one of them to go into the workhouse.

23532. I suppose that is the objection on their part to go to a place that is known as a workhouse?—No doubt of it; but at the same time no matter what it would be, they would rather stay at home to be attended by their friends and the doctor, the doctor giving them the necessary treatment and relief.

23533. So that, practically, these people out west of Louisburgh do not call much on the workhouse hospital?—They do not, nor on relief either; there is only one man on out-door relief in the division, and he is blind, and he was not on the relief until he got blind. Although it is thickly populated, there were never any people on out-door relief or in the workhouse either; they are neighbourly and help each other.

23534. There are a number of people going about through these parishes that put up one night at one person's house and another night at another's?—Very few.

23535. But still anyone that is in need there is enough neighbourly feeling to help them?—They are never left out in the cold.

23536. There are very few of them that have to make for the workhouse?—Oh, never; poor people are very charitable; they would give a bed or supper to any poor person that would be going, but they are very few indeed.

23537. Mr. MURKIN.—You say the people in your neighbourhood are fairly well-to-do, and come into the infirmary when they are sick?—They do.

23538. Do the poor come into the infirmary?—They do, if they are very sick; if they are very unwell; if they consider they can get better treatment in the infirmary than at home they come to the infirmary. Some of them consider they would get better care at the infirmary than at home.

23539. CHAIRMAN.—It is the custom of your neighbourhood to come to the infirmary rather than to the workhouse?—Oh, yes; I scarcely ever knew one of them going into the hospital except people who were very unwell, and the Guardians would send the ambulance for them; they are poor people.

23540. Was there any other matter you would like to refer to?—I would be for amalgamation of unions.

23541. Have you thought what workhouses you would close?—My experience about amalgamation is this. I am, perhaps, thirty years a Guardian, and the amalgamation of the Newport and Westport Unions—the Newport Union was bankrupt at the time, the Government several times had to come to its assistance, and the majority of the Westport Guardians were against taking over the Newport Union. The Local Government Board connected the two unions, whether they liked or not; I must say I was not opposed to it.

23542. There were only six miles between the two?—Although the Newport Union was very poor and the rates very high the consequence to Westport was that the average rate when the two Unions were amalgamated was lower by 8d. in the £, so that Westport, in fact, benefited by the amalgamation, although Newport was very poor.

23543. Mr. MURKIN.—Did Newport lose anything in the transaction?—It gained by it.

23544. Were the sick inconvenienced?—Oh, no; they were not at all inconvenienced.

23545. So the saving was due to the reduction in the staff?—They have a very good ambulance and a very good staff at Westport for taking in sick people, and the ambulance is sent any distance, to Mahon or Achill if necessary.

23546. Would you not like to see amalgamation extended a little?—I would, but not in that direction; the furthest part of the union, Ballyvaughan, is thirty-three Irish miles from Westport. If you take Achill, Keel is thirty or thirty-two Irish miles from Westport, and being mountainous country, I would not like to see the Westport Union extended to that country any further.

23647. CHAIRMAN.—Would you like to take in Castlebar?—We will take as much of Castlebar as you like. The farthest part of the Castlebar Union from Westport is only twenty Irish miles.

23648. You feel quite equal to take in Castlebar?—Oh, certainly.

23649. What do you think about Ballinrobe?—Ballinrobe comes towards Westport; the side that is on the west of Lough Mask I don't think there could be any objection to take in a portion of that; Oughan is in the Ballinrobe Union, and is only five miles from Westport.

23650. TOWNMAYOR.—Well, that is only fourteen miles; I don't think there could be any objection to take in that; I would like to say one word about out-door relief; there are a great deal of abuses connected with it at present, but I must say it is not abused in the west, the Lough Mask direction, for the relief there is very small, not more than £2 10s. 6d. a week; it is a large district and a poor district, while in the other portions of the union the out-door relief is £23 10s.; I think it would be very prudent for out-door relief, and only for out-door relief, to have it a divisional charge, and then the Guardians in that case would take and look after it, and I would be certainly, instead of sending people to the workhouse, I would be far liberally giving them out-door relief.

23651. That is, if you had some security that it would not be unduly expended?—Certainly.

23652. Can you think of any other direction for general expenditure except making it a local charge?—There is no other in my neighbourhood; if there is any abuse I take good care to speak to the relieving officer and prevent it, but I know nothing about Newport or Westport and those places. If there was divisional relief for out-door relief the Guardians of every district would look after it, and I would be for giving liberal out-door relief in the case of sickness or poverty, but I would much rather there was no amalgamation if there is not a divisional charge for out-door relief.

Mr JOHN B. LECHE, R.S., examined.

I agree with the report of the Westport Committee, and I would also suggest going back to divisional rating for the purpose of preventing existing abuses.

23653. CHAIRMAN.—You think there are some cases in which people get out-door relief now that they would not get if it was divisional rating?—Yes.

23654. You think that would not cause hardship?—I don't think it would; the Guardians from rural districts have no opportunity of checking the granting of out-door relief at present.

23655. You think the town Guardians are rather too generous at your expense?—I think so.

23656. About the breaking up of unions—do you think it would be sufficient to break up two unions in the county, or do you think even more might be broken up?—I think four unions would be sufficient in the county.

23657. Do you suggest what four should be broken up?—I think Westport should be retained naturally, and Ballina should be retained, and either Claremorris or Swinford; it would be optional whether Ballinacorney should be retained or not on account of its distance from any centre.

23658. It would want a hospital there?—In the event of its being amalgamated.

23660. Would you diminish it by giving them a little local hospital at a small expense, say a hospital at Achill Sound, where there would be a few beds?—I would be in favour of a cottage hospital in Achill, but not to have a nurse there; to have it looked after by the dispensary doctor, and in the event of a patient being there to send a nurse from the district hospital as required.

23661. But if you found there was never a day in the year in which there were not a number of patients?—You would want to keep a nurse then.

23662. You are familiar, of course, with the country west of Westport?—Yes.

23663. You think a further extension would only lead to?—To abuse.

23664. An expenditure that could not be checked?—That is my view; there is so much talk about tramps.

23665. You have not a great many on your side?—No, but they are in the Westport Union; there is no doubt there is an abuse, but at the same time I would rather bear with the abuse ten times over than that one man would be left out in the cold.

23667. Do you think some means could not be devised of finding out who were deserving. Suppose a man being in Galway—here you are going to have big harbour works in Westport—supposing a number of men came along with documents from some respectable person certifying that these were labouring men coming in search of work, they would present that at Clifton or Cloughward, whichever they came by, and got a card on the way until they came to Westport?—That would be a very prudent thing.

23668. Do you think that would be an unreasonable thing to require wayfarers to provide themselves with if they are going to be put up at the public expense?—I think it would be very reasonable.

23669. Any man who had not a sufficient explanation when he was walking about without money in his pocket and seeking relief, do you think it would be advisable to put him into some place where he would be made to work?—With these people who are making a trade of it I think it would be very prudent to put them into places and let them work, but I would refuse no man shelter whether he was good or bad; I would refuse none.

23670. If he was a lazy fellow you would put him where he was obliged to work?—Certainly, but I would refuse no man a night's shelter.

Mr. WALSH.—For the past three years the Guardians have expended over £500 on Westport Hospital.

23671. There is a large country there that is very populous—do you think any little cheap hospital out there might be advantageous?—I don't think so; I have heard no complaints from that district about the present arrangements.

23672. Do you think that lunatics ought to be maintained in workhouses?—No.

23673. You would move those?—To a central asylum, and in the event of Castlebar being abolished I think the workhouse could be very well used as an auxiliary asylum for harmless lunatics.

23674. Would you agree with those who say that wherever a workhouse is closed it would be desirable to keep up hospital accommodation?—Not on a large scale.

23675. Not on a large scale, certainly, but for the acutely sick?—Certainly.

23676. In Castlebar do you think the infirmary would be sought?—Quite sufficient.

23677. Is not the infirmary pretty full always?—I don't think so.

23678. It seemed to me the other day to be unusually full for a County Infirmary?—Then I would add to the infirmary rather than have two staffs.

23679. Or, perhaps, make a new one?—Yes; transfer the infirmary to the workhouse.

23680. But a place like Swinford where there is such a very thick population, you think they ought to have a hospital there in their midst?—I think so.

23681. And similarly Claremorris?—It is such a central district I don't think they require one there.

23682. But you can never send the acutely sick by train?—I would keep a small hospital with a very small staff.

23683. And Ballina is a town which would always require a hospital?—Yes.

23684. Ballinrobe?—Ballinrobe could be done away with, but keep the hospital.

23685. As regards paying patients, would you be in favour of Boards of Guardians getting discretionary powers to charge such cases as they thought people could afford to pay?—I would; I think they would use their discretion.

Oct. 4, 1905.

Mr. Patrick O'Donnell.

Mr. John B. Leche.

Oct. 4, 1904.
Mr. John B.
Loshin.

23665. Up to the full cost of maintenance?—Yes.
23667. Have you any special views about tramps?—
I think the labour test should be applied in every case.

23668. In the workhouse, or in what is commonly called a labour colony?—I would not have a labour colony; I would apply the labour test in the workhouse, and bring them before a magistrate where they refused to work.

23669. You know the difficulty of keeping a large number of different classes in a building such as we now have in a workhouse. It is found by experience to be desirable to have as few classes as possible in the same building?—We don't have many of that class in this part of the country.

23670. Still you have some, and not desirable people?—Quite we call undesirable.

23671. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you not think it would be well to have a workhouse, for instance, in the provinces where men who say they cannot find work should have the excess taken away from them, and could no longer say it, because if they went there they would get employment?—I have never considered the question from that point of view.

23672. It has been suggested that there ought to be established, perhaps in the provinces, a workhouse where those who wanted work could get it, and those who tramped about the country could be sent there and make work, giving them some small remuneration for the work they did?—I think that is a good suggestion.

23673. You have heard that, theoretically, people are very much opposed to the workhouse?—Yes.

23674. But when inquiry is made as to what workhouses should be closed the people of the locality object, and say their workhouse is needed. What would you think of this method of arranging the system—suppose the children were taken out of the workhouse and boarded out as far as possible, the lunatics and imbeciles sent to a suitable institution, and the house closed altogether against mothers of infants, sending them instead to a religious institution for reformatory purposes, managed by sisters or ladies belonging to their own denomination, and all the classes taken out of the workhouse except the old and infirm; do you not think for the County Mayo one workhouse for that class would be enough?—Yes, if you adopt that course.

23675. You would not have over 250 or 300 of that class in the whole County of Mayo, and by that method of separation and distribution you would get the various classes sent to places where each of them could be better looked after and taken care of?—
Provided these institutions were confined within the county or province.

23676. You could hardly do that in regard to the mothers of infants, because they are not likely to have an institution in each county that would take them, but you could keep the children in the county by boarding them out in farmers' houses and have the aged and infirm in one institution to which there would be attached an infirmary where, if they get sick, they could be looked after and cared for?—I think that would be a very good suggestion.

23677. And then by a prudent extension of out-door relief the people could be kept in their own locality as far as the Guardians would think it wise to keep them, provided proper safeguards should be established, such as that of divisional rating, which is one of the greatest safeguards?—I think no reform would be workable unless you adopt divisional rating.

23678. It has been suggested by some that, in addition to the divisional rating, it should also be necessary for two-thirds of the Guardians present to vote in favour of an application for out-door relief; would that additional test be required?—I don't think so;

you would have the friends of those seeking relief going round canvassing; I think divisional rating would be sufficient.

23679. You think there would not be any great difficulty in carrying out the suggestion if informants were kept where they are at present?—It is a scheme that would require a great deal of consideration, and I have not considered it.

23700. Many witnesses have spoken in favour of it?—
It is a question that would require longer consideration than I have given to it.

23701. Still you believe the children ought to be kept out of the workhouse?—They ought to be boarded out.

23702. And you think the lunatics and imbeciles and tramps ought to be kept out of the house?—I did not say I would keep the tramps out.

23703. I thought you approved of a workhouse in which they could be made to work?—That was your suggestion; I have not considered it sufficiently.

23704. Would you not keep the aged and infirm all together, where the name of a workhouse would no longer exist?—That would be a very good idea.

23705. I just threw it out because some witnesses have mentioned it?—It seems very good, but in the event of amalgamation I don't think it would be as all desirable unless you abolish union rating. In the event of amalgamation one member for each electoral division would be sufficient; if you amalgamated two existing unions the Board would become unwieldy.

23706. Do you not think it would be better to retain the local body to administer relief as at present looking after its own interests?—That would be a very good idea.

23707. Leaving the local body to look after the affairs of its own locality and raise money for it, and pay the money for it?—Yes.

23708. And retain the administration as at present as far as possible?—Retaining it as you suggest, I would withdraw my suggestion about limiting the representation.

23709. I am only putting before you what has been suggested by other witnesses. Do you think Achill is well enough off for the sick?—A cottage hospital, as I said, in charge of the dispensary doctor, would be sufficient for Achill.

23710. And one witness has suggested that instead of having the infirmary at Killala, it should be at Ballycastle?—I don't know the district; I would be slow to offer an opinion.

23711. Killala is so near the neighbouring infirmary in Ballina perhaps one hospital would accommodate both?—We in Westport take very little interest in Killala or Ballina.

23712. You don't know much about that district?—
No.

23713. You would not go as far as to say that tramps should be compelled to go to a labour colony for a time?—
I would not be against it; but my suggestion would be to apply the labour test, and in case they did not work to bring them before a magistrate.

23714. And have them confined for a stated period?—
Yes.

23715. Dr. BROOKS.—You appear to be very much in favour of electoral division rating?—I am.

23716. That is for all purposes or for out-door relief —For all purposes.

23717. Some witnesses have proposed that it should be only for out-door relief?—I think it should be for all purposes.

23718. CHAIRMAN.—There are some charges that necessarily must be upon-at-large, such as officers' salaries?—I understand but for the administration of the poor-law generally. I think it would be well—

23719. You would localise charges as much as possible?—As much as possible.

Rev. M. MacDONALD, Adm., examined.

Rev. M.
MacDONALD.

23720. CHAIRMAN.—You are at present administrator of Westport?—Yes.

23721. You are aware of the recommendations of the Guardians?—Yes.

23722. I think if you would give us in your own words anything that occurs to you to say on these?—
I would point out first of all that Westport Union as it stands embraces two unions, Newport and Westport, and it embraces more than a quarter of the whole county of Mayo; I think that that being so, it would be rash to interfere with the Westport Union.

23723. You think provision ought to remain at Westport for the sick and all classes that could be treated beneficially by the Poor Law?—I think that. I was listening to some statements made about Achill and other places; I frequently go among the inmates of the workhouse, and one of the questions I ask is,

"Where are you from?" Of course I don't take note of it, but I am speaking generally, and I should say every fourth person in Westport would be from Achill; it would seem to me that the explanation is this—that when people come from Achill they come to stay; I should say that the same or nearly the same applies to Loughshinny. When they come they come from old age, and to spend the remainder of their days there; and there are many from Loughborough and very many from Achill in the Westport Union at present.

23724. Old people with no one left to support them?—Yes, and people who may be an incumbrance on the young people at home, and think they would be more comfortable in the workhouse.

23725. But you don't most many coming in to be cured of some disease, and going back again?—Sometimes; I should not say many, and I believe in regard to that that if this hospital you speak of were in Achill I think the same complaint would be of Achill that the gentlemen to your left found with Westport a while ago, that is the gradually in the hospital would bring in many people to the hospital at Achill who would stay away if they had to come to Westport; I rather think they would go in for lighter cases. But if it was divisional rating, and Achill was made to pay for it, I don't think any of the Guardians would object to it, but otherwise a hospital at Achill would be expensive.

23726. Might not the Achill people say, "We will agree to that if you make the Westport Hospital a district charge for the district round Westport?"—I don't think the Westport people would have any objection to that; we have Loughborough and Aghagower in the Westport hospital as it stands at present; I think Westport suffer rather than gain anything.

23727. Still, of course, if people are seriously ill they could not travel such a long distance as thirty or forty miles?—I would suggest if there was an ambulance van at Loughborough and one at Newport or Millinaw, or the Sound of Achill, it would be a convenience; I think that would be a kindness shown to the sick poor of this district, and I think it would be sufficient.

23728. It might be as cheap to get a small cottage hospital?—One that I can offer to opinion.

23729. It would simply mean getting a trap and leaving it there in the care of a man who has a horse of his own who would be paid so much as the common steeple.

23730. If it were made a local charge, would you be in favour of letting people have their hospital locally, say for Achill and for the Loughborough West district?—I would, but I don't think the people in those particular districts would like a hospital located in Loughborough or Achill if made a local charge; it would be very burdensome. If they had it at the union-at-large cost it would be very pleasant then.

23731. You have heard Mr. Murnaghan's questions to Mr. Louden just now about getting the various classes out of the workhouse and putting them as far as possible by themselves?—There was one remark there I would not agree with—that is taking children away and sending them to a central home; that presupposes the consent of their parents is got; if the consent is not got it is the breaking up of a family. Let me take the case of a widow who when the head-winter dies is bound to go into the home herself and two or three children; it would be a great hardship to take the children from her.

Mr. PATRICK JENNINGS, Chairman, Ballinrobe Union, examined.

23732. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Ballinrobe Board of Guardians?—Yes.

23733. You think that Castlebar and Killybegs might be broken up?—Yes.

23734. And you would convert Castlebar into an auxiliary asylum if necessary?—Yes.

23735. And the other you would have as a school, if required?—Yes.

23736. You don't know the buildings of Killybegs?—No.

23737. You are not aware that they would not be suitable for a school. The next recommendation you make is that you should return to electoral division rating?—Yes.

23738. Are you all in favour of that?—All in favour of that.

23739. The town of Ballinrobe included?—Yes.

23740. With regard to the county infirmary you express the opinion that each union in the county should pay for the maintenance of its own patients in the county infirmary and district asylum?—Yes.

23741. Would not that be a proper case for out-door relief?—I should think so, but you find such cases in the workhouse.

23742. Don't you think it is a mistake to have them in the workhouse?—I would think so.

23744. CHAIRMAN.—That is one of the subjects on which we have received a great deal of evidence, and the purport of that evidence is to impress us with the importance of setting aside some institution, a diseased workhouse, according to the requirements of the locality?—One for a county; I am not five years in Westport, and I know myself where there are five members of a family stretched one after another by that disease; I know other instances of four and other instances of three. I mention that to show how prevalent it is, and how necessary it is to have some provision made for these poor people.

23745. Of course you are aware that it is only recently that consumption has been found to be infectious?—Yes, and I am aware there are medical gentlemen up to the present day who deny that it is infectious.

23746. Dr. BROWNE.—From your knowledge you have no doubt in your own mind that it is contagious?—I have seen it; it has been abundantly proved to me.

23747. Can you remember any case where you believe it was contracted in the hospital?—I can. The case I mentioned a while ago of the boy who came in with a broken leg and in whose family there was never consumption before.

23748. Did he take consumption after being in hospital?—After being in the hospital, and the assumption is that he took it there and brought it home to his family.

23749. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose there would not be the least doubt but that all the Boards of Guardians in the county will hail with delight any such proposal?—Oh, I think they would. We send poor fellows to Alladown and Wicklow, paying two or three guineas a week, who could be just as well treated at home.

23750. Dr. BROWNE.—Have you had much difficulty in getting patients into the National Hospital at Newcastle?—Yes; it does not seem that there is accommodation for the demand; I know cases where they had to go to other hospitals because they could not afford to wait for a vacancy at Newcastle.

23751. I suppose each union would also bear a share in the establishment charges?—Yes, sir, we are satisfied to do that.

23752. Pay a share of the establishment charges and so much a head for the patient?—Yes.

23753. You think the Government ought to contribute to the maintenance of lunatics, idiots, and epileptics in auxiliary asylums to the same extent that they do in district asylums?—Yes, sir.

23754. Now as regards the Vagrancy Act for tramps, you think that ought to be strictly enforced by law?—Yes.

23755. You have the law at present. Do you think the law ought to be changed in any way?—I do, with regard to the tramps. There should be a distinction made between the tramps—a professional tramp should be handed over to the police authorities, and those men tramping in search of work should be retained in the casual ward.

23756. You would give them their board and lodging without any imputation?—Yes; what we term professional tramps should be summarily dealt with by the police authorities.

23757. As regards pay wards, are you in favour of them?—Yes.

23758. What power would you give the Guardians—would you give them power to charge as much as they thought each person could pay. At present they have to pay the full average cost of maintenance; you cannot get that from a great many people. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians discretion to charge as much as they thought the people could pay, up to the full cost?—I would. There are other witnesses to give evidence, and I think I have answered all the queries.

Mr Thomas Branghly.

Mr. Thomas HERAGHTY, E.L.C., examined.

23759. CHAIRMAN.—I have read out the answers to the queries given; is there anything you would like to add yourself?—There is one thing certain, that so far as divisional ratings goes we are all unanimous for that, electoral division rating. I believe if that is carried out, it will reduce the rates by 30 per cent. in Ballinrobe.

23760. And you would be in favour of having all possible charges on the electoral division?—Electoral division; all charges the same as under the old Poor Law before the Local Government Act came into operation. I have been a Guardian for seventeen years of the Ballinrobe Board.

23761. When the rating was electoral divisional were you in favour of trying them rating or were you sorry when the change was made?—I was all in favour of electoral division. I know one division, Bessies, and in that the rate was only 7d. or 8d., and now the people feel the severe tax on them.

23762. How much have they to pay now?—I really don't exactly know; at all events, it is double what it was in those days. And another matter—I say, in Ballinrobe we are not in favour of amalgamating with another union; we have already a very extensive area, a large union; and furthermore, under the Local Government Act there has been a portion of the County Galway added to Ballinrobe, and that being so we are thoroughly well satisfied to keep it as we are.

23763. And you have a good and excellent hospital?—An excellent one, and an excellent medical officer.

23764. Mr. MURKIN.—If the hospital and medical officer were allowed to remain there could you not let away the aged and infirm and keep the hospital?—Oh, yes; those epileptic cases and harmless lunatics I certainly say should be removed, and I agree with what Father McDonald said with regard to these consumptive patients, that there should be some provision made for those also, because there is no mistake it is a terrible disease and contagious. I have experience of it; and people have been carried away that came into these hospitals. With regard to the children there should be something in the shape of an industrial school in some part of the county.

23765. CHAIRMAN.—Would you rather have that than put the children out with suitable people, who would take them and bring them up to be ordinary members of the community?—I have a doubt on that.

23766. You have not tried boarding-out much in Ballinrobe?—No; but I believe if there was a proper training school in some central part of the county for these children.

23767. What would you train them for these?—There could be a school got up for carpentry and tailoring.

23768. Do you think it is right, as the Swinford Board of Guardians say, to train the children of the weavers and strays to trade, that the small ratpayers could not put their children to?—Really, of course, that is a question; but no matter, they should get a proper training and be fitted for something in life.

23769. I suppose you have a good deal of need for agricultural labourers where you are?—Oh, yes.

23770. You often find it hard to get a man or boy?—Very hard at present.

23771. Do you think you could do much better for the children than make them agricultural labourers?—It would be very good.

23772. And could a better plan be adopted for making them agricultural labourers than boarding them out with small farmers who could make them handy and useful?—I quite agree with you.

23773. Mr. MURKIN.—You have a large number of children in the workhouse there—about thirty?—I don't suppose it amounts to more than that.

23774. If those thirty children were taken out, and also the imbeciles, you would not have very many left in Ballinrobe, and the expense per head would be higher even than it is at present, considering you would not get as much value for the money that you expended on the staff. Do you not think that if you had an infirmary there for the sick it would be a prudent thing for the Guardians to let their old and infirm go to some institution where they would be kept by themselves, and where they would have more comfort and freedom than at present?—My belief is that as far as Ballinrobe is concerned it would increase taxation there; I have so rarely doubt on my mind about that.

23775. If you reduce the staff it cannot increase the cost?—In my belief the larger the area the more the charge.

23776. Suppose the Ballinrobe Guardians had to look after the same extent of area?—We have six years of it now, and it is well suited; and I certainly say, with the authority of the Board, that taxation has gone up, and will go up, if this system is continued, but if we revert to the electoral division charges and it comes to a district charge the taxation will come down; there is no question about that. So far as the Guardians concerned in these eighteen districts it is everyone seeing in what he can and no one seeing.

23777b. The remuneration in no case would come up to as much as their salary, and it would come with their lives, and it would be an ongoing charge?—I know that; but I have seen unions almost bankrupt when Ballinrobe was sending very well and very low rated, and I see those people becoming almost as solvent, and the rate almost as low, as Ballinrobe, and so the people of Ballinrobe have cause to complain. There is another matter, too; we have a military barracks there. I have heard remarks made here that Ballinrobe could be done away with. I don't see any other place in the County Mayo such a fine healthy place. We have two barracks; and to fancy that the thing should be done away with is monstrous.

23778. You don't want a workhouse for that class?—But they want a hospital.

23779. I am speaking under the supposition that your hospital will remain as it is; it is always understood that in a large centre of population like Ballinrobe there should be accommodation, and suitable accommodation, for the sick; but having retained that and sent the children out and the lunatics and imbeciles, do you see any great objection to letting the infirm go to some central institution, where the Guardians of Ballinrobe could pay for their keep?—There are some able-bodied people in the house. If these people are taken and boarded with their friends the cost of them runs to 6s. 3d.

23780. CHAIRMAN.—You may put it at 5s. or 15s. a week; that is only for their food. It comes to 2s. or 3s. share of all the expenditure it comes to 2s. or 3s.

23781. Mr. MURKIN.—You would agree that there should be some institution for the consumptives?—I certainly do, most unhesitatingly. With regard to those tramps—

23782. CHAIRMAN.—You have a fair number of them in Ballinrobe?—Yes; they travel from Tass and Galway. I would not go as far as some of the witnesses, refusing them admission, certainly not; but those who are professional tramps they should, at all events, do some labour, and be kept there until they did some labour; but tradespeople who go in pursuit of labour and trade, these men should be licensed at once, and the law should be enforced against professional tramps.

23783. The difficulty is to find out which are professional tramps and which are not. Would you oblige a man honestly looking for work to carry some testimonials from his own district?—Exactly; that is a very good idea. Or from his late employer or parish priest.

23784. Some person who could be trusted?—Exactly.

Oct. 4, 1904.
Mr. Thomas
Brough.

Mr. PATRICK M'GINN, J.P., examined.

23785. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the Ballinrobe Guardians?—Yes.

23786. Do you agree generally with the Guardians, your colleagues, in the evidence they have given?—Yes. Mr. O'Dowd, in giving evidence for Westport, mentioned Craghan and Townshead. I must certainly take objection to that. No doubt we are nearer Westport than Ballinrobe, but we have a doctor at Cappaduff very close, and there is no doctor on the Westport side until you go to Westport.

23787. Supposing the Cappaduff doctor was put into the Westport Union also?—It could not be managed; Cappaduff extends into part of Galway.

23788. If the Westport Union were extended to the new county boundary that would take in the doctor?—Yes.

23789. If Mr. O'Dowd had his way what is there to prevent the whole of the County Mayo part west of Lough Mask going into Westport?—There is everything; there is a chain of mountains there, and if you wanted a doctor in it—23790. The doctor would be at the same place, Cappaduff?—He would be, coming towards Westport.

23791. He would be in the same place still, and get merely a different paymaster—to be paid from Westport?—Yes.

23792. That would not be any inconvenience?—Not as far as the sick poor are concerned.

23793. Where would the inconvenience be?—In the rating.

23794. There is a lower rate in Ballinrobe than Westport?—Yes.

23795. Are you resident on that side of the lake near Townshead?—Yes.

23796. How far have you sick to go to the hospital at Ballinrobe?—Fourteen Irish miles.

23797. Of course they cannot go by boat, except on a very fine day; they have to go round by Farry?—Yes.

23798. How far would it be to Westport?—It is only seven miles from where I live, but Townshead is a station.

23799. And unless there was some very strong reason indeed, you think it would not be fair to oblige your people to pay the extra rate of Westport, rather than the lower rate which they are accustomed to at Ballinrobe?—No.

Mr. P. W. JUDGE, J.P., Chairman, Clonsilla Union, examined.

My Board passed unanimously at a full meeting the following answers:—1st. We are in favour of amalgamation to a certain extent, where the workhouses are in close proximity.

23799. CHAIRMAN.—That is where they are near each other?—Yes. Secondly, where it can be shown that a saving of rates will be effected thereby.

23800. And the second answer is?—That the district workhouses be utilized as convalescent hospitals; at least one in each county for agricultural and technical schools, or some useful industry.

23801. Does any other useful object occur to you?—Technical, or some useful industry.

23802. One witness suggested they might be used as quarters as long as they lasted. Would you approve of that?—No, I would not. We recommend that the workhouse children be maintained in one institution in the county, and receive at least the elements of industrial education and training.

23803. Have you boarded out any children in your workhouse?—No, sir.

23804. You have not had any experience of it there yet?—No, there are very few in it.

23805. You heard some of the witnesses from Belfield here, to-day, point out that they, after consideration, thought it wiser to put the children of waifs and strays in a better position, that is in position of trades, on positions that the children of humble ratepayers could not hope to be, that they thought that under?—There are applications for them every other day when they come of age.

23806. And then they are likely to turn back on your hands again if they are not pleased with their situation, are they not?—The party who takes them out of the union is bound to look after them; they grow up for a few years with their, and then go to England or America and join the army.

23807. Don't you find they come back or join the army, as you say?—I scarcely ever see any of them coming back.

23808. I suppose there is the usual complaint in your neighbourhood, that they are not able to get enough labourers?—It is a complaint.

23809. Do you see any objection to putting these children out with small farmers and accustom them to farm work?—It is generally there they go after being educated.

23810. Do you think the workhouse education is a useful course of instruction for a child?—I think if there was one place in the county where you could have them all together, and have a proper staff to train them it would be much better.

23811. Do you think instruction rearing is ever as good as home rearing?—It is not.

23812. Would not that be rather an argument in favour of home rearing by boarding out?—It is, but we hear so much about boarding out—about the officers coming and looking after them.

23813. Is rather frightens you, the ladies coming after them?—Yes.

23814. I think you might give one or two of the children a trial; the experience in Mr. McLaughlin's union, and a vast number of unions, is overwhelmingly in favour of the boarding-out system?—Of course, there are some parties that would get children to board out that would be very kind to them.

23815. And then if they were not it would be a good thing to have the ladies of the ladies' committee to look after them?—It would.

23816. Whether amalgamation occurs or not your Board of Guardians are in favour of going back to electoral division rating?—They are; they are strongly of opinion that we should return to the former system of electoral division rating, as under the present system there is no incentive to economy.

23817. You think the union-at-large expenditure makes people a little careless how they spend the money?—It does.

23818. There is no further hospital accommodation required for the sick in your union?—No, sir; we erected a new hospital this year that will cost nearly £1,500, and we have accommodation in our union.

23819. When was it finished?—About a month ago.

23820. Have you taken it over?—Yes, and paid for it. The furniture is not yet; it is on for contract now. There is accommodation in the old fever hospital for twenty, and that new one for forty, and in the house there is accommodation for 675 altogether. The valuation is £44,000, and the population 25,000, and we are under the impression that there is no more suitable place for a union. I fall in with Mr. Laminick's ideas as to four unions.

23821. You have given the number relieved in the various unions in Mayo to the 31st of March, 1903: you put Clonsilla far ahead of anything else?—Clonsilla is 1,611.

23822. That must be mainly tramps?—There are a good many tramps.

23823. The excess over other unions. You would never dream of saying you have an average number of people more in your workhouse than in Ballina or Westport?—The average number is 126 in our house.

Mr. P. W.
Judge

Cu. 4, 1901.

Mr F. W.
Judge.

23824. But nothing approaching Westport and Ballina if you exclude the tramps?—There are tramps in Ballina and Westport, too.

23825. There are not as many admissions of tramps as with you?—Yes; it is just a center when coming round there.

Mr. MICHAEL BROWN, P.L.C., examined.

Mr. Michael
Brown.

23826. CHAIRMAN.—Are you resident in Clonsilla?—No, sir, within three miles of it.

23827. Do you agree generally with the answers or do you dissent in any case?—There is only one thing I would like to remark, that when we go back to electoral division rating for out-door relief I think it would be right that each union should be a rating unit. As it stands at present it is at the County Council office that the rates are struck for every electoral division. That would involve a good deal of extra expenditure.

23828. Book-keeping, it would?—That we should employ a larger staff. We should make each union a rating unit, and then allow the Guardians to strike a rate for Poor Law Union purposes, and the County Council to strike a rate for Poor Law county purposes. It would simplify the finances of the county very much, and the Guardians of the union would be in a position to examine the accounts and know their own finances; at present it is very difficult to do so.

23829. That would be putting the County Council into a somewhat similar position to the old Grand Jury?—Nearly so; to separate county business from union business and each strike their own rates; but at present it is a shifting of responsibility from one body to another.

23830. You think the clerk of the union cannot get before you, as required, a financial statement of the position of your union?—He can; but we cannot examine beyond our own union.

23831. I think I understand what you mean by that. Is there anything else?—Well, no, sir; we don't favour amalgamation unless it is made clear to us that there will be a saving by amalgamation. I don't think it would be wise to separate the weak and infirm from the able-bodied, for the able-bodied are very useful in the workhouse, if you leave them as they are; they do a good deal of work, and sometimes objectionable work, that would have to be paid for if we had not them.

23832. That is one point of view; but do you think it is desirable to have able-bodied women in the house with illegitimate children—do you think it is a good thing to have them going through the house doing work here and there?—They are very useful, and save a good deal of expense.

23833. There are a great many old people who might do more than they are asked to do in a workhouse, and if you had an institution, say, at Clonsilla, for the aged and infirm of the county, do you think it likely that some of the old people could be profitably employed in doing little things such as they would do if out in the country?—If they are able to work.

23834. The majority of men you see going about are able to do some little thing, and if you walk out in the streets you will see a number of old people about their businesses. You will see the same class of people in the workhouse doing nothing from morning to night?—I thought those old people would be sent away to one place.

23835. Supposing they were sent away, the people who could do some little work?—If they could do some work it would be just as well.

23836. If the aged and infirm of the county were sent to the central institution somewhere do you think that would be a fairly satisfactory thing?—I am afraid you would have the able-bodied then with nothing to do at all.

23837. What do they consist of? They consist of the women who come in with children. Supposing they were sent to a penitentiary—supposing the object was to get everybody out of the workhouse except the sick, so that you would have in each town instead of a workhouse an infirmary or hospital for the sick, and all other classes should be kept out of it; children boarded out, women who come in to have illegitimate children placed in penitentiaries, lunatics sent to lunatic asylums, and tramps sent to some place where they would be obliged to work, a disarmed workhouse, specially for that purpose, do you see any reason why the aged and infirm should not be sent to a central county institution in the same way?—I suppose not in that case; but that would be a great change.

23838. Mr. MURKHAM.—Coming along looking for work?—No, those parties would not work.

23839. Does not Mr. Down employ them sometimes?—He does not; they would not work, even if you paid them, those fellows.

23840. Would it not get rid of that unpleasant classification that brings so much discredit on workhouses now?—I dare say it would.

23841. Mr. MURKHAM.—Do you think it would be an improvement?—I would require time to consider that; I did not consider it in that way at all.

23842. Don't you think that the mixed system of classification that exists at present is not very beneficial, having children, lunatics, mothers of babies, able-bodied and tramps all in one house?—Well, I suppose it is not; I don't approve of it, and those being kept in a workhouse. I think that class should be placed in an asylum.

23843. CHAIRMAN.—Do you not think it is even more dangerous to have the unmarried women and children in such a place?—If a proper place could be provided for them without incurring a great deal of expense.

23844. You have some of that class in your own workhouse?—There are some—a few.

23845. The few that do come in, do they very often remain there permanently?—I am not sure about that.

23846. Are you aware of their going back to their ordinary positions in life again after once coming into the workhouse?—I cannot answer that; I don't know them at all, or where they come from.

23847. Mr. MURKHAM.—The object of such a change would be reformation: the hope would be that in the course of time the number would lessen, and in years to come that we would not have the very large number of people of the different classes at all. If that change is properly carried out it would be a very good thing.

23848. If this vagrant class could be dealt with separately it would rid the workhouse of a great number. Some witnesses suggest they could be sent to a colony?—I think that would be a very good thing. We have, on an average, twenty-five every week. Draconic measures should be taken to put a stop to the tramp nuisance, and I think the labour colony would be a good idea.

23849. These tramps have children, and these children grow up and become tramps again, and the class continues and increases; but the people that have expressed a desire to see a change such as has been outlined live in the hope that such a system would largely do away with the present inmates of the workhouse?—I approve of a labour colony, certainly; I think they should not be accommodated in the workhouse at all, those who are known to be regular tramps.

23850. If such a system as that were pursued there would not be a need of more than one or two workhouses in the county, and you could get rid of a large number of officials and save a good deal of money in fuel and the up-keep of the institution?—I imagine that we would require a fever hospital and workhouse hospital in almost every place where it exists at present, and I believe the little savings that you would effect would be more than counterbalanced in other directions; you may save the salaries and retires of a few officers, but I believe there would be other expenses that would more than counterbalance the saving.

23851. The saving would not be very little, it might be very considerable, both as regards salaries and the up-keep of the buildings?—I imagined you would have to put up additional buildings.

23852. Not at all; you have too many as it is!—There would not be accommodation in one or two workhouses.

23853. Almost any workhouse in Mayo is large enough for the aged and infirm?—I dare say you would require additional people to look after them in the places you send them to.

CHAIRMAN.—Much smaller than you have at present.
23854. Mr. MURPHY.—The cost per head would be no more than at present.—And the additional expense.

23855. That would be only in the beginning?—I thought in other ways it might be made more costly sending people long distances and superannuating the old officers.

Oct. 4, 1904.
Mr Michael
Brown.

Mr. MARTIN STANTON, Chairman, Castlebar Union, examined.

23856. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Castlebar Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

23857. You were asked to give your own personal views by the Guardians, I think?—There was something said to that effect, but I did not happen to be there.

23858. What is your view on the question of amalgamation of unions?—I think we want no amalgamation here, or Castlebar.

23859. You think Castlebar Union ought to remain as it is?—So I think.

23860. Would you have it go on as it is—the same class of people admitted, or as there any class that you think ought to be housed elsewhere than in the workhouse?—I don't think a good deal goes wrong with the exception of a few tramps now and again. I think it would be all right if there was something to straighten that.

23861. What would you propose to do about the tramps?—I should not like to be too hard on them, but I would want to keep them in their proper places.

23862. What do you think might be done with them without too great expense?—I think those who would be bona fide tramps in search of work should be handled leniently, but with the professional tramps I should be—23863. A little hard with him?—Yes; if I thought they were professional tramps I would send them to some place by themselves.

23864. Would you approve of the suggestion that they should be put in some damned workhouse and put to labour, with the hope that they might be made industrious people eventually?—Yes, they might become industrious people after some time by that means, but I consider them dangerous to be at large.

23865. Is there any other matter that you would wish to allude to?—I don't think I have any more to say.

Mr Martin
Stanton.

Mr. JAMES DALEY, M.C., F.R.S., examined.

23866. CHAIRMAN.—The Guardians of the Castlebar Union put you forward as one of their witnesses?—Yes sir; I wish to state I am an elected Guardian for Castlebar since 1893, and for Bellina since 1878; I am also a member of the County Council and of the Urban Council here in Castlebar, and a member of the Asylum Board. I have a good deal of experience on Poor Law Boards. I served on the old Board, under the Poor Law Commissioners, and I must say that during that time the landed element was very predominant on the Board and had all the power in their own hands. They were very active in levying taxation and careful in looking after it. That Act was superseded by another Act, and it came under the Local Government Board. That went on fairly well until the People's Act of 1898 was passed. But during the reign of the Local Government Board they went in for adding several things to the rates which, I believe, should be paid out of Imperial taxation, such as the franchise, Parliamentary voters' and jurors' charges, and the Cattle Diseases Act, and the latest scientific works.

23867. Were not the Cattle Diseases and Franchise put on by Parliament?—Yes; but I think it should be an Imperial charge, and not on the local rate, which was first struck at a poor rate, and now it has to pay everything.

23868. Your suggestion is that we should recommend that a great many of those charges should be either partly or wholly paid out of the Imperial Exchequer?—Certainly. Now, as regards amalgamation, I go in for merging all the unions of the province, because as unions may work into one another the counties may work equally so. Portions of Mayo could go into Sligo, and Sligo into Leitrim, and so on. I am not in favour of rejecting one union and letting another stand; I go in for some intelligent gentlemen, to lay the map of the province before them, and let them reset all the unions, retaining only one or two in a province for the aged and infirm. I would be for taking all the children of the province to one, the male children to be educated under the supervision of the Christian Brothers, and the female children to be taught under the tuition of the nuns; and the same rule to apply to children of any other denomination, to be brought up in their own religious belief; and I think the Government ought to pay a stipendium for towards them. I would be in favour of retaining the Boards of Guardians as at present, to levy and regulate taxation. I would retain the clerk of the union; I would retain the present hospitals as local hospitals for the sick poor of the various districts. As regards tramps, I think they should be classified; there are professional tramps who go about to robs and larcies, returned three-or-four times; they are very objectionable. There is another class, young fellows who, perhaps, may leave their employment, such as apprentices, tailors, or shoe-makers, or printers; they often run away and go on tramp. It should not be at all encouraged; they should be confined to their own localities, where they are better known, and if they had not workhouses as refuges they would stay at home. I think any person going about looking for employment from one county to another should have a pass or a letter of introduction. That class should be assisted on the road and treated properly and well. But the other classes are very objectionable; they are not for their own good or the benefit of the public. I look on the present Poor Law system as very bad. I object to it altogether in its present state. The indoor system is bad, and calculated only to breed idleness and misery. The outdoor system is worse, as it encourages a rather dishonest state of things; it is not, as a rule, the really deserving to whom the relief is given; a relieving officer, if dishonestly inclined, could perjure it and represent it as given to illiterate, who, as a rule, only get paid once a month or once in three months. I have known poor aged women to be in their beds sick, and perhaps could not come into town for five or six weeks, and when they came to the relieving officer they told him they were curable. Any person who can afford to wait a month or two for relief should not be eligible. I also know women to be on relief whose sons are earning 14s. a week. I know it is to the knowledge of the District Councilors and, I believe, also to the knowledge of the relieving officer.

23869. How would you propose to check that?—While rates are made a union charge that will continue; if it does not go back to an electoral division charge, as of old, it is going from bad to worse.

23870. Did you know of any such cases under the old electoral division?—I did not, because each Guardian had a keen eye to business; if he had not, the next time he would be told by the ratepayers to stand aside. By the passing of the new Act there was double representation, and as a rule men were put in who had no rating qualification, and when I grumbled about the taxes going up, "Ah," said one, "thanks be to God I never pay any taxes." I think half the representation would be quite enough for any union, one for each electoral division, and then men should be elected who would have to put their hands into their own pockets or have some idea of union affairs. I know men to be discharging duties of the union who could hardly sign their name, and could not find anything in a book, and know as much about it as I do about Hebrew or Greek. That is not the man to administer the Poor Law.

23871. Are not the ratepayers to blame for that?—They are greatly to blame for it; I go in for men who are intelligent, and who understand something about the Poor Laws. I think the charges for each union should be limited to the union, and county-at-large charge or union-at-large is a bad business. It is well known where relieving officers have deputies to distribute the relief, and the deputies are District Councilors that are handing it across their own counters.

Mr James
Daley.

Oct. 8, 1904.
Mr. James
Daly.

Taxation in my time has trebled, and it is on the increase, and will increase while the present system of taxation exists. I think the Government acted very cleverly; it was once taxation without representation, and now it is representation without payment of taxation; the result is very bad for the country.

22872. You do think that going back to the old electoral division would completely remedy all that?—I think it would remedy a great deal of it. Or, relief should be made a dispensary or parish charge, and there should be a parish committee appointed to administer the relief. I think the old electoral division system may tell against the towns, for the reason I will give you. To my knowledge and experience the bulk of the people on relief in Castletar are widows of men who lived free, ten, or perhaps twenty miles from Castletar, before they were evicted; they begged about at first, and then came into the town and settled down. It is hard on Castletar to have to pay for these. But I would suggest a remedy: suppose there were a head tax, and when the taxes went in any division 20 or 25 per cent. over the ordinary taxes of the union it should become a union-at-large charge or paid from some other fund, as was mentioned here today. I think the rich gentlemen of the County Mayo get more than they are entitled to, and more goes to the fat and rich hands. We will say, of Lonsdale or Manner. We know that ballads won't come looking for out-door relief, but where there are congested districts, as in Mayo, those portions ought to get more than the ordinary share so devoted to relief from the Consolidated Fund. There ought to be some provision made, some Parliamentary grant; I would be in favour of that. I am also in favour of the remark made by Father McDonald; I think there should be a sanatorium hospital in this province at least, and to select it on some rising ground—wherever the medical faculty thought was the most suitable place. In a country like this, where the climate is very moist and damp, consumption is on the increase. I think it is an admirable suggestion, and one that has pressed on my mind for a long time; I am very glad Father McDonald brought it up here today. I am not in favour of the boarding-out system. First, I think it would be very wrong to board out illegitimate children, because it would be a kind of cast out on them; they ought to be sent to a central institution and the mothers sent to a home or place where they would be made self-supporting to a great extent, and they may get a better and more religious training than in the past. We know that society will take in children except to make by them, and I believe the children would contract bad habits, visiting at night; and at the best they could never be more than slaves. Let the mother rear the child until it is three or four years old; send the child, then, to an industrial school, and that child ought to have a fair education at fourteen with the prospects of a trade. The child might be looked down upon; it might be cast up against them if they remain in the country mixing with the public, whereas if they get a training and went to some other part of the country they might turn out to be respectable and good members of the community. If they remained in their own country they themselves would not respect themselves, and they would be looked down upon in the country. Boarding-out is only creating more officers: we will have ladies' committees and lady inspectors, and they won't do it for nothing.

22873. The ladies' committee don't get paid?—But there are lady inspectors, who go about seeing as to the cleanliness, and they don't do it without pay.

22874. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You have them already; there will be no more expense!—If we had more boarding-out we would require more officers.

22875. The cost of boarding-out a child is much less than the cost of keeping one in the workhouse.—It might in the workhouse; but I think a child sent to some place where they would be taught and brought up under religious instruction, and have a good deal, would be better off than a child out in the country rambling about; they might go to school one day and stay away two days.

22876. It is a common report that the peasantry of Ireland are well brought up. Where could you get a home for children better than among the farmers?—I am sorry to say the taxpayers' children are not brought up one-half as well, or get the same care, as in those institutions.

22877. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think the country people live quiet, peaceful and moral lives?—As a rule they do; but children may contract habits of rambling, and smoking tobacco, and attending wakes.

22878. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Children would not have much money to buy tobacco!—They would get it at wakes; fill their pockets and then take old pipes, and also attend American wakes, for people going to America: another very objectionable business.

Mr. ALEXANDER G. LAMMIE, J.P., examined.

22879. CHAIRMAN.—We have had the advantage of reading, quite recently, the pamphlet you were kind enough to send us copies of?—It is very kind of you to say it has been an advantage.

22880. Having been so long acting in connection with the Poor Law—thirty-two years—and having been practically all your life in the county?—Yes, I was born here.

22881. Your observations must be very valuable. Do you think similarly to Mr. Daly about the increase of taxation?—I don't think we have so very much to complain of, if you come to look at it comparatively: if you take, for instance, the standard rate, which was an exceedingly low rate, it so happened. I am now talking of the general rate of the county. You find the standard rate in Ballina was 3s. 4d.; and the average rate since was 2s. 6d.

22882. What about the agricultural grant?—Of course, that is the result of it to a great extent. I am now talking of what the people have to pay, for really that is the point.

22883. Don't you think you ought to take in the agricultural grant?—That has reduced the taxation.

22884. But the expenditure has increased?—The expenditure has increased.

22885. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—It has greatly increased in respect of the occupier, because under the old system he had only to pay half the rate, now he has to pay all the poor rate?—I speak entirely from an occupier's point of view; I pay rates both in the town and country.

22886. What is the rate on houses and land combined?—You cannot combine them.

22887. You do combine them?—You don't pay the combined rate on anything.

22888. What is your rate on land and houses?—Excluding the urban district in Castletar the rate on land is 2s. 7d. this year, and on buildings 4s. 2d.

22889. CHAIRMAN.—Your rate would be 4s. 2d. on land if you had not the agricultural grant?—Yes, in Castletar, it was very little less than that.

22890. Can you tell us what it was?—On that very low year in Castletar Union it was 3s. 3d.

22891. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—That is 1s., and representing 55 per cent. increase; that is considerable?—That is so. I agree with you; but the increase between 1872 and 1895 is enormously greater than the increase in the subsequent period in many cases.

22892. The standard of living is much higher now. Of course it is; the in-door relief is very much increased, and the number decreased receiving relief.

22893. CHAIRMAN.—That is owing to the additional comforts for the sick?—Yes; I am not talking of the officers' salaries at all, mostly of the in-door relief; the in-door relief in 1872 was very nearly the same as now, but in 1895 it was 22,000 less.

22894. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The average weekly out in the house, does that include the infirmary?—Oh, yes.

22896. About the number of workhouses in Mayo, what is your view about that?—There are two things have rather changed my opinion; one is, I see by the evidence you received at Belmullet, that they are quite prepared to abandon their workhouse. I am not going to object to that. And, also, Mr. Murtaghan's idea. I had not gone into the numbers of the other workhouses—that are workhouse would easily contain all the aged and infirm in the county. Well, then, I would do away with another workhouse. I quite adopt nearly all Mr. Murtaghan's views, and I think I have pretty well stated so.

2387. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't take them as my view; I would not like anything to go forward as being my view.—I will apologise for saying that; but the view you appear to have pointed out on behalf of sanely.

Mr. MURKIN.—I merely mentioned the suggestion that was received in other places.

2388. CHAIRMAN.—How many workhouses do you think might go, supposing that the hospitals remain?—Oh, certainly, I think we don't require increased hospital accommodation.

2389. Except, perhaps, Kildale?—Then it was suggested Ballyvaughan should take its place. I suggest Kildale should be made use of as a consumptive hospital.

2390. Have you seen the building?—No; I am only talking of the position.

2391. You would not suggest it if you saw it. It was occupied by the French in 1793, and General Humbert slept under its roof. It is not on modern lines.—You might remodel it.

2392. You might as well talk of remodeling a round tower!—Then take Newport, it is well circumstanced. There is no other place in Mayo you could have a consumptive hospital with sea air. Here is an old map of Mayo, and I suggest the four towns to be named are Belmullet, Ballina, Westport, and Claremorris. Geographically, they appear to be the best circumstances you could have if you retain four.

2393. Where would you put your infirm inmates for the county?—Claremorris, decidedly; there is a very excellent building and nice grounds.

2394. What would you use Westport for?—You must have your hospital there, and then there is the question of the children.

2395. What do you think about the suggestion made as to suppressing the powers of the Guardians to enable them to board out children of parents who had deserted them, or the children of parents not fit to have charge of children?—It is a question of equal difficulty and importance, because you must consider that the Guardians stand in those parents with regard to the children, and you must treat them as you would treat your own children, and do the best for them in the future.

2396. You are put very much in the position of a good trustee?—Yes; and therefore I am more in favour of what the last witness suggested than I am in favour of boarding out, as far as I know; I have an open mind on it, for I have no experience of boarding out. I think the result to the children, which is the first thing, and to the community at large in the second place, would be better.

2397. You cannot speak from experience of boarding-out?—No, I don't think anyone can; it has been such a short time in operation.

2398. In Cork and Limerick, and a number of other towns, they started in 1876 boarding them out in the country?—They are taken from the cities.

2399. Well, yes, from the union; the union of Cork is largely an agricultural district, and the same way, Limerick, the children are boarded out there, and the system has been in operation for twenty-eight years with splendid results?—I don't see anything objectionable in it.

2400. In Belfast they board them out even in districts outside, where there are mills, and the children work as "half-timers," and their earnings go towards the reduction of rates. Cardinal Logue, of Armagh, has started, himself, with some charitable funds of his own, a scheme that we were very interested to learn of when we were there. He came to the conclusion that the boarding-out was a good system, and organised a diocesan committee, a number of parish priests, who meet once a month to administer this fund in conjunction with His Eminence, and they place out children in different parts of the diocese, and they have appointed a lady inspector, who visits them from time to time, and the results, as we have heard from those who are directly managing it have been entirely favourable to the method of boarding-out?—I cannot see that there is the slightest objection to it.

2401. Children get absorbed into the ordinary life of the country, and, of course, there are difficulties. I quite understand the difficulties that Mr. Daly sees about the children being allowed to wander about, and we think they had better not see, but as a matter of fact it is found from experience that these children are as closely looked after as people's own children, and when a little child of the tender age of three or four comes into the family it very soon becomes looked upon as a member of the family practically?—Yes.

Mr. MURKIN.—Indeed, so much is that the case that I know a union where a foster parent, rather than give up the child, proposed to adopt it without any payment.

2402. CHAIRMAN.—It is frequently done; there are a great many old people who are supported and kept going in life by the earnings of those who were their adopted children, when boarded out?—That does not in the least surprise me; anything would be better than the present system, having half-a-dozen or twenty children in different little unions, where you cannot give them that education and supervision that is necessary.

2403. You would not keep people of feeble mind in a workhouse?—Oh, certainly not.

2404. Then if the children were boarded out they would go, too. Then the mothers—the idea we had put before us at our very first meeting in Dublin, by a deputation, was that they might be sent to religious institutions under the management of ladies of the same persuasion as themselves, so that they should be as quickly as possible fitted to return to life again?—Give them a chance.

2405. Then get support, so far as possible, from the father or mother of the child, and let it be boarded out in the ordinary way until the mother can take it?—Unless there is a great change in the law it would be interfering. Could the legislature give you that right over the prison?

2406. No; the woman would have to come there?—Can you take her child from her?

2407. Would not a girl be glad to go to a place where she would have a chance of coming out again with as fair a start as she could have under the circumstances, and would she not be glad to have her child kept for her until she could take it?—That is where the question comes in. I would rather she would not take it if it were possible to deprive her of it. The question is, whether the ordinary girl, under these circumstances, would be willing. I think she would rather be without it.

2408. Mr. MURKIN.—In England the law enables the Guardians to take the children of dissipated or vicious parents?—Then, could they board these out with some other parents?

2409. CHAIRMAN.—They would?—Here we have the children, either orphans or deserted, if they are found begging the police can take them up, and they are sent to industrial schools. Why should we treat these children differently? These are the children of misfortune, and very often the others are the children of crime, and get a better chance in life than the children of misfortune.

2410. That would get out the children and the feeble-minded; and you think the girls would be better in such a penitentiary than in a workhouse?—Oh, infinitely.

2411. Then if the aged and infirm were sent to a central place, supposing Claremorris, for argument's sake, you would have nobody left at Westport and Ballina, except one class?—Apparently not, if you eliminate everything else except the sick.

2412. Mr. MURKIN.—Does that strike you as a feasible plan?—Quite so; I thought the number of aged and infirm was greater than that in the county.

2413. According to this report, they don't amount to over 300?—Any one of the institutions would accommodate those.

2414. Of course, there are in the infirmaries chronic cases that should not properly belong to the infirmaries, and under the suggested plan no cases, but the acutely sick should be kept there?—Cases which are recoverable; but you would hardly send chronic bed-ridden cases to the central institution.

2415. CHAIRMAN.—If you send a lot of old people like that to one institution they will very soon become sick, and then there will want to be an infirmary?—You must have an ordinary hospital in addition to that, wherever the place is.

2416. Of course, for places like Westport and Ballina?—And that supposes that all the idiots and insane are removed from the workhouses.

2417. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you any choice between an auxiliary asylum and an ordinary asylum?—I think, decidedly, the auxiliary asylum. I would not have a hospital idiot in any regular asylum. I think it is a great drawback in ordinary asylums that these unfortunate idiots are herded with, perhaps, intelligent people. We know they have very filthy habits, and ought to be kept entirely apart; they cannot do that at present in asylums. I suggest that all that class should be taken out of the asylums and brought into auxiliary asylums.

23028. And kept it less expensive?—Half the expense. I think the St. would very nearly cover their actual board and lodging.

23029. It would certainly cover the difference between the keep in the auxiliary asylum and the keep in the workhouse itself?—I think so.

23030. CHAIRMAN.—As regards the out-door relief, would you approve of a restricted area for raising?—I don't like restricting movements; I don't think they would reduce it much by having electoral division charges.

23031. Do you think the increase is due to the alteration in the area of charge?—I do not; the increase before that was much greater.

23032. It is a continuing increase; but it has increased from £4,400 in 1895 to £6,000?—It had increased from £1,100 to £4,400 in the other period, from 1873 to 1895. It was greater in some of the years before 1890, owing to the relief of distress; that is at the bottom of it all.

23033. Do you think the reason that out-door relief increases is a charitable tendency towards providing for the poor, in whatever way they like best?—I think it has a great deal to do with it.

23034. A hard and fast line of relieving only destitute cases is no longer drawn?—Not so tightly drawn as before.

23035. You could not relieve a case of destitution, as they say they do in Westport, by giving it a week?—That is a very ordinary case.

23036. That would not relieve destitution, it would only be to supplement some other means?—It would be no use to give it a week to a person really destitute. If people have nothing of their own the proper place for them is the workhouse, where they would be better taken care of.

23037. Or if you could maintain them outside?—Do you mean to pay someone for looking after them. That would be a desperate thing—frankly; it would lead to awful abuse: every person who had an old relative in the world would bring them into the workhouse for the purpose of taking them out again.

23038. Mr. MURPHY.—But the Guardians would be the masters of the situation?—A man comes and says, "I cannot get on outside, take me into the workhouse," they take him in, and he costs £9 or £10 a year, a friend comes and says, "I will take out that man if you pay me £8 a year." You are between the devil and the deep sea; what are you going to do.

23039. It does seem to me that the Guardians have the power to give or refuse the money?—If a man applies for admission you cannot refuse him if he says he is destitute.

23040. CHAIRMAN.—You think a number of persons would become inmates of the workhouse for the purpose of being boarded out again?—Certainly; it would not be human nature to do otherwise. These Guardians who gave evidence to-day appeared afraid of this in the way of out-door relief. What would it be if you opened that door to them?

23041. Mr. MURPHY.—They were not afraid of themselves, but they were afraid of their neighbours?—Even if a man is inclined to be a little extravagant in his own division his neighbour has to pay for it, and he has so many neighbours looking after him that he won't be likely to succeed.

23042. We were told that under the old system the inspectors kept a close eye on the Guardians?—We put up the names of all the recipients of out-door relief, with the amount they got, at certain intervals, for the information of the inspectors in the district.

23043. They get the information generally, but they don't get it particularly; under the old system they knew how much was the expense of their own electoral division, whether it had risen or fallen; Guardians said to be reminded very promptly when anybody died that was getting out-door relief, to see that the name was struck off?—They do that still; we often have information from inspectors saying that so-and-so ought not to get out-door relief.

23044. In any union the vigilance as regards out-door relief has ceased?—Perhaps you have not increased it.

Mr. MURPHY.—We have increased it, almost doubled it since 1898.

23045. CHAIRMAN.—Apart from your instinctive objection to a retrograde movement, what objection do you see to limiting in some way the charge for out-door relief?—I don't see any particular objection, except I think that the poorer the division the more particularly the extra relief will press on it.

23046. I don't know whether you were here when one of us mentioned a suggestion made in another part of the country to have the additional amount made an electoral division charge?—The initial point would be to make your standard, and then everybody would rush to get up to that standard.

23047. There appears to be an upward tendency generally?—Yes; why not attribute that to good nature instead of bad.

23048. Supposing you fixed it at the present rate, and said any advance in future goes to the electoral division, do you think that would be a wholesome check?—It would be some check to extravagance if there were extravagance, but it might be a check to charity if it were charity.

23049. Yes, as an old Guardian, know there is no power in the Poor Law to do a charitable act?—Everything you give is supposed to be charity.

23050. It is the relief of destitution?—If you don't feel for a man you don't care whether he is destitute or not.

23051. A man being poor is no reason why he should get any kind of relief; he must first be destitute?—If you applied that you would have no out-door relief; either that or give a man 6s. a week.

23052. That is what did exist for a number of years practically throughout the whole of Ireland. If you take the old reports of 1851 you will be surprised to see that?—I dare say the rule was that; but it was not carried out.

23053. Oh, yes, it was?—Then the number in the workhouse must have been enormously increased.

23054. Not?—Then destitution was not so much. You must give a man enough to live on if he is destitute, or you must give a man something to assist the insufficient means he has, or bring him into the workhouse, or send him to beg. The out-door relief has increased, and, I dare say, permanently increased in some cases; but the difficulty is, how you are going to put on the brake.

23055. Then came out of ten of the Guardians here to-day say, "Go back to the electoral division rating?"—I admit it may have some deterrent effect, but it is a retrograde movement, and contrary to the general spirit of the age in limiting charity. I am in favour of extending charityability. My idea is that all in-door relief should be a county charge.

23056. What about out-door relief?—I think it should be a union charge. The reason I say county charge for in-door is, that if you separate the different classes of inmates, they are not the poor of the district in which they are supported; but old people from Edmestown come to Castlebar, and another class go from Castlebar to Westport; therefore I would make it a county rate.

23057. Mr. MURPHY.—Not necessarily; the Guardians could still continue to look after the poor of their own locality?—Then you would have a very complicated account with the central institution.

23058. Not at all; it is carried on in the asylums. In my asylum we have the County Fermanagh and Tyrone joined together?—They are only dealing with the two.

23059. CHAIRMAN.—Then the County Fermanagh people go to Omagh to meet, they don't stay in Fermanagh and deal with the Omagh asylum?—That is the difficulty of having your Boards away.

Mr. MORRIS C. DALY examined.

23060. CHAIRMAN.—There was a resolution you were good enough to send us a copy of, with which your name is associated, suggesting that in any reconstruction of the Poor Law system the classes of the poor be divided into groups, and that a capitation grant should be paid for their maintenance, which might be paid to any religious order or body which, through motives of charity, was willing to see that they were properly cared for. How do you suggest that should be worked?—I think by putting them into groups.

Mr. Michael
C. Daly.

23963. That is, by getting the good and infirm into one class?—Yes, in the different workhouses; that is, not by going away with any workhouse, but one or two. I am opposed to doing away with any workhouses in this country but Killaue and Belmullet.

23964. What would you do with the poor of Belmullet and the sick?—I think there should be an auxiliary.

23965. Then that would be only a change in names, you would have the same institutions?—You would not have the union, but you would have a useful place for receiving the poor.

23966. You would not have fresh buildings?—The same buildings.

23967. The same people going there?—Oh, no.

23968. What class would you have going to the present buildings in Belmullet?—I would have none in the union, but in the auxiliary.

23969. Would not the present buildings be the auxiliary?—I think so.

23970. What class of poor would you have going to the auxiliary?—The sick.

23971. Where would the other people go who are there now?—You may take them to Westport, or Belmullet, or any other union.

23972. You would just leave in Belmullet accommodation for the sick?—For the sick only; and the same at Killaue.

23973. You heard some of the Guardians suggesting the accommodation should be at Ballinacree?—I don't know that country; but whichever was most convenient.

23974. At present Belmullet hospital is named by Sisters of Mercy?—I don't understand that thing of naming by Sisters of Mercy; it is a thing I don't agree with. I don't think it is in a position at all that Sisters such as nuns should have; I think another class of people, such as nurses, should do it. I don't believe in nurses going through the class of people they have to meet in these institutions. I am in the habit of going through the institutions and seeing queer things.

23975. Some of the Guardians from Swinford spoke very strongly in favour of the results at Swinford, where a nun is mistress, and also, where there are nuns nursing the sick?—Yes, I heard that; but I may tell you I am not in favour of it, because I think it is not at all a position fit for them, from what I have seen of these institutions.

23976. What would you do with the workhouse at Ballinacree?—I would retain it.

23977. And leave the sick there?—The sick, most decidedly.

23978. Any other class?—All classes such as it has presently.

23979. And Westport?—In the same way.

23980. Castlerea?—Yes.

23981. And Ballinacree, Swinford, and Claremorris?—Yes.

23982. So that the only change you would make would be in Killaue and Belmullet?—Yes; I think it unfair to the ratepayers of these districts to say that they would be deluded from becoming contractors for selling their turf, their potatoes, their sugar, milk, butter, fowls, and swine; it is not fair that they should be deprived of that. And if these institutions are taken away they will have no means of going to these other places to contract, and I say it is unfair to the ratepayers altogether, and I don't agree with it. Then, in my opinion, it is opening the door for taxation and creating new offices.

23983. How do you think that could happen?—In the first instance you have to remove your patients to and fro to these institutions, and you have to pay the parties who take them there for going with them.

23984. Are you speaking of the sick?—I am speaking of those who have to be removed.

23985. For the sick you have the ambulance?—And somebody to travel with it, say, a nurse, and when these people get well you have to take them back again at the expense of the ratepayers.

23986. Is that the practice here in Castlerea?—Of course, anywhere.

23987. Do you pay people's expenses for going back again?—You must, when you take them from Belmullet.

23988. Does any public body in Castlerea pay the expenses of the sick when carried home again?—Not powerfully; but I think they would be expected to pay it now, when they are going to put them to this extra travelling, bringing them out of their own district to another district.

23989. It would not apply to the sick, because the hospitals would remain for the sick as they are?—At I say when people are brought out of their own district they should be taken back again.

23990. But if accommodations were left for them in their own districts then there would be no necessity for that?—There is no necessity. There is another thing in which you will increase the expenditure, the travelling of relieving officers every fortnight to have their books written up; you must pay them, surely, because when they took their position there was no allowance made for that.

23991. Don't you think the relieving officers and outdoor relief should still be dealt with by the local bodies in their own districts?—Yes, but if you bring them to Westport or Castlerea you must pay them extra.

23992. You are thinking of the possibility of a man having to go from Swinford to Westport to have his books examined?—I am.

23993. Such a thing could never be, the local body would do that; they would examine his books at Swinford, or wherever he will be?—You will have a rate collector in Belmullet.

23994. We have nothing to do with rate collectors, these are County Council officers?—Then what about the relieving officers?

23995. The local Council will deal with the question of outdoor relief?—Where would they meet?

23996. They would meet where they always met?—But you would have no clerk then.

23997. We are not touching the District Council, which would remain in most cases, unless there was something special. We have no power to look into District Council business?—But I am talking of the relieving officer.

23998. He would have his books examined by the clerk of the District Council acting as Poor Law authority?—Then you are going to have no saving.

23999. We would not make any suggestions unless a saving were pretty obvious to us. One of our first planks is economy; that is the object for which we were first appointed?—I hope it will be so. About the tramp class, I don't see how you can get shot of them; it is a thing that is tried, I dare say, all over the world now, and I don't see how they could be done away with. I am in favour of giving the tramp housing for the night and let him pass on to the next, as they did in the old days. I heard it suggested here, to-day, that a man may get a ticket to pass him on to the next union. I don't see, in this free country, why any man should be a ticket-of-leave man. I cannot understand it; I am for giving them a night's lodging and a bit to eat, and let them go in the morning.

24000. Continue the present system?—Continue the present system. They tried the system of breaking stones here for a short time, and it cost them a few pounds, and it was a complete failure. I went into the yard the other day, at this workhouse, and saw three men supposed to be picking grass. They were not picking grass. I asked how long did it take to pick all that was done; they told me three weeks. There was not as much as a man would do in a quarter of an hour. I consider it a farce, nothing short of it.

24001. Mr. MURPHY?—Does not that speak for establishing some place where those people would have to work?—It would be a very expensive business.

24002. CHAIRMAN?—You would not like to interfere with their liberty?—I would not; nor to build any buildings for them. Let them have the building they had before and pass on. I heard some talk about divisional rating. That is a thing I would approve of; and in case there is not divisional rating I would be very sorry you would have anything like amalgamation, because it would mean ruin. At one time I represented two divisions in Tyrone; there are now four Guardians for that. At the time I represented that place the rate was 1s. 4d., and when I was leaving it after the adjustment it was only 11d.; now it is 2s. 4d., and you have four Guardians representing it.

24003. Mr. MURPHY?—Too many rates spoil the truth?—Quite so; I would be in favour of the old system in many things, and in my opinion it would be much better to have one Guardian for each division than two. You would have seventeen Guardians in Castlerea Union instead of forty; it is only one contradicting the other, and doing no business, in fact.

24004. Practically, as a rule, you never have more than ten or twelve?—I wish we had less.

24005. CHAIRMAN?—There is too much conversation when there is a meeting?—There is a good deal. Castlerea is after getting in a full supply of water, we have three ambulances, two new ones and an old one, a small cart. And I think Castletbar, being the county town, it would be very hard to deprive it of the institution of a workhouse, and to deprive the ratepayers of the privilege of contracting for their goods at the institution.

24034. Mr. MURPHY.—The trend of the whole evidence was to keep Castletbar and make it bigger?—No, the other way; all against it. About out-door relief, there is a great shade altogether in this union. I know parties getting it who are professional beggars, and people from the country coming to the workhouse and being put on the town of Castletbar. I consider it unfair that a great many of these should be on out-door relief, and that is principally the reason I would ask that it should be made a divisional charge. We are suffering very much in the town of Castletbar.

Mr. MICHAEL LAVELLE examined.

Mr. Michael Lavelle.

24035. CHAIRMAN.—What district do you represent?—I am a co-opted member of the Castletbar Board of Guardians.

24036. What did you wish to mention?—According to what I gathered from the feelings of the various members of the Board they are not in favour of the amalgamation of Castletbar.

24037. Mr. Daly, who has just spoken, would represent their views?—Yes, exactly; and I thoroughly agree with Mr. Daly's views with regard to divisional rating, because, as it has been remarked all along, when a Guardian is responsible for the raising or the reduction of the rates in his division, the ratepayer there has a loan and close eye on him, and will question him from time to time as to the increase of the rates in any particular division. It makes him more popular when there is a reduction in the rates, and a Guardian is always very cautious in meddling with out-door relief for his own sake—if he wishes honours he must bid good-bye to them in a short time if the rates go up without proper cause, unless he can explain his reasons.

24038. You would prefer being more directly responsible to your constituents?—I would, certainly; and I would be glad to see divisional rating on that account.

Then with regard to tramps, who are becoming a nuisance more and more, I think there should be something done in the way of legislation to bring them to an end, because you have them going about through Ireland and coming to towns such as Castletbar—coming habitually to Castletbar, through its being a very good market town and county town, and I think it is very unfair to the ratepayers to be under such expense in supporting them. As far as amalgamation goes, my individual reasons are, that by keeping a staff of officers in care of the sick in a hospital, and having more than one hospital, I don't well see how you could diminish the expense of the institutions by amalgamation.

24039. You think there is not much economy to be hoped for if there is amalgamation?—No, sir. Then, in the central institution we must look forward to an increase in the staff, which will become a burden on the whole union when amalgamated; and I think, from our experience in the past, we must expect from those officials demands or claims for increases of their salaries with respect to the increased labour in the central institution. There are my reasons for believing we cannot expect much relief by amalgamation.

Dr. HOPKINS examined.

Dr. Hopkins.

In connection with Poor Law administration I consider it ought to be a county administration: dissolve all the unions and have amalgamation. I would abolish the entire present system.

24040. CHAIRMAN.—How would you work up a new one?—By parish committees; and having the chairman of each parish committee I would form a county administration.

24041. What would you have in the way of institutions?—I would have them under classification.

24042. If you dissolve the Boards of Guardians what body would manage any institution that might be maintained for the relief of the in-door sick?—I think I would have local administration—local committees.

24043. Perhaps you would not mind thinking over the thing and sending us a little note of your plans; it appears a little complicated to explain right off; we shall be very glad to hear any scheme you put before us?—I think classification in public institutions is necessary.

Mr. DUFFY MULLAN, F.R.C.S., examined.

Mr. Duffy
Mullan.

I am a Guardian of Castletbar. I firmly believe if it was divisional rating the rates would be lower, and be far lower, if each district managed its own business. This union rating encourages extravagance. If I happen to be at home and want to be careful, and others, in my absence at the Board are extravagant, it encourages me to be extravagant also.

The Sitting terminated.

FORTY-NINTH PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3rd, 1904.

Nov 3, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Galway.

Present:—Mr. MECKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. CONY BIGGER.

Mr. JAMES COCHRANE, Chairman, Portlanna Union, examined.

Mr. James
Cochrane.

24014. CHAIRMAN.—The Portlanna Union has not given us any abstract of the evidence that you intend to give, so that perhaps you would just tell us, in your own words?—As Chairman of the Portlanna Board of Guardians I may inform you that the Board are unanimous for amalgamation—either Portlanna to be amalgamated with other unions, or parts of other unions to be amalgamated with Portlanna. Of the ten unions in Galway, Portlanna is the largest—218 1/2s. per head—and the clerk, Mr. Lavan, is here, who is better able to inform you as to statistics.

24015. We are pretty well aware of the statistics as to the cost and all that, and we will get further information from Mr. Lavan by means of returns, but we don't propose to examine him to-day. If there is anything that you, personally, would wish to put before us—I understand the attitude of your Board of Guardians is that you are in favour of reducing your poor rates by amalgamation, either of your own union with some of the adjoining unions, or uniting some of the other unions with you?—Yes, sir.

24016. If your workhouse were to be closed, do you think it would be necessary, in the interest of the sick, that some provision should be left at Portlanna for treating the sick?—I certainly think it would.

24017. You think it would be necessary to keep a small hospital there?—I should think so.

24018. Is there anything that occurs to you if the Portlanna Workhouse were partially closed—any use that it could be put to?—It could be converted into a good factory; we have great facilities in that way, water power, and the Shannon close by, within 500 yards.

24019. There is water power there?—Certainly; the Shannon passes by.

24020. I mean on the hill where you are?—Within 500 yards of the workhouse.

24021. What is the difference in height?—I could not exactly tell.

24022. At all events you think it could be used for a leucery?—Certainly.

24023. Are your Guardians in favour of union rating for all purposes?—I think not; the majority of the Guardians are in favour of divisional rating.

24024. Are you in favour of divisional rating?—Certainly.

24025. For all purposes or only for some purposes?—For all purposes.

24026. Would you go back exactly to the old law?—Certainly; that would be my opinion. I think it is a great hardship on the outside district to have union rating.

24027. As regards payments by the sick who would be able to afford to, would you be in favour of giving the local body some power to fix what payment should be made by the sick, or for the sick by their relatives?—I should think that would be the best arrangement.

24028. Have you very many tramps at Portlanna?—Well, yes, there are a great many tramps; it is a great pain between the two counties for tramps.

24029. Owing to the Shannon Bridge?—Yes.

24030. Have you any views about what should be done as regards the tramps?—Well, I have many views, but I think it is very hard to banish them. They suggested three-banded at Portlanna, as a labour test. It is going on for a good many years, but it did not banish them very much.

24031. You have the same number still?—Not as many as there used to be; there are a great many females who are on the road.

24032. Do you think it is desirable that the children of such parents should be left with their parents; I suppose they go about the country without any education?—Indeed they do.

24033. Do you think that is desirable?—I do not.

24034. Would you be in favour of any modification of the law which would give local bodies the power to take the children of such people from them?—I would be in favour of it.

24035. And if they were taken up by the local bodies and boarded out or treated in any other way, do you think it would be a proper, prudent, and safe thing to let these parents go at large through the country, relieved of the burden of their children?—I would not think it safe.

24036. So would you think that if parents are unworthy to take care of their children that they should be secluded in some public institution where they would be obliged to work?—Certainly, but the boarding-out system I don't approve of at all.

24037. How many children are boarded out in your union?—Only three presently.

24038. Have you had any more before that?—No, but I know quite recently we boarded out some and had to take them back again after two months.

24039. What age were the children boarded out?—Eleven years.

24040. That is very old?—Sent out to very respectable people, recommended by some of the Guardians representing the district, and the relieving officer had to report that the child was not being taken care of, and we had to get it in; it was actually in a disgraceful way, badly clad, and badly fed, apparently.

24041. And yet you think the people were respectable who had it?—Apparently they were; they were highly recommended by the local Guardians.

24042. At all events they were not kind to the child?—Not at all.

24043. Then you did quite right, of course, in taking it back. The other children that are boarded out, have you anything to complain of as regards their treatment?—Well, no; they are living with their grandparents; they are fairly well.

24044. That is not so much boarding out as outdoor relief?—I should think so.

24045. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—You have never tried the system very much in your union?—No; we never have tried the system very much, only three cases.

24046. Until lately you had only one case?—We had two cases for the last five or six years; this case I mentioned just now was only quite recently.

24047. Really your experience could hardly be a guide to you as to the value or otherwise of the system?—I cannot say that it would.

24048. CHAIRMAN.—Would you prefer the present system of managing the children to boarding them out?—Yes; I think they are better cared for, and better looked after, and better educated than the would be outside.

24049. As Mr. Murnaghan says, of course your experience of the boarding out is as yet small in Portlanna?—Yes.

24050. Does anything occur to you that I have not asked you about?—Nothing, I think.

Mr. LAWRENCE TAYLOR, R.L.O., examined.

Mr. Lawrence
Taylor.

24051. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of your chairman?—I did, sir.

24052. Is there anything you wish to add to what he has said?—I differ with him in some things; I would rather have union rating than divisional rating because I think it is a great hardship on towns—where very few people are living in the country all the poor people gather into the towns. It is a great hardship on the towns.

24053. It throws an undue burden on the towns, you think?—Yes.

24054. That was a benefit given you by the Act of 1864?—Yes.

Nov. 3, 1904.

Mr. Laurence
Taylor.

24055. You have a lower rating than before 1866?—We have, in the town, owing to that.

24056. Did you ever get relief under that other Act, the old Act?—Mr. Lavan could tell us.

Mr. Lavan.—No sir, we never did.

24057. CHAIRMAN.—You would not approve of divisional rating for any purpose?—I would sooner have union rating.

24058. Do you agree with Mr. Cosgrave as to the desirableness of amalgamating some of the unions in Galway?—I think we ought to get an increase of our valuation; we are far away from any other union, and if we got part of the unions nearest to us out of Ballinasloe, or Longhrea, or Bormokane, to increase our valuation, it would lower our rates.

24059. How far do you get towards Woodford?—We go beyond Woodford, although it is not in our union; part of our union goes down to Mountshannon.

24060. Is Mountshannon in Scariff or your union?—It is in Scariff; it was in our union before, and the Bormokane Union, which is a very small union, runs into within a mile of us.

24061. Have you any of the Co. Tipperary in your union?—Not a bit; all our union is in Galway.

24062. And you would be in favour of getting some of Tipperary?—Certainly; because the poor people on the other side of the bridge from us are very anxious to come into our union rather than go to Bormokane or Scariff.

Mr. JOHN MURPHY, Chairman,

24075. CHAIRMAN.—Are you Chairman of the Board of Guardians of Glensmaddy?—Yes.

24076. Will you kindly tell us what is the view of the Glensmaddy Guardians on the question of amalgamation?—The Guardians are unanimous in not having Glensmaddy done away with, and the reason that they are so unanimous is that they have recently spent a considerable sum of money in repairing the workhouse—building a very fine hospital—and the rate is very low, and they believe that by being added on to another union the rate would not be decreased. We are just living on the border of Roscommon and we don't think it desirable we should be sent into Roscommon; but then we are very far away from any other union; we would have to go to Tuam, and that would mean about twenty miles.

24077. Before your union was formed it used to be partly in Tuam and partly in Ballinasloe?—Mr. Cosgrave, Solicitor.—Partly in Castleroe.

24078. CHAIRMAN.—None of it in Ballinasloe?—No.

24079. You are utterly against going to Roscommon?—We are; the Guardians are unanimous that they are not anxious to join on to any other union on account of its bordering on the county, and the great inconvenience it would be to the sick poor to have to go to Tuam.

24080. That is, your Guardians are altogether in favour of allowing the Glensmaddy Union to remain as it is; have you any suggestion to make in the interests of economy of administration?—No, nothing particular, except that our district is a very poor district.

24081. Or do you think it ought to remain as it is?—No; we would prefer, if we could, to increase our valuation; the average valuation of the people in our district would not be more than 25, and there are a considerable number of very poor people. The ratepayers and the Guardians don't seem to be anxious to have the union dissolved; they find that they are going on very well as they are. We would be anxious to increase our valuation.

24082. I suppose that would be with the object of reducing your rates?—Yes.

24083. If you found any scheme could be produced that would mean a reduction of your rates without any hardship to the sick, or people who could not be removed without hardship; if you found such a scheme could be produced do you think the ratepayers of your union would be disposed to listen favourably to it?—I think so.

24084. Is it largely the fear of extra taxation that makes them opposed?—No; it is the inconvenience to the sick.

24085. If a hospital were left with you so that the sick would still be treated at Glensmaddy, and if for the remainder of the house what is generally known as amalgamation were adopted, would that 24063. How far is Woodford from you?—Eight miles.

24064. Do you also suggest that Woodford should go in with you?—I am sure it should.

24065. What do the Woodford people think themselves?—I don't know; I think they would be inclined to join with us.

24066. You have lower rates than Longhrea?—I think our union is a better managed union than Longhrea.

24067. You would not be surprised to hear the Longhrea people detaching from you?—I think I can call upon Major Fair to bear me out in what I say.

24068. Is there any other point on which you differ with Mr. Cosgrave?—No.

24069. Is there anything you would like to add yourself?—Nothing, sir. I would be opposed to boarding out the children.

24070. What is your experience about that?—I have only seen a few cases of it in Portlaoine, and from what I see I think the children that are boarded out would be a great deal better taken care of in the workhouse than they are outside.

24071. Have you read much of what has been written on the subject?—I have not.

24072. You don't know what the opinions of various bodies and persons on the subject are?—No; I have something else to look after; I did not give it much attention.

Glensmaddy Union, examined.

24086. How far is Woodford from you?—Eight miles.

24087. Do you also suggest that Woodford should go in with you?—I am sure it should.

24088. What do the Woodford people think themselves?—I don't know; I think they would be inclined to join with us.

24089. You have lower rates than Longhrea?—I think our union is a better managed union than Longhrea.

24090. Is there anything you would like to add yourself?—Nothing, sir. I would be opposed to boarding out the children.

24091. What is your experience about that?—I have only seen a few cases of it in Portlaoine, and from what I see I think the children that are boarded out would be a great deal better taken care of in the workhouse than they are outside.

24092. Have you read much of what has been written on the subject?—I have not.

24093. You don't know what the opinions of various bodies and persons on the subject are?—No; I have something else to look after; I did not give it much attention.

24094. Is there anything you would like to add yourself?—Nothing, sir. I would be opposed to boarding out the children.

24095. What is your experience about that?—I have only seen a few cases of it in Portlaoine, and from what I see I think the children that are boarded out would be a great deal better taken care of in the workhouse than they are outside.

24096. Have you read much of what has been written on the subject?—I have not.

24097. You don't know what the opinions of various bodies and persons on the subject are?—No; I have something else to look after; I did not give it much attention.

24098. Is there anything you would like to add yourself?—Nothing, sir. I would be opposed to boarding out the children.

24099. What is your experience about that?—I have only seen a few cases of it in Portlaoine, and from what I see I think the children that are boarded out would be a great deal better taken care of in the workhouse than they are outside.

24100. Have you read much of what has been written on the subject?—I have not.

24101. You don't know what the opinions of various bodies and persons on the subject are?—No; I have something else to look after; I did not give it much attention.

24102. Is there anything you would like to add yourself?—Nothing, sir. I would be opposed to boarding out the children.

24103. What is your experience about that?—I have only seen a few cases of it in Portlaoine, and from what I see I think the children that are boarded out would be a great deal better taken care of in the workhouse than they are outside.

24104. Have you read much of what has been written on the subject?—I have not.

24105. You don't know what the opinions of various bodies and persons on the subject are?—No; I have something else to look after; I did not give it much attention.

Nov. 2, 1904.
Mr. John
Marty.

24085. But if you were allowed to adopt a scale of your own at your own discretion, and charge according to that scale, you think that would be fair and proper?—I do.

24087. Charge a poor person less than the average cost, and charge a wealthy person the full amount expended?—Certainly.

24088. Is there anything you would like to state that I have not asked you about?—Well, I am delighted to state that the Guardians are unanimously in favour of divisional rating, and that they approve of the boarding out system.

24089. You have no town in your union?—We have not a town, it is a village—the village of Glensmaddy. Well, I made a mistake, the two Guardians who represent the division of Glensmaddy are against divisional rating; with that exception they are unanimous.

24100. Would that be for all purposes or only outdoor relief?—For all purposes. If it were divisional rating, I imagine it would be better administered, and every Guardian would take more interest in his own division when he would have to finance his division.

24101. Do you think it would operate on anything but outdoor relief?—I imagine it would operate on everything.

24102. You cannot reduce the number of the sick for instance; the Guardians could not keep down the number of sick if they had divisional rating?—No; but the Guardians would be better able to decide who were the deserving cases.

24103. Take the sick, which are a very large class, it could not have any effect on the reduction of expenses?—That is the indoor; I don't think it would.

24104. Do you think it could have much effect, except on the outdoor?—I think it would have a little.

24105. You think you would not be so likely to give an officer an increase of salary?—That would be union rating.

24106. In what way do you think the electoral rating could make an economy except for the cost of outdoor relief?—There would be a lot of public works—the making of roads.

24107. That is rural districts?—I mean for all purposes.

24108. We of course are strictly limited to the Poor Law?—If an applicant now from one portion of the union came into a meeting of the Board of Guardians and said "I am in want of relief," and if the Guardians who represented that division were not there how did the other Guardians know whether he was a fit subject for outdoor relief at all?

24109. That is outdoor relief; I am rather anxious for you to show me how it would affect any class but outdoor relief?—I cannot go into any other portion.

24110. Mr. MURKHAM.—But in the case you instance the Guardians have the very best authority; they have the relieving officer to refer the matter to, and for him to make a report on the claim?—That is a fact; but I think the parties affected—the ratepayers and the Guardians—should give their opinions whether the applicants were deserving or not, and in that way I believe the outdoor relief would be lowered without any harshness to the sick poor.

24111. CHAIRMAN.—Can you see any other class where a saving would be effected?—I believe there would be a saving indoor.

24112. Supposing a girl comes in to have a child?—Or if they came in with fever.

24113. These are sick cases. Take the case of a man who comes into the workhouse with his family to be maintained in the workhouse; do you know of many such in the locality who would take such a step as that unless they were in the last stage of destitution?—I believe some people would.

24114. And for such a class as that you think it would be useful to have electoral division rating?—Yes; the Guardians would be able to know the position of that family, and the ratepayers of the division would say, when they saw that such a person had gone into the workhouse, "We think he ought to be able to pay something." They would be more particular if there was divisional rating. I approve of the boarding out system; we have recently used it and I think it will be a success in our union.

24115. Have you had many cases?—It is only within the last few months we commenced it, but we are very particular as to the foster-parents; we always try and give them to middle-aged people who won't have a big family of their own, and I think they would be better looked after than in the atmosphere of a workhouse.

24116. You think they are more likely to turn out handy and useful?—Yes; then of course I believe the cost is lower than it would be if they were kept in the workhouse.

24117. Mr. MURKHAM.—You have a considerable number of children in the workhouse?—I think twenty-five.

24118. That is a large proportion for so small a workhouse?—Yes.

24119. CHAIRMAN.—You are trying to board them out?—Yes, we board them over until we get good foster-parents.

24120. Mr. MURKHAM.—Do you give much outdoor relief in your union?—Before the passing of the Act of 1898 our outdoor relief was about £700; I think it is only the same now.

24121. Do you approve of it as a system of relief for the poor?—I do; I think it is fairly well administered.

24122. CHAIRMAN.—But you would like to have it safeguarded with the electoral division charge?—I think so; it would make everybody more interested.

24123. Would you be in favour of an amendment of the law which would give you power to board out all children that would be on the rate?—I would.

24124. At present you are only able to board out orphans and deserted children?—Yes.

24125. Would you be in favour of an amendment of the law giving you discretion?—I think I would.

REV. W. CONWAY, P.R., CHAIRMAN.

Rev. W.
Conway, p.r.

24126. CHAIRMAN.—We have had evidence from Mr. Martyn indicating the views of the Glensmaddy Guardians; they seem to be, as I suppose you are aware, in favour, generally, of not breaking up the Glensmaddy Union?—They are. There was one reason Mr. Martyn hinted, that is—that the district is very poor, nearly all congested; I think it was an account of the inconvenience, as well as because the expenses would be less, that they wished to preserve the union.

24127. You heard me putting to him, though, that if the hospital still remained for the sick that would of course very largely diminish the force of the argument against amalgamation made by those who thought the sick would have to go long distances?—To what? I am sentiment on the part of the old people; I believe the old people who are not sick would object to be removed to a distant union.

24128. We have heard that frequently in different places?—It is a sentiment of course, but after all it is a sentiment that must be respected; they would not like to be hustled far away, or go far away from their friends, and it might be better if they got outdoor relief at home, and left them at home.

24129. You would be in favour of an extension of the powers of Guardians to give outdoor relief?—Yes, if it were judiciously bestowed, but sometimes it is not; and I must say, if it would be allowable for me to trespass on the Guardians' domain, I would say that I do not at all approve of union rating. Within the last month even I have met cases where Guardians actually recommended outdoor relief where they admitted that the party did not require it, which would not be the case if you had divisional rating.

24130. Do you think that is general as regards outdoor relief?—Outdoor relief only.

24131. You don't see any necessity for making the sick an electoral charge?—No.

24132. But you think for outdoor relief it would be prudent to have the electoral division?—It would be much more economical.

Nov. 4, 1904.

Rev. W. C. Conway, F.R.S.

24134. In your union, would it be a distinct hardship to close up the workhouse without making ample provision for the treatment of the sick?—I think it would, on account of the inconvenience of getting the sick's disease.

24135. Supposing Mountbellow were also closed, then you would be thrown either on Tuncel—Tuncel, or Gethers, or Bismarck.

24136. Or Ballinacree; how far is that?—I think twenty-seven Irish miles.

24137. How far would it be from Tuncel?—It is exactly nineteen statute miles from the workhouse.

24138. How far would it be from the most remote part of the union to Tuncel?—It would be about twenty-seven statute miles. There were two or three things I just jotted down. About the tramps, I think it is a great defect in the management of workhouses that the law regarding tramps is not more strictly enforced; the workhouse is made too comfortable for them.

24139. Are you aware, Father Conway, that they have the power of obtaining their discharge on giving three hours' notice?—I think they should be made work a little.

24140. Would you extend the powers of the officials or Guardians to enable them to keep them longer to work?—It is done in England.

24141. It is, under a special Act, but I may tell you it has not operated in England;—it has not diminished the evil. I believe, myself, that there will be no stop put to tramps until they are taken forcibly by the Government and put into a labour colony.

24142. That is a view we have heard in a great many parts of the country. They are the greatest nuisance, and on the other hand, if things are made too disagreeable for them in the workhouse they may not go there and they become a greater nuisance.

24143. You think it is a police question largely?—I think they should be taken up and put into a labour colony wherever it is proved they are tramps and could get employment if they wish.

24144. Especially if they had children?—Yes. There there is another question about these unfortunate women; I would say there ought to be a distinction made between a person who has fallen once and one who has fallen two or three times. I would be in favour of taking the children away as soon as it possibly could be done from those who have fallen once, not leave them to suckle them, and they should be taken and put into an asylum.

24145. We did receive evidence from a clergyman on that very question very early in the session, that a girl, who, on the occasion of her first lapse, should be sent to an institution managed by religious people of whatever religion she belonged to, that after the birth of the child they should make efforts to reclaim her and get her a situation as soon as they thought she was fit for going out again; the child should be looked after until she was fit to leave it, and in that way it was hoped that these girls never should enter a workhouse at all. I say there ought to be a broad distinction made between those who have fallen only once and those who have fallen several times. Really those that have fallen once I have found by experience are not very bad, but any that have fallen twice should be removed to some institution.

24146. Most of those cases that we meet in this country who fall more than once are cases who have been in the workhouse, and they keep on falling. Oh, yes.

24147. Therefore do you think it is an improper place to have such?—I think it is; they corrupt the other women.

24148. And go downhill themselves?—They don't improve, and if they get an opportunity of going out again they are just twelve months away and come back.

24149. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you think the law ought to be altered in regard to the paterfamilias, so as to enable the girl to take some steps against him?—I think it ought.

24150. It is stronger in England than in Ireland?—It is sometimes very difficult to prove the paternity, especially in the case of those who have fallen more than once; it is easy enough to prove the first case.

24151. CHAIRMAN.—Even in the first cases the Guardians don't get very many instances in which they can get a decision?—Very few; I did not hear of any in Gloucestershire.

24152. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you think it would be well to consider the advisability of strengthening the hands of the Guardians so as to make the father responsible?—I think it would be very desirable. I don't think there is anything else, except in the event of the union being amalgamated with others I don't know anything that the workhouse could be turned into except some kind of technical school, and besides, if the hospital is left it occupies the front part of the workhouse; persons might have an objection, especially where contagious diseases are, to come in; they might have an objection to stay and work in such an institution.

Mr. CONWAY.—With regard to the proceedings against the alleged father of these children, perhaps Father Conway is not aware that you require corroborative evidence of the women's statement, and at Quarter Sessions the experience is that the defendant is never called upon to give evidence; you rely on the point that there is no corroboration; very often, if you get the party up, you very probably could get corroboration.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—The English law is a step in advance of our law.

24153. Dr. BURNER.—Could you tell us whether there is much consumption in the district?—I think it is pretty prevalent.

24154. Have you any recommendations to make regarding the treatment?—No, except that in the event of your doing away with some of the workhouses, as workhouses, that you get the healthiest and most suitable of them to turn into sanatoria.

24155. Do you think a workhouse would make a sanatorium?—I am not up in those things; I know they have to be very well aired. I think, with a little expense, they could be made; they are generally healthily situated.

24156. How would you suggest that sanatoria should be supported; by the county-at-large?—I think if the patients were taken from the county-at-large, or whatever districts they were taken from, they should contribute to the upkeep of the institution.

24157. You could hardly support an institution on those lines?—I believe, myself, one would do two provinces, if not the whole of Ireland.

24158. At present there is a national institution but it is not large enough to receive anything like the number of applicants for admission?—I think consumption is the form of disease that ought to occupy the greater part of the attention of the authorities; it is so preventable and contagious that they ought to take strong steps and secure this sanatorium; I don't know whether it might not be necessary to have some power of compulsion to compel parties to go into it.

24159. And treat it as you would treat fever?—Almost.

24160. CHAIRMAN.—Make it a notifiable disease?—Yes.

24161. Dr. BURNER.—Would one sanatorium for two counties be too large?—I have no idea of the number of patients.

24162. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose when you spoke about the locality furnishing the patients you did not mean that it should be a per capita charge pro rata?—Pro rata; it might be a portion of the rate, and if it were to be managed, two counties might have a sanatorium.

24163. Dr. BURNER.—Would you suggest it should be put on the same basis as the county infirmary or asylum?—I think it would be a good way to do it, because if you begin to make it so much per capita you cannot get the establishment kept up in a proper way.

24164. You would see no objection to putting it on the same basis as the county asylum?—I suppose that would be the best way; I think it is one of the most urgent of the reforms—to make provision for this disease, because, unfortunately, it is much more prevalent than people imagine.

24165. Do you think it is getting more prevalent?—I know the constitution of the people is weakening; whether owing to emigration or the artificial food they are taking, but they are becoming weaker and more prone to disease, such as consumption.

24166. Have you any cases you remember where you have seen it spreading in a family?—Oh, I did; a friend's family all died of it. They were not aware it was contagious, and I saw other families also.

24165. Whereas if the first cases had been removed and isolated you think it would have prevented the others taking it?—I presume it would.

24166. Mr. MURKIN.—The old idea was that it was in the blood and that it was hereditary; the present idea is that it is infectious?—I think, without trespassing on the doctor's domains, there are several families more prone to it than others and that it is like other diseases inherited from the parents.

24168. Still if the infection was not there they could not develop it?—No.

Nov. 4, 1901

Rev. W. Conway, F.R.S.

Mr. F. O'Hara, R.S.O., examined.

Mr. F. O'Hara.

24170. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Clifton Union?—Yes.

24171. I have the very full replies which the Guardians have been good enough to furnish me with, and in reply to our first query on the question of amalgamation, their answer is "We consider from the depressed population and economic condition of the County Galway, that it would be desirable to dissolve, wholly, some of the unions, and we consider, that where a workhouse is dissolved that the hospital attached to each should also disappear if a saving in rates is to be effected."—That is the unanimous opinion of the Board?

24172. ASSUMING for a moment that Clifton could be broken up, do you think it would be a hardship to the sick to give them no place for their treatment, locally?—I do not, in this way, that our means of commiseration are such that I don't consider it would be any hardship for the sick to send them to a central hospital, say, Galway, and I say this for the purpose of saving taxation, in this way, that if you keep the hospital you might as well keep the workhouse, because the number of officials that will be required for the upkeep of the hospital will be nearly equal to that of the staff necessary for the workhouse.

24173. You would have a dispensary doctor at the hospital; you would have a nurse and a chaplain; you would have nobody else?—We would have waiters and waitresses.

24174. You would lose all the able-bodied officers?—We could not lose the doctor; we could not lose the night nurse and day nurse; we should have a clerk of some description, and we should have a porter.

24175. Mr. MURKIN.—You have the clerk of the District Council at present?—We would have almost the entire staff except the master and matron of the workhouse, they are the only parties that I could see that we could do away with.

24176. You do away with the upkeep of a large portion of the institution, the heating at which alone amounts to a large sum every year?—Quite so.

24177. CHAIRMAN.—You spoke about the facilities for removing the sick being increased?—We have railway communication.

24178. But you cannot send the sick by railway?—Why not?

24179. You could not send a paramonia patient or other serious cases?—I know instances of serious cases in my own family that I had to take out only to Galway but to Dublin.

24180. But there are serious cases you could not remove, except by an ambulance?—I don't see any ambulance you could employ that would remove a patient with more ease than a railway carriage.

24181. In Galway that might mean a journey of over sixty miles?—It is a journey of forty miles; it might mean more if we went to the extreme end of the district.

24182. Don't you think that would be practically prohibitive; how could the sick be properly dealt with if they had to go to such distances?—That is a suggestion, and it is the opinion of the entire members of our Board; but really I must confess, it may be very hard in some cases, you might get a big case of sickness that it might be dangerous to remove such a distance; I agree to that.

Mr. MURKIN.—The cost of transport would be very considerable.

24183. CHAIRMAN.—Take fractures, or anything with fever, you cannot remove those cases by rail?—I really think, in cases of paramonia, it is dangerous to remove the patient out of the house in which he gets sick; I think it would be better to treat him in the house in which he happened to get sick. I know a case myself in our district where the doctor got sick.

24184. Even in a bed-ventilated cabin?—Our cabins are not so bad as they were; we are making great improvements in that respect; they are not up to date yet.

24185. You see the force of the argument against removing the sick from great distances?—I see the force of the argument against removing cases.

24186. Any case that could be put into the train and brought to Galway, that would be all right?—I would not say there would be any hardship.

24187. Dr. BRIDGES.—Do many cases at present go to the Galway Infirmary?—Several cases; we have sent numerous cases to Galway from our union for treatment that the doctor alleges could not be carried out in the union hospital.

24188. Operations and cases that can wait, but supposing a case occurs sixteen miles from Clifton how are you to get that case into Galway?—By ambulance car as far as the workhouse, and have it removed by rail.

24189. If there was not a workhouse there, how would a case go in from 3 o'clock in the day to Galway; it would be next day before it was there; that might mean the difference between life and death?—If the ambulance is to be retained it would take such cases and send them off by train; we are bound to have a relieving officer. There are no trains on Sunday and after a certain hour in the evening. Our union is able to accommodate over 320, and, all told, we have only 122; I venture to say, if our union was broken up, that out of the 122, if we were to amalgamate with any other union, forty of the entire number would not come to Galway if we made Galway the centre, for this reason, that they prefer going home to their friends, and I would certainly look upon it as a great saving to the rates that those people who would have an anxiety to remain with their friends, and the friends would have an anxiety to keep them if they got 2s. or 3s. a week at home, because our average cost is now 4s. a week, and if the people who are in the workhouse got 2s. a week half of them would not be there.

24190. CHAIRMAN.—You would be in favour of increasing the power of the Guardians for giving the outdoor relief?—Yes.

24191. Would you have any admeasurement, such as electoral division rating?—Electoral division rating worked well, and now we have union rating in our union; I have not seen any change.

24192. You find outdoor relief is not going up?—No.

24193. It is less than it has been for a number of years preceding the passing of the Act; you are a very poor union and have to look closely after your expenditures?—We are a very poor union, 193,772 acres, and the valuation is £18,662, and the population is 18,760; our workhouse is able to accommodate 723, and the hospital 32, that is 854, and all we have in the workhouse is 122.

24194. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the annual expenditure?—The average cost is 4s.

24195. And the annual expenditure for the last year?—I have not it, but it is 7s. 3d. for the hospital.

24196. CHAIRMAN.—Of course having the view you have expressed just now about the removal of the sick, do you think any further hospital accommodation is necessary; take for instance, Carrig; do you get many patients in from Carrig?—Not very many. Very often further accommodation is advocated for Carrig, and that district. I see the anxiety of the Local Government Board, since the passing of the Act, is to force on taxation.

24197. You may take it that our object is to reduce taxation?—I hope that will be the result.

24198. What do you think about Carrig?—Well, Carrig is an out of the way place.

24199. How far is it from your workhouse?—About thirty-three miles.

24200. Do you think they require any little cottage hospital there at a low expense?—Yes, at a very low expense.

24201. Say not more than twelve beds for instance?—That would be quite sufficient, except in this way, that if you make cottage hospitals in the several districts of the union you dissolve your exchequer.

24202. For the sick only?—That is another feature.

Nov. 2, 1904.

Mr. P. O'Hara.

24203. And further, for the acutely sick people who come in and spend on an average three weeks, would you be in favour of such a hospital at Carna?—I would be in favour of a hospital of that description on a small scale, of course, if the necessity arose afterwards it would be necessary to increase the accommodation.

24204. And you begin with a very small scale?—Yes.

24205. You would have the dispensary doctor there as the medical attendant?—Yes; but I should think we should increase his salary if he did any duty beyond his present duties; he would be looking out for an increase of salary, and all the doctors of our union would be anxious that district hospitals would be established here, there, and everywhere.

24206. There would be a great deal of benefit to him as well as to you, because the risk that would be scattered all over his district would be brought in to his door?—I should think it would be necessary to have a hospital of that description in remote districts.

24207. Is there any other district in your union that is as remote; Kilkerrin that goes with Carna; you have a dispensary doctor at Boffin, and if you had a small house there with, say, half-a-dozen beds?—I am told we have scarcely any, if any, sickness in Boffin.

24208. I suppose you have been there?—I have.

24209. Have you not seen any sick when you were there?—Never.

24210. I am sorry you were not with us a few weeks ago?—I have not seen many sick coming from Boffin.

24211. Have you seen them in it?—No; I have not been very often there.

24212. I think you will find the sick there in the ordinary proportions?—If there is any nourishment attached to sickness at all to be given free of charge, if you go look for sick people you will get plenty of them.

24213. A very small ordinary cottage with half-a-dozen beds or even four beds?—Yes; it might be necessary to have that, but really we have to get sick sometimes.

24214. And the question is whether you have not to get well at all?—We have people with relatives and sons and daughters; if my son or daughter gets sick it is my duty to act as a father towards them, and see after them.

24215. We are talking of the very sick poor who cannot be attended in the same way that you and I could; do you think in these remote places, where there is great poverty, that it would be only fair play to bring hospital accommodation as much within the reach of the very sick as it is within the reach of the people of Clifden?—It would be fair play if you could establish it on a small scale; I would like to have some means of giving relief, but if you go to establish them in such a way that your outlay would be greater than at the present time, I am strongly against it.

24216. I think we would agree with you there; we would not like to see anything added to the rate?—I am very strong on the point of representation. To my mind one representative is quite enough for each electoral division.

24217. You would go back to the old number of elected Guardians?—Yes; during my twenty years' experience I have always found that the greater number attending a Board Meeting the less work we are capable of doing, and the smaller the number the better work we do. Then I think that that representative who makes a law compelling the ratepayer to put his hand in his pocket should be a man of substance, so that when he makes a law he should have to put his hand in his own pocket and pay for that law.

24218. You would make him a ratepayer in the division?—Yes.

24219. About tramps; you have so few in Clifden that they don't become a serious matter for you there?—We don't have many of them; they are very few in comparison to other places.

24220. What are your views about the treatment of tramps?—I think the law should be amended in such a way that tramps, seeking the shelter of the workhouse, should be kept in for three days at least, and make them work during that time, and pretty hard too. I would suggest, also, as a deterrent from coming to the workhouse, though I don't think it would be feasible, that any of them that required the shelter of the workhouse should have it at 6 o'clock; my experience is that they come to the town, and beg and beg round the town, and stop until the publichouses are about closing, and spend the last copper they obtain before they go to the workhouse. Whereas if it were made the law that they should have the shelter of the workhouse before 6 o'clock it would be a deterrent in itself; they would not have the pleasure of getting money and spending it in the town, and it would meet the case of a bona fide person looking for work.

24221. But the hanger and the strutting misanthrope?—I would recommend strongly that they would be put somewhere—some labour institution; they are a very great nuisance.

24222. It is an undesirable class in the country, and you would like to stop it?—I would like to stop it very much.

Mr. J. J. Darcy, P.L.O., examined.

Mr. J. J. Darcy.

We consulted before we came here—all the Guardians—and my evidence would be the same as Mr. O'Hara's.

24223. CHAIRMAN.—There is nothing you wish to add or vary?—No.

Rev. R. McHugh, P.R., Carna, examined.

Rev. R. McHugh.

I think after Mr. O'Hara's evidence I may sit down.

24224. CHAIRMAN.—We are anxious to hear your views about the treatment of the sick in your parish; it goes into Kilkerrin; you have a church there as well?—Yes. My parish is very remote from hospital accommodation, and I think it would be very desirable to have a cottage hospital at Carna if we can have one without putting a large burden on the rate. We have at present, a nurse there—one of Lady Duffell's nurses—that lady is no burden on the rate, and I believe she would be very glad and pleased to act as head nurse of the proposed cottage hospital.

24225. It would really mean something very small?—Very small.

24226. Have not the Congested Districts Board given you some public institutions; they have not given you a hospital?—No.

24227. Dr. Bourne.—I suppose you find the district is so remote from the workhouse that the patients cannot be removed there?—They cannot be removed; I may say nobody goes from the district to the hospital in Clifden, that is altogether on account of the distance, and the road from Carna to Clifden is a very rough bumpy road; it tries a person who is strong to go over that distance.

24228. You are practically disfranchised as regards hospital accommodation?—Quite; last winter and spring we had a very bad outbreak of typhoid fever, and those cases had to be treated in their cabins, and we could not get anything like trained nurses for them, for there is no accommodation, and we had to put up with some wretched old women we got in Galway, and the only patient who went into Clifden was our doctor, and the poor man died, and I believe, thoroughly, that the journey had a good deal to say to his death. If there was a little hospital at his door where he could have been treated and get proper nursing he would be a living man to-day.

24229. Is the ambulance a bad one?—It is a new one; I cannot speak for it.

24230. You would suggest that there should be a small hospital with a few beds?—I would say about twelve beds.

24231. Would not that be too large?—Perhaps ten or twelve, not more than twelve, say five for men and five for women. That would cost very little, and the nurse is there already.

24232. CHAIRMAN.—And the doctor?—Yes; the doctor is there.

24233. Dr. BOGHER.—It would not increase his work much.—On the contrary I think it would be rather a relief to him to bring the patients to his door.

24234. And he could see them more frequently?—Decidedly.

24235. CHAIRMAN.—It would be only for serious cases?—Yes, such as puerperia, and I should think too that in case of an outbreak of fever it ought to be closed to all medical cases.

24236. That would be possible?—But of course in that case it would be necessary to get special nurses down, because the nurse we have as a district nurse and has to attend maternity cases, and could not do both; I don't suppose there would be any difficulty about that.

Nov. 3, 1904.

Rev R.
M'Hugh.

Mr. P. J. O'MALLEY, Chairman, Oughterard Union, examined.

24237. Mr. GEORGE, Solicitor.—You are Chairman of the Board of Guardians?—Yes.

24238. What is your opinion as regard the expediency of dissolving the union?—My opinion is that a general scheme ought to be introduced, and one union in the county would be sufficient; that is my own personal opinion, and to have harmless lunatics brought into an auxiliary asylum, have a labour colony for tramps in some central part of Ireland, and send all able-bodied tramps and paupers to work in this labour colony. I would make all these work in the labour colony, and make the labour colony pay for itself as well as possible. I believe that workhouses, as they are carried on presently, are only encouraging pauperism and idleness. I would send the children to industrial schools, and have those tramps committed to the labour colony, the same as you presently send children to reformatories.

24239. CHAIRMAN.—What would you do with the sick?—I would establish cottage hospitals where I think they would be necessary.

24240. Take your own union; what hospital accommodation would be desirable in that union?—In case that the union is dissolved you should have a hospital at Bealadangan.

24241. Would you have one at Oughterard?—Yes; we have a splendid one there presently.

24242. Mr. GEORGE.—If the union were broken up would you keep a hospital at Oughterard?—I think so.

24243. And another at Bealadangan?—Yes, unless you get the Galway Union to share in with us and establish one at Costello Bay. You could take off a good piece of Galway and put it there for Carraroe. There is no doubt, from my experience since the Act of 1898 came into operation, I have seen any quantity of money lost as fever in Carraroe and Spiddal districts, and if you take off from Knock to the end of Gormans Island and amalgamate that part for the business of a hospital with Carraroe and Gormans you could establish a hospital at Costello Bay, and it would be a great saving; I believe that several valuable lives have been lost there for want of proper hospital accommodation.

24244. CHAIRMAN.—And you think Bealadangan would be a good centre; either that or Costello?—Yes.

24245. You would put it at Costello if it could be a joint charge on Galway?—Yes; I would attach a couple of divisions of Galway Union to Carraroe and Gormans.

24246. How far is Costello from Galway?—Fifteen Irish miles.

Mr. GEORGE.—Twenty-two, I think.

Witness.—It is twenty-four statute miles nearly.

24247. CHAIRMAN.—There would be no further hospital accommodation necessary than one at Oughterard; there is nothing wanted for Leenane?—You should detach Bannaghraha from the Westport Union, if you establish it there, because the population around Leenane, in the Oughterard Union, is very small.

24248. Mr. GEORGE.—I suppose the Oughterard Board, at present, are in a very good financial position?—We are the dearest union in the county at present.

24249. Are your rates very low?—They are; they are lower than Galway or Clifton.

24250. Would you like to be amalgamated with any other union?—I would not touch them with a forty-foot pole if they don't manage their affairs better. Since we got into possession of the union in 1898 we have been palling down our rates every day since, and our neighbours, who have a higher valuation than us cannot come near us at all. Unless you get a county-at-large scheme I would rather stay as we are.

24251. CHAIRMAN.—You are the poorest union in the county?—We have the lowest valuation; our population is over 18,000, with a valuation of £50,500, and still we have a cheaper rate than either Galway, or Clifton, and Ballinrobe only beats us by ½d., where they have a valuation of sixty-seven or sixty-eight thousand pounds.

24252. Mr. GEORGE.—Considering the situation of the union if there is anything like amalgamation what would you suggest?—I think our place would be a very suitable place for an auxiliary asylum, for the simple reason that we have twelve acres of land attached, and if we had harmless lunatics there we could make them cultivate the soil, and instead of getting £10, as at present, for the grass, we might make every acre worth £20 or £30 by cultivating it, and the situation is a very good one. I happen to be myself one of the governors of the Ballinrobe Asylum.

24253. There is room for an institution of the kind you think in the district?—As a member of the County Council we had to pay a good deal of money to buy land to attach to the Ballinrobe Asylum. I don't think there is so much land attached to any other workhouse in the county as there is to ours, and it is a pity to see beautiful land like that not cultivated, and it would be recreation for these harmless lunatics and a fine healthy exercise for them, and they would make it profitable, and it is quite accessible to any part of the county.

24254. CHAIRMAN.—What about the part of the union in the barony of Ross?—On the Glenbar side; in case that you did amalgamate the barony of Ross part of the Oughterard Union with Ballinrobe it would not be advisable to amalgamate it as a district because I find that the union charges in Ballinrobe are only ½d. in the £; we are 1s. 4½d. But then our district charge is only 9d., whereas the Ballinrobe district charge is 1s. 6d.; it would be a fine saving for that part of the barony of Ross if they are put in with Ballinrobe, provided they are put with us as a district charge; but if you charge us the district and union charge we make nothing out of it, and it is a big inconvenience, and we would have very little control over our own affairs when we get into Ballinrobe because there would only be an odd one of us able to get there.

24255. Are you a resident in Ross?—Yes; I live fourteen miles from Oughterard, but I would be twenty-two from Ballinrobe.

24256. Where do you live?—Between Maam Cross and Leenane. I would not join Westport at all except, as far as the cottage hospital is concerned, if they want advice with us then.

24257. Mr. GEORGE.—Generally, what is your opinion on the amalgamation scheme?—I believe, if there is not a general county-at-large scheme, there is one thing I would extend—that is the outdoor relief; I would make the union charges for the county a county-at-large charge, but so far as outdoor relief is concerned I would make two-thirds of it a county-at-large charge and the remainder a dispensary district charge, and the administration of that relief put into the hands of a committee, such as the old dispensary committee.

24258. CHAIRMAN.—A local committee?—A local committee for each dispensary district in order to put a check on them; they would have to pay their proportion of the two-thirds, and they should pay the remaining one-third themselves in order to check them.

24259. You think that would be a sufficient check?—I believe it would at present; we have a union-at-large charge, and the Carraroe man, when he comes into Oughterard, is quite stiff and does not care a button—maybe a man that is not paying ½d. in the whole union. I remember Mr. O'Hara's remarks a while ago, and I agree with him thoroughly, and I think it is an extraordinary thing, that a man who is paying ½d. rates, can go round and put his hand in other people's pockets and make them pay. The man that pays the paper ought to call the tune.

24260. Mr. GEORGE.—Some people are very conscientious—I know the sort of conscience a lot of them have.

Mr. P. J.
O'Malley.

Nov 5, 1904.

Mr P. J.
O'Malley.

24251. CHAIRMAN.—If there were a hospital at Lanesme it would serve the small population in your neighbourhood; it would not serve Maam itself.—It would be nearly as easy for them to go to Oughterard; it would serve Kilmichael, but I think it would be too expensive, except Westport Union did not in part part of the cost. You know we have no nurse there presently; the only thing I would suggest would be if you could get a hospital established in it, of course at a cheap rate, and if the Congested Districts Board helped as out with it we would not mind losing a little on it, and if you would have to have a caretaker, that would mean something.

24252. The nurse would be the caretaker, and she would be available for district nursing as well.—I understand. I think it is rather premature to mind about Lanesme; Father Flaherty might be able to give you an idea about that. I know, as case of emigration, you want one at Beldangan or Castella, and it would be more judicious if part of Galway Union were put with us.

24253. Mr. Conway.—Your idea is that unless there is a general amalgamation it would be injurious to your union?—I would not part with the present administration of our union for a good deal; I would not like to join others unless there was a general scheme.

24254. And you are justified in that by the rates?—Certainly; we are 1s. in the £ cheaper than Clifton, and nearly as cheap as Ballinrobe, and we can manage our own affairs very well.

24255. Would it not be some inconvenience to the poor if there was only one union?—The scheme I have in my head would mean very little inconvenience if you extend the outdoor relief.

24256. CHAIRMAN.—What people would be eligible? At present the people who are eligible are two or three definite classes of destitute persons; would you increase the discretion of the Guardians and enable them to give outdoor relief to any poor person?—Anybody that they thought required it.

24257. Poverty?—Exactly. At present we have a rule in Oughterard Union that we don't give outdoor relief to any person who does not get a doctor's certificate that they are unfit for removal to hospital. There are lots of poor people who would rather die than come into the workhouse, and if they only get a couple of shillings outside, instead of getting us, as it does, from 2s. 11d. to 4s. 2d. a week, per head, or you might say 5s., including clothing, and if they get half of that they would stay outside and not ask to come in.

24258. Mr. MURKIN.—You would practically give no outdoor relief at all?—We do give a good deal.

24259. You say you only give it on the certificate of the doctor?—What we have to do is to bring them into the workhouse and they cost a good deal more.

24260. Then you don't give outdoor relief to anybody without a doctor's certificate?—It is something over £200 a year which is a big lot in a small union like ours.

24271. You say you only give it to those who have a doctor's certificate that they are unfit for removal?—Yes; we make others come in and they cost more.

24272. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you have so many poor that you cannot really begin?—We have an awful crowd; there are several that we cannot give a penny at all to; down in Roscommon, Carragee, Gorman, and Letterman; there are dozens of people in those districts that their valuation is not 5s.; there are a lot more with no valuation; they live on commons. I have known the rate collector to take the makings of their clothes away with him instead of the rate; he could not get it any other way, and this year they are worse than ever.

24273. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you like to see the children boarded out?—I would send the children to industrial schools if possible; that would be my idea.

24274. Have you any children boarded out in your union?—No; we have only six altogether.

24275. You never tried the boarding out system?—No; I don't approve of that at all because they treat them very badly—all I saw of them, and I move a good deal through the country.

24276. I thought you said you had none boarded out?—We have not any, but I go a good deal through the country and have seen some boarded out children.

24277. CHAIRMAN.—In what union have you seen the boarded out children treated badly?—In various places; they have some in Ballinrobe, but I don't like to go into other unions.

24278. We don't want names, but in what union have you seen them badly treated?—I would not like to say, but as a rule what I have seen of them.—

CHAIRMAN.—We would value the evidence more if it were substantiated somewhat.

24279. Mr. MURKIN.—This gentleman makes a statement against a system that has many advocates, and we would like to know what basis he has for making the statement?—I would not like to mention where I saw it.

CHAIRMAN.—Then we don't ask you.

Mr. Conway.—As a matter of fact I don't think he ought to.

Witness. I might hurt the feelings of other people. Mr. Conway.—He is making a general statement.

Witness.—Another suggestion I would make would be that children in the workhouses presently be sent out to a school convent and not be kept in a workhouse.

24280. CHAIRMAN.—The Guardians have power to do that of course?—I have an idea of trying that in Oughterard yet, in case we are not done away with. I never knew yet, during my experience, I knew very few feared in a workhouse but went back to the workhouse in the finish. I have seen a few cases that did not, but I was not old enough anyway to know the history of all of them.

Mr. J. P.
O'Flaherty.

24281. Mr. Conway.—You are a magistrate at Oughterard?—Yes.

24282. And I suppose you are connected with the Oughterard Union for a number of years?—Nearly thirty years.

24283. About the rates of the different unions?—The rates in Oughterard are lower than in Clifton or Galway; I am opposed to the question of amalgamation.

24284. CHAIRMAN.—If it were shown to you that a saving would result from an amalgamation scheme put before you, would you be in favour of amalgamation?—Quite so, if it were proved to me.

24285. If it were proved that, without hardship to the sick poor, amalgamation would mean a saving, you would be in favour of it?—Yes.

24286. Mr. Conway.—But at present you think your union stands well?—I think it is one of the best managed unions. The rates in Clifton are 1s. 8d. on land and 2s. 3d. on buildings; Galway is 1s. 8d. on land and 2s. 7d. on buildings; Oughterard is only 1s. 4d. on land and 2s. 10d. on buildings.

24287. As regards the district, it is a large and poor one?—Yes.

24288. Would it be a hardship on the poor people to be sent a distance?—I consider so—away from their friends—they like to be near their friends when they are in the workhouse.

24289. What is your opinion about the general scheme; do you agree with Mr. O'Malley?—I do; I think he has gone thoroughly into it; he knows the district better than I do. I attend the Board regularly, but I consider my duties end there.

24290. You are a large landowner there?—Yes.

Mr. J. Mullins.

I fully agree with what Mr. O'Malley and Mr. O'Flaherty have said.

24291. Mr. Conway.—You are connected with the union for many years?—Nineteen years.

Mr. J. MULLINS, J.P., examined.

24292. You are Chairman of the Guardians?—Yes.

24293. And do you fully agree with what Mr. O'Flaherty and Mr. O'Malley have said?—I do.

24294. So you are against amalgamation?—Most decidedly.

REV. MICHAEL M'HOON, P.R., ROSSMACK, EXAMINED.

Nov. 3, 190

24295. CHAIRMAN.—You are Parish Priest of Ross-mack?—Yes.

24296. Mr. Carey.—Your parish, I suppose, extends very considerably?—It is a very extensive parish—including land and water.

24297. What is your opinion about amalgamation? I don't come here to speak about amalgamation; I leave that to the Guardians; it is more about the sick I come here.

24298. CHAIRMAN.—What about the sick?—They are daily neglected in my parish, for the simple reason that some of them have to be taken thirty and thirty-two miles to the workhouse in Oughtermond in case of sickness. I have known patients to have died shortly after going into the workhouse, from the long journey. I knew a girl who was taken thirty-two miles, and to reach the workhouse car she had to walk two miles across the mountains; it was a very wet day; she was suffering from fever, and she died inside the workhouse, not of fever, but of pneumonia; she got wet, and was carried in that condition for thirty-two miles.

24299. Is your idea that a cottage at some available centre would be the best?—Yes.

24300. What is your idea of a fair centre for all the surrounding districts?—I think Bealadangan would be a fair centre; that is where the doctor of the district lives, and Lady Dudley's nurse.

24301. You heard of the suggestion about Costello?—I would not approve of it; they are two separate districts; it would not be so central; there are about

1,000 families quite convenient to Bealadangan—800 in Carraro, and 200 to another part of my parish, not to speak of Carrac and Ross-mack—that are awfully neglected. In a short time—three years and four months in Ross-mack—I have known two or three to die for want of proper treatment; no doctor to be had, and the weather being awfully rough, and coming from Bealadangan he would have to travel thirty-two miles in some cases, and I have known three or four, for want of a certified duly trained matronly nurse, lose their lives. I have known three cases. The doctor lives the other side of the Bay, and in rough weather it is impossible for anybody to come.

24302. It is fairly sheltered water?—It is not. There are days you could not possibly cross. It is fairly sheltered.

24303. As a rule it is fairly smooth water?—Only in summer time; not so a rule in winter time.

24304. If you were there to-day you would have calm water?—Yes, but during February and March there are squalls.

24305. Mr. Carey.—Would it not be worse if these patients had to be sent to Galway?—I am anxious for a local hospital.

24306. As regards the union itself, would you offer any opinion?—If you ask me, I certainly would be in favour of doing away with Oughtermond Union.

24307. On what ground?—I don't care to go into the question of ground.

CHAIRMAN.—He wants a local hospital, and has no other object in coming here.

REV. JOHN HEALY, P.R., CARRARO, EXAMINED.

Rev John Healy, p.r.

24309. Bealadangan is in your parish?—It had been, at one time, but is not now.

24310. At all events you know Bealadangan thoroughly; do you think it would be a reasonably fair centre?—Unless there was another portion—a western portion of the Galway Union attached—I would. If there was no portion of the western part of Galway attached then I would say Bealadangan would be a central and convenient place for the district.

24311. Take Costello for the people in Lettermullan and Gormanac?—Bealadangan would be more convenient for them.

24312. And then for Carraro peninsula?—It would be just as convenient as Costello.

24313. From your parish they would go by boat to Costello?—From Gormanac they would go by boat, but not from my part of the parish.

24314. You would take them by road, almost from Bealadangan?—Yes.

24315. Mr. MURKIN.—What about Lettermullan?—It is nearer to Bealadangan than Carraro or Lettermullan.

24316. CHAIRMAN.—The people that would benefit most by Costello would be the Carraro people and people around there?—All Carraro and the western portion of Galway, if there should be a hospital established at Costello.

24317. From the most southerly point of Carraro, they would have to go a long way to Costello?—They would not; it would be about the same distance as to Bealadangan—hardly any difference.

24318. It would not make any difference to your parish which was selected?—No, hardly any.

24319. Either Bealadangan or Costello would be practically equally convenient?—It would.

24320. Mr. Carey.—Of course you are in favour of a local hospital?—Yes.

24321. Would you think the Congested Districts Board should contribute?—I don't know what they might do; I think there was a movement made in that direction some time ago; they were approached on that very matter some time ago, and they refused to give any assistance.

24322. You are in one of the most populous and poor districts—very congested?—So they are.

24323. Would the suggestion come from you that the Congested Districts Board might contribute, if they thought fit, to a local hospital?

CHAIRMAN.—They have a great deal to do with their little income.

Witness.—I think they ought, by reason of the poverty of the district.

24324. Mr. Carey.—It is nearly all going to Mayo?

—There is only one thing I wish to add; it is this. I am just eight and a half years there now, and every second year—I think there are some gentlemen present who can bear me out—every second year since I went there we had a most serious outbreak of fever, and the people there are so badly bowed that there can be no such thing as isolation, and the result is that whole families are stricken down; that would go to show I think, to all present, the great and absolute necessity there is for a hospital in that district; and furthermore, I would say, that being such a populous district larger provision should be made for it than was mentioned a while ago for Clifton. I would suggest that twelve beds would not be sufficient for Ross-mack and Carraro.

24325. CHAIRMAN.—It is a dangerous thing to ask too much, and there is no doubt about it that a hospital with twelve beds would be an enormous boon to the locality, whether it would be enough or not would depend on experience. My reason for making any reference at all to the matter is that you seem to think that twelve beds would be required for Carraro; well, Carraro and Ross-mack are twice as populous as Carrac and their provision should be made on a larger scale.

24326. What we said about Carrac was, not exceeding twelve; but at all events you would be very glad to see a local hospital of such a size as those who were really convenient with statistics in disease would consider enough to start with?—The Poor Law inspectors, going round from time to time, have seen the necessity.

REV. J. FLATTERY, G.O., LEONANE, EXAMINED.

Rev. J. Flattery, G.O.

24327. CHAIRMAN.—You are at present at Leonane?—Yes.

24328. You have heard some evidence about the hospital accommodation at Leonane?—I think a cottage hospital would be very much required at places like Leonane, Bealadangan, and Carraro; all these places, remote from Workhouse hospitals, would require the accommodation of cottage hospitals.

24329. A few beds?—Yes. With reference to the evidence given by Father Healy; I think there was a slight misunderstanding, and I can make a suggestion which would tend to clear it. I think Father Healy understood the twelve beds as intended for the accommodation of ordinary patients and fever patients as well; I think the twelve beds would be sufficient for the ordinary patients at Carragee; but in the case of an outbreak of fever, such as Father Healy speaks of, and although I have not had a great deal of experience, I have been through a good many epidemics, and I think that when an epidemic breaks out in a district, whether there is a cottage hospital there or not, for a purpose of that kind the Local Government Board should have temporary movable hospitals that could be put up and taken down in sections.

Dec. 3, 1904.
 Rev. J.
 Killybeg, Co. D.

24330. Tents?—I would not say tents, but such structures as the police huts.

24331. Tents are used in some places?—Very well; if tents are approved of they would do. And when an outbreak of fever takes place there should be, at once, accommodation given for ten or twelve fever patients, and kept there while the outbreak lasted, and be moved when the fever was stamped out. Of course there should be special nurses sent down for that, but the dispensary doctor could attend both to the permanent cottage hospital and, when it was required, to this temporary hospital. Now in Spiddal last year and the year before there was a frightful outbreak of fever, close on sixty people had to be attended to, and there was a good deal of suffering, and I am sure loss of life caused by the removal of those poor people to the hospital in Galway. There was a good deal of trouble taken to have them removed as soon as the fever appeared, so as to isolate them. A temporary hospital would have been a very useful and necessary thing there at that time, and other places I saw. And then as to the permanent cottage hospital; I think if it was established in such a place as Beaslodangan or Costello; it is a mere matter of detail where it would be, if the principle were agreed to; it would be afterwards a matter of arrangement the place it would be.

24332. Where do you think would be a good centre?

—If there is to be a cottage hospital for the west part of Galway Union, and a cottage hospital for the south part of Oughternan, the right place would be Beaslodangan for Oughternan, and the right one for Galway would be at Tully; but if there is to be one cottage hospital to suit a united district, made up of part of Galway and part of Oughternan, then I think Costello would be most convenient for all purposes.

24333. How far is Tully from Spiddal?—Six Irish miles.

24334. Of course Spiddal would go to Galway?—Yes.

24335. How far is Tully from Galway?—Sixteen miles. Then as to Leenane; I think it would be useful to have a cottage hospital at Leenane; no matter what you say about the suppression of unions or amalgamation Leenane, in any case, will be a very long distance away from whatever union it is attached to. On the suppression of Oughternan, if it is suppressed, even as it is in a long distance from any town—Westport, Clifden, or Ballinrobe—and the population to be served is a pretty large one, and I think there would be more villages to be served by it than Mr. O'Malley speaks of.

24336. Have you many inhabitants of Westport Union in your part of the parish?—I think there are only twenty-two.

24337. Do you go any distance up the Biffe river?—No.

24338. Is there a large population between the Biffe Bridge and the Asallagh Bridge?—Not very large; but there are 230 families in the district I serve, and there is also part of the Clifden Union that comes very close to it, and to which the cottage hospital would be very useful.

24339. It is very thickly populated?—Part of it is thickly inhabited—down near the shore. There are forty-six houses in Glasham; that immediate district is thickly populated, and it is only eight miles from Leenane, four or five from Tully. Tully is three from Letterfrack, and Letterfrack is nine from Clifden.

MR. MICHAEL CREK, P.L.O., Mountbellew, examined.

Mr. Michael
 Crek.

24340. CHAIRMAN.—The Commission have got the resolution passed by the Guardians? That considering the proper maintenance of the poor we believe that the amalgamation of this union would not, in any way, benefit the people of the district?—That is the unanimous opinion both of the Guardians and of the people of the district.

24341. On what was that opinion based?—Our rate, in comparison with the other unions around us, are about 8d. in the £ under any of them.

24342. For Poor Law purposes or all purposes together?—For Poor Law purposes; our rate, in 1904, on buildings, was 1s. 6½d. and on land, 2s. 4½d.; it was 1s. 5d. this year, and 2s. 1½d. on land, and 2s. 1½d. in Tans, and 2s. 1½d. in Ballinacree, so I think it would be a very great hardship, and would not be treating us fairly, if we were amalgamated.

24343. What do you take to be about your average annual rate?—1s. 5d.

24344. Mr. MURKIN.—That includes road maintenance?—No; union, 1s. 5d.

24345. CHAIRMAN.—If you found out that under some scheme to be drawn up your rating would be brought below that, what would then be your opinion?—Considering that there is 8d. or so between ourselves and all the other unions that might be amalgamated with us, I think it would be a very great drop that would benefit us in any way.

24346. Supposing such a drop took place, what would be your view?—I would have no objection.

24347. It was evident that a drop would take place would you then see any objection to amalgamation?—We were compelled by the Local Government body to spend £2,500 on the improvement of the workhouse.

Mr. J. C. McDonnell.—I am the representative of the Mountbellew district on the County Council; that is the whole rate—the total amount of the union—large and district rate.

24348. CHAIRMAN.—So we thought, but taking it even on that basis, whatever the amount be, if you found that there would be a saving under the head of union charges by amalgamation do you think the feeling of the Guardians and of the ratepayers would still be opposed to amalgamation?—I think not; I don't believe there would; I don't see why there should be.

24349. Mr. MURKIN.—Your objection is altogether based on the question of expense?—Not altogether; we have spent such a lot of money on the workhouse, fixing it up, and also in the interests of the poor, I think it would be very hard on the poor to be taking them away long distances from Mountbellew; it is seventeen or eighteen miles to Tans, and it is the same distance to Ballinacree.

24350. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing you were still left hospital accommodation?—The hospital accommodation would certainly be required. The inmates are kept, I think, very well, considering that it is 4s. 10d. per head—the cost—and our rates are a good deal less. I don't think we ought to be amalgamated.

24351. Mr. MURKIN.—The number in the house is not large?—No, it is not.

24352. What is your view as regards the children; do you think they ought to be continued in the workhouse?—No; for the last six or seven years they have been boarded out with us and I think it has worked admirably.

24353. Would you approve of the Guardians getting more power in regard to the children of parents who don't take care of them?—I think so; I think they ought.

24354. You think the Guardians should be empowered to take children away from neglectful parents?—If they are very neglectful, but I don't approve of taking children from their parents.

24355. That would be a question altogether for the Guardians to decide themselves, as to the qualities of the parents?—I don't know that.

24356. They have that power in England already; do you think it is a good thing to have these children taken from their parents?—It all depends on who the parents are.

24357. Suppose the tramp class?—Certainly; that unless done that won't provide for the children—stick them in a workhouse and take them out and move about the country.

Nov. 5, 1904.

Mr. Michael Carr.

24358. Do you think that something should be done with regard to them?—I do; I don't believe in putting children into institutions.

24359. You would rather board them out in the country?—Yes.

24361. If they were taken out and the children taken out you would have very few in your house; do you think it is wise or economical thing to keep up a large institution, that costs a great deal of money for maintenance and firing, for a very small number of people?—Talking from a selfish point of view of the ratepayers of the district I know it would benefit us to keep the lunatics there in the future.

24362. Why do you say that?—Because our rate is so much lower than in the surrounding districts.

24363. But supposing you were still allowed to manage your own affairs and have nothing to do with other unions, and continue as a Board of Guardians to carry on your occupations, and only provide for the poor of your own district?—I don't see any objection.

24364. There would be no pooling of paupers; do you see any objection to that?—No, I do not.

24365. Have you many tramps at your house?—A good number.

24366. What would you suggest about them?—I don't think it would be wise to close the house against them and not have a place for them.

24367. Would it be any use to try to make them work?—I believe it would be impossible to do so.

24368. Don't you think, having a house there convenient for them, tends to keep the class in existence, whereas if the house were removed and these people punished for imposing on the public, vagrancy would lose its attractions?—I don't think it would make any difference whatsoever; they would sleep under a haystack if they did not sleep in the house or some other place.

24369. You think it is better just to have the house for them?—I do, or some place where they could be kept.

24370. As an alternative would it not be better to make provision that they get a night's lodging and not keep a house for the accommodation of a class like that?—When they get a night's lodging in towns they are awfully demoralising; in the small towns through the country it does a lot of harm to the towns—drinking round, drinking all night.

24371. Would you agree that they be turned out to the relief to look after them?—I would suggest they should be just left as they are.

24372. Those hardened vagrants that waste a life of idleness, come through the country leaving black-mud?—If anything could be done it would be a good thing if they could be made work.

24373. Do you give much outdoor relief to your union?—Yes, we do.

24375. But for no other purpose?—Of course the present system works well enough but I think divisional rating would be better for outdoor relief.

24376. Greater supervision and more care?—Yes.

24377. CHAIRMAN.—A greater motive for care?—Yes; I think it would be a great thing if the Galway Hospital was abolished; it would be much better for the unions of the county if they sent on their patients—the few they do send here—on direct to Dublin and have them properly treated; they would come down sooner and be better treated.

24378. Dr. BAKER.—Why do you say that?—I believe the facility in Dublin are better able to perform operations in big hospitals than they might be in Galway.

24379. If the Hospital is well equipped it is a great inconvenience going so far?—They have to come into Galway now, once they are in the train an hour or two makes very little difference. We have to pay £150 to it. It would be much cheaper and I think it would be better.

24380. How many patients do you send?—Not many; perhaps twelve in the year altogether.

24381. Are you limited to that number?—We are not, but that is about the average; I don't know that we do send twelve, five or six, or seven.

24382. How are you assessed at £150, on your rateable value?—I think so.

24383. Is all the country assessed at the same rate?—Different districts have to pay more according to the rateable value I believe.

24384. But the poundage is not different?—No, in the £. all over the county.

24385. Mr. MURPHY.—Is it not a county contribution fixed on what the grand jury used to give.

CHAIRMAN.—No; a special Act of Parliament.

24386. Dr. BAKER.—Do you not think the benefit might be increased. For instance, if you could get nurses to Mountbellew and other hospitals, if there could be some interchange of nurses from the county infirmary, instead of when you want extra nurses in those districts, getting them from Dublin, if you had a staff at the county infirmary and you could get your nurses there at a nominal amount would you not get greater benefit for your contributions?—We get very little benefit from it.

24387. But might not the benefit be increased without any great additional expense; perhaps you have not thought of it?—I have not thought of it, but I don't see that it would be a benefit; I don't see why you could not get nurses in Dublin just as well as even Galway.

24388. When you get a nurse from Dublin it costs a guinea and a half a week and her train fare in addition and car hire, whereas if you get them in Galway they are in the county infirmary at a yearly salary of £35 a year; if you could get those nurses so how much cheaper it would be?—That is one consideration, but I don't think it would outweigh the other consideration. When we have a patient that has to be sent away it would be better to send him to one of the hospitals in Dublin.

24389. What do the hospitals in Dublin charge you at present?—2s. a day.

24390. Do you know that does not cover the cost?—That is what they charge and their charge is here, and also we have to pay 3d. in the £.

24391. 2s. a day does not cover the maintenance in Dublin, therefore you would be receiving benefit at the expense of other people.

CHAIRMAN.—You would not object to that?—I don't see why that is an argument against it.

24392. Dr. BAKER.—If it were proved the Dublin hospitals could not afford to do it; they are glad to get good cases for operation?—They are doing it at present. I do not see why they could not do it on larger numbers; the numbers at present from Mountbellew would be only five or six in the year.

24393. I thought you said twelve a few minutes ago?—I am not sure, indeed.

Mr. JOHN CONNORSHAM, Chairman, Mount Bellew Union, examined.

Mr. John Connorsham

24394. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you would like to add to Mr. Carr's evidence?—Not very much indeed. It is the feeling of the people there that they have managed their affairs very well, and taking a comparison with the unions around, although the unions are larger they treat their people even better, they have adopted the scale of diet approved of by the Local Government Board, and, in fact, improved on that diet. We are cheaper in the £ than any other union around us.

24395. If it were shown to you that amalgamation would save money what would your feelings be then?

I would be for that provided the people were treated properly; but regarding the proper treatment of the poor, I would be entirely opposed to going a distance.

24396. You would not like to send the sick a distance?—By no means; we have an up-to-date hospital.

24397. Supposing a hospital were left at Mountbellew, would you feel any hesitation about sending those who were able to travel a distance?—No; but we have scarcely any besides sick and aged and infirm, and I think, even with these, it is a great hardship; they are natives of the place.

Nov. 5, 1894.

Mr. John
Cecillngham.

24398. How many natives of Mountbellew would you have in the workhouse?—I don't think there are many outside inmates.

24399. How many are in the workhouse who live in, or adjacent to, the town or village of Mountbellew?—I think all the people living in the workhouse are natives of the union.

24399A. Of course; but how many people would you have in the workhouse who belonged to Mountbellew village or town?—Not very many.

24400. Then it is only the people who belong to the village or town who would have a different view from their windows. Have the others a greater affection for Mountbellew?—Certainly they have; it is the nearest centre to where they were reared; it is in the centre of the union, and they don't like to go far from Mountbellew.

24401. Take a person at Abascoagh; would he care a row of pins whether he went to Ballinasloe or Mountbellew?—No; but Abascoagh is not in our union; we go within a mile of it.

24402. Within a mile of Abascoagh; would they care whether they went to your union or Ballinasloe?—I don't know, it depends upon how they are treated; we treat them well.

24403. So far as locality goes there would not be much difference to a man living within a mile of Abascoagh whether he went to Ballinasloe or Mountbellew?—I really could not say; we don't wish to be amalgamated, because, if we are amalgamated with a larger union the Guardians won't attend, and even if they attend they will have no hearing; we would have taxation without representation.

Dr. J. F. Ryan, Loughrea, examined.

Dr. J. F.
Ryan.

24412. CHAIRMAN.—The Loughrea Board of Guardians have passed the following resolutions: "We consider the unions of Glenties, Gartullaghan, Glenties, and Portlanna ought to be amalgamated. Glenties with Glenties, Gartullaghan with Glenties and partly with Loughrea, Ballinasloe with Glenties, partly with Loughrea, and partly with Glenties, Gartullaghan with Glenties and Glenties, and Portlanna with Loughrea."—Those are the recommendations.

24413. The reason the Guardians made that recommendation about Ballinasloe was in order that it might be made from an auxiliary asylum.

24414. Owing to its proximity to the asylum?—Quite so.

24415. What did they recommend should be done with the workhouses of the other divided union?—My own personal opinion is that some of them should be made dwellings for artisans and labourers; they have very nice little plots.

24416. You would pull down the workhouse and build cottages?—No, but I would accommodate them as tenement houses.

24417. Flats?—Yes; and there could be workshops attached, and a library.

24418. That would be quite an existence in community; do you think it would work well?—It may.

24419. Would you be afraid of it from what you know?—I would be a little afraid, but I think to convert them into technical schools is rather a doubtful business too.

24420. They recommend the boarding out of all children up to ten years of age, and that when they reach that age they should be sent to one of the unions which may be converted into a technical school?—Yes.

24421. So that one workhouse would be an auxiliary asylum, another a technical school for children when they would be taught trades, and as regards the other workhouses they don't make any recommendation?—No.

24422. You suggest, personally, that they might be used for housing people who are insufficiently and badly housed. "We recommend that each electoral division be the area of charge for outdoor relief, and after three years' residence in any electoral division a person should be qualified to receive outdoor relief in that division?—I am not, personally, in favour of divisional rating.

24423. The Guardians suggested that but you think that union rating is better?—Yes; there is a considerable amount of clerical work connected with divisional working.

24424. It may be worth the work?—Scarcely; they are slower now than when they had divisional rating.

24404. What union was Mountbellew in before the union was built?—I cannot say.

24405. Well it was in the Ballinasloe Union some time?—It must be a very short time.

24406. What objection do you see to its going back to Ballinasloe?—Slight objection.

24407. It was there once?—There were in the old times and I hope it will never occur again; they would die at home rather than go there; it is only the demented go there from our charges. We board nearly all our children out and we find it a very good thing.

24408. Would you wish that the Board of Guardians had power to board out all the children that come into their hands, not merely the demented and orphans?—Not before they are four or five years of age.

24409. As soon as they have reached a suitable age would you like all children to be boarded out?—Yes; as soon as they are able to go to school.

24410. About the tramps?—They are an evil; it is very hard to know how to treat them, but I would much rather accommodate them in the union than having them roving about the roads and perhaps turning the neighbours' hay and sleeping here and there.

24411. Do you think the liberty of these people ought not to be interfered with?—I think so; if the police took the matter up and wanted to know if they were going into a certain place, for employment, to accommodate them, but to have them making a nuisance of it and going from one union to another, I would be for doing something to stop that.

24425. Your Board of Guardians is in favour of the inmates of hospitals and lunatic asylums being compelled to pay for their maintenance according to their means?—Those that were able to pay.

24426. That would be for the local body to determine. The Guardians are also of opinion that tramps or casuals should not be admitted to workhouses; what alternative would they suggest?—I think these young fellows that would get a certificate from a medical officer that they were able to work should be brought before a magistrate and sent to prison.

24427. Was there anything else that you would like, either personally or on behalf of the Guardians, to mention to us?—No; nothing else.

24428. Dr. Brogan.—What is your idea about the county hospital?—It was not very well equipped up to lately, but I visited the place recently and I saw they are making vast improvements; I think it would be a great pity to do away with the county infirmary.

24429. When it is properly equipped, and gets into working order, do you think its reputation will be improved and thereby its usefulness extended?—I would be decidedly in favour of retaining it; I think too, in connection with the Queen's College, if you have not a hospital the medical school would be done away with eventually.

24430. But apart from that, do you think it useful for the sick poor?—I think so.

24431. Have you any idea on the question of treating consumption?—That sanatorium treatment is merely on its trial; I don't think it would be well that there should be a large expenditure for a bit yet until we have some experience of that treatment.

24432. There has been experience now for a great number of years?—I have sent some men to the sanatorium in Wicklow, and I have seen others that have gone there and they have not been a bit benefited by the treatment.

24433. CHAIRMAN.—To what stage did you send them?—Some in the initial stage.

24434. Were you able to get them in in the initial stage or did you only make application when they were in the initial stage?—We made application in the initial stage.

24435. How long had they to wait?—Two months; some were chronic cases.

24436. They would be only fit for isolation not for cure?—Some of the cases that I sent should have improved, I think.

24437. How many have you sent?—Nine or ten; but I have seen others that had been there.

24438. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you think the results are not encouraging?—I think they are on their trial; they are not decidedly one way or the other.

24433. CHAIRMAN.—What is the general professional opinion so far as authoritative pronouncements are concerned? The general opinion is that they are favourable to those sanatoria.

24434. Mr. MURKIN.—Your own practical experience is not continuing?—I have not a very decided opinion one way or the other.

24441. CHAIRMAN.—You have an open mind?—Yes.

24442. Mr. MURKIN.—But you say you did not see or see cases there and did not get beneficial results?—Yes.

24443. Dr. BRIDGES.—Have you seen much spreading of consumption in your district?—No; our district is very free from consumption.

24444. CHAIRMAN.—Apart from the question of recovery from phthisis, you admit that it is of great importance to isolate them?—Yes I do; I believe in isolation.

24445. For the purpose of isolation, even if there is no cure effected, do you think it would be important to have a sanatorium for that purpose, to prevent the spread of the disease, apart from the question of curing the individual?—I think people's own homes should be made more healthy.

24446. You have a good many one and two-roomed houses in your district?—Yes.

Mr. THOMAS HIGGINS, J.P., Chairman, Tamm Union, examined.

24453. CHAIRMAN.—You have not passed any resolution?—One resolution. At that time we did not intend to send any witnesses; since then we changed our mind.

24454. "That we, the Board of Guardians of the Tamm Union, are of opinion that it would not be in the interests of the sick poor or the ratepayers to dissolve or amalgamate any portion of this union; the Guardians, however, would have no objection should it be thought advisable to have the outlying portions of other unions added to the Tamm Union, which is most central; there is accommodation in the workhouse and hospital for a good many more inmates than have been in the house for some years past." You go up to the Mayo boundary towards Claremorris?—Yes; we are on the boundary of Mountbellew and Glenties.

24455. You used to have a part of Mountbellew and Glenties before. You are a member of the County Council too?—Yes.

24456. Has the Council considered the question of amalgamation?—They have passed a resolution in favour of amalgamation; the Vice-Chairman of the County Council is here.

24457. Did you agree with the resolution yourself?—Yes, I supported it.

24458. That resolution was in favour of breaking up some of the unions?—On the general question of amalgamation; it was only on Saturday last we decided on sending witnesses to be examined, and I did not time to submit a statement of the evidence I intend to give; I wrote it out, and purpose reading it now; it may be the shortest way. Personally I am in favour of amalgamation. The Guardians of Tamm Union have repeatedly passed resolutions in favour of amalgamation. When the Tamm workhouse was built it was supposed to accommodate 600. I am since informed by the clerk, it was for 800. Now we have only 108. When I say I am in favour of amalgamation I am not in favour of curtailing the powers at present possessed by District Councils or Boards of Guardians of any union in the county, neither am I in favour of amalgamating the electoral divisions of one union with the other. The divisions of the several unions should be allowed to remain, as they presently are and the Guardians should be allowed to transact their own business in their own union. I am in favour of removing the paupers from four or five of the existing unions to a large and more central one, but the paupers to be removed should always be a charge on the rates of the union from which they came. I am in favour of maintaining a hospital in each union for urgent and temporary cases, but they should be only retained there until they were convalescent or could, with safety, be removed to permanent institutions.

24459. You say you are in favour of keeping the unions as they are?—Yes, for this reason; if the able-bodied inmates were removed from some of the unions that might be done away with some of the existing unions, that they should be charged on that union.

24447. Is isolation feasible?—It is not practicable in these cases.

24448. For such cases as those would you approve of a sanatorium for the district?—I think it would be a great benefit.

24449. Mr. MURKIN.—Where isolation is feasible you think the house is the place?—I should think so.

24450. Dr. BRIDGES.—Would not that mean a house with four or five rooms?

CHAIRMAN.—Or would it mean sending the patient to an institution to get accustomed to proper methods of precaution in the first instance?—Not necessarily.

24451. Can you, in your private practice, feel assured that the patients and their friends will follow your directions carefully about expectation and other matters necessary?—I am quite sure they do not.

24452. If they were sent to a sanatorium where they would be drilled into that observance, do you not think it would be safer for them to go back to their own homes?—They would be a better way to mind themselves afterwards.

CHAIRMAN.—Are there any witnesses from Gort.

Mr. BARK, Clerk.—None have attended.

CHAIRMAN.—The only resolution they have passed is "that it is not expedient, in our opinion, to dissolve the Gort Union."

Mr. BARK.—Yes.

24460. Take Tamm; what would you suggest, just for argument sake, should be done with the Tamm Workhouse in the future?—If it could be shown that by amalgamating Tamm with some other union there would be a saving, I would be in favour of doing away with Tamm.

24461. Would you use the workhouse for any purpose?—Some sort of factory; that might give employment to the people.

24462. Suppose you keep on Tamm and close Glenties and Mountbellew?—I would be in favour of keeping a hospital in Glenties, and also in Mountbellew; I would be for taking the able-bodied inmates into Tamm and having the ratepayers of Glenties and Mountbellew support them as heretofore.

24463. What would the functions of the Glenties and Mountbellew Guardians be?—I would not bring them into Tamm; that is the great objection.

24464. Supposing they met at Glenties once a week or once a fortnight, what would they do at that meeting?—They would always meet as a District Council, and also as a Board of Guardians, to see that a proper rate was levied for the maintenance of the paupers from Glenties and Mountbellew.

24465. Would they meet once a year to strike a rate?—They should meet oftener than that.

24466. What should they do at their meetings?—They should consider whether the paupers admitted from Glenties and Mountbellew were fit subjects to be admitted.

24467. The position would be that a man would come from the old Mountbellew Union to Tamm, he would be admitted as chargeable to the Mountbellew Union, and after he had been admitted and eaten his grub for a week or a fortnight the Mountbellew people could consider whether the Tamm people were right in admitting him?—Not afterwards. If it is an urgent case; if you want to send a man to hospital in Galway or Dublin, there are means by which he could be admitted pending a meeting of the Board; if it was not urgent the Guardians of the place he came from should consider whether he was a proper case to be admitted or not and then send him on.

24468. Take Pat Murphy, or anybody you like, he comes from Mountbellew into Tamm, is fed there for a week or so, and the fact of his admission is duly notified to Mountbellew; what power has Mountbellew over the case?—Why should he not apply to Mountbellew first for an order for admission.

24469. He should apply to the relieving officer to be brought up before the Board of Guardians and the Mountbellew people would give him an order of admission to the Tamm Workhouse?—Yes.

24470. If it were not near a meeting. Supposing the meeting at Mountbellew was on Saturday and he turned up on Monday for relief at the clerk's office or relieving officer's house?—I would give the relieving officer power to relieve him temporarily, pending the meeting of the Guardians. The same thing is happening now; if a man applies to the relieving officer for

Nov. 3, 1867.
Mr. Thomas
Byrne.

admission to the workhouse and the relieving officer thinks he ought not to be admitted he won't admit him until the meeting of the Guardians.

24471. Supposing he comes to the conclusion that it is a case for admission to the house and gives him an order to the Tuam Board of Guardians to admit him, then that order comes up before the Mountbellew Board, does it, for revision?—No, because I would not give the relieving officer power to admit him to the house except he had got an order from the Mountbellew Board of Guardians; I would give him power to relieve him temperately.

24472. Does that not appear to be a certain amount of awkwardness about that; a man becomes destitute, he says "I have neither home, nor shelter, nor food," he wants an order of admission to the house?—Have we not our relieving officer there with money in his pocket.

24473. He would have to support him in lodgings?—Even so, for a week it would not be much.

24474. Do you think there is not a certain amount of double parasitism involved in such a thing?—There is, but if, according to my idea, they are to be liable for their paupers in the Tuam Workhouse, they should first have the right of saying whether these paupers should be admitted or not. Supposing all the paupers of Mountbellew were coming to Tuam I say the Mountbellew Guardians should meet as heretofore, and if a pauper wanted to be admitted to Tuam Union let application be made in the first instance to the Mountbellew Guardians, and pending that application, if he is destitute, I would have the relieving officer have power to relieve him.

24475. Do the Guardians meet very often?—I was a member of the Mountbellew Guardians nine or ten years, and during that time there was a meeting once a week; I cannot say how it has gone on since, and after all if they don't have a quorum, and the relieving officer is maintaining a man in public lodgings, the ratepayers, who elected these Guardians, would soon see that they misused their business. And this would be the means of doing away with the upshot of four or five workhouses, with the exception of the hospitals, and the inmates transferred to other workhouses could be looked after by the present attendants without any addition to their staff, if they were all as well supplied with attendants as Tuam. I mean we have a good staff, more than we require, and only for Major Fair and the Local Government Board we would not have so many. I must say I don't at all agree with some of the evidence given, particularly by Mr. O'Malley. The children should all be sent out on the nursing system; we have adopted that system in Tuam and find it a great success; none of the children boarded out ever return to the house; when they reach a certain age and are fit to do some work their ratepayers pay them a small yearly salary and then give them a start in the world, moreover their support costs far less outside than in-door. We board them and clothe them for 28, whereas it costs 213 in the house. In my opinion no child should be brought up in the workhouse; those who have can never be got to leave it; they may go out for a time but I think they always return.

24476. You would be in favour of enabling the Guardians to board out all children?—Yes. I know of children brought up in the workhouse, and although we found them situations, we could never get them to remain outside; they always returned. But children boarded out from three or four years of age, they never return, and it takes the police in the Tuam Union to get them brought back.

24477. About the tramp?—I have no sympathy whatever for the tramp, and I believe, if there was not workhouses for them to go to—they get sufficient money going along the road to pay for their lodgings; but they go from one workhouse to another, and owing to the defect in the law we cannot prevent them; but if they had not workhouses the money they get along the roads would pay for their lodgings. I agree, after they go from one workhouse to another, they ought to be taken up and put into some labour colony and the children taken away from them. I got a letter from Mr. Stephen McDonough in which he says: "amalgamation, of which I am entirely in favour, after an experience of forty years as a Guardian; I am satisfied that one-fourth of our workhouses would be quite sufficient for our present population, and a vast saving to the ratepayers, without inflicting any hardship on the poor."

Mr. Thomas
Byrne.

Mr. THOMAS BYRNE, Ballinasloe, examined.

24478. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Rural District Council?—Yes.

24479. Now will you kindly let us have the views of your Guardians. You think it would be expedient to dissolve some of the unions in the county, and the dissolved unions should be amalgamated with the neighbouring ones, and a change of boundaries of the unions remaining would be necessary?—Yes.

24480. As regards the use to which they might be put, you thought one workhouse might be used as an auxiliary asylum for harmless lunatics, another for technical schools, and perhaps another as a sanatorium for consumptives. There was no other remark you had about the use to which these houses might be put?—No; my opinion is that a central industrial school might be established for workhouse children; that is, to give them a technical training and give them trades, making them useful members of society, and, in my opinion, it would take the bread of the pauper from them.

24481. Would you prefer that to boarding them out with farmers?—I don't approve of boarding them out at all, and we have only one boarded out.

24482. Perhaps you have not tried the system very much?—No, because we did not approve of it.

24483. You have had the advantage of hearing of the experience of Mr. Higgins and other gentlemen?—I have, yet doctors differ, and sometimes the patients die.

24484. If a doctor had not seen the patient you would hardly mind his opinion?—We have had information of its being tried and it was a failure; sometimes the children were treated badly and we thought it was in the interests of the children that we should not try.

24485. You say, on the question of some provision for old married couples, that you think the present classification is quite sufficient?—I think so.

24486. Do you agree with that personally?—I do.

24487. Do you think it is not a mistake to have a number of different classes, old respectable people, people who are childless perhaps, and other people who are immoral, all herded together?—No; in our union, for the last three or four years, we had a separation ward.

24488. I mean in the same institution; not the same ward?—I am of opinion that for old married couples there should be a sort of central institution where they could be kept.

24489. Are you aware that there are very few old married couples relieved under the Poor Law?—I know there are a fair number in our own union.

24490. How many would you say?—About twenty.

24491. Forty individuals?—Forty.

24492. In the workhouse?—Yes; I can give you the statistics. In the first instance I desire to give you the area of your union in 1835, and I do that for obvious reasons, and then I go on at intervals of twenty years, showing you the population, the valuation, and also, the administration, the extent and internal charges, and the relative cost of the inmates as compared with the officers. I suppose that would be too voluminous to go into. Ballinasloe Union was created on June 6th, 1839, and calculating the acreage of the several townlands appearing in the Order it gives an area of 212,461 acres, or 489 square miles. After that time the boundaries of the unions were altered to form new unions as follows:—I do this to show that the Ballinasloe Union is the parent house. I have heard the evidence given by Mr. Cunningham, and I think he was a very ungenerous child to a parent. There was transferred in 1853 to Glensmaddy 1,108 acres, and to Tuam 1,070 acres, or 2½ square miles, to Louisa 9,958 acres, or fifteen square miles, to Fortunna 37,530 acres, or 86½ square miles, and to Mountbellew, which was entirely formed out of our union, 108,406 acres, or 246 square miles; that gives a total acreage of this union, transferred to other unions, of 258,294 acres in 1851, and that the Ballinasloe portion at that time was 160,217 acres.

In 1851 the acreage was adjusted to 180,528 acres. I would like to show, on a map I have here, the formation of the union in 1850 (shows on map). With regard to amalgamation, I am in favour of it; but I heard a gentleman give evidence here to-day that he would like to have one union for the whole county with a county-at-large charge. I need not tell you I am not in sympathy with that; that would be too sweeping a change, to my mind, and I don't think it would be convenient or effective, nor would it suit the administration of the county.

24495. What would you suggest?—My idea is, thinking over it for some time, that you should have a union for every division of the county. I will begin with Galway as a city. It is most important you should have Galway for the west, Tuam for the north, Loughrea for the south, and Ballinasloe for the east.

24496. You would do nothing for Clifton?—I think, taking as a basis the evidence given here to this, that, with the convenience of local hospitals, Galway would be convenient for that.

24497. It is over sixty miles away?—Yes; but you have the convenience of a railway.

24498. I don't see why you want three for the run of the county if you can do for the whole of West Galway?—That is only my opinion; I am giving one for every division of the county.

24499. The whole four you select are in the east and not one in the remote west?—None in the remote west. I quite agree with you; that does not prevent the possibility of your making a report in favour of one or two more unions.

24500. Your Board of Guardians was evenly divided as to whether union or district rating was the better?—I think the majority was in favour of union rating, and I am very much in favour of it myself. I think a uniform system of rating is very much the best.

24501. Would you have union rating for all purposes, outdoor relief and all?—Yes.

24502. You think there is no tendency to take outdoor relief a little too far with union rating?—I have heard some evidence given to-day that there is, but we have not discovered it, and I have a pretty close eye to what is done.

24503. You have no experience of that?—No; we have no experience of that. I might state that it is the opinion of the majority of the whole Board that Galway Hospital should be abolished. It is considered nothing less than a nuisance to have to pay for it; we had to pay to the tune of £211 last year, and, I think, £220 the previous year; it amounts to £d. in the £ on the rateable valuation. We think, whether rightly or wrongly, that if the local hospitals were maintained in a greater state of efficiency, with a saving margin of entrance to each hospital, it would do very much better than sending our people to Galway Hospital, for we have to pay 1s. a day for them as well as the £d. in the £.

24504. Have you many doctors in Ballinasloe?—There are; there are not many towns where there are a large supply of doctors where they could not undertake this duty.

24505. Take now Gort, Clifton, Mountbellew, and Glentiesaddy?—I think it would be very easy to have a visiting surgeon from Galway at Gort.

24506. That would cost a good deal of money?—I don't think it would. It would be very much less easily than the amount we have now to pay for nothing, because we send most of our cases to Dublin; we find the Galway Hospital is not effective enough for some of the cases we have.

24507. Did the Galway Hospital authorities know?—I am a member of the Galway Hospital committee.

24508. Were you ever told that an operation was of such a serious nature it could not be done in Galway Hospital; did they ever refuse a case on the ground that it was too serious?—No; but we have to consider where the case would be cured the quickest, and where we have the most skilful physicians.

24509. They would not undertake special eye cases?—No; nor they are not capable.

24510. Neither would your hospital at Ballinasloe do that?—We don't pretend to do it.

24512. I never heard its competence to carry out operations questioned?—Their competence might not be challenged, but there have been investigations about the hospital. To put it shortly, my opinion is the gains is not worth the candle; the hospital is too costly an institution for the work it does. We can have patients in the best hospitals in Dublin, visited by the most eminent physicians and surgeons, at 2s. a day, while we are compelled to pay £211 from Ballinasloe to Galway Hospital, and get very little value for it. It is just like supporting an institution that you do for the honour and glory of, but get nothing out of it; people nowadays are too practical for that sort of thing.

24513. Dr. BROWN.—It is rather a detriment to the district to send all your cases to Dublin, because it deprives the doctor of the experience, and when a private patient wants a good doctor, he has not the experience in operations and such like?—I don't understand your question.

24514. How is a visiting doctor to acquire a high reputation if he has not practice?—We have several doctors with a good reputation.

24515. I suppose they are connected with some institution where they get good practice; but if you send all your cases to Dublin?—We don't send all our cases, but only cases recommended by the doctor as being cases that cannot be treated at home.

24516. You said you had not confidence at home?—I said we had not confidence in the officials of that Galway Hospital for serious operations and cases. I would as soon leave the patients in our own hospital at home at the mercy of the men we have locally then send them down to the Galway Hospital; we may not have the means of performing surgical operations that they have.

24517. CHAIRMAN.—Is that your own opinion or the opinion of your medical officers?—I have not heard the opinion of our medical officers; it is my own opinion and experience.

24518. Dr. BROWN.—What is your experience?—I am twenty years a member of the Board of Guardians.

24519. How does that qualify you to give an opinion?—Not from a scientific point of view, but I am quite open to have an opinion and some judgment of my own; it is a very curious thing if a man cannot come to a conclusion in this world without being trained in the science of a profession.

24520. CHAIRMAN.—But your statement was that you had no confidence in the treatment patients would receive for surgical operations in the Galway Hospital. I asked you whether that was your own opinion or the opinion of your medical officers?—I never elicited an opinion from the medical profession because I think it would not be quite adequate, but we have had opinions of Guardians and District Councils; and then we have the other side of the question to look to, the pounds, shillings, and pence.

24521. Your opinion is, of course, of great importance, but the opinion of doctors also is of great importance, and I wanted to know if you had had that?—I had not, but I can give it to you indirectly, in a great many cases for serious operations the doctors recommend that they be sent to Dublin.

24522. Would that be to a special hospital?—Well, yes, to a special hospital. More than two-thirds of our patients are going to Dublin, even since we became contributory to the Galway Hospital.

24523. As regards the question of payment by persons who get medical treatment in workhouse hospitals, would you be in favour of giving the local body power to charge such sums as they thought the patients or their friends could afford to pay?—I certainly am in favour of that, and I think it is a very necessary thing to do, for sometimes advantage is taken of that and people are sent in who could afford to pay and don't pay; we sometimes get repayment to a small extent.

24524. As regards the tramps?—My opinion is that you should either establish a labour colony or should use some deterrent to prevent the possibility of their continuing such a nuisance as there are at present.

24525. You have a great many at Ballinasloe?—We have.

24526. What would you suggest as a deterrent?—Either to utilise their services, compel them to stop to do work for two or three days, equivalent to their maintenance, or I would even say as much as a week.

Nov. 3, 1904.

Wm. Thomas
Esq. Town Hall, Galway.

Nov. 5, 1904.

Mr. Thomas
Byrne.

24525. Giving the Guardians or their officers power to detain them?—Yes; and if there was amalgamation I would say the question is so important that if a labour colony were established you should have a labour master.

24526. Would you think it advisable to consider the starting of a labour colony?—I would, seriously, that is in case of amalgamation. I think it is the only effectual means of stopping abuses, because they are lots of tramps who are young men and very well able to earn their bread, but they are utterly idle, and they go from one union to another, and live in that way.

Mr. T. B. HENRY, F.R.C.S., examined.

Mr. T. B.
Henry.

24527. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you would like to add to Mr. Byrne's evidence?—I hold different views to him; I would abolish the workhouse altogether.

24528. What would you do with the inmates?—I would leave the existing workhouses as hospitals for the sick and dying, and reserve a portion for contagious diseases and accidents, and leave the able-bodied outside under the care of local dispensary committees.

24529. Outdoor relief?—Yes. I would have a committee composed of two local magistrates, two District Commissioners, two clergymen of each denomination, and two of the larger ratepayers to be the relief committee of the district, that would meet, say, once a month and give old age pensions to old men and women who deserved them, and other relief, to come up at the end of each month.

24530. That seems a pretty complete scheme; there is a great deal of novelty in it?—I think it would be easily worked.

24531. And economically?—I think so; if you send able-bodied paupers from one district to another, the people they are sent from will object to pay rates for the support of an institution a long distance away; the poor themselves would object to go so far and would die on the roadside almost in preference. You cannot send away the sick or dying, bad accidents or bad diseases. It is stated you can send them by railway, but people won't go in carriages with contagious diseases, and you could not get them into them. This committee would relieve local wants; it must be done economically and honestly by appointing such a class as I suggest.

Dr. N. W.
O'Sullivan.

24536. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to give some evidence about the hospitals?—Yes. There was a point I wanted to bring before the Commission, and that was with reference to consumption. Consumption, as you know, is not a notifiable disease, and therefore the patient can remain in his own house without anybody knowing he is affected. Consumption at present in our district has reached quite an appalling magnitude; there were, at least, 300 patients admitted to the workhouse in the last two years; most of these patients are now dead, some died in the hospital and some went home to die. Of course you understand what it means, a consumptive patient going home to die; they are not an educated class, and in the hospital, before we send them away, we find the greatest possible difficulty in making them carry out the regulations for any sort of cleanliness, in fact when I go round the hospitals in the morning the place is covered with spots, although there is a nurse trying to keep things right, so you can understand the state of affairs at home. We get a number of consumptive patients, poor boys and girls returning from America to die; they come home in an advanced stage of consumption, and my experience is that they first go home and spend two or three months at home until they have got to the end of whatever little money they brought from America. During that time they are spreading the disease, and then they come into us to see can anything be done. Sometimes they die with us, and sometimes go back to die. Those patients at present have to lie in the general wards of the workhouse hospital, and I myself would most certainly not permit anybody balancing to me to sleep beside a patient dying of consumption.

24537. You have isolated them as far as practicable?—As far as practicable, but it is almost impracticable. Consumption is very much on the increase.

24538. You think it ought to be a notifiable disease?—First of all, and when it is a notifiable disease people will understand that it is quite as dangerous as typhus fever, except that typhus fever runs away

24532. All would be ratepayers?—I don't mind what they are; if District Commissioners, they are selected by the people; the clergy, the local magistrates, and two of the largest ratepayers as a check.

24533. If you have any further development of that idea would you mind sending a little statement of it to our secretary as we want to think it over?—Very well. There are three classes of tramps presently, the unfortunate tradesman tramp, and the professional tramp; you will dispense with him altogether when the workhouse closes; then you will have the army reserve tramp, the short-notice man—two-thirds of the tramps are composed of them; if they give trouble in the neighbourhood they should be taken up by the police. Then, on the other hand these tradesman tramps might get relief for a night or so—poor honest men, but unfortunate; but you will dispense with the army reserve tramp and the professional tramp if you abolish the workhouse, in fact they are the nucleus of them presently.

24534. Mr. MURPHY.—Some of the witnesses fear that if you do that you will endanger the farmhouses in the country?—The law is strong enough; they will diminish as the workhouses diminish, and you will have very little trouble with them.

24535. Do you not see anything in the point that they might go to a farmhouse at night and seek for shelter in a barn?—I don't think so; they might lie there and not do any harm, and if they are caught they are committed to the nearest jail in the morning. The next point is as regards women; there should be a lying-in hospital in each county for fallen women; the children might be detained there and then sent to industrial schools.

with you in a few days or weeks while the other takes months and months. In every union there should be some sort of sanatorium or establishment where these patients would be glad to go.

24539. Not necessarily for each union, but for a district, taking in one or more as might be found necessary?—Yes; but taking into account the number of persons in this workhouse, I think we would want an institution of our own.

24540. Have you fifty on the books at present?—Not fifty—thirty or forty, and in the general hospital there were twenty-eight patients admitted in phthisis during the year; but the important question is that we have nowhere to send them. There is an institution called the National Institution, but we cannot get a patient in; I have known patients to die while waiting to get in. If any epidemic should break out here we have no isolation hospital equal to an epidemic; and then our fever hospital requires some reconstruction.

24541. You think you would want a new fever hospital?—Yes; but the Guardians are so good to us, and spend so much money, it is impossible to ask them to do a great undertaking at the moment, but the most pressing question is the question of consumption.

24542. That is what you come to mention to us to-day?—Yes. We will have to admit these patients; we know they go back and spread the disease at home, and we see members of the same family coming back with consumption.

24543. Do you know the plan of the workhouse buildings at Coughterard, Gort, Monastellon, or Glentiesmaddy; do you think they would be suitable for an experimental sanatorium? If one of these were diseased?—Before you could adapt one of these institutions you would have to alter it altogether, according to certain fixed rules; there would have to be the erection of verandahs, and plenty of light and air.

24544. It would not cost very much?—Not very much to begin with.

24543. Do you think it would be a decided advantage to experiment in having one of these old workhouses converted into a sanatorium?—In a suitable position it would be most proper; our own Board of Guardians, in order to meet the difficulty, got plans in which they could have twenty or thirty males and twenty or thirty females treated for consumption in the grounds of the workhouse, but it cost so much.

24545. What is shelter?—Shelters and property isolated and ventilated wards.

24547. You have not place enough for that here?—No; it is only a temporary thing.

24548. Dr. BROWN.—There was some evidence given here about the county infirmary; do you think its usefulness might be extended if you had some reciprocity between the hospital and the small hospitals in the county in the way of interchanging nurses?—We are starting a nursing institution, and then we will be able to supply nurses to the different hospitals in the district.

24549. Of course these nurses will be available for private practice?—Certainly, when they have spent a certain time; we limit it for six months; not for six months and the nurse undertakes private duty.

24550. CHAIRMAN.—Surely not as soon as six months?—Our idea is that they should leave the Galway Hospital to spend some time in the workhouse hospital while under training, and then go from there to the fever hospital to become thoroughly trained, and then we make use of them as private nurses, but they must have two years training at the very least.

24551. Dr. BROWN.—By allowing these nurses to go to small hospitals you will have fixed fees or charges that will be in proportion to the cost of the hospital—in any case the county will get the benefit of it?—Yes; but I think the nurses will have a special charge as well.

24552. But that charge will be something like the amount of their annual salary; you won't charge as much as the Dublin hospitals?

CHAIRMAN.—Is the scheme on paper?—It is, to a certain extent.

24553. Has it yet gone to the Local Government Board?—It came down from the Local Government Board; I am not certain whether it arranged the fees.

Mr. McDONNELL.—Not the fee for private nursing, but all the other arrangements.

24554. Dr. BROWN.—The fee for private nursing ought to be on one basis and the fee for hospital on another scale?—Yes; the general fee a nurse gets is a guinea a week for private nursing.

24555. A guinea and a half a week?—I assure you I get nurses from Dublin for a guinea a week, except it is scrofula, measles, or fever.

24556. Would you give them at a less price to hospitals than to private cases?—That is a question that could be taken into consideration and decided.

24557. Beware some of the representatives of other unions are complaining that they don't get enough value from the county hospital?—I heard it stated here about patients going to Dublin; every medical man knows if a patient is sent away from a hospital with an unfavourable opinion he generally goes somewhere else; I have known them to come back with no practical improvement; human nature will try to do the best to get better.

Mr. J. O. MACDONNELL, Vice-Chairman, Galway County Council, examined.

24558. CHAIRMAN.—We have got the very interesting abstract of evidence you were good enough to furnish to the Commission. As regards the amalgamation of unions, the County Council were generally in favour of amalgamation?—Yes.

24559. There are ten unions in the county; about how many would be sufficient?—I think we might get rid of about four.

24560. That would leave six?—I am not in favour of very sweeping measures about reducing the number to one or two, or even three or four.

24561. You would not be like the witnesses who would abolish all?—No.

24562. What scheme do you think would be a good one; what workhouse would you close?—Well, Glenties and Oughterard would be two, and perhaps Clifden and some of the other small unions, either Gort, Monksheale, or Portlanna. I think, in going into a general scheme, they might be profitably done away with.

24563. You think the motor car, employed for ambulance purposes, would get rid of the necessity of keeping up a number of ambulances?—Not so much with regard to the hospitals, but with regard to cases that would not be contagious or infectious, and in cases of accidents; it was an idea that struck me.

24564. A number of witnesses have suggested it?—My idea would be, in the case of an accident, it would be quite possible for a motor service to reach a place twenty or twenty-five miles distant in the same time it would take to do eight or ten miles in a workhouse ambulance.

24565. Then you would have a special van for taking in sick patients suffering from infectious diseases?—That would be necessary.

24566. What would you do with the workhouses that would be closed?—I think that is dealt with with regard to what I say under sec. 75 of the Local Government Act, to have an auxiliary domestic system, and I would be in favour of using one of them as a central school for children.

24567. Do you think it is a good thing to bring up the little children of the destitute by giving them trades?—I do. I am entirely in favour of the board-school system, but I would take back the children at a certain age and get them into such an institution and give them an industrial training, to fit them for every position in life.

24568. Is not that an education better than the children of the poorer artisans would receive; why should you equip them to make a better battle in life than the children of the ratepayers?—I am of opinion that the children at present brought up in workhouse become very useless members of society.

24569. Supposing you board them out with farmers, don't you think it is giving these technical training or experience in the life of an agricultural labourer?—It may; but we look to something more in the future of Ireland than agricultural work.

24570. Are not agricultural labourers a class very much required and needed in the country at present?—Yes; but I would avail of the labour of those parties, and perhaps these children that would be boarded out, instead of giving their labour to their native country would emigrate; it is for the purpose of stopping emigration that I would adopt the system.

24571. How would it operate to stop emigration?—When they would be able to make a good living at home.

24572. May they not think they would make a better living abroad?—I don't think so. I am connected with a woollen factory here in Galway, and girls that are weavers can earn from £1 to £2½ a week; we give employment to seventy or eighty hands.

24573. What would be the lowest rate of wages?—There are different classes of work to be done; the lowest amount at the pay sheet, of some beginning to learn their business, is 6s. or 7s.

24574. Do they get so much as that?—What is the ordinary rate, without counting 25s., which I suppose only very expert people get?—It would be about the average that weavers earn; they are nearly all girls and women.

24575. At all events you would prefer to bring up the children of the destitute to a trade rather than to fit them out as agricultural labourers?—Yes. When you asked me the question about utilizing any of our disused workhouses I put that in opposition to the idea of sending children to an industrial school.

24576. Supposing you don't do either but send them to farmers to learn how to do agricultural work on farms, do you think that would be a good method of employing them?—Better than to bring them up in the workhouse.

24577. And don't you think it would be a fairer thing to the ratepayers to bring them up in an economical healthy way as agricultural labourers than to bring them up to trades?—I think anything that would tend to increase the wealth of the country would be desirable even at a little cost to the ratepayers.

24578. Mr. McDONNELL.—Do you not think that the farmer does as much for the wealth of the country as anybody else?—Unfortunately no, on account of the foreign competition and other causes; I happen to be a farmer, and it is very precarious.

Nov 3, 1901.

Dr. W. W. Galton.

Mr J. C. McDONNELL.

Nov. 4, 1901.

Mr. J. C.
MacDonnell.

24579. How could a country get on without farm produce?—Certainly not; but you can never have much wealth in the country if you are depending on the land.

24580. Is there not a great deal of it going to waste here in the West that it would be well to have under cultivation?—Things are changing now; when the people have the land there will be more cultivation.

24581. Is it not changing because help is so scarce?—Because they go out of the country, but people will remain at home when they have land to till.

24582. At present the farmers cannot obtain sufficient help to do their work?—That may be in some parts of the country.

24583. If you send the children out of the workhouse and distribute them amongst the homes of the farmers, would not they help afterwards to carry on the work in the fields?—I believe when they would be able to go away they would go to America, except when adopted as a member of the family.

24584. Don't you think it is a good healthy way to rease a boy or a girl?—I do.

24585. Do you not think it is better than in an institution?—Yes, as workhouses exist at present.

24586. CHAIRMAN.—You would be in favour of having old couples not separated in workhouses?—Certainly; I think it is a very cruel thing to do.

24587. You would also be in favour of largely extending the giving of outdoor relief?—Yes.

24588. What would you require as to the condition of the people to whom you would give outdoor relief?—I would give it to any people that otherwise might go into the workhouse; I think it is the best applied portion of the poor rate there it, and you would decrease the number of inmates of the workhouse when you adopt any kind of a liberal system of outdoor relief.

I have made some inquiries and they bear out this view. In Galway we give fair liberal outdoor relief; it comes to 25*l.* in the £ of the total rate. I believe a good deal of the rate is wasted. In Tuam, which is a very large union, they have only 202 patients and they give us to £1,800 a year outdoor relief. In Ballinasloe they give only about £500; I think it is a great mistake not to extend the system of outdoor relief.

24589. Mr. MURPHY.—Would you continue the present system of rating?—Yes, I am entirely in favour of union rating for all purposes, and I would make the charge for the sick and insane a county-at-large charge.

24590. CHAIRMAN.—In every hospital?—All even. There was something that was omitted in the draft of evidence, that is with regard to retaining the present union hospitals. I would be in favour of retaining the hospitals but I don't, at all, agree about the expense that would be necessary in connection with these. My idea would be to have a mission in charge of the hospital, and to have the dispensary doctor; give him a small yearly salary to attend at this hospital, and pay him by results; give him a consultation grant for all patients he would attend in the hospital during the year.

24591. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think you would get better results by that?—I think so.

24592. CHAIRMAN.—You would not be at all afraid of a great crowd of patients coming in?—I would limit that to contagious and infectious diseases, because I think, if you adopt my plan, you can get all the other parties to the central place.

24593. Would that view of yours, making the sick a union-at-large charge, be approved of by the Galway Board of Guardians?—I think it would work out advantageously to Galway. With regard to union rating, my idea is that the rural portion of the Galway Union, or wherever there is a large city or town, suffers on account of the union rating, and with regard to Galway, it would be a great advantage to have it made a union-at-large charge, while it may be a disadvantage to some of the rural districts.

24594. You are not prepared to offer any very definite opinion as regards the treatment of tramps or casuals?—Well, no; I don't believe in the idea that is prevalent about treating these persons as if they were not human beings, with regard to cold beds and that sort of thing, except it could be established that they were of very bad character or of incorrigible habits, but it would be a useful thing if Guardians had the power of retaining these persons for a number of days, from three days to a week in the workhouse, and make them do some useful work. I also think there is a great deal of neglect on the part of the police at present with regard to that; if it were shown they were ill-treating their children they should be prosecuted and have their children taken from them and brought up in some institution.

24595. But you would approve of stringent measures for those who were of bad character and were lazy and intemperate?—Certainly; a labour colony is a good idea. I might add, with regard to the evidence of Dr. Colahan, that it would be a desirable thing that one of our workhouses, in a favourable situation, should be made a sanatorium. I am here as Chairman of the Galway Hospital, and would like to give evidence about it. I may say that I think it would be a very great pity if the hospital were done away with.

24596. You would make it a county-at-large charge? I would; it is constituted under a special Act, and there are a great many defects in that Act of Parliament. The Board of Management have used their best exertions to try to make the hospital as efficient as possible, but they are hampered a good deal on account of the Special Act of Parliament. The Local Government Board did not alter the way of rating the rate for the upkeep of the hospital; it is still paid individually by each union; I would have it brought under the control of the County Council, and have a representation from the County Council, and perhaps some of the unions.

24597. You mean you would make it practically a county infirmary?—Yes, regulated by the conditions that would apply, rather enlarged, under the old Grand Jury system. One of the great defects of the Act is that we have no borrowing powers and cannot do much to improve the hospital except we take the money out of the annual amount supplied by the unions. At the present time we have just completed a very well-get-up operating theatre and we have a very good staff, and are starting a nursing school, and I think that gentlemen speak without a knowledge of the subject when they make any charge against the hospital. I think, where you have a county hospital in every county, but particularly the Galway Hospital, they should be maintained, and there might be some improvement made in the law to give the Board more power for borrowing and improving the hospital.

24598. Prior to the Act it was a county infirmary?—It was; it is quite a historic hospital with regard to that matter.

24599. There was a special Commission about it?—Yes, and a special Act of Parliament passed in 1878 was the result of that, and then it was put under a Board of Management.

24600. It used to be a county infirmary before that?—Under the Grand Jury.

24601. How did the infirmary come to an end; why was it necessary to have an Act of Parliament for your infirmary?—There was a collapse about the appointment of a resident surgeon; the Governors were equally divided; I believe the Lord Chancellor came down on foot and tried to settle matters and did not succeed. We have forty-nine members now all over the county, from each union according to its size.

24602. A good many of the extern members come in and don't say flattering things about it?—A great many don't attend at all and then they find fault with the people who do attend and try to do their best; I think it is a wrong system altogether, the idea of sending patients out of our county to Dublin.

24603. Have the Gort and Glensmiddy people to pay exactly as much per rate as the Galway people?—Our union pays according to its valuation, 2*l.* in the £, and then in addition, if they send in any patients from their workhouse hospitals, they have to pay 1*l.* a day.

24604. Dr. BOGGER.—Do you admit any other patients besides those sent in from the unions?—Yes, pay patients; they are admitted on a certificate of two doctors that they are fit subjects for treatment.

24605. CHAIRMAN.—How much do they pay?—3*l.*, and if they wish to get into smaller wards it is optional to pay 1*l.* a week.

24606. Do they get in at the same rate as the union cases?—Yes.

24607. And the unions have to pay 3*l.* in the £?—It comes to about £1,400 a year on the county.

24608. Dr. BOGGER.—Is the effect of the admission of pay patients that there are a number of cases admitted from Galway town, that don't go from the union, at 7*l.* a week?—All persons from the whole county can come in and they can be admitted on the certificate of two doctors. We have five doctors on the staff of the Queen's College, and we have a resident surgeon. We cannot admit any infectious or contagious diseases.

24608. CHAIRMAN.—Except consumption?—That, I believe, is contagious.

24610. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the annual outlay on the institution?—The pay patients and the levy of £d. would come to about £2,500.

24611. Do you get a good deal for paying patients?—At different times of the year; we have accommodation for about sixty patients. In connection with our union we think to utilise the workhouse hospital and the fever hospital for the purpose of having a training school, otherwise it would not be recognised; but all the matters connected with the training of the nurses is regulated and approved of by the Local Government Board.

24612. Do private patients get preference in being received into the institution over those sent by the unions outside?—No.

24613. CHAIRMAN.—Are you ever quite full?—Not generally. The workhouse hospital in Galway was overcrowded and they had to send us up a lot of patients.

24615. Dr. HUGHES.—In what way are your staff appointed?—By the special Act of Parliament. Five are appointed by the Local Government Board, and they are the professors of the Queen's College, and then the Board of Management appoint a resident surgeon; but absolutely the appointment of the doctors is in the hands of the Local Government Board. The Local Government Board and ourselves have to agree about the appointment of the others. We had a great disagreement about the appointment of the head superintendent some time ago. We were getting in the same some time ago and the Local Government Board did not think they were qualified; we went to appoint a man but they would not have it, and we had to call her by another name—Lady Superintendent—and the Local Government Board assented to the appointment.

24616. Do you pay your staff?—No; they are honorary, but they will get something in connection with the training of nurses.

24617. There would be plenty of competition among the medical men in Galway to get on the staff?—If we had power we would add on a couple of our medical officers.

24618. They would not require any salary?—No, I think the honor and the experience they would get would be sufficient.

Mr. D. K. LYON, F.R.C., examined.

Mr. D. K. Lyon.

24619. CHAIRMAN.—The Galway Board of Guardians are not in favour of any amalgamation scheme?—No, I think not.

24620. They think it would not lead to a reduction in rates?—Certainly; they don't think it leads to a reduction in the rates.

24621. If it were shown to them it would lead to a reduction in the rates would they necessarily change their opinion?—But if it would not lead to the convenience of the sick poor.

24622. How would it affect the sick poor?—As a gentleman, who was examined here to-day, Mr. O'Hara, said, it would be very desirable to bring certain patients to Galway, and as you, yourself, pointed out it would be very inconvenient to bring them such a long distance; it would be a great hardship on the sick poor to bring them to Galway.

24624. If a scheme were put before the Guardians, and the unions were shown that without obliging the sick to travel long distances a reduction could be made in the rates; if the other classes were brought elsewhere, do you think even then the Galway Guardians would be opposed to amalgamation?—If they see there would be a reduction in the rates and it would not lead to inconvenience to the sick poor they would be in favour of amalgamation, but not as they are informed at present.

24625. Your Board of Guardians are of opinion that an auxiliary lunatic asylum is not required in this country?—No, they think Ballinacree is sufficient.

24627. They have not a wide margin for that?—They try to get as much as they can.

24628. The Guardians are in favour of enlarging the powers of the Board in the administration of outdoor relief?—I think it would be very desirable.

24629. They think the quarter acre section ought to be repealed?—Yes, and the section about the widows and the number of children, that might be enlarged; there is too much saving of outdoor relief; it is cheaper to have them outside than in the workhouse, and for the sake of their moral atmosphere.

24630. The Guardians think that the union-at-large voting is not as beneficial as the divisional?—Personally I am in favour of the union-at-large.

24631. The Guardians thought it better to have divisional?—The majority of the Guardians come from the rural districts, and only sixteen from the town, and naturally the burden would be on the town, but I, as a representative of a ward in the town, am for union-at-large.

24632. Then it was a question between the country and the town?—They had fifty men to our sixteen.

24633. As regards any additional hospital in your unions, were you here to-day when evidence was given about a possible hospital at Castello?—I was; I would not be in favour of that, but I would be in favour of a hospital for consumptives, and I would agree with a gentleman here to-day who said he would make notification compulsory.

24634. About this hospital at Castello or Derryna, you don't think that necessary?—I do not.

24635. You think they have not too far to come to your union?—I don't think so, from Castello.

24636. What do you think about the accommodation for the sick at Arran?—It would be advisable to have a cottage hospital there; but I don't know whether the Guardians share my views or not—to have a small hospital there on a small scale because the weather sometimes prevents people being sent from Galway in the case of emergency.

24637. You also think a hospital, at a central place like Athlery, might be started for consumptives; did you think whether you would use a workhouse for a consumptive hospital if a union is broken up?—It would be a very good use to turn it into.

24638. You would also be in favour of giving the Guardians power to charge for the treatment of the sick in their wards, according to the means of the people, up to the full cost?—Yes, according to the individual case.

24639. You get about £200 a year in Galway?—Yes, in payments.

24640. Do you know what class you get that from—largely from policemen?—Yes, and pensioners.

24641. It would not be from what you call the poor?—No.

24642. As regards tramps, you would make them do heavy work?—No; I would be in favour of a labour colony, and in addition I would be in favour of better classification of cases in the workhouse. I think children ought to be brought away from those that come in morally depraved and vicious and intemperate.

Nov 3, 1904.

Mr. MICHAEL McNEILL, P.L.G., examined.

Mr. Michael McNeill.

In order to shorten matters I agree with Mr. Lyden in everything he has said with the exception of divisional rating.

24543. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a country Guardian?—I am, but the divisional rating is for outdoor relief only; I think it would be a better check on the giving of outdoor relief.

24544. Do you think the Galway town Guardians are a little bit too generous?—They are not too generous, but a Guardian from the division would have more interest in looking after the relief given. And with regard to another matter, I don't agree with regard to the charge in the Galway Hospital, that it is the police or the passengers pay it; the pretty fair-to-do people pay.

24545. Are many of them paying?—Nearly the whole of them pay; the charge is 5s. or 6s. a week; they pay 2s. or 2s. 6d. a week, whatever they can afford to pay.

24546. Now as regards the Galway Hospital?—I have only to endorse what Mr. MacDonnell has said with regard to the hospital, and I cannot agree with a certain gentleman, who gave evidence to-day, and said it was only a nuisance to the county.

24547. The paying was a nuisance; it was a nuisance to pay?—And he mentioned other matters in which I could not agree with him, with regard to the medical gentlemen. I think with regard to the consumption hospital, I think if the Board of Management of the county hospital had borrowing powers; it is in a very healthy place and additional buildings could be put up there.

24548. You agree with your chairman that it would be a prudent thing to get borrowing powers?—Yes.

24549. What you would have to give as security would be the 2d. in the 21?—Yes.

24550. How far can you go with your county rate?—I think we could put on any rate we wish.

Mr. McDonnell.—We could not increase it to a penny without a perfect storm of indignation in the county. We would have borrowing powers under the Public Health Act, I should say.

24551. What would be your security—your rating power?

Mr. McDonnell.—The hospital is vested in the Local Government Board.

Mr. P. J. CUSACKHAM examined.

Mr. P. J. Cusackham.

24552. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Rural District Council?—Yes; I think there is nothing I can add to what has been said by Mr. McNeill; I too am a country Guardian.

24553. You approve of the divisional rating?—Yes; I don't exactly agree with Mr. Lyden with regard to the area of charge.

Rev. MURRAY FARRAGHER, P.P., Arran Islands, examined.

Rev. Murray Farragher, P.P.

24554. CHAIRMAN.—We have just now an opinion from one of the Guardians, that in his own individual opinion he thought a hospital at Arran would be desirable, but he was unable to speak for the Board of Guardians at large; he did not know their opinions. Could you tell us what is your opinion as to the requirements of Arran for hospital accommodation?—Of course we have no hospital available.

24555. Do you think it would be at all desirable?—I think it would be most essential; I have been trying to advocate that for years, ever since I came to know the island's necessity for hospital accommodation.

24556. Would you think that a hospital, with comparatively small accommodation, and built on cheap lines would be as much as you could fairly ask?—I think so; it would be unreasonable to expect anything of an elaborate style.

24557. Something cheap and small?—Say from four to six beds.

24558. And the dispensary doctor would look after it?—Yes, here is built at a convenient distance from his residence.

24559. And the nurse, when she was not fully occupied in the hospital, would have something to do outside, I am sure, as a district nurse?—Yes, the nursing question of course is new to us in the West of Ireland; we have not much experience, but the little we have makes me think that anyone who takes an interest in the poor people will admit it is the greatest possible advantage to the poor people, and a great assistance to the doctor. In the large island we have a population of over 2,000 people, and you are aware the distance from Arran to Galway is about thirty miles, and I need not tell you there is the greatest possible difficulty in getting people to come into the Galway Hospital.

24560. Some of the sick people would not be fit to travel by the sea?—Some of them might, but unwillingly, and very frequently an illness that would be of short duration if taken in time, and under fair treatment, goes on for a long time. Even within the last twelve months I saw two cases of men who got fish-hooks into their fingers, and that they were disabled from fishing for nearly three months, and one of them lost two joints of one finger and another lost a joint; if you had anything in the shape of a cottage hospital where they could be dressed regularly—a fractured arm, or leg, or anything like that. I know two or three cases that came under my own observation and the result is, that while the patients have their legs still, they are certainly very imperfect. There are nearly 1,000 people between the other two islands.

24561. It would be useful for the other two islands in fine weather?—Oh, yes, they don't regard the distance as insurmountable; the same as the distance between Arran and Galway.

24562. They are accustomed to come into Kilbrannigan often from the middle and south islands?—They do, in fine weather.

24563. Is there anything you think about such a hospital that you would like to mention to us?—No; I have only just to say what I have stated; I am not in a position to offer any suggestions, but I would be glad to ensure a site if the thing took shape.

24564. The site ought to be somewhere at Kilbrannigan?—At Kilbrannigan, where there is a good water supply and a healthy locality.

24565. And plenty of stones?—Plenty of stones. I understand that the difficulty in erecting a hospital could be got over as far as the expense; it is not competent to borrow money from the Board of Works.

24566. I should think so?—At the amount that would be paid then would be so small I am sure.

24567. It would not frighten the Galway Guardians?—I think they would be well disposed when they found there was a reasonable case.

24568. You have always found these pretty generous in doing what you ask?—I would not go as far as that; however I hope better times are coming.

Mr. McDonnell.—It is only the District Council you have to fight.

Rev. M. Farragher.—I think you are nearly all the same.

The Sitting terminated.

FIFTIETH PUBLIC SITTING—WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 30th, 1904.

Nov. 30, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Ennis.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURKAGHAN, and Dr. COVEY BAGGER.

Mr. P. J. HOGAN, A.B., Chairman, Class County Council, examined.

24566. CHAIRMAN.—You have been deputed by the County Council to give their views as to the question of amalgamation and Poor-law reform in the county?—Yes.

24570. Your Council, I understand from the notes that you have been good enough to furnish us, are in favour of amalgamation?—Yes.

24571. Did they go into it and express any opinion among themselves what would be the best workhouse to close?—Well, no, they did not.

24572. Do you personally desire to offer any opinion on that?—The only thing I would say regarding that would be that I believe, and I can say it is the opinion of the Council, that four workhouses would meet the requirements of this county.

24573. How many have you at present?—Eight, and the material for nine.

24574. That is including Limerick?—Yes.

24575. You think, really, you might have the number?—Certainly, without the slightest doubt, because when we had a population of over 200,000 we dealt with the Famine, and our workhouses were full, and now we have a population of about 120,000 in Clare, and the same number of workhouses are in existence.

24576. Some of the workhouses, as you refer to the Famine times, were not in existence in the Famine time—they were not built until after—for instance Tuila, Cratins, and Killadyerst—Ros Scariff, Ennis, Ennistymon, and Ennis were old workhouses, and dealt with the Famine and a population of 200,000. Now our population is going down by leaps and bounds, and I don't believe, nor any public man can believe, that the number of workhouses is required for the county—they are a burden on the people.

24577. You live at Rosscariff?—Yes.

24578. You are not, perhaps, prepared to speak with reference to Ballyvaughan—you would rather leave it to your colleague?—Yes. The Council suggested that Ballyvaughan would be utilized for young children and turned into an industrial school. I would say that it should be turned into an industrial school for girls, and there should be another workhouse turned into an industrial school for boys.

24579. Have you considered how very difficult of access Ballyvaughan would be to parts of the Co. Clare, Six-mile-Booie, Killadyerst, and Kilkee, and places like that?—Yes, I have, but it is one of the things we have to close up, if you close up any, Ballyvaughan or Killadyerst.

24580. Ballyvaughan is one of the places that seems to me to be rather a different footing to the others, it is so set off from the rest of the county, now that railways are running?—In East Clare you have no railways, Scariff and Tuila, are they not cut off just as much. Ballyvaughan is beautifully situated, a fine healthy place. It is one of the things you ought to consider.

24581. Scariff, that is your own union. Would you maintain Scariff?—I would not like to express an opinion as to those unions that ought to be maintained or not maintained, beyond the bare fact that four workhouses in this county are quite enough to meet the requirements.

24582. When you close a workhouse, do you think it would be wise to leave some small accommodation in the neighbourhood for those who would be acutely sick that could be looked after by the dispensary doctor and nurse in charge—a small cottage hospital?—Under certain conditions, but I would not be for closing up workhouses at all.

24583. Take the case now that you take Ballyvaughan into an industrial school for girls. That would not be closing up the house, but it would be closing it up as regards the sick unless you make some provision for the sick?—Take Kilrush—in parts of Kilrush they have to take patients at present twenty-two miles to hospital.

24584. There is a very small population from Loop Head, and you could not help that; it is a tongue of land—almost an island stretching into the Atlantic?—Where it would be necessary I would be very much in favour of a cottage hospital.

24585. Supposing you closed the Ballyvaughan Workhouse for the sick where would you bring the people from round Blackhead?—If you had not a cottage hospital you should bring them to whatever workhouse you amalgamated them with.

24586. The nearest workhouse would be in another county, Gort?—Ennistymon, I presume; I will touch that point when I come on to deal with Limerick.

24587. That is the question of county union?—Yes.

24588. I have not quite got your idea about the sick—do you think it would be too great a hardship supposing, for instance, Ballyvaughan and Killadyerst were closed. Would it be too great a hardship to bring the sick the distance they would have to travel?—I think if there was a proper conveyance the hardship would be very slight, and they ought to be better treated in the main hospital than a cottage hospital.

24589. It is the question of the removal of acute cases?—If the distance was very long I would certainly be in favour of the cottage hospital.

24590. The evidence we have received is very much in accord with that last statement of yours—that where the distances are very long some small provision ought to be left in the locality, and that the people might be attended by the dispensary doctor?—Certainly, but when I say that I believe the workhouse should be kept open with another purpose—that a wing should be utilised for a hospital and not the whole workhouse.

24591. Then you don't propose to abolish and knock down any of the workhouses?—I believe not; I would turn them to another purpose.

24592. When would the economy come in—the chief object in sending us round here was to try and effect economy, and at the same time not to impair efficiency?—If you had an industrial school I certainly say the Government would pay their portion, and for all children that you could send there I hold the Treasury should make payment.

24593. Still you have a very large institution kept up mainly out of the rates of the county?—Yes, would, but that institution is being kept up at present, and only a portion of it would be kept up in the future because the Treasury would come to the rescue and keep up at least half.

24594. I would not be too hopeful about these grants in aid?—Are they not giving grants for industrial children at present?

24595. They are, but even with that you will have an institution that will cost the country a great deal of money?—The girls of the county certainly ought to be put together, and the boys, they ought to be brought out of the various workhouses.

24596. You think the workhouse is a very bad place for children?—I do, and there should also be compulsory power given to acquire land, because a lot of these children will afterwards turn out and live on farms.

24597. I don't know whether you have very much experience in your own union of boarding out as distinguished from institution boarding?—No experience of it at all, and very little is done in this county.

24598. Except in the Clare portion of the Limerick Union the Limerick Guardians began it a good deal over twenty years ago and have worked it with great success in Limerick. The idea of those who support boarding out would be that a child is sent out to a small farmer, taught to make himself useful, a boy

Nov. 30, 1904.

Mr. P. J.
Hogan.

or a girl as the case may be, and becomes an agricultural labourer or a dairymaid or a housemaid in the country, and supplies a want felt in a great many places of agricultural labour—I would not like to take the child out if he were kept in the union until twelve or fourteen years of age, and kept in contact with the worst possible class of people.

24700. You are quite right, but the idea of boarding out people is that the child should be boarded out as soon as it could use its teeth, and eat whatever food was going, say two or three years old. When a child is boarded out at that tender age with a family, they get very much attached to the child, and being it up nearly as one of themselves, and teach it to become an agricultural labourer; you have not had the experience to enable you to offer an opinion on that?—No, I could not.

24701. It is a scheme that has been tried largely in a great many cases, and Cardinal Logue, at Armagh, has a scheme in operation in his diocese, rather than put them into institutions he has tried the boarding out scheme and finds it works with great success!—One of the crimes then would not be required at all.

24702. You are aware, I suppose, that the cost of boarding out is very much less than the cost of rearing them in the house!—There are no officials, as a rule, with the boarded out, except an inspector.

24703. Have you thought of any other inmates of the workhouse that might, with advantage, be excluded from the workhouse to matter what is done as regards the clothing of workhouse or not. Take the question of lunatics; do you think the workhouse is a fit and proper place for them?—No; it is not a place for harmless lunatics at all.

24704. Have you considered what would be the best thing to do with harmless lunatics that are now in such great numbers in the Clare Workhouse?—We have been four years considering it. My idea from the very start was that one of these workhouses should be taken as an auxiliary asylum; four years ago we got our equity surveyor to go to the various workhouses.

24705. Did he make a report in writing?—Yes, sir. He reported Killadysert, Tulla, and Scariff.

24706. What did he say about Tulla?—That is built close to the parent asylum.

24707. How many would it accommodate?—He wanted to make some alterations to accommodate at least 300 patients; he estimated that the improvements would take £23,150, on the idea that everything should be similar to the parent house; that you should treat the patients exactly the same as you treat the acute cases.

24708. That, of course, you would not think of for a moment!—Not at all. The asylum committee considered this matter and felt, at the time, that they would be bound actually to provide everything as it is provided at the parent house, with the result that they considered the matter for two years and they agreed, in face of that £23,000, to build an additional wing to the asylum. That, I am glad to say, has not been done, and our Council are almost unanimous in taking up a workhouse for an auxiliary asylum.

24709. Have you formed any opinion as to which would be a good workhouse to take up?—I don't know that the Council have a definite opinion; my belief would be that Tulla would be a capital place for them. There is just one drawback that occurred to us about Tulla, and that was whether a sufficient amount of land could be got to profitably employ the lunatics who need occupation.

24710. Certainly, if you get compulsory power to take land!—You will get it nowhere without compulsory powers, and if you get it you can take it there as well as anywhere else.

24711. You suggest that the Government should give compulsory power to take land?—Yes.

24712. At Tulla there is a good house, a wall-walled institution, and it would require relatively less expense than any other workhouse?—Yes. I would suggest that some other workhouse should be taken up and compulsory power given to acquire land, and used as an agricultural college for the county, for agriculture is the only industry in the county.

24713. That is going a step beyond our province. What you suggest we should do would be to recommend that one of the workhouses might be used by the Department of Agriculture?—Yes; give us power to take the land—power, in the same way as for the purpose of an auxiliary asylum.

24714. Have you formed any idea of the workhouse that would do for that?—I have not.

24715. Scariff?—I have not thought out which workhouse, but on the principle of the thing, it is a matter absolutely essential for the success of farming in the County Clare.

24716. Have you any other project for any other workhouse, say Corofa, if it was closed?—No; the boarding out knocks me out a good deal in my calculation.

24717. There is one suggestion that has been made in all places we have visited. You are aware now that consumption or phthisis is regarded as an infectious disease, and all the doctors recommend isolation and treatment in some special building, of consumptive cases. If a suitable workhouse could be got among the Clare unions, such as Corofa, would you be in favour of having there an institution to be jointly maintained by, say, the adjoining counties of Galway, Limerick, and Clare?—Certainly I would, for I believe the adjoining counties should contribute towards it, for one adjoining county it would not pay.

24718. Oh, yes, of course!—Then I certainly would, and think it is absolutely necessary.

24719. I dare say we shall have some medical evidence on that subject; the increase of consumption is now one of the serious questions in the country!—I also think that mothers of illegitimate children should be really brought to one union and kept together.

24720. That is making it into a sort of penitentiary?—Yes; they should be kept together, and there should be power there to keep them for a certain number of years, and turn them to do some useful work for the country.

24721. Another suggestion was made to us on that question, that was that these women should never be admitted into the local workhouse or hospital when they are about to give birth to illegitimate children, but that they should, instead, be sent to some reformatory or institution under religious management, according to the religion of the woman, and that they should be there kept for as short a time as possible, and when reclaimed endeavour to be put forward and get a start, and the child should be boarded out at the expense of the father and mother!—Or else, if you keep them there as long as you can.

24722. Would not your object be to give the girl a fresh start in life as soon as she was fit to go?—That might give them a fresh start to do the same thing again.

24723. Do you think that is likely—after the first fall a girl feels rather sorry for herself then?—I think here chances are 50 per cent. more to fall again if she falls a first time and comes out immediately.

24724. Our experience of these cases in the workhouses is that when they are put into the workhouse and become associated with women who have fallen before, once, twice, or oftener, when they are they become demoralised and corrupted, but when a girl does fall first, if she is never put in with such companions, but is put under religious management for a month before her confinement and sometimes afterwards, the opinion of a good many people, who have given us evidence, is that it is likely to lead to the redemption of the girl!—Would it not be likely to lead to her redemption if she was kept there for eight years and knew, before she fell, that she would be kept six or seven years in that institution, and she could do useful work for the country; you could have a laundry that would do the various institutions of the country.

24725. Does it not strike you that that would be a very hard punishment?—Give them something that when they are leaving according to their good conduct while inside.

24726. You are taking a girl and sending her out a middle-aged woman into the world again!—Sometimes you must use pretty hard measures.

24727. Are you aware that judicious religious influence on these girls has been found satisfactory in a great many cases?—I am sure it has.

24728. If the expense would not be practically more than that of the present institution system would it not be a good thing to give these girls a chance of getting back as honest women?—It would be 100 per cent. better than keeping them as they are at present.

24729. Your first idea was that it would be more in their best interests to exclude them from any possibility of falling?—For a certain time, and make them do useful work and give them a premium for their conduct inside.

Nov. 20, 1904

Mr F. J.
Hoggs.

24722. That would require a very large interference with a person's liberty!—You interfere with a person's liberty when you send them to jail.

24724. Supposing that district did come into Clare for Poor Law purposes, how would you obviate the hardship on people at Long Payment or Ordine getting relief for the sick in hospital?—There are plenty of houses I know of in that part of Clare, and I would utilise one of these; there are private houses which are unoccupied at present; I would utilise one of these for a cottage hospital.

24725. Or failing that what would you say to giving the people there a right of admission into the nearest hospital, which would be Limerick, to be paid for at so much a head per day or week by the County Clare?—I would much prefer to do the other thing—have our own institutions and manage them within our own county.

24726. Mr. MURKIN.—Would it not be well to have the alternative—I don't think so, sir; we are quite capable of managing it.

24727. CHAIRMAN.—Then as regards the aged and infirm, you contemplate that they should be kept in the workhouses that are not broken up?—Yes, certainly, and sent to these workhouses.

24728. Have you considered at all the possibility in order to save salaries and other expenses, have you considered the question that has been raised by a great many witnesses of having one institution for each county for the aged and infirm, where they had land and light occupation that would enable them to pass a more cheerful and useful life than they do at present?—I have not considered it, but I do think, from what I do know, that these very people require no land, and want no occupation beyond a pipe and to be let walk in an out.

24729. I may tell you that our unanimous opinion is very strongly opposed to yours; from our experience we think it is a very lamentable thing to go into the daymen of workhouses and see these old people—a great many of whom are quite as capable of doing a turn as the old men you see scraping the road, or the old women looking after children—it is a lamentable thing to see them in the workhouses; it is quite true if they have their pipe and cup of tea over the fire they are satisfied, but we think it would be more desirable to have them employed.—The reason they want to be because they would not scrape the roads and do light work.

24730. Then would it not be good business to make them do that inside as to keep them out?—Yes; and is not that power there at present, and why is it not utilized?

24731. That is a matter for Guardians; I would like to know that from you—I am not a member of the Board of Guardians.

Mr. MURKIN.—The power is very limited.

24732. CHAIRMAN.—It would save a great deal of money, it has been represented to me, if you could collect all the aged and infirm into one workhouse, say, Ennis, for the county; you would have there one management, and you would be able to classify the aged and infirm into various classes, according to their character, and different other considerations, not to separate man and wife, and so on.—Certainly if it was a saving, I would be very glad to do anything I could to assist it.

24733. That is one of our objects—that is, a reduction of rates; because I suppose you feel the rates are a little higher than you like?—A lot higher, and the tendency is that they are going up day by day, and as fast as the rates are going up the people are going down; they are running out of the country.

24734. And the power to pay the rates?—Yes, and a smaller amount of capital year after year in the county to pay the rates.

24735. If the bringing of the aged and infirm into one central institution were a decided economy for the county-at-large, would you be disposed to look at it with favour as far as you see at first sight?—Undoubtedly I would.

24736. Of course the argument that is put forward against that is that a great hardship is involved in moving the aged and infirm away from their own locality?—Yes, and those people who may visit them from time to time.

24737. We were greatly impressed by that argument and took steps to inquire, as regards the visiting of these people, and our experience, I am sorry, has been, while the sick are visited very frequently, the aged and infirm, who come in for life, are hardly visited at all—I thoroughly agree; it is a sentimental argument.

24738. Without much foundation. There was a question as regards chargeability. At present the chargeability for all Poor Law expenses is the union-at-large.—The feeling all over the county is entirely in favour of the electoral division charge, for many reasons.

24739. Is that for all purposes or only for outdoor relief?—For all purposes—all union purposes.

24740. You would give relief in some form to the tenant?—Yes, in some form, but at the present time it greatly tends to squander public money to have union-at-large rating.

24741. Do you think it does, under any other heading, except outdoor relief? If a person is willing to come into an institution, do you think the question of chargeability has really any influence on them?—Not the slightest on the person who would go in, but it has a great influence on the parties who are administering the relief.

24742. Do you think any Board of Guardians would refuse, or have refused, or do refuse applications for outdoor relief?—No, I do not.

24743. Is it not practically unheard of?—I am sure it is.

24744. So that really making indoor relief a local charge could not be expected to have any influence on the gross expenditure under that head?—Indirectly it has.

24745. You don't think the Guardians would change their minds if you went back to the electoral division charge; you don't think it would make them more careful in admitting people into the house?—Not with regard to admitting people into the house, but there are many things in regard to the working of the institution on which it would have a great influence.

24746. To what do you refer?—There may be changes to be made in the workhouse. There may be salaries to be raised, and if a Guardian has to go directly back to the people whom he represents, and to whom he would be responsible for that.

24747. That would be always a union-at-large charge—the salaries of officers?—And the building would be a union charge.

24748. Yes; you could not charge the establishment in any other way; it would be pro rata for the valuation of the contributing divisions?—I do believe, however, if they were directly responsible to the people who send them there, they would be far more careful, for they are at present, if such a thing occurred, "It is not my fault, a Guardian from such a place, that may be ten miles away, has as much influence by his vote on the Board as I have."

24749. I can understand how that applies to outdoor relief, but what I don't understand is how you bring that in as regards establishment charges?

Mr. MURKIN.—It would come in in this way, that a Guardian would find out, on hearing the list read of people admitted during the week into the house, whether any of them had means, and if so, mention the matter, and have inquiries made.

24750. And insist on payment when that has occurred?—Certainly. And also I have heard people against amalgamation simply on the ground that they happened to have, let us say, to illustrate the case, in their union a rate of 2s. in the £, while in the neighbouring union, for some cause or other, it was 4s. They say, "Why would we permit ourselves to be tacked on to that particular union and workhouse while we, by our economy, or some circumstances, are paying 2s." But it would meet it to a great extent if there were electoral division charges; their argument would be knocked out. Perhaps it may occur to-day before you that that may be one of the reasons why men are against amalgamation. They will say "We will fight to the death before we are tacked on to a union that is paying double our rates; if there was electoral division raising their arguments would be knocked out.

24756. I don't follow you there; it would only be knocked out to the extent of the paupers of the division—That is the very reason why the rate is low, because there are no paupers out of the division. There may be one union with 200 paupers, and the same-sized union, with the same valuation, with but 100; why then does not that argument stand good?

24757. It does, to a certain extent—I think it does to a great extent.

24758. Dr. Brogan—it would not apply to the districts inside the union; the rates on a district, if you have divisional rating, would not be for the number of inmates from that district; it would only be for their maintenance, not for the establishment charges!—But you would not want to vote as large an amount of money for two patients in a particular district as if there were four from that district.

24759. It applies to some extent, but it would not apply to the establishment charges—I am speaking of the inmates from this particular district.

24760. CHAIRMAN.—It would apply very seriously in the case of outdoor relief. If difficulties were found in the way of reversing to divisional chargesability for all purposes as before would you still advocate that you should go back to the electoral division for outdoor relief?—I would like to see what the difficulties would be before I would answer that.

24761. That would be rather a long story to go into?—Then you would not expect me to give an opinion on that.

24762. You must remember the Legislature quite recently changed the rating after considering the question thoroughly, and you will find the arguments reported in the debates in 1893; they changed the rating from divisional to union; if we were to ask them to go back to divisional it would be rather a quick change, and if a difficulty were expressed in getting such a quick change carried out as regards all Poor Law expenditure would you be in favour of making outdoor relief a divisional charge?—I certainly would; but I would prefer to get divisional charges for all. I would not be shy in asking the Legislature to change that. There are many things in the Local Government Act that should be changed. Does it improve the condition of the union to have plural representation; we have eighty representatives, and it is no small job to work with eighty men on a Board.

24763. Mr. MURPHY.—You could answer the argument by saying that union rating had never been experienced before, and after a trial of five or six years it was found rather extravagant, and you wanted to go back to the old arrangements?—Very true.

24764. CHAIRMAN.—But at any rate you would prefer electoral rating as far as possible, and if you could not get the whole you would take as much as you could of it?—Half a loaf would be better than no bread on that principle.

24765. You would not be at all in favour of making the support of the sick a county charge?—Oh, no.

24766. You would not consider it was as broad as it was long, practically?—I would not.

24767. As regards the county infirmary, you are aware that at present it is a county charge?—I am well aware, and I am well aware who utilizes it; 50 per cent of the patients are within eight or ten miles of it, and 40 per cent within a quarter of a mile of it.

24768. Would you think it a fair thing of your district, at Scariff, to ask, that as you are paying your share of the Ennis sick maintenance and the asylum that Ennis and the other unions should pay their share of your sick maintenance at Scariff that is to say, put all the risk on the county-at-large?—I understand we will get a capitation grant for those.

24769. No, no; only the acutely sick; you have only the acutely sick in the infirmary at Ennis. You were talking just now of the hardship of obliging distant parts of the county to contribute to the infirmary, from which they derived little benefit?—I don't say it is a hardship because it is the right thing to do, but we have not the advantage of sending our sick there.

24770. If you had the counterbalancing advantage of having your sick at Ballyvaughan, and Killybegs, and Killybegs, the acutely sick put on the county-at-large would be your opinion of such a proposal?—I would prefer leaving things as they are.

24771. And continue to pay for the county infirmary at Ennis?—Yes.

24772. The question has been put to your Council what do you think of the possibility of getting payments from the sick who are able to afford to pay something, and your answer to that is that you would leave it to the discretion of each governing body to fix the amount to be paid?—Yes, on the principle that they should be compelled to pay where they are able.

24773. I don't know whether you have considered at all that very small contributions might be got. We visited some infirmaries in the North of Ireland, where they have put into operation a system of getting very small contributions, even 6d. a week, from people who could afford to pay it. If a very poor man had a child who was sick it would, at all events, cost him 6d. a week to keep it at home?—More.

24774. So it was thought they might fairly ask what would be the amount saved by the withdrawal of that month from the family meals, and that system has been put in operation there and a large sum of money got, more than sufficient to pay the salary of the surgeon of the infirmary; and the experience there has been that the poor people too rub like the system; it makes them more independent; they feel they are not being pauperized or anything of that sort and they pay willingly in a large number of cases. Would you be in favour of a discretion being given to the managing bodies to charge such sums as they thought proper might reasonably, and without hardship, afford to pay?—Certainly; but I would also be in favour of there being some power to compel them. At present, if they are in an infirmary, they can come out and need not pay a cent.

24775. You would give the local authority power to fix the amount, and give them power to recover, a law, the amount due, up to the full cost. A comparatively rich man might go in and it might be necessary to have a special nurse employed for him; would you give the body power to meet the whole amount?—Certainly, if he could afford it, and when people can afford it, if they are inclined, as far as I know, to pay it; in some cases they are not; they will slide out of it, but if they look for a private room or apartment certainly they will pay.

24776. Apart from that a great many people prefer company when they go into hospitals. Have you had much experience of tramps?—So far as the experience of meeting them, I have a fair amount of it.

24777. What is your opinion of that class?—I think they should be discontinued in every possible way.

24778. Your County Council was rather in favour of abolishing casual wards in workhouses and not admitting them at all?—Yes.

24779. That is a negative method; is there any positive method for dealing with those that have occurred to you?—I would deal with them on a different principle. When these able-bodied tramps would come to look for anything, I would have the parties who would relieve them prosecuted; I would give a premium to the tramp who would give information to the police, and have the parties who relieved the tramp prosecuted instead of the tramp.

24780. You think you would not like strong corroborative evidence in support of the tramp's statement?—Certainly.

24781. A charitable man would take care that there were no witnesses present when he gave relief?—But no man who would give relief would deny it and swear he did not.

24782. He may sit still and say nothing? (Witness.—Let the onus of proof be thrown on him.) That would be reversing the matter of the criminal law. A suggestion has been made to us that it would be a good thing to take a workhouse, say one in each parish of Ireland, and then these tramps who go about—I don't refer to the old people who belong to the district and go about and are willingly and heartily given charity by those who know them in the neighbourhood, but I refer to the sturdy tramp going from county to county—it has been suggested that these people should, as far as they have children and are rearing them up in the same course as themselves, that their children ought to be taken from them, and even when they have no children, and are going about without visible means of support, that they should be sent, by legal process—magistrate's warrant—into one of these four provincial workhouses and there locked up for such length of time as might be found necessary. I don't mean short terms, but long terms, and that they should be there brought up in habits of industry, with a view to giving them a start, as is done in Germany and other places?—I thoroughly agree with that, but you should have a thousand acres of land and make them raise vegetables and crops to supply Dublin and Cork and other places; it would be a paying institution then, and I would go for it.

24783. The broad principle that those who recommend that system go on is that these people are living absolutely on the public, and if they want to go on living by the public they should be forcibly detained and made give value for their support?—Certainly under these conditions I would be in favour of it.

24784. Are you in favour of out-door relief as a method of relieving destitution?—To a small extent I would.

24785. There are a great number of those old people who are in workhouses—do you think it would be possible to devise any scheme of out-door relief or boarding out old people that would cost less?—I hardly think you could board out some of these old people. If you board them out you have not only to board them out but nurse them.

24786. It would come very largely to boarding out with their own friends?—I am afraid they would not be as well treated by their own friends, who might take them simply because they were paid a certain amount of money for them.

24787. You would go to avoid that too many people might try to get their friends boarded out with them?—The tendency would be that way.

24788. Would not that be sufficiently counteracted by the electoral division chargeability?—To a certain extent it would, because everybody in that district would know who was the right person to give it to. The Guardians who did that would be soon told to get about their business; they would not be left these three years or three weeks; they would get a sudden notice to quit, and they would not get six months' redemption.

24789. You would not propose to have any method for shortening the Guardians' tenure of office—you would leave them three years with power to the locality, perhaps to make it unpleasant for them to stay the whole time?—Certainly.

24790. Is there anything I have not referred to?—I think my colleague is to deal with another portion of the question which I did not touch.

24791. It has been mentioned recently in Cork and other places that the distribution of out-door relief might be universally made in kind. Instead of giving money the relieving officers should be employed distributing bread or such other food as would be ordered by the Guardians?—The idea, I think, is a very good one. I know plenty of people that are getting out-door relief and the chief part is spent in the public-houses.

24792. And they would not take bread?—They would not; they would not eat it for you.

24793. If a scheme of that sort could be carried out you would be rather favourable towards it?—I would.

24794. Dr. Brown.—Do you approve of giving the clothing for children in the way of out-door relief?

CHANCEMAN.—Food and clothing—that is in the existing law. You could give bedding?—I am afraid if you got into that the tendency would be on the part of a great many to look for clothing. They would fight shy in the beginning, but I am afraid that would wear off in a short time, and the inducement would not be so great to their parents to work for these children to get them clothing when they could get clothing by way of relief.

24795. Are you on the Committee of Management of the asylum?—Yes.

24796. You have already given us your views about the question of enlargements—an auxiliary asylum is what you are in favour of?—Yes.

24797. Managed on cheaper lines?—Oh, yes; I hold that at least £1,500 would put one of the workhouses in form for an auxiliary asylum, but what is wanted is proper treatment and light occupation; it is not beautiful dormitories and ornamentation in the latest style.

24798. That does not cost so much, cleanliness and polishing, that is what should be there?—Cleanliness, accommodation, proper diet, and exercise.

24799. Chargeability in the same way as in the parent house?—Chargeability in the same way; a capitation grant of 4s. and we will pay the balance whatever it is.

24800. Dr. Brown.—You understand that as the law stands at present you could not get the capitation grant of 4s.?—We want to change the law in that respect; the lawless lunatics has as much right to be treated well as the sane patient. There is just one point, where you have to dispose with officials in any union I would hold that the governing body or some body in the county should get the right to borrow money under the same principle as the Land Purchase Act or give them a gratuity, a lump sum, and it would come lighter on the county.

24801. You would give them their choice—you would not propose to touch any of those officials who had given long service or short service, as the case might be, you would not be disposed to disturb them without a generous provision, and you would give them a choice of either an annuity or a lump sum—nearly everyone would take the lump sum?—Yes; if I got the money at 3l per cent. on the same terms as given at present under the Land Purchase Act, and I think that would be the cause of immediate relief to the present generation.

24802. It would be a great relief to the succeeding?—Yes.

24804. Dr. Brown.—In the case of an auxiliary asylum would you have it as part of the parent institution, so that patients could be transferred from one to the other?—Yes, and the one superintendent could visit it.

24805. Yes, but still you would require a Resident Superintendent. Have they a Resident Superintendent in Youghal?—They have a Visiting Physician; I think the same thing would work with us here.

24806. With 300 inmates—that is a very large number?—There is another point, one, where we take away the workhouse out of the district and leave a distance of ten or fifteen miles; it would be strongly in favour of having a district nurse.

24807. CHANCEMAN.—In connection with the dispensary doctor?—Yes, and that would help to meet a great deal of the difficulties, and it would be a thing that would be absolutely essential in my opinion.

Mr. DANIEL O'LEAGHAN, Chairman, Ballyvaughan Union, examined.

24808. CHANCEMAN.—You live in the Lisdowry Union?—Yes.

24809. There was one question I said we would defer until you came up—that is the question of what you thought about the Ballyvaughan Union being continued?—It is the sense of the Board there that it should be amalgamated, but they did not state whether Ballyvaughan itself should go, or have another union amalgamated with it.

24810. Would they prefer to swallow the adjacent union or be swallowed themselves?—They did not define their position in that respect, but I think the sense of the Board is that Ballyvaughan should go.

24811. It is on the sea coast, and has only one side of the country behind it?—Yes.

24812. How far is it from Ballyvaughan town to Ennistymon?—Fourteen Irish miles.

24813. You personally don't see any reason why the Ballyvaughan Union should not be broken up?—Personally I was opposed to it.

24814. What was your personal opinion?—That it would not lead to increased economy; of course it would as far as the establishment charges were concerned, but then if we take into consideration the compensation to existing officers and the incidence of taxation which will follow from going to Ennistymon or any other union, and the expense of transit, I don't think it would be a material advantage to the rates.

24815. Mr. MURPHY.—The compensation of officers would be an expiring charge?—It does not so much apply to us because we have employed two or three of our officers on the ground that they would not be entitled to compensation if amalgamation followed.

24816. CHANCEMAN.—That was prudent, but would you stick to it?—That would be a matter for the Board to consider; we would be acting within our rights, but I don't think we would adhere to it strictly.

24812. They have no legal right at present, but if you were going to carry a big scheme for amalgamation do you think it would be a wise thing to do it on harsh personal grounds where a very small amount was involved?—I would not be in favour of inflicting hardship on any individual in carrying it out.

24813. It would be a hardship on a man who had got an office, and for whom it would be rather late in life to start elsewhere?—It would, if they were a long time in office.

24814. Even a few years?—I agree with you, it would be a hardship.

24815. Mr. MURPHY.—A good deal of money could be saved in fuel and cost of maintaining the building?—I assume the building would have to be maintained in any case.

24816. CHAIRMAN.—What would you do with the building?—I have gone into the matter carefully. I consider Ballyvaughan could be used as a technical school for fishery purposes, being on the sea-coast.

24817. Mr. MURPHY.—That would not be under the Poor Law?—It would not.

24818. We are dealing with the Poor Law and how to effect economy?—In the event of its not being available for such a purpose I thought of a sanatorium for consumptives, which is a disease of recognized danger to the public now.

24819. CHAIRMAN.—How could you have a fishery school at Ballyvaughan?—You could; it is just convenient to the sea.

24820. The water is a good deal away from it often?—The workhouse is within a few hundred yards of the sea.

24821. You are not aware of any fishing school now doing any useful work?—Except Baltimore.

24822. It is an ordinary industrial school. The way fishery instruction is now given is by putting a trained hand on a boat to teach it on the water—it is not dry land teaching now?—That is the way it should be taught. Then if you convert it into a hospital for consumptives—

24823. It is not a very airy situation for that?—It is a dry place. However, I think the dryness is not very essential now; the colder the climate the better they like it.

24824. If no useful purpose could be got for that institution, you would not think of selling it for what it would fetch to the highest bidder and letting it go?—I think you would get nothing for it.

24825. Supposing you got next to nothing, might it not be the cheapest way out of it?—You would have to retain a portion of the hospital in any case.

24826. If a great portion of that is not much used it might not be a sensible thing to spend money on it in repairing and painting?—No; it would cost £250 a year to keep it up.

24827. We had one witness who advocated that these buildings should be sold for stones to be used on the roads or in other buildings as long as they would last?—I would be very sorry to see a building destroyed for the sake of material; unfortunately, we have plenty of stones in Ballyvaughan; we could give building material to the whole of Ireland.

24828. It is built of limestone?—I suppose the men who bring out turf would be glad to have the limestone some handy blocks?—They don't take it for any purpose.

24829. You heard the evidence given by Mr. Higgins at great length on different points—was there any matter that he referred to on which you held somewhat different opinions, or which you would like to amplify?—There was one point, the electoral division change; I think the only effect it would have would be it would lead to less out-door relief being given. Out-door relief is the only thing I am alarmed lately; there is a greater tendency and Guardians are more generous in giving out-door relief when it is not chargeable to any particular locality.

24830. You would like to make it a divisional charge?—I don't think it will ever go back to that again, but for out-door relief I would.

24831. Would you prefer it if it could be done for all purposes?—Oh, certainly; if it could be done, but it is useless to expect that now.

24832. About the auxiliary asylum?—My view was that Corcfin was the most suitable for the purpose, being in the centre of the county, and it is convenient of access from all parts. The only drawback is the fencing; it is not suitable at present.

24840. You know the Tulla Workhouse?—Not well.

24841. There is a fine wall there?—And in going through the figures I find that we have at present in the county 176 insane cases to March, 1903.

24842. More, I think?—We have ninety-four idiots who may be classed as insane.

24843. We would class any mental cases?—That would bring the number to 280 altogether.

24844. I heard at the asylum yesterday there were about 260 in the workhouse?—Those are principally confined between two or three districts, Ennis, Kilmuckish, and Tulla.

24845. And Ennistymon?—It has 48; I think the number has increased lately; in Ennis there are 73, which includes 72 in the asylum; in Kilmuckish there are 47, and 19 idiots.

24846. There are more there now, 100. As regards the children, have you thought what would be the best way for them, boarding out or institution?—The boarding-out system would be preferable to any institution. If you had a properly superintended boarding-out system the children would be ultimately absorbed into the general population of the district, whereas if you bring them up in the institution you will have to be seeking employment for them hereafter. Of course the boarding-out system under the present law cannot reach the whole of the inmates in any institution.

24847. No; I should have asked that question of Mr. Higgins. Would you be in favour of an amendment of the law that would enable the Guardians to board out any child that comes to be supported on the rates?—Yes, that is a great weakness in the law at present; it is most injurious that a bad parent should have the control of a child as the law at present enables them.

24848. If the Guardians were given that power, do you think that they or somebody should also have the power to detain the parents of the children that were so often taken from them, not to let them go off uncontrolled?—There should be some means of controlling them after or it would force them of their responsibility; that is the only drawback I notice in relation to that change.

24849. As regards tramps—have you many of them in your part of the country?—We have, unfortunately; I find that in looking over the average number of days in the Ballyvaughan Union, with which I am connected as Chairman, the average number of days for 1903 was only 42, which would lead me to infer, but of course, there is no data to work on, that 88 out of every 100 relieved were tramps. You have the numbers in the Poor Law reports for each year, but they are given in bulk, and the average is about 4,000 a day all over Ireland. In the Corcfin Workhouse the figures are, if anything, worse. The average number of days there are only 25, which clearly proves that 86 per cent. of those relieved are tramps.

24850. Ennis is the worst of all?—It is not in proportion; the average number of days in Ennis is 37.

24851. 1,010 is the annual number of days?—Get look at the use of the money, you must take it into account. Ballyvaughan and Corcfin are simply kept open for tramps.

24852. The chief tramp route is through Gort and Corcfin to Ennis?—The coast line evidently suits them when they go to Ballyvaughan.

24853. You are much smaller at Ballyvaughan and Ennistymon, and much smaller at Kilmuckish and Killybeggs?—There were 537 tramps relieved last year in Ballyvaughan.

24854. The main tramp route, except during the Lendormans season, by Corcfin and Ennis?—They don't pass so much lately through Lendormans; we take them up and prosecute them there.

24855. Would you be in favour of a scheme of arresting all those people who have not visible means of support, and putting them into a labour colony?—There is ample power already, not for the creation of a colony, but for dealing with vagrants.

24856. That is only for forty-eight hours' imprisonment, but for locking them up for months or years?—There should be something like that done when there are 4,000 people living on the country annually that way. I wish to point out the relative position of Ballyvaughan and other unions as far as expense is concerned. In Ballyvaughan the maintenance and clothing charges for inmates come to 3s. 5½d. a week; Corcfin comes to 4s. 6d.; Killybeggs, St. When you comes then to the question of the general charge of inmates, taking establishment charges and all into account. I find Ballyvaughan is £19 each per annum, Corofin £21, Ennis £16 17s., Keshmystown £18, and Killybegs £23 each.

24567. Mr. MURKINAGHAN.—That is due to the small number in the house?—Yes, and the high establishment charges. Well, our cost is the lowest for maintenance; we have the lowest contract system, I think, in Ireland for milk, bread, and clothing, but still our expenses are high. Our contract for milk was as low as 5½d. and 3½d.

24568. That ought to show that it would be an economy to get the houses closed whenever you could?—It would, of course; that is the reason the Guardians have gone for that. There are three of the principal houses that can be spared, Ballyvaughan, Corofin, and Killybegs.

24569. You think these workhouses would be done without in the county?—I am sure they could; there are very few local institutions each year.

24570. Would you favour an auxiliary system in place of enlarging the parent asylum?—I would of course; it would cost less.

24571. You think the inmates could be maintained at a lower rate?—At little more than half the cost; the average cost in Youghal is about £13 each.

24572. CHAIRMAN.—Are you sure of that?—We have it from the figures of the Poor Law Conference report.

24573. Dr. BROWNE.—Do you mean the estimated figures?—The actual cost.

24574. CHAIRMAN.—The average cost under the auxiliary?—Yes.

24575. It has not been opened a year yet, has it?—Over a year.

24576. Dr. BROWNE.—It has not been admitted at all yet?—The figures are taken from the accounts.

24577. CHAIRMAN.—I think you may take it we have not got accurate information; we hope to get it when we visit Cork, but I think you may take it that the figures have not been ascertained yet?—They have given all their figures in the report.

24578. Mr. MURKINAGHAN.—Still it is true it does not cost anything like as much as the ordinary asylum?—The idea of calculating on the capitation grant is foolish; if we got 2s. where the expense is £13 it means more than if we got 4s. where the expense is £21.

24579. Dr. BROWNE.—Of course it is for a different class of inmates, and that class in the larger parent institution would be at a lower average than the acute cases?—They would not; there would be a general average there.

24580. Yes, but still at the same time they would reduce the general average cost there if so many of that class were put in it?

24581. CHAIRMAN.—The more you have the cheaper the rate per head?—It would tend that way certainly, but, on the other hand, if you increase the number you increase the staff.

24582. Dr. BROWNE.—If you take a class out of the asylum and put them into a separate establishment you would run up the average cost for the acute cases in the asylum—that would be no saving on the whole. If that class are kept cheaper in the parent institution and practically at the same rate in the auxiliary asylum?—We have not many classes as harmless as present in the asylum.

24583. But there are a great many inmates in the system of the same class as are kept in the workhouses in Clare. Your asylum is so crowded that if there is an admission there they must send one of their harmless lunatics to the workhouse of the district from which the patient came?—It would decrease the general average, of course, in the asylum.

24584. Mr. MURKINAGHAN.—Apart from the question of cost, don't you think it would be well to have a certain amount of classification in the asylum—that is to say the people who are harmless—that they should not be kept along with the noisy and turbulent class?—I think so; it would lead to improvement scenes.

24585. Then there is another class that is only occasionally dangerous—having for weeks loud intervals. Don't you think it would be well if there was some kind of separation for that class?—I am sure it would.

24586. That could not be done in the parent institution, because there is not space, but if there was an auxiliary for the mildest cases, the principal institution would be relieved?—You would have much better classification if the numbers were reduced. The object of having harmless lunatics put together is for the sake of cleanliness and attention.

24587. Dr. BROWNE.—If you had them in a large asylum you could give them more work than in the workhouse?—By acquiring ground in connection with the workhouse you could have as much employment. Farm work is all they have to do in the asylum, and you can have that in the workhouse too.

24588. CHAIRMAN.—And if you had the compulsory powers you could have more land?—Certainly.

24589. Dr. BROWNE.—You would have a separate establishment to keep up in the auxiliary, coat, laundry and fire, that you would not require in a central institution?—You would require the whole of them except that the cooking apparatus would not be required. We have a complete institution nearly; you are obliged to get a nurse for every ten or twenty patients.

24590. A certain staff, but not in the same proportion for your increase. For instance, if you put 300 or 350 more inmates in your present asylum, provided you had accommodation for them, you would not require extra attendants, an extra cook, or, perhaps, an extra matron?—No, you would not.

24591. These are establishment charges that you would not require to duplicate if you had a separate institution?—We would have applications for increased pay from all the officials if we increased their work.

24592. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it is reasonable when you have a man's whole time to receive an application from him for an increase of pay?—We have the whole time as it is.

24593. Do you think it reasonable that he should be coming to you for every little increase in work?—I do not think it is fair to do so, but it is the tendency.

24594. Do you think it would be a good thing to make it understood that salaries, fixing them at whatever was right, that the salaries should be for all the duties that a man would be called upon to discharge?—I think so; his pension is based on the fact that his whole time is given to the ratepayers.

24595. In most branches of the public service, whether Civil Service, Military, or Naval, Police, Marine, or Customs, a man is called upon to give all his time, no matter how much duties new Acts of Parliament have imposed, he has to help in administering that without increased pay?—I am aware of that.

24596. Mr. MURKINAGHAN.—You think the same ought to apply in the public service locally?—I think it should, but I would not put an old official on a level with a newly-appointed man.

24597. CHAIRMAN.—You would like to have a fair salary, and then let a man give his whole time?—Yes; I would have a periodical increase up to a certain point.

24598. Dr. BROWNE.—That is a maximum and a minimum?—Yes. I would wish no alteration made in the County Infirmary, for we find it one of the most useful institutions for all parts of the county. I would be for extending the scope of that institution.

24599. CHAIRMAN.—At present you make a grant from the County Council to the Infirmary?—£1,400.

24600. How much does Ballyvaughan Infirmary get from the rate, the Workhouse Infirmary. I suppose it is as much as they spend?—We get a grant from the rate.

24601. Is it not for what expenditure is necessary?—Yes.

24602. Do you see any reason why the County Infirmary should not be put on the same basis as an ordinary hospital in treating the sick?—I do not; I think we should have power to contribute what is needed. I consider it the most useful institution in Clare at present. You could not think of bringing any local hospital up to the efficiency of the County Infirmary.

24603. You would have the local hospitals in touch with it so that without sending to Cork or Dublin you could get a nurse from them when required?—Yes.

24604. Would it not be an economical thing for the county to keep their head staff of nurses there, to have one nurse for each hospital, and if any extra nurse was required to send to the County Infirmary for it?—

Nov. 26, 1904. I think it is a great drawback that we cannot employ them; we have to pay them fully, and the recompense is not given us.

Mr. Daniel O'Loughlin.

24025. Dr. Broome.—What are the points you wanted to bring before the Commission?—I did not know whether you wished to go into statistics or not about the numbers of patients. I took the statistics from 1898 to 1903 inclusive. Our average number of intern patients during those years was 600. In 1901 we had 215 operations; that is major and minor; in 1902 we had 242 operations; in 1903 we had 191; in recent years we have increased the numbers of operations, having more facilities for the purpose, and also increased our nursing staff. All our nurses are trained purely and simply by ourselves under the supervision of myself and the trained matron we have. We have no nurse, and had not for years who has been trained elsewhere. At present we have ten nurses on our staff, but in 1896 we had two nurses and three probationers in addition to the matron. In 1897 we had the same number; in 1899 we had one nurse under pay and six probationers who were not under pay. In 1900 we had three paid nurses and a staff nurse, two assistant nurses, and five probationers. At present we have ten, that includes the district nurse; she is for the district of Kesh; the remainder in the infirmary, and the District Nursing Association pays so much to the infirmary governors for her board and lodgings.

24026. Dr. Broome.—Does she do any work inside the infirmary?—She does when not engaged in the district work.

24027. She then does relief work?—Yes, but that is not compulsory.

24028. Chairman.—Is she a highly qualified nurse?—She is qualified with us.

24029. Dr. Broome.—It is the same individual that is always doing the district nursing?—We have the same one when she is appointed until she resigns, but if she was ill we send one of our probationers.

24031. Dr. Broome.—You find that useful, too; it broadens their ideas?—Yes, and gives them additional experience. Recently we had a difficulty about those who were applying to become probationers; it has become rather popular, and some who were going up were unavailable; it was almost impossible to train them as nurses, not through any fault of their own, but want of education; but there has been a small literary examination required, and the Governors too have charged a small fee, 65 for the first year's training.

24032. Chairman.—To cover the cost of the uniform?—Exactly. As far as our expenses are concerned they have increased in recent years; that is due to two or three causes, first and foremost the improved feeding. You cannot feed people now, and they would not be satisfied, with the food they had twenty years ago. Most of the contract prices, in spite of the effects of the Committee, have risen in recent years; then again you have increased expenses in the way of surgical dressings. We do an enormous amount of external surgical dressings at the infirmary, that is locally.

24033. That is a heavy item?—It is, and it is very difficult to calculate that in our average expenses as far as the intern patients are concerned.

24034. Dr. Broome.—You cannot separate it from your intern expenditure?—No.

24035. Is your income too limited for your requirements?—It is in ways; we have in recent years been rather inclined to go beyond our income; at present the County Council give us the legal maximum, 21,400 a year.

24036. You would have local hospitals, so that they could either send, as a matter of course, cases to be operated on, or if the patient could not be removed, perhaps the County Infirmary doctor could operate in the locality if arrangements could be made?—That would be a county arrangement.

24037. In that way remote parts of the county would get the benefit of the County Infirmary?—Oh, certainly; it would be a great convenience.

Dr. GEORGE FAIRIS, Surgeon, Co. Clare Infirmary, examined.

24038. What other income have you?—There are about seven annual governors, and three guineas each paying patient, that comes to, roughly, over £100 a year. We have been sending out from time to time some of our nurses to private cases; that brings in an income of £30 or £40 a year.

24039. Dr. Broome.—Is that capable of much increase?—It is if we had a staff.

24040. Do you often have applications for nurses when you cannot supply them?—We have. It depends a good deal on an epidemic.

24041. In ordinary years do you sometimes have to refuse?—We have; there is hardly a year, or perhaps a month, that we have not to refuse.

24042. Do you often supply nurses for relief work in unions?—We have just had two at present that have been out, one at Ballyvaughan and another at Scarf.

24043. Is the custom increasing of sending to you for them?—It is.

24044. Do you often have to refuse unions?—Not often; the Governors make it a rule that you shall not refuse any union that comes to you, and if we are very much pressed, either by heavy surgical or medical cases where we must have special day and night nurses, we are limited then.

24045. You have heard the chairman's suggestion to the last witness about modifying the system in the county, making small cottage hospitals through the county in connection with the County Infirmary in the way of interchanging the nurses. What do you think of that?—I don't think it would be a bad idea at all.

24046. Do you think it would be very useful both for the outpatients and for the infirmary?—Yes.

24047. It would save the outpatients considerable expense in sending long distances to Dublin for a nurse?—Or Cork or Limerick. That means a good deal of expense, and costs a guinea or a guinea and a half for a nurse.

24048. At a guinea a week is the usual charge, and in a mental case a guinea and a half?—Yes.

24049. And sometimes in infectious cases one and a half guineas?—Yes.

24050. That would come to your infirmary, and therefore the county would get the benefit of that instead of giving it to a far away institution?—Exactly. But in order to do that we would require an increased staff of nurses.

24051. We are taking it that you would have a staff in proportion to your requirements?—Exactly.

24052. Chairman.—The point of view is that there are so many nurses at present in the county that the number is probably in excess of the requirements; if a systematized arrangement was made, if Kesh Infirmary was made the headquarters of the county, you would have one nurse in each local hospital, or whatever the necessary number would be, and if an addition was necessary owing to an epidemic or any sickness coming they would telegraph to you and you would send them one of yours, so that, possibly, a smaller staff of nurses might answer the purpose for the whole county?—Yes, I understand quite.

Dr. Broome.—And it might come that these districts would not pay for them because they would be paid by the county?

24053. Mr. MEMMOGHOON.—Might it not work the other way, and be keeping up a staff of nurses that would not be necessary for the local hospitals?—They might be.

24054. And would it not also interfere with the local management of Boards of Guardians, because they would be very touchy on that point?—That is the difficulty, going from one Board to another. Our Board is altogether distinct from the Board of Guardians—our Board consists of twenty-two members.

Nov. 20, 1904.
Dr. George
Harris.

24026. CHAIRMAN.—I don't quite see what you mean; if you had a staff of nurses who could be employed available for the sick that are kept up by the rate-payers of the country, and if you can get that at a cheaper rate by a systematic arrangement, I don't see how the Guardians would feel anything but grateful if they had to pay less for the nursing.—No doubt, but they would be under two sets of masters.

24027. No; the moment they would arrive at the local hospital they would be absolutely under the orders of the local doctor just as any private case.—I understand.

24028. Dr. BROWN.—You would not be in charge of them until they came back to you.

24029. Mr. MURKHAUS.—Might not localities be paying for these nurses in an institution, and yet not get any service from them? At present the whole county contributes to the infirmary independent of the number of patients or nurses.

24030. Then would not these outlying localities be paying for nurses for Banna, and perhaps they would never send them?—That is being done at present.

24031. CHAIRMAN.—I don't know whether you are aware that in a great many unions, workhouse infirmaries, and fever hospitals, especially fever hospitals, nurses are kept and sometimes not employed for months.—I was not aware of that.

24032. Where you has nothing to do except brush her clothes and go out for a walk, when there are no patients from month to month's end. Under this system that lady instead of enjoying her own time at the local places, would go back to the infirmary and do work for you until she was wanted.

24033. Dr. BROWN.—It was to get a smaller staff for the whole county and keep them practically employed the whole time?—That ought to be a good system.

24034. You would arrange their relief whether you had them in the place or not, and if there was any epidemic or rash on, the leave would be stopped?—Just as we do at present.

24035. Do you think there would be something gained by having the County Infirmary in touch with similar hospitals—that is that larger operations would be sent to you—those that would be able to travel. Of course the cases that could not travel long distances would be admitted to the hospital, and perhaps your services would be requisitioned by telegraph, and you would assist the local doctor in the operation?—That is so; that might be done with cases that could not travel.

24036. Cases that you might as well have at home to do as remove them a long distance—you might save a good many lives in the county that way?—Yes.

24037. Mr. MURKHAUS.—The relieving officer at present has power to call for any help he wants?—Yes, that is in dispensary work.

24038. Dr. BROWN.—But having nurses and doctors and everything more or less in touch they might be more available and to better advantage. The County Infirmary would be brought into closer touch with the small hospitals than at present?—Yes.

24039. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose it is the fact that a great many local dispensary doctors are not encouraged—their hands have got a little out of practice for operations?—Yes.

24040. And the power of the Dispensary relieving officer to call in the nearest medical practitioner might not be the best course adopted; he would not have the practice?—That might happen.

24041. I suppose the number in the profession who are willing to take instruments in their hands and conduct big operations are relatively few?—It is a thing that requires constant practice, and besides, the majority of men in dispensaries, not having a hospital, it rather checks them in that respect, no matter how willing.

24042. They would not like it themselves, but of course if it was a case of life and death they would undertake the operation, but it might not be the best course to adopt for the patient?—Particularly operating on them in their own houses, which is objectionable.

24043. Mr. MURKHAUS.—We have been told in some places that the patients would rather be sent to a large city hospital?—In recent years I cannot say that I have met many such cases. You occasionally meet a patient who will prefer going to a large city, especially in eye cases, but my experience is that a great many people say they prefer to stay near their relatives at home.

24044. CHAIRMAN.—And they have confidence in the infirmary?—I think they have, but independently of that they have a wish to be near their own relatives.

24045. Mr. MURKHAUS.—You must recognise that there are advantages in these large cities for surgical operations in serious cases that to county infirmary could have?—There are so many specialists in cities.

24046. CHAIRMAN.—The local hospital would not be nearly as efficient as yours, and yours would not be as efficient as one of the big hospitals?—That is so; but there is one great advantage we have over cities and that is the pure unadulterated air.

24047. Mr. MURKHAUS.—Don't you think it would be a hard thing for the localities that would take no advantage of the county infirmary to be compelled to pay for the upkeep of such an institution?—That is so; that applies to a great extent at the present time.

24048. But it would be still more accentuated in the suggestion of the Chairman?—Yes; and time after time that matter has been discussed at county-at-large Road Meetings in the old times.

24049. Dr. BROWN.—Would not the system suggested help to minimize that to a large extent—having your nurses available, and in that way having some system whereby a remote place would get some advantage from the county infirmary, more than at present?—The principal difficulty the outlying parishes have had has been the mode of transport.

24050. CHAIRMAN.—The union ambulances at present are not available for the conveyance of patients from localities to your infirmary?—No.

24051. Do you think it would be a good thing if they were?—I do. In a great many instances I think it would be a great advantage to the people themselves if it was available.

24052. Dr. BROWN.—That would be another branch of unifying the system?—Yes; there is the difficulty at present of borrowing the vans.

24053. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever used one of the ambulances?—Oh, yes, I have.

24054. Mr. MURKHAUS.—Is it the fact or not that the class of patients who go to the county infirmary are rather well off and the class that go to the workhouse are very poor?—That is not altogether so.

24055. Is it largely so?—We would have a great many labourers now, for instance, coming into the infirmary, and their wives and children, and we have a lot of small farmers. I have been rather keeping an account of that, going by the valuations, though that is a very bad criterion. Our committee have made a rule that everyone with a valuation of £10 or over should be asked to contribute something more or less to their support in the infirmary, which money goes towards the general fund.

24056. CHAIRMAN.—You never refuse a person on the ground of poor circumstances?—Oh, dear, no; the main qualification is the disease, whatever it may be.

24057. Dr. BROWN.—And residence?—Residence in the county.

24058. CHAIRMAN.—As a matter of course an excess of people do apply for admission as patients into the infirmary hospital, and to that extent what Mr. Murkhaus says is true?—Honestly speaking, in recent years I find that is true.

24059. Mr. MURKHAUS.—Do you mean within the last five years?—I do.

24060. Since they have got to be popularised?—Since the workhouse hospitals themselves were so much improved.

24061. And the committee of the infirmary broadened it?—I don't know whether that has any effect on it; I thought it was the matter of the workhouse infirmary.

24062. Dr. BROWN.—With a certain amount of modesty you don't like to say it is due to the better reputation of the institution?—I must say the infirmary is improved in the way of accommodation—bedding and nursing.

24063. CHAIRMAN.—You have noticed a great improvement in the Poor Law infirmaries of the country?—Undoubtedly; you would not know them as the same institutions now.

24064. Dr. BROWN.—The people are much more inclined to go into the hospitals than they were ten years ago?—I think the people are beginning to see the real necessity, particularly in surgical cases, of being in a hospital, public or private.

24065. In a small hospital you can do things now that you could not attempt to do fifteen years ago, on account of the principles of surgery being so much better known?—Yes.

24066. Can you give us a suggestion about the treatment of consumption in the county?—I think a regular institution, purely and simply adapted for the treatment of tuberculosis, is needed in the county. It is a thing there is a great deal of in the county.

Nov. 20, 1894

Dr. George
Fenn.

24056. You think it is on the increase?—It is certainly not on the decrease; I have not gone into statistical figures about it.

24057. Have you noticed in your own cases an increase in the way of disease caused by tuberculosis in bones and joints?—An enormous amount of it.

24058. Is that on the increase?—I think it is; there is an immensity of that both in glands and bone.

24059. CHAIRMAN.—Is that somewhat incidental to phthisis?—Exactly; it is the same disease attacking a different part of the body.

24070. Should such cases as that be isolated?—I don't think it is very wise to have tuberculous cases in conjunction with medical or other surgical cases at all.

24071. Dr. Broom.—It is not communicated in the same way, that is, where there is expectoration; when the dressings are burned after they come off the patient you destroy the infection entirely?—Yes.

24072. But do you think a large number of these cases called tuberculous cases in bones and joints are perhaps separate from cases of consumption?—I cannot say that; there is always a tuberculous history.

24073. The reduction of consumption in the country would also tend to reduce the number of surgical cases?—Yes, people are gradually becoming educated to the fact that consumption is infectious.

24074. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it ought to be a notifiable disease?—I do; at least it would be a great matter if everybody understood that young persons should not sleep in the room with a consumptive patient.

24075. Therefore you would make it notifiable that they should be instructed in that respect?—Yes, and an immense number of cases of consumption are those who have been in America one, two, and three years. They are sent home to their native air, to precisely die at home of consumption.

24076. Do you find your annual grant rather close; do you find any shortness of means for working your hospital?—We do, certainly; it is a matter that the governors are always trying to look into.

24077. Do you think the County Council would possibly, I don't say favourably, but would be disposed to consider, such a suggestion as Mr. O'Loughlin approved of, namely, that the county should pay all the necessary expenditure of the county infirmary and not merely give a grant but go as far as it could be necessary?—I must say, in recent years, that the County Council have given us every facility it could.

24078. Do you think it would be a good thing to give them the power of paying all the necessary expenditure of the infirmary, the same way as the expenditure of the workhouse hospitals are now defrayed out of the rates?—It just depends upon what confidence the County Council will have in the Infirmary Board distributing that money. The majority of them are appointed by the County Council.

24079. Dr. Broom.—In that way they would have charge of the expenditure?—Yes.

24080. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever shut up portions of your house?—We never have hitherto.

24081. They do, in some counties?—We have not had to do so; we are, at present, a quarter in advance of our expenditure.

24082. Are there any urgently needed improvements and reforms in your infirmary?—Yes, the sanitary part of it.

24083. Is there any power, as the law stands, to carry out those?—There is not. For new building purposes the County Council can only give us one-third of any monies we could raise otherwise.

24084. Do you see any objection to the payment, by the county, of the whole cost of the necessary expenditure made on your hospital?—The whole of the money is expended in the county, and it is all for the benefit of the county.

24085. If you had the county carrying on your hospital in the same way as the Guardians carry on their infirmary, you would be able to have those sanitary improvements, which are very highly desirable, but now you cannot have them. Do you see any reason why the county should not keep up their infirmary in the same way as the Guardians keep up their hospitals, that is, paying all that is necessary?—No; if it is a matter of expense, but I do not see any objection.

24086. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you see this objection?—The county infirmary is for the well-to-do, whereas the workhouse infirmary is for the poor; if the committee were given power to expend more money would not the rates go up?—The committee are all rate-payers themselves.

24087. But they are only a very small number of the ratepayers of Clare?—I know that, but everyone of our Infirmary Board, as far as I can see, are interested in keeping down the expenditure and keeping it within the bounds commensurate with the utility of the institution.

24088. You have made some improvements there of late years; if you were to keep on at the same rate would you not have the institution in fair condition in about ten years?—Oh, yes.

24089. CHAIRMAN.—You could have this average system done?—We could. In order to do the improvements we have done we got up a loan and got £500, and the County Council gave us a third of that—£166; that is how we did the improvements.

24090. Dr. Broom.—You say the district nurse is doing useful work here?—Yes.

24091. And in that way does she often recommend cases to come into the infirmary?—She does not interfere with the doctor in that respect.

24092. A person would come in more readily having a nurse first attending him in the district?—Yes; she works under the different doctors and carries out their orders.

24093. Works on the same principle as a Jubilee nurse?—Yes.

24094. In country districts—remote districts—would you approve of nurses there having medical and surgical training as well as midwifery?—I would; our district nurses does not attend midwifery cases.

24095. But in remote districts, where there are long distances to travel, she might be useful for both purposes, and, at the same time, always available for midwifery?—I think it would be very useful that she should have a universal training.

24096. And her time altogether set apart for the public service?—Yes. Our district nurse does not take remuneration of any kind.

24097. I know, but it is the practice of midwives to attend private cases, and they are rather inclined to want fees for all cases?—It is a pity the two could not be separated. In the infirmary it is very difficult to manage an institution with partly paying patients and partly free; everyone wants to be free, and the only thing we have to go by is the valuations, and I don't think that is a fair way of judging at all. I have known people, with very large valuations, downright poor.

24098. CHAIRMAN.—If you had a discretionary power with the assistance of the governor who knew the patient to fix the sum, and power to recover that at law, that would put you in a better position?—It would, decidedly.

24099. I don't know whether you are aware what Dr. Kidd does at Ennisallen—get people to sign a document when coming in?—So do we; we were forced to do so; people came in and promised to pay, and we had no contract.

Mr. MARTIN CONNORS, Chairman, Ennistymon Union, examined.

Mr. Michael Condon.

25000. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Ennistymon Board of Guardians?—Yes.

25001. What are the views of the Ennistymon Board on the question of amalgamation?—I must say they are in favour of amalgamation.

25002. Are they prepared to suggest any scheme for amalgamation in the county-at-large?—They did not think that matter over.

25003. What is your own view of any scheme that might be possible?—I would not like to offer an opinion about closing other houses.

25004. What is your opinion about your own house? I think, first of all, that the workhouse is not a proper place for lunatics.

25005. You would send them either to the Insane Asylum or an auxiliary asylum?—Yes, where there should be some occupation for them.

25006. Therefore you think some building ought to be set apart, or else an addition made to the existing asylum?—I would suggest that one of the disused workhouses, if any are going to be abolished, should be used for that purpose.

25007. Are there any other classes that you think might be dealt with?—I would say that only those requiring medical aid and nursing should be allowed to be in the infirmary. I think it is a great wrong on the part of the State to have to support people in the infirmary who, in my mind, are not entitled to be there—people who have squandered their means outside.

25008. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you mean in the hospitals of the workhouses?—Yes.

25009. CHAIRMAN.—You would only have persons in there who are really sick?—Who are really sick and require nursing.

25010. Who require treatment by the doctor?—Exactly.

25011. It is your opinion that there are people there who are more or less foolish old people and don't require such nursing?—Yes.

25012. Mr. MURKIN.—What would you do with them?—I would be inclined to have some institutions for them, or else have them boarded out.

25013. Some kind of a central institution?—Something like that.

25014. Board out as many as you could properly, and send the rest to a central institution?—Yes. I think the law relating to convicts should be changed, and, in my mind, any convicting officer should be empowered to refuse a trespass ticket for admission who was under the influence of drink, because I think that should be proof that the man was not destitute, when he had money to buy drink.

THE O'DONNELLIAN BLAKE FORTIN, & C., SHERRILL.

25015. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the District Council of Ennistymon?—Yes.

25016. Have you any opinion as to what would be a good arrangement to make as regards the Clare workhouse?—I heard our chairman put the question to the Guardians, and they generally, to a man, considered that workhouse would be sufficient for the county, and it is my own private opinion that we had better close them as much as possible, so as to have the young children who are in the workhouse put by themselves in some suitable place, and the imbeciles in another; and they think it will eventually tend to the saving of the ratepayers of the county.

25017. And produce a more efficient administration?—Yes; and a better class of people than are at present there in the workhouse would be produced from that source.

DR. JOHN F. COUGHLIN CHAIRMAN.

25018. CHAIRMAN.—You have been Medical Officer of the Kilrush Workhouse now for some time?—Yes.

25019. And you have had experience of the working of the Poor Law for a very long time?—A very long time.

25020. Your workhouse is broken up into two by the public road going between the hospital part and the able-bodied part?—Yes, the parent house.

25021. I believe there has been a feeling in Kilrush that the hospital part ought to be formed into a district hospital, and entirely cut off from the workhouse connection?—Yes, there is such an idea.

25022. Could you kindly give us your own view or the view of the Guardians as to what might be done to improve the medical and surgical treatment in Kilrush?—The institution itself might be greatly improved by the addition of a water supply.

25023. Taking it from an administrative point of view, would you wish to have it a separate institution?—I think, for the better working of the institution, it would be better.

25024. Would you classify the sick, leaving in the Ballinverne Workhouse the acutely sick?—Yes.

25025. And removing those who required only domestic care and nursing elsewhere?—Yes, to the parent house.

25026. Then you would keep in the Ballinverne building the acutely sick and the fever cases?—Yes.

25027. You think they would be better treated—better looked after?—I think so.

25028. Do you find that the overcrowding of the hospital with chronic sick and acutely sick indi-

25015. CHAIRMAN.—You would send him to the police barracks?—I would. As regards convalescents, I suggest that one of the disused workhouses, if any were abolished, ought to be used as a sanatorium for convalescents. I also think that divisional railing ought to be reverted to.

25016. For all purposes or only outdoor relief?—I think for all purposes, but particularly for outdoor relief, because it is the main cause of the increase that there is in outdoor relief, to my mind. Now in the union to which I belong I will give you a few figures as to how matters were carried out. It is composed of three dispensary districts; the valuation of Broadford is £13,446, of Milltown Malbay, £11,297, and Ennistymon, £15,445; though Broadford dispensary district is the highest in valuation, yet the outdoor relief only amounts to £1 16s. 6d., whereas in Milltown Malbay the outdoor relief amounts to £4 14s., and in Ennistymon it is £5 8s.

25017. Mr. MURKIN.—The principle is an important one, but the amount involved is very small?—It is the principle I am on. The Ennistymon Workhouse was built to accommodate 800 inmates; at present there are only 250 there.

25018. CHAIRMAN.—A good many of them lunatics?—I think fifty-three. We were led to believe you would have sent queries forms to us.

25019. I see you did receive them on 25th of April last, but they may not have been put before you?—We inquired if the forms came, but were told they did not; they may have come.

25022. What about the tramps?—They are an awful grievance; and they go through the country stealing and thieving; going to the workhouse at night for their lodgings; and I think, instead of going to the relieving officers for admission, they ought to be obliged to apply to the police.

25023. Do you think that would be sufficient?—I do not; but it ought to be done at all costs. Gentlemen of your experience can form a better opinion than I can, though I was sixteen years chairman, at the same time of the Ballyvaughan and Ennistymon Unions. Suppose a union is amalgamated, what will become of the District Council?

CHAIRMAN.—We have nothing to do with District Councils.

25024. CHAIRMAN.—You have nothing to do with District Councils. It interferes with the working of the hospital?—It interferes with the treatment of the really acute cases. When you get a number of beds occupied for months with chronic cases, it impedes the working of the hospital and the proper treatment of other cases.

25025. You would have your own staff of nurses better organized. You necessarily perform a great many operations in Kilrush, owing to its great distance from infirmaries and general hospitals?—Yes; it is the centre of a large district.

25026. And operations are necessary there?—Yes; there are frequent operations.

25027. Have you any idea about how many operations you would perform there in the year?—About fifty.

25028. That means a much larger workhouse?—I think than there would be in ordinary workhouses?—I think so. That would be increased very much. Being a workhouse hospital rather interferes with it. You would have more people coming in if it had the name of a district hospital.

25029. Dr. BRIDGES.—Where do those cases go at present?—They go to the county hospital, some of them, I suppose.

25030. They are not done in their own homes?—No; very few operations.

25031. CHAIRMAN.—Perhaps some of them not done at all?—Some not done at all.

25032. Dr. BRIDGES.—Do you think, from your knowledge, that there are many cases that should be operated on in the country that were not operated on?—I know there are.

Nov. 28, 1907.

Mr. Michael
Coady

The O'Donnell
Blake Fortin,

Dr. John F.
Coughlin.

Nov. 30, 1904.

Dr. John F. Gresham.

25054. By improving the hospital arrangements, you think a number of lives might be saved?—Yes; it would increase very much the utility of the hospital for the district. I got the sister in charge to make out the number of cases in one year. There are 447 new cases.

25045. That is, medical and surgical?—Yes; that is apart from fever cases.

25046. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose half of these would be what you might call the acute cases?—Nearly the whole of them would be.

25047. There would be the ordinary run of chronic cases?—Yes.

25048. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Would your idea be rather to bring up the local hospitals to a high state of efficiency than to depend on the county infirmary?—It would be very inconvenient to depend on the county infirmary. There is a long distance to go, and you would not always get patients to travel that distance.

25049. CHAIRMAN.—You are such a long distance that you must have first-class, or at any rate, second-class, facilities for operations?—You must have it, if only for cases of accidents; you must have adequate means.

25050. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—It has been suggested here to-day that the county should depend largely on the central institution, the county infirmary, for surgical operations. Would your idea be that it would be better to improve the local hospitals and let them serve surgically the locality, than to have to depend on a central institution?—Of course, I may be a bit prejudiced, but that is my strong idea.

25051. It looks, from a layman's point of view, a better distribution of the benefits?—I did not think the question could be disputed.

25052. Dr. BOSSON.—Are there not a number of large operations that you could not perform in a small hospital; you have not the same sterilising apparatus?—I think we have the same means of sterilising as in other hospitals.

25053. What means have you?—Sterilising machinery supplied by the Local Government Board. It is enough to sterilise the instruments and dressings.

25054. CHAIRMAN.—You would like them better, at all events?—Yes.

25055. Dr. BOSSON.—Is there not room for both institutions? A large, central one must do a great deal of useful work, and not interfere with the local ones; and the local ones could do a great deal of the necessary surgical cases that must arise in a district, and smaller operations. We are not speaking of any particular hospital, but generally. It often happens that the doctor in the locality does not want to operate; he has not time; his reputation is not depending altogether on operations; he has to attend to medicine, midwifery, and mixed practice; he cannot have the same knowledge or experience?—That may apply to a small hospital, but Killybeg is a large hospital.

25056. I know it is, but the number of operations?—fifty in the year—is small, as compared with the county infirmary.

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—It is a fourth of the operations performed in the County Infirmary of Clare?—Yes; they are a great centre, of course.

25057. CHAIRMAN.—You would certainly like to have county and one workhouse perform one-fourth of the operations done in the county infirmary?—Yes.

25058. CHAIRMAN.—You would certainly like to have your hospital made more efficient. You have an unusual number of operations there for a workhouse infirmary; that is very largely due to your remoteness, and to the taste of the surgeon in charge, who is willing, and likes to perform the operations. You are, I presume, aware that in a great many union infirmaries the doctor in charge does not care to operate much?—He has not always the assistance; but there are a great number of cases that will not go to the county infirmary.

25059. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Don't you think it would be better to give the local hospitals the assistance they would require, instead of centralising all the benefits in one place that to many is inaccessible?—That is my idea.

25060. Dr. BOSSON.—You are speaking of Killybeg. In other districts, where there is only one doctor available, assistance could not be had conveniently for giving chloroform?—The ordinary dispensary doctors are available.

25061. You are fortunately situated in Killybeg to have assistance at hand?—Yes. Of course, Killybeg is rather singular in that. There are always a couple of doctors there.

25062. About the treatment of consumptives in the district?—I think there ought to be some better arrangements made for the treatment of consumptives.

25063. Is it on the increase?—I think it is. I think cases of tuberculosis are more or less on the increase in the district.

25064. Can you call to mind any cases where you have known the disease to be spread from a previous case in the house?—Oh, yes, I can.

25065. As far as you know, is it a common occurrence?—I know some cases myself. I should say it is not an unusual thing.

25066. That is partly through ignorance and partly because there is not sufficient accommodation to isolate the patient?—It is a very common thing, where the members of a family are huddled together in a small house, some sleeping in the same bed with the patient, for them to contract the disease.

25067. You have found other members of the family to contract the disease?—Oh, certainly. I know cases of where a husband has contracted it from a wife, where there was no history of consumption in the husband's family. The wife had been suffering from the disease, and the husband took it.

25068. Have you known of the children affected in the same way?—I do. I know of a whole family decimated by the spread of the disease.

25069. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Would you be a good situation for a sanatorium of the kind?—That is a matter for consideration, but there ought to be some central place for treatment. Either that, or some facilities for treatment than in district hospitals. Up to lately they were treated in the same ward with other patients.

25070. Dr. BOSSON.—Have you ever known it to spread in a workhouse in that way?—I cannot say I have known it to spread; but I know cases under treatment in the ward had been injured by the presence of consumptive patients.

25071. CHAIRMAN.—It is liable to spread?—Oh, yes. At present there is some attempt made to isolate consumptive patients, but it is a poor attempt.

25072. At Killybeg, you would really require buildings to do it properly?—Yes.

25073. Dr. BOSSON.—Even if you had that, it would only be for the purpose of isolation, more than cure?—If there was some kind of hospital for the case of consumption, it would be an immense benefit.

25074. CHAIRMAN.—It would be cheaper to do it by a central institution for the county, or group of counties?—It may or may not; it would take some time to consider.

25075. If you had to build consumptive additions to the existing hospitals it would mean a great deal of money?—It would mean something in each hospital. In our hospital it would be easy to convert or raise some place that would be very effective in the treatment of consumption; but whatever arrangements, there ought to be some arrangement for dealing with the disease. A great many people who show symptoms of consumption would, if there was an institution like that, go into it at once; they would not wait until the stage when it would be inoperable.

25076. Are they getting alive to the fact that it ought to be dealt with earlier?—Yes; that it is curable.

25077. Dr. BOSSON.—Of course, you have considered that a great deal of benefit would be derived from an educational point of view; a person going in would see how to prevent the spread of the disease, the usefulness of fresh air, and open windows, and sanitation, and would be able to carry on the same treatment after a few months in their own homes?—No doubt, it would be of the utmost benefit.

25078. CHAIRMAN.—You have a very large number of lunatics in Killybeg?—Very large.

25079. A great many of them are hardly to be distinguished from the ordinary lunatics in the asylums—turbulent and excitable?—Yes, and liable to fits of mania.

25080. You have to wait until they commit an offence to send them to the asylums?—When they really become unmanageable, or do something that requires special attention, you have to apply to the asylum, and get an order and send them over.

25081. You don't get a commitment?—We do, sometimes, when the delay would be dangerous.

25022. What do you think ought to be done about the lunatics?—I think they ought to be in a separate institution—the lunatic asylum or an auxiliary.

25023. Have you any opinion as to which would be the better?—It would be a matter of expense.

25024. If the arrangements were humane and proper in the auxiliary?—As a matter of opinion, I think they ought to be in a regular institution.

25025. Mr. McMAHON.—But if they could be kept at a less expense in the auxiliary, would you see any objection to it?—I would see no objection to it, because the lunatics sent to the auxiliary could be controlled, and treated far better than in the workhouse. At present they are in a deplorable condition. The children ought, I think, to be taken from workhouses.

25026. Have you any experience of the boarding out of children?—We have some.

25027. You are aware of the very long trial that system has had in the Limerick Union?—I don't know anything about it in Limerick. I know we have had some cases in our union, where it has been very satisfactory.

25028. You would like to see the lunatics and children removed from workhouse?—I would.

25029. And the sick classified, so that the acute cases could be put in hospital and the chronic under domestic care?—Yes; but the domestic care should not be a nominal care, but a real one.

25030. You would have visitors in charge?—I would have visitors in charge. I think they require very nearly as much care as the really acute cases, some of them even more. The average age of the old people in our union would be over seventy years of age; some of them great age.

25031. What would you say about the mothers of illegitimate children?—I don't know, unless you send them to some asylum. Would you separate the children from the mothers?

25032. CHAIRMAN.—Have you thought it out?—I have not.

Nov. 25, 1904.

Dr. John F. Canavan.

Mr. MICHAEL MEEHAN, P.T.C., examined.

25033. CHAIRMAN.—You were Chairman of the Kilrush Union?—Yes, for eleven years, to 1901; and Chairman of the District Council to June, 1903.

25034. What is the opinion of your Board of Guardians on the question of amalgamation of unions?—Our Board considered the question of the amalgamation of their own union; the Guardians are not in favour of amalgamation with any other union.

25035. Not with Killybeg or Ennistymon?—Well, no. The question was put before a meeting of the Board of Guardians, and they decided that they were not in favour of amalgamation with any other union.

25036. Did they express any opinion beyond that they would be willing to cut off their hospital and make it a district hospital, as suggested by Dr. Canavan?—I don't understand your question.

25037. Dr. Canavan thought that the acutely sick might be kept at Ballyva, and no person should be admitted to that side of the house except the acutely sick and the fever patients?—I agree with that.

25038. Then the people who are the chronic sick, with not very much the matter with them, except old age and infirmity, that they should be allowed to go to the other institution?—Oh, I thoroughly agree with Dr. Canavan there, and I believe it is a practice already carried out there.

25039. Not quite, I think. As regards the insane, would you think they ought to be sent away to the lunatic asylum?—Decidedly.

25040. As regards the children, are you in favour of the boarding out system?—Yes.

25041. Would you be in favour of an extension of the Guardians' powers to enable them to board out all children that have to be supported out of the rates?—Well, if practicable, I would, because we have some little experience of the boarding-out system in our union.

25042. And they turn out well?—Very well.

25043. And you like to extend that as far as you could?—Yes.

25044. Now, as regards tramps—you have not very many of them in Kilrush; you are off the line of tramps?—We have a fair number.

25045. What would you do with them—would you recommend any new legislation?—I would suggest that new legislation be enacted regarding the tramp system. That they would be taken up, and sent to some institution, where they would be more useful to the community than tramping about at the expense of the ratepayers of the country.

25046. They should be made work for their support?—Exactly.

25047. And, if possible, they should be taught habits of industry that would enable them to work when they got out again?—Yes.

Mr. Michael Meehan.

Mr. EDWARD O'LOUGHLIN, Vice-Chairman, Ballyvaughan Union, examined.

25048. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Board of Guardians?—Yes. Vice-Chairman of Ballyvaughan.

25049. What is the view of your Board of Guardians on the question of amalgamation?—We carried amalgamation by a majority at the Board.

25050. Were you in the majority or minority?—I was in the majority.

25051. Do you think it would be a good thing if you could lower the rates by joining some place else?—If I could find that out.

25052. We would not like to recommend it unless we saw an economy?—I think we would only suffer by it, because we are one of the lowest-rated unions in Clare, or Ireland.

25053. But you are in favour of amalgamation?—I would, if it could be shown it was a saving to the ratepayers.

25054. What would you do with your workhouse, if it was closed?—There should be part of it a hospital. We are twenty-four miles from Galway, twenty from Gort, and fifteen from Corofin. I think Ballyvaughan is carrying on well as it is, if it could not be shown to us that we would gain by it.

25055. I think you are really against amalgamation?—People rush at these things first, and don't consider them properly. It is a long time since that resolution was passed in Ballyvaughan, the 4th, I believe; but now that we are coming to learn more than we did—25056. You are a little bit cautious?—I would be cautious. We are a low-rated union, and do very well as we are; and it would be a good thing to let very well alone.

25057. Now, as regards the boarding out of children—have you any experience of that?—I would be against it in Ballyvaughan. The population is small.

25058. Have you many children in the house?—I am not exactly sure.

Mr. Cowan (Clark).—Twenty-one.

25059. Are there any changes you think might be made in the law as regards Poor Law relief if the unions were kept on?—Well, I don't think there are.

25060. Would you leave the union-at-large rating as it is?—I would. I would extend the area.

25061. To the county?—Yes; and get some on Corofin.

25062. You would not like the rating to be county-at-large?—No, but union rating.

25063. You would not go for county-at-large rating?—No; I don't want to risk myself.

25064. What would you do as regards tramps?—If they got something to do just, they might not be coming as often as they are.

25065. Something to make it less comfortable for them?—Just so.

25066. You would not go beyond that?—I would not go beyond that.

Mr. Edward O'Loughlin.

Nov. 30, 1901.

Mr. Michael Garry.

25127. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Vice-Chairman of the Killybeg District Council?—Yes.

25128. What is the view of your union?—They are against amalgamation—unanimously against it. Their first reason is that they don't want to be amalgamated with unions with far higher rating than theirs.

25129. Your average cost is said to be highest?—That is a mistake; the general average cost is 3s. 7d.

Mr. MICHAEL GARRY examined.

25130. That would be only for food and clothing; that would not be under all heads?—I think so.

25131. Mr. MURPHY.—The poundage rate is the second lowest in the county?—Yes.

25132. CHAIRMAN.—You would rather keep things as they are, without any change?—Without any change.

25133. Is there any suggestion you would wish to make about any improvement in the law, or are you in favour of things as they are?—We are quite satisfied.

Mr. PATRICK GARRY, County Councillor, Killybeg, examined.

Mr. Patrick Garry.

I have only to repeat what has been said by the last witness. I endorse his statements.

25134. CHAIRMAN.—You don't want to have any change?—No; we are rated pretty low, and don't want to be tacked on to other districts.

25135. If you found there was a substantial saving, would you be more favourably disposed to any change?—I would, if it could be shown there was a saving.

Mr. PATRICK PUGH, Chairman, Scariff Union, examined.

Mr. Patrick Pugh.

25136. CHAIRMAN.—You are from Scariff. What is their view?—At the last meeting, on the 23rd inst., the unanimous opinion of the Board was for amalgamation.

25137. Do you think how that would best be carried out. You would have some place left for the sick to be treated in?—It is our opinion that it would ultimately contribute towards the relief of the over-taxed ratepayer, making all due arrangements for the destitute poor and sick.

25138. What would you do for the sick; would you have them treated still at Tenraganey?—We would be perfectly satisfied to have them treated there.

25139. Do you think it would be a hardship to move them from the workhouse—to send them off to some distant workhouse?—In the event of the Tulla Workhouse being removed, I would count it a hardship that anyone from that locality should have to come to Ennis or Portlanna.

25140. You think a little hospital ought to be left at the workhouse?—I do.

25141. You have a building at Scariff called the barracks building; would that be sufficient for the sick?—It would, by some means.

25142. And it is cut off from the rest of the workhouse altogether?—It is.

25143. And has some exercise ground attached to it?—It has ample.

25144. If the rest of the workhouse were closed, and the barracks made into a place for the sick, have you any suggestion to make as to what might be done with the existing large workhouse?—In the event of being dissolved—well, no, I don't pretend to be much of a judge.

25145. You did not hear any view expressed by the Guardians on that matter?—It would suit for any purpose—for technical education.

25146. It would be rather big for that?—The fact is, the representatives of the ratepayers did not think there was the slightest danger of its being closed up.

25147. But the Guardians are all in favour of its being closed up?—They were not.

25148. I thought you said they were unanimous in favour of amalgamation?—They were unanimous in favour of amalgamation of some two or three unions; in the judicious opinion of those that would know better, taking into account the geographical situation of the unions.

25149. I thought you said the Guardians were in favour of amalgamation, that is, of closing up their own workhouse?—No.

25150. Then they are in favour of taking in some of the adjoining unions and keeping up their own workhouse?—Well, we have no objection to their taking some of our union from us, and taking our papers.

25151. If you closed the workhouse then what would you do with it?—Technical education, or if anything else turned up. There is a great question as to whether it belongs to Poor Law business—crematoriums.

25152. Does your workhouse land go back to the river?—We have water there from the river. I think we own the land back to the river immediately in connection with the water business. The Board are in favour of disincorporating.

25153. For all purposes or outdoor relief only?—For all purposes, that would be applicable.

25154. You would rather go back to the old law about chargeability?—I fancy it would be best. My colleague, the Chairman of the District Council, and there was not a county in Ireland with as many workhouses as Clare, taking into consideration the size of the county and the distribution of the people; he fell sick and was unable to come.

Mr. PATRICK M'GRATH examined.

Mr. Patrick M'Grath.

25155. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the members of the Tulla Board?—I am Chairman of the District Council.

25156. Has your Board considered the question of the amalgamation of unions?—They have; we discussed it.

25157. What is your view as regards the keeping up of the Tulla Workhouse?—The view of my Board is to keep it up; they are not for amalgamating with any union.

25158. How did they look at it?—We are the second lowest rated union in Clare, and we have low contract prices for all provisions, and it is in that view they looked at it; they think we could not be better off than we are.

25159. If it were shown to you that a considerable saving would result from a general scheme of amalgamation throughout Ireland, and affect their own rates in Tulla, would you then hold the same opinion?—Well, if it was shown to me that there would be a great reduction in the rates, of course I could not hold my views, but I don't see that there can be a reduction, because all the officials that are there should be superannuated; that would be a heavy burden on us.

25160. You nearly finished your superannuation there; you superannuated them all nearly?—It was only two.

25161. Are they not nearly all young officers with you now?—They are young ones.

25162. It would not be such a big pull?—Should they not be superannuated?

25163. Personally, if you ask me, I think they should, but they would not have the same rate of superannuation; a man who served for five years would not get as much as a man who served for forty?—Certainly not.

25164. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you give much outdoor relief in Tulla?—Well, indeed we do.

25165. Has it increased much of recent years?—It did increase a little, and it is reducing again.

25166. Owing to what cause?—Owing to the economy of the Guardians—seeing who is in need of it and who is not.

25167. They are giving it more careful inspection?—I think so.

25156. Have you many children in the house?—Well, I believe we have more than a dozen.

25159. Do you board out any at all?—No.

25170. You have never tried it?—No, nor I would not approve of it.

25171. Why?—I think they would be brought up better in the house than by boarding them out.

25172. And why do you think so?—Because the parties that would take them would not think much of them, and perhaps ill-treat them.

25173. But Guardians would not allow them to ill-treat them; the Guardians would take them away at once?—They might be ill-treated before the Guardians were made aware of it.

25174. The neighbours would hear it very soon and report. It is found to work very well in other unions; you have never tried it in Tufts?—Never tried.

25175. Then you could hardly express an opinion?—Well, I could not.

25176. Have you many tramps there?—We do have a good many occasionally.

25177. What would you do with them?—As far as the needy tramps are concerned I would not be inclined to treat them harshly, but I would like to put some restriction on the able-bodied tramps.

25178. Would you lock them up and make them work for their food?—That would be useless; they would not work. They would not do half the work required of them.

25179. There may be a way in a well-disciplined establishment to make them work?—It would be very good to make them work, certainly; I agree with that.

Nov. 25, 1904.

Mr. Patrick
McGonk.

Mr. JAMES O'DONERTY, Chairman, Tufts Union, examined.

25180. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view on this question; do you agree with the Chairman of the Rural District Council as regards the keeping up of the workhouses?—The Guardians were unanimous in passing a resolution opposed to amalgamation.

25181. Was that because they thought they would have to pay more rates?—Because the neighbouring unions pay higher rates than Tufts.

25182. If a scheme could be made that would result, owing to large changes in the staff, and a decrease in the use of fuel in the different workhouses, if a scheme could be devised by which all the unions would save; would you be in favour of such a scheme if it could be introduced without hardship to the sick?—Very much in favour of it as the county is already overburdened with rates.

25183. The objection is not to amalgamation, but to a change that might increase their rates?—Forcing an increase of rates.

25184. Mr. MURKIN.—You don't want to be joined with a union that pays a higher rate than you pay?—No.

25185. If you were allowed to manage your own union, as you do at present, what would be the need of any increase; you would not be liable to that danger at all?—No, sir.

CHAIRMAN.—How would you carry that out?—Mr. MURKIN.—By doing as at present.

25186. CHAIRMAN.—What are you doing at present, and what will you do in future if you make a great change with a view to economy, and let things remain as they are; how are you going to bring that to pass?—We could not do it.

25187. Mr. MURKIN.—You could do it in this way. The Guardians could pay for the boarding out of their children as they pay for them now in institutions for the blind; they could pay for the harmless lambs, and could carry out the same principle with other classes?—Well, we have no experience of boarding out.

25188. CHAIRMAN.—As regards lambs; do you think they ought to be left in workhouses?—No, sir;

I think their position could be bettered by having them in a house by themselves.

25189. Would you prefer to add to the existing Ennis Lurgan Asylum or to have an auxiliary asylum?—I would prefer to have an auxiliary asylum.

25190. If any scheme were devised by which economy could be effected, and some workhouses closed, including Tufts, do you think Tufts would be a good place to have as an auxiliary asylum?—From what I know of the other unions I think Tufts would be the most suitable one.

25191. You have a good wall round; that would save additional expense?—It would. There would be additional expense.

25192. I don't know if you were here this morning when Mr. Hogan made a suggestion that compulsory power could be given to acquire land?—I would approve of it.

25193. Do you think it would be almost impossible to get additional land at a fair price unless compulsory powers were given?—I am sure it would, because the property round that workhouse is nearly all sold; it was Captain O'Callaghan's property. If the tramps were taken up and put into some place where they would work for their support it would be much better.

25194. Do you see many of these people going about with their children?—That is the unfortunate thing.

25195. Children growing up like their parents leading a vagrant life?—Yes. Mr. Hogan was asked a question about these women who have illegitimate children; I would not agree with what he suggested—to close them up for six or eight years, as the case may be—I would be more in favour of allowing them out after a year or a year and a half.

25196. Trying to reclaim them as quickly as possible?—Yes.

25197. And leaving it to the discretion of the managers of the particular institution in each case how soon it would be safe to let them out?—Yes.

25198. And most of these girls, I understand, feel ashamed of their position after a first fall?—Of course they do. If it occurred a second time I would be for giving her four years.

Mr. James O'Donerty.

Mr. MICHAEL GUFFY, Chairman, Corrida Union, examined.

25199. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Corrida Board of Guardians?—Yes.

25200. You have a beautiful house there?—It is healthy, well-kept, well-governed, with a good farm of land attached to it. Our doctor is here and will explain it better than I can.

25201. What are your views on the question of amalgamation of unions?—I have had an experience of amalgamation. I go back very nearly sixty years when we were amalgamated, and what was the result.

25202. You were then part of Ennis and Ennistymon?—Yes, and Gort, and I knew the result of it. Our union is sound and healthy and well-kept, and well-governed, and no complaints against any of the officials of it.

25203. Not lately?—Not lately. At one time our union was one of the lowest rated unions in Clare, and we export, very shortly, it will be the lowest.

25204. If a large economy, without any hardship to the sick, could be managed, would you then look more favourably on the idea of amalgamation?—Any union that has too many in it we have room for them.

25205. If the union were broken up, or the workhouse closed as a workhouse, it would be available, owing to the situation and condition, for some other useful purpose?—Certainly. It would be fit to be broken up, for many reasons.

25206. You could use it for an asylum or a sanatorium?—It would be a good idea.

25207. You have not a very large number of inmates there?—They vary from time to time; there are seventy-two in it now.

25208. That is a very small number to keep up a staff for?—There are other times it comes up to eighty. I remember, a few years ago, there were 110, and there are seventy-five cases of outdoor relief, whereas other unions don't give outdoor relief, and then they have more in their workhouses. For many reasons we would not wish it to be amalgamated.

25209. Why would you not like it to be amalgamated?—Because we would wish to have an eye after our poor and see they are well treated. We want them near us to visit them often.

Mr. Michael Guffy.

Dec. 20, 1904.

Mr. Michael
Griffy.

25210. They would not kill them in Ennis or Ennistymon—I don't know that the Ennis people would, but plague and sickness would kill them. I remember when they were sent to Ennistymon, and Ennis, and Gort, and was not the whole country depopulated in those days.

25211. That was the Famine time!—That was the Famine time. And then there is the little village of Corofin there supporting the union, and it is very natural if there is any custom coming from the union that it should drop into the little village; and if the union is taken away it only drops into a richer village.

25212. If they had two or three hundred in that institution they would be better placed than if they had seventy!—There is room there for 280 to 300.

25213. If they started a big sanatorium or lunatic asylum—I suppose that would lessen the rates on the ratepayer; the whole thing is to reduce the rates.

25214. Do they think more of reducing the rates, or of increasing their own receipts?—Is there not a capitation grant for the lunatic asylum.

25215. As for madhouses and 4s. in the big house!—Any lunatic that is sent to our asylum we get nothing for them; that is not fair play.

25216. You don't do much for them!—There are five or six there at present.

25217. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you treat them well there?—They do treat them well.

25218. You have a large number of children in the house?—There is not; there are about twenty.

25219. Is not that a large number for so small a house?—It is.

25220. Could you not do something better for the children—beard them out amongst the farmers?—That would be better I suppose; but that would depend on the foster-parent that takes them out. There are some that would take them out, and we would not give the children to them.

25221. CHAIRMAN.—But you would give them to good ones?—We would, but perhaps the good ones would not be bothered with them.

25222. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You never tried!—We did not.

Mr. PATRICK CASEY, P.L.C., Corofin, examined.

25223. CHAIRMAN.—You heard our conversation with your chairman; what is your view on the subject?—Of course the Board is not in favour of amalgamation on account of the rates.

25224. If the rates could be reduced!—If we get a separate charge, according to the number of inmates from our district, we are satisfied.

25225. If your rates were reduced you then would not have the same feeling against it?—They cannot possibly be reduced.

25226. If the amount of rates you had to pay was less than at present would you then prefer amalgamation?—Oh, certainly, and I hope it would be converted into something better than itself.

25227. We have seen the place, and it does appear to be a very exceptionally healthy and well-situated workhouse!—It is.

25228. There would be no difficulty about having it converted into an auxiliary asylum or sanatorium?—Well, of course, there would not.

25229. I suppose extra land could hardly be got there without compulsory powers!—To send consumptive patients among fine healthy people like this would be a pity.

25230. That would not do any harm!—It would not do much good; the district would be more or less freed.

25231. You would be afraid of their infecting you?—Yes.

Dr. BOSGRO.—There would not be any risk from the institution.

25232. CHAIRMAN.—These people would be all drilled into how to behave, and there would not be any risk!—It would be a fine healthy place for them, as good as I see anywhere.

25233. As regards children, you have not had any experience of boarding out?—No, but I took some myself on a few occasions, from the workhouse.

25234. Was that hiring out?—Yes.

25235. What ages were they when you took them?—Sixteen years; they were actually useless. I have one now; she is under age; I pay her a little higher.

25236. What inference do you draw from that fact?—That they should be boarded out and made useful at an earlier age. I have one little girl I have a wish for, and I took her out on hire; she is near fifteen years, and she will be very useful in a short time.

25237. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Because you got her young?—Yes; she was only fourteen when I got her out. Some steps should be taken to get them out in time; they are useless; they are not inclined to work; they are not able; their little bones are feeble.

25238. CHAIRMAN.—They soon become handy and useful about the place if taken out young?—They should be taken out at twelve years of age.

25239. I was going to say three years!—Then they would become as useful as country people themselves.

25240. And the people would become attached to them!—So they would. They get accustomed to the business. Now they get so tired of the business that they run back the first chance they get, no matter how well you treat them.

25241. A little experience, such as you have given us, is very valuable!—There should be some steps taken to make the children useful in their after life. Our average rate is high, for we have a high dietary scale. Dr. Macnamara is very kind and we don't begrudge it, and only for the number of tramps fed in the house during the year the rates would not be so much.

25242. They don't cost much?—No; there were 1,100 of them fed in the house last year.

25243. Would you go so far as having a labour place, where they would have to work for their keep?—That suggestion I approve of very much; we are a long time thinking of taking steps to punish them, but we think it is a hard thing.

25244. It is hard to punish an individual, but if the system was changed!—It is very hard to get evidence against them.

25245. But if the case was thrown on these people of showing what means they had for support; if, instead of proving they were rogues and vagabonds, they had to prove that they were good citizens in search of work!—That would be good enough to release poor parties on the road. There ought to be separate charges if Corofin was amalgamated. Before the Act of 1850, when we had separate charges, there were not so many on outdoor relief.

25246. You mean a divisional charge. Would you be in favour of that charge being for all purposes or outdoor relief only?—I would be satisfied in either case.

25247. Would you make a divisional charge for all purposes, or outdoor relief only?—I would sooner have it for all purposes.

Dr. G. U. MACNAMARA examined.

25248. CHAIRMAN.—Tell us what you think of Corofin as a site for some other purpose if the union were broken up as a sanatorium for consumptives, and secondly, as a place for lunatics?—I believe the site is an excellent one for any purpose of the kind.

25249. It is healthy?—Healthy.

25250. And the walls of the building are in good order!—Fairly good order.

25251. For converting it to any other purpose, I suppose, it would require internal reconstruction?—Yes; and I think the number it is reputed to hold would not be exactly correct, if it was turned into a sanatorium.

25252. Would it stretch up to 300?—I think about that.

25253. That is what would be needed. Do you think the place would be fairly suitable for a sanatorium?—Yes, I do; I think it is suitably situated for that purpose.

25254. You would be able to have two blocks, one for curable and one for incurable?—Yes; but I don't think it would be advisable to leave the district without a small local hospital.

25255. How far are you from Ennis?—Seven or eight miles by road. My district runs a good distance towards Barron and Kinnarra, and the people over there would be awfully inconvenient.

Dr. G. U.
Macnamara.

25256. CHAIRMAN.—That is not in my district, but is adjacent to it. My district runs in the Gort direction for about ten miles, and the people over there would find it very inconvenient if the local hospital in Coochin was done away with.

25257. What townlands have you in your mind in speaking of the ten miles distance?—I have Ballybarna and Bolevan.

25258. How far is that from Gort?—Ballybarna is six or seven miles. Before my time the district I have now, which is continuous with the union, was divided into two, but they joined the two together in my father's time.

25259. The unions were first struck out and then the districts formed out of the union instead of first forming the districts and making the unions out of them?—My district comprises about two miles from Coochin on one side and eight or ten miles on two other sides.

25260. You think, if the workhouse is broken up, it would be desirable to have a small cottage hospital for the acute sick?—Yes; a few beds and an isolation ward or two for infectious cases.

25261. Suppose Coochin were converted into a sanatorium, you would be able to have two blocks, one for the curable and the other for the incurable cases?—Yes; besides the fever hospital, which is small, and detached altogether from the workhouse; there are three blocks in all and what they call the front house, which at present contains no inmates.

25262. Only tramps and the administrative officers?—Yes; I have nothing to do with the tramps, except they get sick.

25263. At present you have pumps for the water supply?—Yes; two pumps; one a force pump capable of forcing water to the second story; but of course if the house was turned into a sanatorium there would not be a sufficient supply of water.

25264. You want a gravitation supply; could that be got in the country?—I think so, by going a short distance away. There is a small lake three miles from Coochin, which is about 200 feet above the level of the workhouse.

25265. Is that a wholesome water supply?—I have not studied the matter; there may be heavier sources of supply, but that just struck me at the moment; it would not alone supply the workhouse but the town.

25266. How is the town off for water?—The people are depending on pumps; it is not bad.

25267. Does it at all become polluted?—In very dry summers it has to be cleaned out, and then I believe it is not a good quality of water, but it is the best water that can be got.

25268. It is a very hard water—limestone?—Very hard.

25269. Dr. BOGGER.—In the immediate neighbourhood of the workhouse, is it dry land?—It is; there is a sort of drainage in the workhouse at present of a very old-fashioned kind, but there would be nothing easier than to drain the place suitably.

25270. What is the nature of the soil?—Carboniferous limestone, but there is a sort of clay loam over that and sand between.

25271. Is it deep?—The clay is nine inches or a foot deep and there is sand below that; the drainage would be good; there is a splendid slope the whole way.

25272. The small stretch of water you have near the workhouse, does that cause any moisture or miasma?—There is a lake within less than half a mile, but that is at a much lower level; the workhouse is nearly 200 feet over that, or fifty feet at least.

25273. You have no drainage at present?—Except of a primitive kind. As far as I could I have got all those drains filled up and got surface drains constructed that can be kept clean. The old ones, masonry drains, were worse than useless.

25274. It does not run to the river?—It is supposed to go; there is an opening down near the river, but I don't think anything ever comes out of it.

25275. Supposing there were 300 inmates in the workhouse you would require a different system of drainage; where could it be drained to?—I presume a tank would be necessary, where the sewage could be properly treated.

25276. CHAIRMAN.—And a septic tank?—Yes, and submitted there to some process for disinfection.

25277. Dr. BOGGER.—Where would the overflow go to?—It would ultimately get into the river or lake, because there is a great fall in that direction.

25278. CHAIRMAN.—That would go to the Fergus?—Yes.

25279. Dr. BOGGER.—Is it far to where the river is tidal?—The tide flows as far as Etna.

25280. CHAIRMAN.—There is a fair amount of sewage in the Fergus?—Not in our place, but before it reaches Coochin there is a fair amount of it.

25281. Dr. BOGGER.—You have as much right, I suppose, to run it in as the Etna people themselves?—Yes.

25282. CHAIRMAN.—It would be rendered harmless by the septic tank?—Yes, there is a choice of means for doing away with it.

25283. Dr. BOGGER.—Taking everything into consideration you think it would be a suitable place for the treatment of consumption?—Yes, I do; it would be much improved however by the judicious planting of trees in the ground.

25284. Is there much consumption in your district?—I think looking back, there is a fair amount in it, but I don't think it is on the increase except with those parties who return from America and England; a good many of the subjects of consumption in my district are people who have contracted the disease in America and have returned home to die.

25285. We have had a good deal of evidence given us about the increase of consumption?—Looking back, I cannot say it is on the increase.

25286. Do you call to mind any case where it has been spread in the house or hospital?—I have seen a whole family swept away by consumption in a short time—not exactly in my district but on the borders of it. The first case was a young man employed in some public office in Woolwich; he came home with consumption; his father, mother, and brothers all died of it within about twelve months; they were swept off.

25287. And there was no appearance of it in the family before?—No.

25288. How long had he been absent from home?—For some years, but he came home in the very last stages of the disease; there were only two rooms in the house.

25289. Was this before it was as well known as it is now that it was infectious?—It was twelve or fifteen years ago this happened, but people did not understand it then, and would not believe the doctor if he told them about its being infectious. I believe the people nowadays are commencing to recognise that it is contagious, and they are ready, I think, to take all the means they can to prevent it; that is speaking generally.

25290. Of course sometimes houses don't lend themselves very well to isolation?—No.

25291. If there was a sanatorium, established at Coochin, do you think it would be availed of much for early cases of consumption?—I can only offer an opinion on that, I think it would.

25292. And do you think that persons would go into it who could pay for part of the cost of their maintenance?—I think they would. Very often the healthy members of a family get frightened when they see another member in a decline; in that way I think they would be very anxious to get them into an institution of the kind.

25293. Do you think that would spread when they got to look on consumption in the same light as they look on leprosy?—Yes; I should say according as the people get more enlightened it will act in a stronger way.

25294. The friends will be most anxious to get the consumptives into hospital?—I think so.

25295. Is the water from the river contaminated?—No; I think it is pure water.

25296. There is no village above it—no sewage?—No; there was a creek mill in former times.

25297. CHAIRMAN.—There is a great storage of water in Inchiquin lake?—Yes.

25298. Dr. BOGGER.—Would it be run by gravitation from the Inchiquin lake?—I think not; the fall is very little. If the lake is considered too far away, an alternative supply could be obtained from Shendungan (about an Irish mile distant from the workhouse in a straight line), and Ballyparry Castle, which is about eighty feet high, would make a good gravitation tower.

Nov. 20, 1904.

Dr. G. U. MEMBERS.

Nov. 20, 1894.

Mr. Michael Lyons.

Mr. MICHAEL LYNCH, Chairman, Ennis Union, examined.

25299. CHAIRMAN.—Are you the Chairman of the Ennis Board of Guardians?—Yes.

25300. Have the Guardians considered very carefully this scheme, or do they look upon it as one rather affecting the other unions than themselves?—They considered it carefully. The view is that we have too many unions in Clare.

25301. About how many do you think might be sufficient?—We consider four would be sufficient.

25302. Would you wish to indicate what four you think might be closed?—Tulla, Ballyvaughan, Corofin, and Killybegny.

25303. Not Scariff, nor Kilrush, nor Ballyvaughan, nor Ennis, of course?—No.

25304. Supposing the Ennis Workhouse to remain, did you consider what improvements might be carried out there?—No; we considered that all the children of the unions in Clare should be in one institution; some kind of a technical institution; something like Glm. We considered Corofin would be most suitable for that, being in a healthy situation.

25305. Did you consider at the same time whether boarding out or institution rearing would be the better?—We have three boarded-out cases, and these are satisfactory up to this.

25306. Have you tried to increase that system?—We advertised, but got no applicants.

25307. What amount did you advertise at—£5, was it?—£5 and £3.

25308. If you sent all the children in the county to Corofin, what would be done with them there?—Teach them some trade, that they would be useful in after-life.

25309. How do you think that would come to work out? You send some three or four hundred children there, and train them to become shoemakers, carpenters, and tradesmen of all kinds—how would they be worked off, how would you get them an occupation?—As for our own county, there is room for a share of trades at present in it.

25310. Would they fit into the trades, and be welcomed by the trades unions, and people who compose them?—There are a good many tradesmen through the country that are not in the unions—that is, outside the towns.

25311. And you would propose to increase the number, by instructing the destitute children in trades?—It would be a good way; they would be useful in after-life, what they were not up to this.

25312. Do you think they would be likely to be converted into good tradesmen?—I am of the opinion that a good many of them would be.

25313. Do you think it a wise or proper expenditure of the rates to instruct children who are the waste of society, and destitute? Do you think it a proper expenditure of the rates to instruct them in trades in which the children of small proprietors could not afford to be instructed?—Up to this, we had to support them up to a certain age in the institution; after that age when any of them were taken out, the majority of them have come back to the workhouses of Ireland. A good many of the people we have in our own workhouse to-day were boys and girls in it—they put in most of their life in it.

25314. Have you ever heard that said with reference to the boarded-out children, of their coming back?—Really, we have no experience of it in this county.

25315. You have not heard what they do in Limerick and other unions where they heard out on a large scale?—I heard it worked satisfactorily. The thing is to get proper foster-parents.

25316. At what ages are you trying to board out the children in Ennis?—From seven up.

25317. Did you ever think of it from three to four?—No; we did not think of it so young as three.

25318. I suppose from seven up they would not be useful for a little time after?—They would not be useful at all.

25319. And it is not the most attractive age for a child to come newly into the family?—Of course, the younger they begin the more fond they would be of them.

25320. You have not thought of boarding them out at a tender age, when they would attract love and affection?—No, sir.

25321. As regards the relative expense of boarding out and rearing in an institution, have you any idea of the relative cost?—I believe it would be in or about the same.

25322. I think the impression generally is that the cost would be very much less boarded out than in an institution?—I think it would take some time before we could get applicants to take them out.

25323. You have not tried at the most attractive age. If you take little children, who really are innocent and have no bad or dirty ways about them, people would be more ready to take them at that age than they will when they have learned evil and been contaminated?—That is a fact.

25324. Dr. BUCKEN.—But you say you advertised for foster-parents?—Yes.

25325. Did it strike you that foster-parents who would be likely to take the children would not see the advertisement at all?—It did not.

CHAIRMAN.—Posters as well as advertisements.

25326. Dr. BUCKEN.—Would it not be very much more likely to succeed if individual Guardians or a few ladies would take the matter in hand, and look about the district, and see who would make good foster-parents, and allow it to spread?—It would be the best idea; but my own opinion is that the general number of people round this country have an objection to take children out of the workhouse.

25327. Limerick is not very far away from you, and it occurs there; then why should they object in Clare. The same occurs round Dublin, where the people, perhaps, are better off. If you begin at the right age, and begin with one or two, planted here and there, where people will get to know what it means?—They don't understand.

25328. CHAIRMAN.—If people think they are going to get into their family a troublesome boy or girl, who knows a great many things that they would not like their own children to be taught, they won't have them, but if you begin at a tender age?

25329. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you give much outdoor relief in your union?—It has increased £200 a year since the Local Government Act came into force.

25330. Have you any ground for thinking what is the cause of that increase?—The town of Ennis is the principal cause, and Newmarket. I would be in favour of union-at-large rating. It is only fair that truly populated parts of the union should pay for the districts that are largely populated.

25331. CHAIRMAN.—It would not be fair to throw it all on the town?—I should say not.

25332. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you give the relief in money or in commodities?—In money. I know I would be in favour of giving it in commodities, for, no doubt, it is abused.

25333. CHAIRMAN.—You think that would be a more sure way of giving relief without abuse?—Yes, sir.

25334. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Children would get the benefit of it then more than they do now?—I should say so.

25335. CHAIRMAN.—You have a large number of tramps?—Yes, we have.

25336. You have heard the evidence about labour colonies or labour institutions?—Yes; I would approve of that.

25337. Committed there by magistrates's warrant—strolling men, who make no pretence of work?—Yes; going from one union to another.

25338. What do you think ought to be done with imbecile inmates?—There should be some place provided for them.

25339. Would you enlarge the existing asylum, or use a closed asylum?—The Asylum Committee went into that. There were plans prepared as between Tulla and Corofin, but when they went into details, they came to the conclusion it would be cheaper to build an addition. The staff would be less after a time.

25340. CHAIRMAN.—How did the matter impress you—what did you think would be the better things to do?—To build the addition to the asylum.

Mr. MICHAEL MACKAY, F.R.C.S., examined.

Nov. 20, 1904.

Mr. Michael Mackay.

25340. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of Mr. Lynch—do there anything you wish to add to that?—Not a great deal. I agree nearly altogether with him, except on this question of out-door relief. I would be in favour of electoral division rating for that, particularly, because I believe it would cause a big saving.

25341. Supposing you had, as a general rule, that charge for out-door relief, you would see that there was some hardship to the town, I suppose?—Well, yes.

25342. Would you be willing to give them some relief?—I would, certainly.

25344. The reason you would like that would be because of the more close supervision?—Certainly.

25345. More careful giving of relief?—Certainly.

25346. Do you believe that in some cases people get relief in money who would not take it if it were given in food?—I hardly think so.

25347. You think there is not much abuse in giving relief in your union?—I would say there is abuse in the way I say; but it would not be so badly used if it was electoral division rating; giving it in kind might work; I don't know.

25348. It was proposed lately, but not carried, at the Cork Union that all the out-door relief should be distributed by vans to the recipients by the relieving officers?—That he would go round with the food?

25349. Load his van according to the requirements before starting, and deliver at each place what was required?—That would require more relieving officers than we have at present.

25350. How many have you got now?—Four.

25351. Mr. MURPHY.—Goods can be bought much cheaper in large quantities. The recipients would get better value if it was sent by the van?—No doubt; but the difficulty of conveying the goods.

25352. CHAIRMAN.—Do these people, as far as you know, ever buy milk out of the out-door relief money?—They would.

25353. That would be the difficulty. They would be in a very bad way, indeed, if they could not earn enough to supply them with a perishable article like milk if they got the solid food?—I am sure they would be able to manage the milk.

Mr. WILLIAM HARTING examined.

Mr. William Harting.

25354. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Ennis Rural District Council?—Yes.

25355. The matter we were just discussing was the question of out-door relief administration in kind. I don't know whether the idea is altogether new to you—whether you considered it at all?—I consider the out-door relief should be delivered in kind. A number of aged people would not use the food that an ordinary person would use—milk or porridge; and, then, a little money, of course, would buy fuel, and they must also pay rent.

25356. In Dublin the fuel is delivered by the Poor Law Guardians?—I don't think that would suit at all.

25357. Do you think there is any abuse in the giving of it in money—do you think people get it who, perhaps, would not think it worth their while to take money's worth in the form of food?—I don't know that.

25358. You think they would get better value?—I think they would get better value by getting it in kind.

25359. Dr. BOGGER.—You think they misapply some of it if they get it in money?—In some cases they do. But, with regard to out-door relief, I think that should be a divisional charge.

25360. CHAIRMAN.—So as to insure more close inspection?—Yes.

25361. Do you think it has been spreading widely since it became a union charge?—It has gone up in our union some hundreds of pounds.

25362. Do you attribute that to the change in chargeability?—Of course.

25363. You can see there would be a hardship in putting the full burden of the poor of the town on the town electoral division?—I see that.

25364. How would you meet that?—I don't know; unless you made some division; there should be some charge extra.

25365. You in some way would afford relief to the town?—Certainly.

25366. Mr. MURPHY.—A grant in aid?—Yes. A lot of people come in from the country, and drop down here.

25367. Mr. MURPHY.—Something in the way of an equivalent grant on a standard year?—Something of that kind.

25368. CHAIRMAN.—As regards lunatics. You are aware the asylum is overcrowded very much, and there is a necessity for providing accommodation elsewhere; which would you prefer?—I would prefer the present asylum being enlarged.

25369. Are you a member of the committee?—I am not. My reasons for believing that it would be much better in, of course, that the facility is very good for getting in; and, again, the larger the number, the cheaper you can support them.

25370. Is it possible for them, as far as you know, to extend the land?—They have extended it very severely—not many years since.

25371. Then it was cut through again by the railway, was it not?—They got a further extension three or four years since. They have got about seventy acres; I don't exactly know; but they have a considerable quantity.

25372. The committee are of opinion that they could extend profitably there?—Oh, certainly.

25373. And have sufficient land to employ the additional inmates?—Yes.

25374. What is your view on the treatment of children under the Poor Law?—I am in favour of boarding them out; but it is a thing that does not seem to take in this union. We had advertisements published for a considerable time, and only got two applicants, and I don't know did even one of them go.

25375. Perhaps it has not been energetically pushed individually?—It has not.

25376. In a great many unions that we visited all the children that were eligible for boarding out have been boarded out—that is, orphan and deserted children?—Yes.

25377. And these unions have suggested an increase in the Guardians' power—that the Guardians should be empowered to board out all children who came under their charge?—That is my idea that the law should be changed. I approve of that entirely. That illegitimate children should be allowed to be boarded out as other children, for it is not the children's fault.

25378. It was not so much a question between legitimacy and illegitimacy; but the orphan and deserted children are the only children who are now eligible for boarding out. The view that these Guardians took was that all children should be eligible for boarding out?—I fully approve of that.

25379. Are you in favour of reducing the number of inmates in the county?—Certainly, by all means. I feel quite sure they can be reduced where the population is so reduced in the last fifty years. I don't see why you want so many inmates.

25380. You are aware that there are a large number of officials necessarily kept up in each workhouse under present arrangements?—Certainly.

25381. If you had the inmates and the children taken out, and the sick remaining in the local hospital, the only class left in the hospital would be the aged and infirm. Would you be prepared to go a step further than the mere amalgamation of one union with the union next to it; would you be in favour of having a central institution for the county, receiving there all the aged and infirm of the county, say in Ennis, where they could be segregated according to their character and antecedents and conduct, and where they could be employed usefully at some little light work?—I would be in favour of that.

Nov. 30, 1904
 Mr. William
 Harding.

25382. And having only one staff instead of eight staffs?—Certainly. When you reduce the officials, you reduce the expenses of keeping those buildings up. We have a great experience of the amount of money that is expended on our union year after year, and we don't seem to be anything the better of it.

25383. I can tell you that I see the greatest improvement!—There is a great improvement, but we are never done improving.

25384. Would you be in favour, if possible, of getting all the aged and infirm of the county into one establishment?—I have not thought that matter out; but I thought it would be a very good idea, as far as I can see, to have them classified. With regard to the tramps, we get a great number of them in Ennis, and I think some stringent measures ought to be adopted with them. Even at the present time, when they apply to our relieving officer for a ticket for the union, they come under the influence of drink. I say any man or woman who goes to the relieving officer with the sign or smell of drink, the police ought to be sent for to take them to the barracks. It is a very good idea that I have heard here, to make them work.

25385. Put them into a provincial institution?—Certainly, and make them work; for they are doing about the country, and they have to be fed.

25386. They are kept absolutely by the public?—They are kept absolutely by the public.

25387. And they sometimes take more than they get?—Certainly. Instead of allowing them to wander, notices ought to be sent to the police to get them arrested. I believe that is the case in England.

25388. Mr. MURKHAM.—In England they can detain them up to four days, and they have to give seventy-two hours' notice of desiring to have them. Something like that.

MR. MARSH'S CHAIRMAN EXAMINED.

Mr. MARSH
 Chairman.

25389. CHAIRMAN.—We have had a good deal of interesting evidence from Ennis Union already. Is there anything you would wish to dissent from?—There is not.

25390. As regards brancies, which would you be in favour of—an auxiliary asylum or an addition to the asylum?—An auxiliary asylum. I think it would cost a good deal less to have one of these workhouses turned into an auxiliary asylum than the present asylum enlarged.

25391. And managed at a lower rate of expense?—I think so.

25392. Under the existing law, you would only get 2s. capital for an auxiliary?—I am aware of that.

25393. Do you think with the 2s. you would do better?—It could be done just as well anywhere.

However, the law may be changed; I think we should be allowed 2s. of the grant.

25394. As regards the boarding out of children, you have not had much experience in this union?—They were trying to get foster-parents. It was a failure.

25395. But the age at which they were boarded out was rather advanced?—I think about five years, last time.

25396. As regards tramps, what would you do with them?—Some separate place should be established for them, and have them committed by magistrates' warrant, and kept there.

25397. And taught habits of industry, if possible?—Yes. I thoroughly agree with what Mr. Harding says. If a man applied for admission to the relieving officer, and had the sign of drink, the relieving officer should have him taken up by the police and prosecuted.

The Sittings terminated.

FIFTY-FIRST PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, DECEMBER, 1st 1904.

Dec. 1, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Limerick.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. COBY RIDGER.

Mr. JAMES HOGAN, J.P., M.C.C., examined.

25398. CHAIRMAN.—The County Council had the subject of this Inquiry before them, and queries were asked to them, and I think they did not answer. They sent us a copy of the Conference which you held. What is the opinion of the County Council as regards the number of unions to be maintained in the county?—Well, my own individual opinion I may give you first, is that I am in favour of amalgamation, because, as the population is now diminishing and these houses were built at an anterior date to contain so many, and there is not one-third in Ireland now. I am principally acquainted with Rathkeale since Glin was dissolved, of which I was a Guardian. I am in favour of amalgamation; I am also in favour of the boarding out of children.

25399. You had personal experience of amalgamation. The union in which you used to be a Guardian, some eighteen years ago, Glin, has been broken up—how has that worked?—Of the thirteen divisions that were in it, four went to Lismore and the balance to Rathkeale.

25400. Have you heard any complaints at all about the increased distances the sick would have to travel from places like Glin and Turlough?—Not a bit. There is a very improved mode of conveyance now, and an improved van.

25401. Do you think the people who are sick, and need nursing and attention, go as readily into Lismore or Rathkeale as they did before into Glin from the towns of Glin and Turlough?—I am quite sure they do. They had some in Rathkeale for a long time, and they were very well treated. They have left lately, but there is a better training system for nurses there.

25402. Are there any complaints about Glin and Turlough as to the distances which the sick have to travel?—Glin and Turlough are a good distance from me; but in my own immediate neighbourhood, about seven miles from Rathkeale, I find no hesitation at all in having the people go there. In any case, the time of going into the workhouse is not so long now as formerly.

25403. It is a question of distance?—I don't think there is any objection now to the distance. Glin to Lismore is about twelve miles; there is a very good mode of conveyance for the sick.

25404. What has been your experience as regards rates—was there much economy in the closing up?—You have the pensions of the existing officers in Glin and increased remuneration in Rathkeale, and that did not diminish it; but those things are dying out.

25405. But there is an economy?—Oh, I am quite sure it will ultimately result in economy. The second question that I have on my paper is that I am in favour of boarding out the children. I have also experience of the Glin School. I attended there for a season. Certainly, it is a very well-kept place, but I would much prefer the children to be boarded out in the country, for they become useful for servants in any department afterwards, and they are pretty well cared for. We have a ladies' committee in Rathkeale, and visiting officers and lady inspectors; they are nicely done for. I don't want to quarrel with Glin system, but when sent about their business at fifteen or sixteen, they are useful for anything.

25406. Do you think they are not useful in the country?—They are not. I have one in my own employment presently; it is no tramping whatsoever for farm purposes.

25407. What training do they give them in Glin?—Put them to various trades—carpentry, shoemaking; and I think they have a smithy there.

25408. What tradesman did you get?—He had not any trade; he was brought up by a neighbouring farmer to assist him.

25409. What was he doing in the school?—Nothing; he is a bit of an imbecile.

25410. He is not handy about mending boots?—No, indeed, he cannot mend his clothes. The general report is that they are unfit for farm purposes when they come out.

25411. What is your idea about the best business to put upon children left—A good deal will depend on the tests they develop when they are under the charge of the Christian Brothers.

25412. Taking them as a whole, the children that are in workhouses all over Ireland, what do you think is the best way to put them forward in life?—Board them out of the workhouses.

25413. Then make them what after that?—Their parents will develop after that. Some may become workhouse, and a good many I have known emigrated, and they were nicely taken care of in the country, and grew healthy and strong. I find they don't be so strong in Glin. They are healthy and well cared, but they are better off in the country air, and have more liberty and amusement.

25414. Some Guardians and witnesses that have appeared before this Commission said that they considered, owing to the dearth of labourers in many parts of the country, the best thing the Guardians could do would be to put their children out as labourers or servants?—I would not confine it to one particular parent, but would give them the chance of being reared in the country. Generally, they would adopt the parents of the person they were boarded with. I know them to be very useful members of society. The third is, I am in favour of harmless lunatics being boarded out with their friends.

25416. There was another gentleman from Limerick who attended the Conference in Dublin who said the people's skin was on fire until they got rid of their lunatics?—I know very well that there is a little bit of lunatic management in our asylums in that way, particularly in Limerick. When they are not made to pay, they wish to get rid of them; but if we made them pay an average of £50 a year, they would be glad to get them. Of course, if there is a dangerous lunatic, you must put him in.

25417. You think the country people really would have time enough to keep these people clean and orderly, and watch them as they should be watched in the country?—Quite sure.

25418. Because there very many times in the country often?—You would not have very many.

25419. I mean one in the house?—That might be only one per cent. of the population. I don't think it would even be as high, those you would think of boarding out.

25420. You would like to see the system of boarding out lunatics tried with such cases as the Resident Medical Superintendent would suggest?—I would. I would like to have some experience on the subject. The fourth point is the tramp nuisance, which is certainly a great and crying nuisance. I assisted some time ago, representing the Limerick County Council, at the General Council meeting in Dublin, and the matter was very ably thrashed out, and I saw suggestions from various individuals, and the one that struck me as most admirable was Germany's. There they hire farms, and people convicted before magistrates are sentenced to six months, twelve months, or two years, until they are brought into habits of industry; and I thought that was the best suggestion I saw thrown out.

25421. They are committed by warrant?—Brought before the magistrates, and committed by warrant.

25422. What term would they give them?—A good deal would depend on the subject.

25423. But they could give a very long term?—They could; and the experience, I think, was that they were able to pay for their maintenance as well as getting them into industrial habits.

25424. In Belgium they are said to be self-supporting?—I think so. There were reports from various Continental countries, but that was the one that struck me most. Another suggestion I have is single representation for divisions.

25425. We have received that widely. You think they are too many?—I think it is a farce. In Limerick 101 come into the Poor Law Board. In Limerick County you have no rural district work now or presentments; it rests with the county surveyor; it is all direct labour now; so that the Rural District Councils have very little to do in that respect; and as for crowding sixty or eighty people into one room to administer £10,000 or £12,000, it is not an easy thing to do.

25426. It must be very difficult for the chairman?—You will have the experience of the various Rural District Councils before you; I think it would be a step in the right direction. The suggestion I would put before you is, that if amalgamation takes place, you should reconstitute the unions. In Rathkeale Union you have Ballingarry, within three miles, coming into Rathkeale; other portions are fourteen miles; so, by reconstituting the unions, you could make it more convenient for sick people.

25427. You did not work that out in detail?—I was just sketching it on Rosser's Map of Ireland. It is very easily solved. Just take your existing line round the workhouses, without diminishing the staff of the other houses that you left in existence.

25428. Not breaking up the clerical divisions?—Well, take dispensary districts together. Shanagolden would easily fit in with Newcastle; you take a straight line from Newcastle to the Shannon, and then when you dissolve the eastern unions, you could take a corresponding slice, and give it to the unions the other way.

25429. Was it your idea to have the unions co-extensive with the county. Take the Limerick Union, which has a large portion of the County Clare and part in the County Tipperary, and so on?—And you say idea of that sort, or was it simply keeping up the present system of unions without regard to counties?—I would reconstitute them, if possible; each county ought to have its own.

25430. That would be difficult in a place like Limerick?—Yes, it is too near Clare.

25431. The Clare people yesterday expressed a wish to get that part of the county into their own hands as a unit in the Poor Law system of Clare?—And I think it is very much thought of now throughout the country—that you ought to have divisional rating instead of union rating.

25432. Would you go back to the old law, or only want it for some particular purpose? Would you go far making the indoor relief, for instance, a divisional charge?—I rather think it should be both ways. It worked very well, for it threw the onus on the Guardian of the division to see that he did his duty; but when it is union rating, and it is everybody's business, it is nobody's business. There is a resolution passed by the County Council with reference to rural district charges—that they maintain their own roads and bridges. It has been initiated as a step in the right direction, so I think the other would be a step in the right direction, also. You would be able to see how the thing worked out with the Guardian in charge. That is all I have to say.

25433. Do you think there has been any change in the administration of out-door relief?—I am sorry to say it has increased since 1898.

25434. Do you attribute that to union rating?—I would, in a certain direction.

25435. Do you think any increase of expenditure has arisen as regards indoor expenditure since 1898?—I don't think so.

25436. Then, would it be necessary to make any change in the administration of that?—I am not aware that there is any extravagance practised indoors.

25437. Would you still be in favour of making it a divisional charge indoors?—Where a person goes for sick treatment from a division, I would have it charged to that division. That is the only motive I have.

25438. You could hardly expect to reduce the total expenditure if a person is willing to go into the workhouse; you hardly know a case where relief is given?—I think not.

25439. So you could not reduce the total expenditure by changing the area of charges?—I don't know; it is very hard to say how the thing would work out; I would rather try.

25440. You had a long experience of the clerical division charge?—And it worked well.

25441. Do you think it worked well under all heads?—I think so.

25442. If you go back to the old system you will be taking away the benefits given to the towns by the Act of 1891?—I would rather not do that, for I think the towns were entitled to relief; people were bidden into towns from the country.

25443. How would you arrange that, to give the people of the towns the benefit?—Certainly; it is a hardship to cast divisional rating on a town, because a great many people were transported from the country into the towns; it is a question I am not prepared to see my way out of.

25444. But you think it would be just that the expenditure should be equalised, so far as the towns get?—I would; I would not like to do them an injustice in that way. There is another burning question, in fact, that is—where people from other unions come into a certain union, there is no way of sending them back to their own original union. I think the law ought to be altered in that respect.

25445. The law of settlement in England and Scotland brought here?—Yes, I would make that suggestion also.

25446. You would have a good deal of changing about all over the country?—Every other day.

25447. It would involve a great deal of expense?—I don't think so. It is not fair to the union to have strangers coming from another county into it, and settling down here.

25448. We find, in going round the country, numbers of distant places in all the workhouses; you may give a couple to one union, and get back a couple from another?—Well, let it be so; it would be the fairest in the end for the sick poor.

25449. You could not send away the sick—it is the healthy?—They are all supposed to be sick that are inside. That out-door relief system would want to be very cautiously administered.

25450. Did you see a suggestion made in Cork lately, that all out-door relief should be given in kind?—I did, and I would be very much in favour of it; because I am afraid some of this money finds its way to the publichouse.

25451. The idea there was that the relieving officer should have a van, and start with such commodities as were necessary?—It could be worked that way. I studied the out-door relief system very closely, and I could call it nothing but demoralising.

25452. You would be in favour of out-door relief if it could be managed without demoralisation?—I would. But I tell you my experience, that where a child of tender years goes for the stipend, the idea goes with him that that money should be continued to him. It demands supervision.

25453. If you had out-door relief administered in kind, and also had out-door relief a divisional charge, would you be afraid of any undue expenditure then?—I don't think so.

25454. There would be sufficient safeguards?—I think so, if the Guardians of the division would interest themselves in the officer who was distributing it.

25455. There are some articles, such as milk and potatoes, they could not be served round; but from your experience of the country, would the people be always able to manage a sufficient supply of milk?—I think they would; if they got the solid food, the others would be supplied. There are a great many charges in the Poor Laws that would be a great benefit to the ratepayers.

25456. As regards people paying for relief whom they are sick?—I was always in favour that a portion of the hospitals in the unions should be set aside for paying patients—people who own moderate-sized farms; and I think there should be some discrimination in the class. Well-to-do people who, through stress of circumstances, come to the workhouse, I think they should be allowed to wear their own clothes, and live separate from the others.

25457. You would give certain privileges to well-conducted people?—Yes, and people of good antecedents. It would be too bad to have them mixed up with tramps, or people of the lower orders.

Dec. 1, 1904.
Mr. James Hogan.

MR. W. W. O'DWYER, J.R., Chairman, Mitchelstown Union, examined.

25458. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the County Council?—Yes.

25459. Is there anything new that occurs to you on our queries that Mr. Hogan has not referred to, or on which you differ from him?—No, sir. I thoroughly agree with Mr. Hogan's evidence. I wish to add my experience from the east. I was chairman for years of the Mitchelstown Union. I saw you dwelling on the outdoor relief expense. Before the passing of the Local Government Act the annual outdoor relief was £235, and the annual cost since then was £276, that is for the whole union, and our valuation is £48,323.

25460. To what do you attribute the increase?—To union rating.

25461. Would you rather go back to electoral division rating?—Certainly. It is a premium, I believe, for raising the rates, because it is impossible to check it. A portion of my union extends near Mallow, another portion near Tipperary, and another near Kilmallock; I have no possible way of knowing whether the outdoor relief is properly administered in those districts or not. If you have divisional rating, you have personal knowledge of every person, and, another thing, you are more particular, having the man charged against you. Supposing a Mallow Greenan applied for the relief, I would not take the responsibility as chairman of referring the relief, as I might be doing injustice to that person.

25462. In the old times the Guardians were practically guided by the advice of the Guardian of the electoral division?—Certainly; and the ratepayers of the immediate district would come up, and say, "We are paying rates, and know you ought to get it," and nobody would be injured, because nobody wanting it would be refused.

25463. I gather you are not opposed to outdoor relief, but wish to have it safeguarded?—Quite so.

25464. What do you think about distributing it in kind?—By all means.

25465. Do you think there would be any practical difficulty?—None whatever. The relieving officer would issue his order, and let them take that to any shopkeeper.

25466. That is not what is proposed in Cork at all; that is a system that has been rather condemned. The system proposed in Cork is that the actual bread and food should be put into a van, and brought round?—

With all due respect, I think the other would be better, because the relieving officer of every district is a responsible party, and his order to any shopkeeper is as good as a bank note.

25467. Yes, but it does not follow that the party getting it would always get the proper thing; he may take it out in tobacco and porter?—It may be checked, by specifying the thing required.

25468. I don't think that would be any check. If there was an order for beef, and the man chose to take tobacco?—Surely, when there was an order for beef, he could not get anything else.

25469. There would be no difficulty about that?—That could be looked to, because the relieving officer would be on the spot; but, taking the broad principle, it should be in kind. There is a great temptation in handing money to let it go into improper channels.

25470. In Mitchelstown you are in two counties. What do you think about having the Poor Law unions coterminous with the counties?—In cases where there would be a hardship, I would not go the length.

25471. Supposing they broke up Mitchelstown, what ought to be done with the County Limerick part?—Sent to Kilmallock, and some to Tipperary.

25472. Galbally?—That would be Tipperary, and the western side to Kilmallock, and the Cork portion could go to Fermoy, without any inconvenience whatever. These three unions are nearer than some of the districts we have coming into Mitchelstown. Knock-long is nine miles from Mitchelstown, while Kilmallock is nearer than that; Galbally is nearer to Tipperary than Mitchelstown; there would be no hardship on the sick poor.

25473. You would not care about having all the unions within the county?—I would not at all stick to the counties.

25474. Your idea is the idea with which the unions were originally formed—a central place was taken, and people were supposed to go from about ten miles round it?—Yes.

25475. And you don't see any necessity for making a change in that respect?—I do not; and especially in my own particular eastern district, where I am conversant with the circumstances; it is the better way. If we go by the two counties alone, we would be away from any centre whatever.

25476. Some would be going to Fermoy?—Yes, and the rest to Kilmallock, naturally.

25477. As regards justice in workhouses?—I agree with Mr. Hogan's suggestions, subject to the medical officer's examination, that they would be better, and in some cases kept better, because the Irish people are generally very fond of their people. Herding people together in those places is injuring them; it is miserable to see; they sleep about in dark cells, when they could be out in the sunlight.

25478. I believe the County Asylum is overcrowded?—It is, and no wonder; because a lot of people there ought to be paying patients, and they are not.

25479. What would you do to relieve the overcrowding?—If we amalgamated some of these distanced places they could be made use of.

25481. Who puts on the pressure?—Interested people, I dare say; as you will see a recruiting sergeant anxious to fill the regiment. The tramp nuisance is a regular eyecore with us. There are a lot of deserving poor that must tramp, but they are natives of elsewhere, and they could get a pass from their relieving officer, and let them hand that to the relieving officer of the district, and if they are deserving, they will get relief; but with regard to the vagrants, I would carry out the law in their respect.

25482. As Mr. Hogan suggested?—Yes; the deserving poor tramp should be supported and protected.

MR. ROBERT FISCH, J.R., F.R.C.S., examined.

25483. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Rathkelsie District Council?—Yes.

25484. What is the view of your Guardians about the question of amalgamation?—They would be in favour of amalgamation as far as one union, at least; I don't think they would be anxious to go further than some one union in the county.

25485. You are only seven or eight miles from New-castle, and Croon is about the same?—Croon is nine Irish miles, a little bit more than Newcastle.

25486. What change do you think might be made in the west part of Limerick if there was amalgamation? Take Croon and Newcastle and Rathkelsie?—I think Croon would be the more suitable one. It would be more convenient for an auxiliary asylum.

25487. What do you think about letting the other two stand?—I think the other two would want to stand. There is a big area of country occupied by Rathkelsie and Newcastle especially, portion of the old Old Union having been thrown into Rathkelsie.

25488. They are very close to each other?—In a way, but they have other wings very fair.

25489. If an ambulance arrived at one place, it would only have to go six or seven miles further to get to the other?—Irish miles.

25490. It is hardly necessary for us to go into the boundaries of the unions; we have, of course, the maps with us. The next matter is the necessity for dispensary accommodation, and the lessening of the number of hospitals, having regard to the distance to be traversed by patients and the shortest available time and the quickest and most level roads; we have nothing to do with dispensaries. Do you think there is any hospital that could be removed in West Limerick except Croon?—I don't think there could be; it would be very serious for the sick poor to remove them a long journey, although we have a new mode of conveyance. Still, it would be very hard to take a sick patient twenty or thirty miles.

Mr. Robert Fisch.

25491. The third matter you call attention to is the anomalous condition of the Glm District Comond; where the District Council is subject for rating purposes to the Limerick County Council while its urban business is conducted in the Listowel Workhouse. How would you meet the case of Limerick, where a large portion of the County Clare is in the union?—Well, it is a very peculiarly situated city, and the union workhouse is in the County Clare, properly speaking.

25492. You have no suggestion to make about that?—Not about that.

25493. You say economy could be practised in the present institution by providing fuel and labour-saving appliances, and also disinfecting; steam under pressure is the best?—I think if there was amalgamation you would require something that way in the union.

25494. Of course, when you closed a workhouse like Croon, you would save a good deal in fuel as well as in officers' salaries?—Yes, after a time, and maintenance of buildings and everything.

25495. What is your view about rating?—I was always against union rating from the very start; it is a great injury to the ratepayers of Ireland.

25496. Would you go back completely to the old system?—Yes, I would go back for all purposes.

25497. Are there any changes you would recommend in the existing system of the Poor Law? Supposing you were keeping on Rathkeale and Newcastle, would you suggest any change in the administration, or would you let the present system go on as it is?—Well, I think the present system should go on as it is.

25498. Would you keep Janitors, for instance, in the workhouses?—Oh, no, it is a great injury.

25499. What is your view about the children in the workhouses?—I think it is very demoralising to have them in the workhouses.

25500. Are you satisfied with their going to Glm, for instance?—Up to a certain age they should be removed in the country, I think five or six or seven years' old, and then sent to a place like Glm; because you won't get the respectable small farmers in the country to take up these children, and they fall into the worst hands—poor people that probably are getting out-door relief, and want to make something by them.

25501. How do the Limerick Guardians manage—have they not got foster-parents? They have been working it for thirty years?—I don't know.

25502. In your union what do you do?—There was very little until lately boarded out. There is a ladies' committee, which looks after them as well as they can, and they are better off than formerly; but, at the same time, you have not the proper class of people to take them up; only the very poorest.

25503. If good homes could be found, you would be in favour of boarding out?—Certainly; if you could get respectable farmers to take them up.

25504. Why would you not allow the children to remain on with these people?—Because they won't teach them anything; if the small farmers took them up and reared them they would be taught something.

25505. Supposing a small farmer could be induced to take them up?—They could learn some farm work, and I think it would be more beneficial than trades.

25506. That is what has happened with boarding out in various parts of the country—small farmers do take them at three years old, and keep them on until they are men and women?—As far as my experience goes, unless they are orphans, and are very poor friends to the small farmers, they would not look at them at all.

25507. At what age have you tried to get homes for these children?—Some are taken out very young—sometimes a half or three.

25508. What is the general age?—That would be the general age, and six or seven sometimes.

25509. You could understand, perhaps, people being unwilling to take a child of six or seven or eight who had been, perhaps, with big associates?—I would not like them to get too old in the workhouse by any means.

25510. But children going out at an early age, would there be the same objection to take them?—They would not like to take infants too young; three or four years old, I am sure there would be no objection to them.

25511. What would you do as regards tramps?—We had a system fifteen or sixteen years ago in Rathkeale. A policeman used to attend the workhouse every morning to take them before the magistrates, and give them a week or a fortnight in jail, and we had no tramps for two or three years. Of course, it was rather a harsh treatment. There should be some kind of a home for tramps, and make them work laboriously.

25512. Send them there by warrant for three months, six months, or twelve months, and make them do hard labour?—Try to teach them a trade for labour.

Mr. JOHN FITZGERALD, P.L.C., examined.

Mr John
Fitzgerald

25513. CHAIRMAN.—You are Vice-Chairman of the Rathkeale District Council—do you generally agree with Mr. Pigot as regards the keeping up of Rathkeale and Newcastle Unions?—I think it would be advisable.

25514. You don't think you could do without one or the other?—I don't think so; the distance apart is so very much.

25515. It comes to a question of six or seven miles?—Yes.

25516. You have great distances at present in some places; how far, for instance, is the most remote part of your union?—Fourteen miles.

25517. Then if they had to go on they would have to go twenty-one?—They would.

25518. If there was a great deal of economy to be gained by the breaking up of one union, if you could save a good deal of the rates, what would you say then; and if a hospital for acute cases could be left at a place that would be closed, say Newcastle or Rathkeale, then, what would you think, provided the sick would not have any additional distance to go, but only the shill-boddy?—I think there would be some gain by it to the ratepayers.

25519. If there was a gain would you be disposed to regard that favourably?—Yes.

25520. What is your opinion as regards rating—union or electoral division?—Electoral division, I am entirely in favour of.

25521. Are your Board practically in favour of it?—They are altogether.

25522. Do you represent a town?—A small village.
25523. Do you think towns ought to have some assistance in the outdoor relief?—I don't think so.

25524. You would throw the whole burden on the towns?—I would; there are not so many coming into towns as formerly; there is more employment in the country.

25525. Still the outdoor relief is mainly paid in towns, and a great many of the people who get the outdoor relief in the towns are from the country?—Yes; but there are not as many now as used formerly come into the towns.

25526. Still the town has a larger proportion than the country?—It has.

25527. Would you allow for that and give them some general assistance?—I don't think so.

25528. As regards tramps and vagrants, what do you think would be the best way of dealing with them?—I think there should be a special place for them.

25529. Such as has been mentioned by other witnesses?—Yes.

25530. You would confine them there under a magistrate's warrant?—Yes.

25531. And these people who tramp through the country with children, would you take away their children from them?—I think so; it would be very much better for the children's sake.

25532. What is your opinion about dealing with children generally; would you board them out or send them to an institution?—I would board them out for some time at all events.

25533. With the object of turning them into labourers?—Yes.

25534. Is there anything else I have not asked you that you would like to mention?—I don't think so.

Mr. TIMOTHY COOMBS, Vice-Chairman, Rathkeale Union, examined.

25535. CHAIRMAN.—You are Vice-Chairman of the Rathkeale Guardians?—Yes, sir.
25536. You have heard the evidence of your colleagues just now?—Yes; I am in thorough accord with Mr. Pigot, only on divisional rating I don't agree with them.

25537. You are in favour of letting the union rating stand?—Yes; I live in a town.

25538. And you don't see things quite in the same way?—No. The population of our town is very large, and all the country people from outside are gathered in there, and are there for the last thirty years. I would be in favour of divisional rating if there was a limitation put, say where a person was born to let that division support him.

25539. If you could trace back to where they came from?—It could be done quite easily.

25540. I wonder what would the country Guardians say about that? would they agree with it?—I don't think they would.

25541. What do you say about children?—I would be in favour of keeping them in the workhouse until four years old, then I would send them out to the cottiers and board them out there; I see them and they are very well treated and looked after.

25542. You have a ladies' committee to look after them. As regards the amalgamation of workhouses, what workhouse do you think might be broken up?—The general opinion of the people in the division is Croon, and I would be in favour of that.

25543. Do you think it would be impossible to break up either Rathkeale or Newcastle?—It would be quite impossible.

25544. Even if a hospital were left in one or the other?—It would not do.

25545. You have a good many tramps in Rathkeale?—A great many.

25546. Do you think the time has come for dealing with these people?—Undoubtedly.

25547. You would not, of course, touch the poor people who stay in their own neighbourhood and get charity from their friends?—No.

25548. But you mean the regular tramping vagrants?—Yes.

25549. Some of these people have families; do you think it is desirable that the families should be allowed to remain with them tramping through the country?—I would take the children from them.

25550. And shut up the parents in a workhouse place?—Yes.

25551. Are you on the Lunatic Asylum Committee?—No.

25552. You have heard, I fancy, that there is a movement for increasing the accommodation?—I would be in favour of an empty workhouse.

25553. Supposing Croon was closed; would you rather give them Croon than build more?—I would. I agree with what Mr. Pigot said except as to the rating.

Dec. 1, 1904.
Mr. Timothy Coombs.

Mr. THOMAS HURLEY, J.P., Chairman, Newcastle Union, examined.

25554. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Newcastle Union?—Yes.

25555. Your union goes to the bounds of Kerry and Cork; it does not take in either?—Yes. Our union and Rathkeale comprise half the county of Limerick.

25556. Do you think it would be possible to break up either Newcastle or Rathkeale?—I cannot see how it could be done; it is nearly twenty miles to the bounds of our union, and add to it six or seven miles further going to Rathkeale; it would be quite too much.

25557. What is the most distant part of your union?—Beyond Moostooline; three parishes come together in one point there, and we have another very distant point in our union within two miles of Listowel, near Kilmorra, beyond the village of Atha; there is an electoral division that runs along that way for a long distance.

25558. There are not many people in that division?—Not many, but it embraces the village of Atha, which is fourteen miles from Newcastle.

25559. What is your opinion about rating?—It should be, as at present, union rating. It would be very unfair to towns and villages that get no grant from the Government as the farmers do, that they should be saddled with the whole support of the poor, who, as a rule, come from the adjoining country.

25560. Mr. Coombs said he would be satisfied to have electoral rating if the people from the country districts were thrown back on the division from which they came?—Yes, but I don't know that the grant would be worth the candle.

25561. Some of your places you say are very distant; do you think any additional cottage hospital is necessary in your union?—As far as what there is railway accommodation through most of the union to the Kerry side.

25562. I mean for the sick who cannot take advantage of the train?—I don't believe there is, because we have got a very good ambulance lately, the best one our inspector, Mr. O'Connor, could recommend we have got, and they are just as comfortable in it as if in bed.

25563. You would not like to send them six or seven miles further?—I would not; it is bad enough as it is.

25564. Do many people in your workhouse pay at all for their maintenance?—Yes; a good many of them, especially since the advent of the Duns; one time, there was a great prejudice against people going in there, but that has worn away now and an immense number of people come in who pay for their food, and others pay half.

25565. It has been suggested that it would be a wise thing to give the governing bodies of these hospital power to recover such sums, as they, in their discretion, thought the friends of their patients could pay; would you be in favour of such a change in the law? If a poor man had a child of his own in the hospital getting treatment, if you thought that man could afford as much as the child cost him at home, say 6d. a week for food, so as to make all the people who come in pay as much as they could without hardship?—That is in practice in a small way in our hospital. Whenever a patient enters himself, by way of a loan, we charge the full amount, or whatever in our discretion we think the man should pay, and it is paid.

25566. Do you get much under that heading?—We do, considerable sums. I endorsed a cheque the other day for £15 for one man that was made payable to the Chairman of the Board of Guardians.

25567. If the people objected to it you very often could not recover that?—We have recovered it.

25568. You could if you declared it in time as a loan?—The relieving officer does declare them in time at the next Board day, and he gives his opinion whether they should be charged or allowed free.

25569. What could you recover from such persons?—It is not done unless there is no doubt that they can pay.

25570. What could you recover?—The average cost.

25571. That is very insufficient in a great number of cases. Supposing a comparatively wealthy person, or some member of his family, went into the fever hospital, their treatment might cost a couple of pounds a week and you could only recover 6d. a week, would you be in favour of giving the Board of Guardians discretion in any application to them, to charge as much or as little as they, in their discretion, thought fit, up to the total cost of maintenance?—Undoubtedly I would; but I may mention at one time there was a great reluctance on the part of the people to go into the hospital, and fever and contagious diseases were conveyed and kept at home, and so as to encourage them in at one time we made a rule we would allow all fever cases in free; we did that in the beginning, but it is departed from now.

25572. It was with a very good object you did that?—To encourage them not to conceal it outside.

25573. As regards bringing up children in the workhouse, what is your view?—Our view is to send them out to nurse at a very early age—as early as possible.

25574. What is your practice in the union at present; say an infant is born in the house, when do you send it out into the country?—As soon as possible.

25575. A couple of years old?—Sooner, if we possibly can; when the doctor approves of it. I am

Mr. Thomas Hurley.

Dec. 1, 1894.
Mr. Thomas
Hurley.

sorry to say the nurses we get in these cases are people who are in receipt of outdoor relief; it is for the sake of a few shillings a week.

25576. They cannot give them milk?—The relieving officer will look after that.

25577. At all events they have not got a cow of their own?—I believe they have not; and we are also deterred; we cannot leave one of these children in a town or village; it must be in a country place; they might be very well cured for by a tradesman living in a town with his own family, and they might learn a trade by-and-by.

25578. You think it would be wiser that the Guardians should be allowed to send them to either town or country, as they thought best?—Yes.

25579. How long does the child remain there?—Until it comes of an age to go to Glins.

25580. What time does it go to Glins?—I really forget the age.

25581. Six or seven?—Something like that.

25582. But the child is always taken away from the foster-parent as soon as it reaches that age and sent to Glins?—Yes; it is not so long in operation in our union that it has become a practice, but that is the course we contemplate.

25583. Then you have not much experience of taking away those children from their foster-parents yet?—No; we have not.

25584. Do you anticipate much difficulty about it?—If the foster-parent is inclined to keep on the child I think we would have it with her.

25585. Do you agree with the gentlemen who gave evidence this morning about having a separate place for tramps?—Yes; I would be in agreement with any well-considered means for putting down the tramp nuisance.

25586. You have a great many cramps moving about?—Yes; it is in the high road between Lincolns and Kerry.

25587. Also there will be a number of old people moving about among a parish or district?—I would not designate those as tramps at all.

25588. Has any other reform in the Poor Law been suggested to you?—There is one thing about the administration of outdoor relief. It often comes under my notice that a very deserving case of a man, who may have a quarter of an acre of land, cannot get relief and he would be really entitled to it.

25589. Would you suggest the repeal of the quarter acre clause?—I would give a discretion about it in some cases.

25590. Have you ever been obliged to refuse relief to a widow woman with one child?—We have a case exactly at present; she is a widow of a man who had a cottage; her husband died of consumption, and all they had in the world was gone to sustain him in his last illness. He died; the cottage had to be given up, and here is this woman, probably having the germs of consumption in her, with one child; she is not able to work and she is not a fit subject for a hospital.

25591. You would be in favour of that being enlarged, so that a widow, with one legitimate child should get relief?—Yes. It may happen that a person having a quarter of an acre of land might require relief from time to time, and so a widow with one child might require relief from time to time.

25592. Would you go beyond that?—These two cases, one of each kind, struck me very forcibly lately, and that is why it is in my mind. I would not be in favour of giving this relief out in actual goods, because the majority of the people in our district that are getting relief are old residents of the place; and I will certainly speak for the neighbours, that as a rule they are very good to them; they could not live on the 1s. or 2s. a week that they get, and the neighbours will give them potatoes and flour, and a little ready money is what they would want perhaps to buy groceries and milk.

25593. You would rather give them the money?—Yes; and it would go further; they are better able to use their own pence than I or the relieving officer, and stretch it further.

25594. Mr. MURKIN.—You say it would go further with them; don't you think the Guardians, by buying in large quantities, could provide necessaries at a lower rate than an individual buying in small quantities?—Yes; that would be the principal thing, such as flour and potatoes.

25595. Tea and sugar, and almost anything that a person would want to eat?—I go for the heavy things —the potatoes and flour; as a rule any poor person that is reduced to get 1s. or 2s. outdoor relief, the neighbours of the poor person will relieve him with potatoes and flour, and give him plenty of it, and all that they would require would be the little groceries—small necessaries—and a bit of soap that a halfpenny or a penny would give them.

25596. That would be given in kind and at a less cost than a person would buy it?—You cannot give it to them as cheap as what they get for nothing.

25597. Perhaps all over the country people are not so charitable?—I am only talking for my own place.

25598. CHAIRMAN.—Does that small outdoor relief payment ever go for rent?—I believe in some cases it does—in towns.

25599. It goes through the recipient in every case; it does not go direct to the person who rents the house?—No. The recipient gets it and will pay 6d. or 1s. rent, and buy a bit of groceries and other small things, but so far as the principal portion of his subsistence—bread and potatoes—he never has to pay for them in our locality.

25600. Do many of these small payments go in rent?—Not exclusively.

25601. In some cases the outdoor relief practically pays the rent?—It does; but then the person is begging the whole time.

25602. Have you that class with you?—Very few, and they are a class we discourage as much as possible.

25603. Mr. MURKIN.—If the relieving officer supplied them with the commodities they need would not these people be better off than they are?—Yes; but look at the cost to the ratepayers; a woman getting 1s. 6d. or 2s. a week, could be supplied by the relieving officer with all her necessaries for that?

25604. She would get 1s. 6d. or 2s. worth of much better value than she gets now?—That she must sell what the neighbours give her to provide the ready money. She would want to mend her boots, or buy under-clothing that she would want a few pence for.

25605. You know they all earn something?—I don't believe they do. The majority of the people on outdoor relief in our district do not earn anything, they are so old and feeble.

25606. You don't give it widely?—Not widely, although it has increased.

25607. How much do you give a week?—1s. 6d. or 2s.

25608. Don't you think they would have to do something to supplement the 1s. 6d. in order to live?—But the secret is they are not in the neighbourhood.

25609. CHAIRMAN.—Charity?—Not exactly charity; they won't go begging for it.

25610. Mr. MURKIN.—You say you object to doing away with Rathkale or Newcastle owing to the distance the poor would have to go; do you see the same objection if a hospital was continued in those places; where would the hardship arise then?—I heard no complaints of either the management of Rathkale or Newcastle Unions as a whole, and none of my people are advocating the abolition of either of the unions. I brought it before the Board of Guardians on several occasions, and they said they did not want any changes.

25611. If the hospitals remained would there be any hardship then to the poor?—The sick poor; I don't think there could, for all they want is hospital treatment.

25612. When you said there would be a great hardship you were under the impression that the hospital would be closed and there would be no accommodation for the sick?—I am not prepared to go into these questions; my people, whom I have consulted, said they did not want any changes.

25613. Personally do you see any hardship?—It is impossible there could be any hardship because if there is a hospital there the person requiring hospital treatment would get it whether the union was amalgamated or not.

25614. You expressed assent to give the Guardians power to charge small sums to people who go into the hospital; do you think it would be right to ask agricultural labourers, or people of small means, to pay anything?—I would be sorry that I had expressed myself in that way; I do not agree with that; that is very poor people—struggling people.

25615. CHAIRMAN.—Not unless they could afford it?—Unless they could afford it and were accustomed as such by the relieving officer.

25616. It would be in your discretion, and if a poor struggling person came in you would not charge him?—Naturally not.

Mr. CHARLES MCCARTHY, P.L.O., examined.

Dec. 1, 1904.

Mr. Charles
McCarthy.

25617. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the Newcastle Board of Guardians?—Yes.

25618. You heard the evidence of your Chairman. Is there anything you would like to add from your own point of view?—I don't agree with him on the outdoor relief question.

25619. You would prefer having it a district charge?—I would. Outdoor relief has gone up considerably in the Union, and in the town of Newcastle it is nearly doubled.

25620. What part of the country do you live in?—The most eastern part of the Union adjoining Crook.

25621. You have not many persons in receipt of outdoor relief?—It is about 12s. a week.

25622. Do you think if you had a divisional charge that amount would be reduced?—I don't think so; it is about the very same in our division as when the Act was passed; we did not increase it.

25623. You think it would be reduced in Newcastle town?—I think so. I know in certain divisions the sum is as high as 1s. in the £ for outdoor relief alone.

25624. What division would that be in?—Athen. There are several other divisions too where the outdoor relief amounts to 1s., and in other divisions it is only 6d. or 5d. I think there is a great hardship in that.

25625. You would put the charge back on the division as it used to be before the Act of 1891?—Yes.

25626. Would you give any relief to the towns?—I would not, because they take advantage of it, and people, perhaps twenty miles away, would be paying for it.

25627. If these were people from your part of the country in the town would you approve of their shareability being thrown back on your division?—Persons who had been living in Newcastle, say for a few years—would you approve of your having to pay the outdoor relief in your division?—I think that is a very exceptional case; there is not a single person from my division in any town. The parties who are getting outdoor relief have spent their lives working in the towns perhaps. No one leaves the country to go into the town to get relief because they could get it at home. Another question about outdoor relief. I would not give it in kind, but in money; it won't work in a country district where you have five or six persons all over a division.

25628. You give very little?—We have not the power.

25629. You don't give much to each person?—About 2s. a week.

25630. It is only a small sum towards their support?—Yes; I agree with the chairman's evidence.

25631. You think they make out the rest of their living from the good nature of their friends?—Anyone who is not a professional beggar will get plenty from the neighbours, and then want little things, so that a couple of shillings a week comes in handy.

Mr. JOHN BRADDOCK, P.L.O., examined.

25645. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view on the question of union as distinguished from divisional rating?—I would go for union rating.

25646. Are you looking at it from a town point of view?—Yes; I think so; I don't live in a town myself, but it is too bad to want these small towns.

25647. You think it would be fairer to leave things as they are?—I think so.

25648. I suppose a great many of the townspeople who get relief do come from the country?—I don't think they do. I live in a western division, next to Listowel Union, three miles from Abbeyfeale, and thirteen miles from Newcastle.

25649. Do you think that either Newcastle or Rathkeale could be closed as workhouses?—I don't know about Rathkeale, but we could not manage if Newcastle was closed; we would have to come twenty miles to Rathkeale.

25650. Mr. MURKIN.—If you had a hospital there would not that meet your objections?—I don't see how it could; you want your union every day in the year; it is not for the hospital alone.

25651. Would not a healthy person be able to travel five or seven miles further without any inconvenience?—He might, and you might meet another person who could not endure it.

25632. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't you think that children of the recipients of outdoor relief would be better fed under the charge when they get commodities instead of money?—I don't know of any case like that in our division.

25633. Can you not picture to yourself that they will get better value from the Guardians purchasing the goods at wholesale prices than they can possibly get in drabbers in country shops?—I don't know how that would work in a village; they may want coal, and underclothing, and silly things.

25634. CHAIRMAN.—You think the people could not tell the relieving officer this week what they would want next week?—They might not know what they would want next week.

25635. The outdoor relief you give is never meant to support a family?—It is a help to support them.

25636. It is a sort of pocket money to find the extras that they won't get a present of?—They have a little money in their pockets to buy the odds and ends. You know they will never get cutlery and sugar and milk, which they get from the farmers; they will buy groceries then like soap, a bit of tobacco, underclothing and coal.

25637. Mr. MURKIN.—These things could all be given by the relieving officer?—I suppose they could, in a town, but I don't think in a remote rural district it would work so well.

25638. Does not the relieving officer visit the people to give them money?—He does.

25639. Could he not as well give them the provisions?—You may be right, but it is my opinion it would not work.

25640. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think many people would go off the outdoor relief but if they did not get money but got it in kind, which would they rather have the money or the food?—I am sure they would rather have the money.

25641. Even though they might get better value from the relieving officer—more stuff than they could buy in a shop at retail prices?—I think all the same they would rather get the money and let them buy what they want, that is in a country place; I don't know how it would work out in a town.

25642. Is there anything you would like to add to what the chairman said?—If any union was abolished I think they should be better constructed than at present to ensure the least inconvenience.

25643. Would you take any divisions off Newcastle and throw them to any of the unions around?—I think not; the unions are long distances. There is a part of Crook which belonged originally to Newcastle, it was partly adjoining the division I represent, and it is nearer Newcastle than my division, and it is in Crook.

25644. That, you think, ought to go back to Newcastle?—I don't know about that, but it would be no hardship.

25652. I am not talking of the sick but of the healthy; would it be any hardship to them if the workhouse was away and the hospital retained?—I don't know, but I think it would be very unfair to do away with Newcastle and under to our division.

25653. If you have hospital accommodation what unfavourable is there?—If it was nothing but coming to the Board once a fortnight; you meet the people and effect a good deal of reduction in the rates.

25654. If you did away with the officers of the house proper and reduced largely the coal bill and upkeep?—We would rather have an additional burden on the rates than knock down the Newcastle Union.

25655. CHAIRMAN.—Why would you rather keep it?—Don't you think a Guardian who has to travel once a fortnight thirteen or fourteen miles has a very long journey, not to mind adding six more miles.

25656. Have you many tramps passing through Abbeyfeale?—Very little; they generally make for Newcastle.

25657. Do they make from Listowel to Newcastle in the one day?—A good many of them would.

25658. How many miles are you from Listowel?—Eight miles.

Mr. John Braddock.

Dec. 1, 1894.

Mr. John
Hartigan.

25559. And thirteen from Newcastle?—Yes.
25560. Which union would you rather belong to?—I would not have anything to do with Lisfawel. The rates there are twice as high as Newcastle. Kerry is always in debt; they are very extravagant with roads and malicious injuries. In our western divisions they would agitate before they would go to Lisfawel.

25561. Although it is the nearest to you?—There is only about three miles of a difference, but they would travel ten miles before they would go to Lisfawel.

25562. There are not people often taken from Abbeyfeale to Newcastle Workhouse?—There are.

25563. Is there any difficulty raised about that; do you know of any sick people left at home who would go into a hospital if it were nearer?—Oh, no; there is a great convenience; Abbeyfeale is only ten miles from Newcastle on a good road.

25564. Are you in favour of boarding out children?—I don't know much about that, but I coincide with Mr. Hurley's opinion, which, I think, was very fair. With regard to the relief in kind. There are several cases where it would be impossible for a relieving officer or any man to supply all the things wanted. There are a good many in the division in which I live, and the first thing they take out of the relief money is to or so for a donkey load of turf; they are all buying turf.

Mrs. HARTIGAN, P.L.O., examined.

Mrs. Hartigan.

25572. CHAIRMAN.—You have come from the Croon Union?—Yes.

25573. Are you a Guardian?—Yes.

25574. You have heard the proposals to abolish Croon?—Yes, they all seem inclined to abolish Croon.

25575. What do you think?—I am the representative of the Guardians here, and they are totally opposed to it, and so are all the ratepayers; they don't see any cause for it; they think they will be paying more rates, but my fellow Guardians will explain that our union has been the lowest rated until Kilmallock got the Agricultural Grant.

25576. From your point of view what makes you think it would be desirable to continue Croon?—It would be a very great hardship on the people for sick people to have to go ten or twelve miles into Limerick, or Kilmallock, or Newcastle West.

25577. If a small hospital were kept at Croon?—I suppose if the hospital were there it would not entail any great hardship, for we have very few able-bodied people in the house.

25578. I mean if a hospital were kept, not for all the people dressed as sick, but for the acutely sick?—Yes.

25579. There are a large number of persons dressed as sick at Croon who are really chronic cases?—Some years there are about 400 on the doctor's books; those are chronic cases.

25580. I suppose the most he would ever have on the acute list would be from 15 to 20?—I suppose so.

25581. If a hospital with a dozen or more beds were kept there, do you think it would be much hardship to the sick?—It would be a great hardship to very old people to be very far removed from their friends; some of them are there since the workhouse was established, almost blind people and people bedridden for twelve or fourteen years; it would be a great hardship on those old people to send them to other unions, and we would reap no benefit from it.

25582. If a distinct benefit were to arise in the form of lower rates would you change your mind?—We could not be convinced on that point of lower rates; we think we would manage our own rates with more economy than any other body of Guardians, and we would only have a small representation on the Boards when we would be divided amongst the different Boards.

25583. Now the boarding-out of children—have you had any experience of that?—No; we have only one child boarded out, but lately the schoolmistress retired, and we are sending out the children to the National School every day.

25584. Would you be in favour personally of boarding out the children?—Yes; I would have no children in the workhouse; board them all out. Our experience is that they are nice healthy children until they reach three or four, and then they commence to fail in mind and body. They are not obliged either to exercise their 25585. They don't get a bit of turf back themselves—there may be a few of them get it, but more are destitute and feeble.

25586. And they have to buy their food?—They have a donkey load that would cost 1s. or 1s. 6d.; they would pull on with that for three weeks.

25587. Mr. MURPHY.—Don't you think they could earn enough for that?—There are some of them that would not earn 2d. in a month; they are not able to earn.

25588. The person must be very helpless that could not earn a little?—There are some of them very old and feeble; they don't scarcely get outside the door; they don't go for the relief, but send someone belonging to them, or that takes an interest in them, for it; all of them are bedridden and get things in the line of potatoes and new milk or tea. Sometimes, of course, they have to buy a share.

25589. CHAIRMAN.—Do many of them have to pay for a cottage or room?—Some of them have houses almost free, and others are paying 6d. a fortnight for small little houses.

25590. The relief goes to pay that?—Of course it does; some of them pay a shilling a month. Of course the week of the relief, they will beg around for that week.

25591. Are any of these people on relief in the labourers' cottages?—Oh, no; they are not any of them destitute in labourers' cottages that want relief.

25592. And their habits, and the result is that they become almost incapable of providing for themselves. And then when they are sent to Glina, the Sisters of Mercy and the Christian Brothers do all they can to try and fit them to cope with the world afterwards, and it is an utter failure with the materials we send them. They cannot make them see that they are obliged to do for themselves. And then when they leave Glina School they know no one outside the school or the workhouse, have no friends or acquaintances, they are sent out to service, and, of course, they don't like to work.

25593. You have traced some of these children after they left the school?—Yes; of course there are exceptions, but as a rule they are perfectly unfit to earn their bread. The moment they get into any difficulty they return to the workhouse again.

25594. Even after having been at Glina?—Even after having been at Glina; they are sent to Glina at eight or nine. They know what it is to be supplied with food, and driven in and out to the refectory, but they don't know where the bread comes from. They are driven in like sheep and out again, and the result is that when they have to do otherwise they don't like it, and return to the workhouse or go on tramp. And then we are sending children in order to keep up a supply to the workhouse, and to keep the ratepayers occupied trying to support them; that is about it. I am strongly in favour of boarding them out, and very young children too.

25595. As early as the medical officer would say they are fit for it?—Yes, and then there is the Lady Inspector, and as I mention the Lady Inspector she would be also very useful in inspecting the domestic arrangements of the workhouse. Of course you cannot understand the domestic arrangements, or whether there is economy or otherwise.

25596. You would be surprised how much they know!—I think there would be room for improvement in that way. And also another question about illegitimate children. They are under the influence of the mothers for a number of years in the workhouse; you cannot have classification in these small workhouses, and these children are under the influence of the mothers, who are often half idiots, half imbeciles, and who are so imprudent to the children one way or another. We would have boarded out all our children if it were possible, but we have those children whom we cannot board out.

25597. Would you be in favour of an enlargement of your power so as to enable you to board out all children?—I would keep no children in the workhouse; perhaps if they were exchanged and sent to a distant workhouse to take them from the influence of the mothers and their surroundings.

25690. Have you thought at all of keeping the mothers out of the workhouse—Oh, no; I would keep the mothers in the workhouse.

25691. Have you heard any suggestions about keeping the mothers out of the workhouse?—I don't think it is any good to allow the mothers out; our experience is that they come in again.

25692. The suggestion we received was that instead of being admitted into the workhouse they should be admitted into a penitentiary or reformatory managed by whatever religious persuasion they belonged to.—Certainly, that would be very good for the first offenders who could be let out again after a time.

25693. Keep there until the managers thought it safe to let them out?—Yes, but those who come in again and again?

25694. Don't you think the fact of their coming in again and again is largely the result of their remaining bearded together in the workhouse?—I don't think so.

25695. Their mode of life is not improved there—they is no attempt to elevate them?—Well, no, and you can only judge; when they do go out they return again; whether if they were kept under different circumstances that would have a good effect, I don't know.

25696. If that class was altogether excluded from workhouse—if a girl instead of coming to Croon, Newcastle, or Rathfriland, went to Limerick or some place where the Good Shepherds or some other similar body would take charge of them?—That would be a very good thing, but not for a young girl on her first offence.

25697. I am looking at it chiefly from the point of first offence?—They would look upon themselves and everyone would look upon them as being bearded as bad characters; they are looked on as hopeless.

25698. Are they generally kept there always?—They do mostly stay there always.

25699. That is a different system to the one suggested; it was suggested that they should go into some institutions where they should be kept. I suppose these things always get known where a girl would be?—We very often have them coming from distant unions, Newcastle West and Kerry; they are obliged to be admitted by the relieving Officer, and they stay in Croon; I mean the old ones that come in again and again.

25700. But these girls that come in for the first time are kept in the same room and associate with women who are respectable?—Yes.

25701. From that point of view, do you think it would be good that first offenders should never enter a workhouse if an institution could be found that would take these girls and keep them any for some months, or as long as might be considered necessary, and try and send them home or elsewhere for a fresh start?—Certainly; I have seen some of these girls turn out excellently; sometimes the children are paid for in Glin, and the mothers go to service or go to America.

25702. How do the girls do at Glin?—The same thing applies to the girls as to the boys. What we want are servants and agricultural labourers; there are plenty of tradespeople in the country. They are physically unfit to earn their bread from the system of training in this institution.

25703. They are not fit for family life?—I would send them to Glin after being reared in the country by mothers. Then I would send them to Glin to be trained as servants and labourers.

25704. In an institution like that could they train children to be useful about a house or farm as well as a child that was boarded out for ten years, and went to the National School with other children, and saw how the work of the place was done?—Then Glin School would be a benefit to it.

25705. How would it be benefited?—They would be trained in intelligence, and be capable of receiving the instruction they get there.

25706. What would they be taught there?—I think labour on the farm and trades; they have workshops where they make clothes.

25707. You don't want a labouring man to make a suit of clothes for himself?—I know it would not be such a success for a labourer, but the school is there, and that fact in connection with Glin would be excellent.

25708. And would that be the kind of training that would be useful to a farmer on getting these boys out again?—If they did as farmers do—have the same class of implements of labour—not having machinery or things that they will never see again.

25709. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you find any trouble in getting horses for the children?—We have had no experience of that, but I am sure we would not; I am sure we would get places with respectable labourers for them; with two or three little boys at home they would find an advantage in being paid for another.

25710. One of the witnesses expressed a doubt about getting suitable homes?—They find no difficulty in Limerick, and I scarcely think the same thing would apply to us.

25711. You say you don't see any advantage in any change in system about Croon—you agree the children should not be kept in the house?—No.

25712. What about the inmates—should they be kept there?—They are just as well off as in Limerick. Dr. Courtney visited us a short time ago and reported that they were quite as comfortable as they could be; he advised some changes, which the Guardians made. Of course if there was some little work supplied to them it would be better.

25713. Do you not find them confined in a small yard walking about or closed up in the house?—Yes, but somehow they seemed quite happy.

25714. Don't you think it is a very helpless condition for these people—ought they not to be on a farm where they were doing something?—Certainly; for, of course, they all come from farms and are used to agricultural work.

25715. It has been suggested to me that it would be well to put them in an auxiliary asylum with a large amount of land attached to it, and they could be made self-supporting in that way—their cost of maintenance would not be as great as in an asylum proper?—Would a large colony of them together be any advantage to them?

25716. You would not have a large number in Limerick—not more than 300 or 400?—They could all be bearded in our workhouse; there is a large wing idle, and there could be plenty of land got in our neighbourhood.

25717. Would there not be more discipline and order if they were in a home by themselves?—If they had separate wards and separate attendants.

25718. You have hardly room at Croon now for any kind of treatment such as that?—There is a great part of the building unoccupied, and land enough to be got in the neighbourhood, I think, if necessary.

25719. Still the assistants could not have the knowledge of the treatment of these cases that men trained in an asylum would have?—I suppose you would have to get there.

25720. Would not that be a costly thing—would it not be better to send the inmates to an auxiliary asylum?—Would not another auxiliary asylum cost us as much as, and a great deal more than, part of our building; they would be more at home, I think, in a country place, having a farm and some land attached, where they would be under conditions they were accustomed to.

25721. If the auxiliary asylums were in a country place, which it probably will be, for instance, if established at Croon, would not that be a good location for the auxiliary asylum?—I am only representing the Guardians and ratepayers, and they are quite opposed to amalgamation.

25722. Perhaps they did not look at it in every light?—They looked at it in every way they thought it fair when the rates would not be in their own keeping.

25723. Supposing the Guardians still managed their own union, attended to their sick, and paid for the children bearded out, and for the lunatics in the auxiliary asylum?—Do you mean some of our union would go to Limerick and come to Kilmallock?

25724. I mean that your union would be of the area it is at present, but your house instead of having six or seven different classes would have but one class?—It was not put before the Guardians in that light, and I was only deputed to oppose amalgamation. About district rating, I would be for district rating; it would lead to far more economy; what is everyone's business is no one's business, and if each division had to give outdoor relief to its own poor.

25725. CHAIRMAN.—Would you care to see divisional rating for any other purpose than outdoor relief?—Yes, and labourers' cottages.

25726. With that we have nothing to do, but for outdoor relief you would like to see it. Do your Guardians care whether it is divisional or union rating for indoor relief?—I did not hear that discussed; I don't think they would mind that, but of course the towns should get aid; it would be a very great injustice if they did not, for a great many country people go to settle in towns where they can get one room near the church; some of them are getting help from friends in America, and some of them getting outdoor relief; nearly all the old people are getting outdoor relief; they can all get a room cheap.

25727. What do they pay for a room?—In a great many instances a shilling a week.

25728. Dr. Brogan.—Do many patients come from Croon into the County Infirmary?—Very few, scarcely any.

25729. Of course Croon pays the same proportion to the County Infirmary as the Limerick district?—Yes, but it is not availed of as all; sometimes the doctor of the Croon Workhouse sends them in for special treatment—an operation.

25730. You never get nurses from the County Infirmary?—Yes, we have had nurses from the County Infirmary.

25731. Was that a satisfactory arrangement?—Well, yes; we don't require nurses except in the case of contagious diseases, perhaps.

25732. On relief duty?—Yes, but they generally relieve one another. We are well supplied with nurses.

25733. Have you thought of the subject of getting greater benefit for the money you give to the County Infirmary?—I don't know; as a rule people don't care to come into the County Infirmary from our district.

25734. Your district pays for your own sick, in your own Infirmary, and you also pay for the sick of other districts in the County Infirmary; what would you think of having a county rate for the support of the sick of the whole county, and in that way each hospital, however remote from the County Infirmary, would be supported by the county rate; your acute sick at Croon, or Newcastle West, or Balthakeale would be supported by a county rate?—We don't get benefit from the County Infirmary at all.

Captain O'BRIEN, R.R., F.R.S., examined.

Capt. O'Brien.

25741. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the witnesses deputed by the Limerick Guardians?—Yes.

25742. Have they looked at the matter of emigration as affecting the whole county?—I don't think they have; I think the only idea they have with regard to utilising some of the widows in the county is to get rid of our harmless lunatics and epileptics. We have been looking forward to that for a long time, ever since the new Act came into force, because we have a good many of them in Limerick Union and the premises are not at all adapted to them; they are over-crowded.

25743. Did the Limerick Guardians come to any opinion as to what workhouse might be got for that purpose?—It was always suggested that Croon would be the most suitable, but in any case I suppose part of Croon would still have to be left as a district hospital for the infirm and so on; they could only utilise a part of it for harmless lunatics, I imagine.

25744. The number of beds for the acute sick would be very small?—What would become of the infirm?

25745. What would you suggest might be done with the infirm?—I am afraid they would have to remain there too.

25746. Or go to some other institution?—I am afraid we could not do that; in Limerick we have 225 infirm women already; they have increased largely.

25747. You have got a very large number in Limerick at present?—A very large number.

25748. If your schools were practically closed and you lost your lunatics, then you would have a great deal of additional space?—Oh, we should; we might be able to classify the inmates then.

25749. Then the only view so far as you are aware that was taken about consolidation was an anxiety to get a building cheaply for housing the harmless lunatics of the county?—That was it.

25750. Do you think the children might be more largely boarded out than they are? Under the existing law you can only board out deserted and orphan children; would you be in favour of an extension of the law that would give the Guardians power to board out all children who fell on the rates?—I would be strongly in favour of that.

25751. Dr. Brogan.—There would be some cases possibly where it could not be done, but, speaking generally, you would be in favour of power being given to board out?—Decidedly.

25752. I know, but to equalise it over the whole county; if the County Infirmary were supported out of the county rate?—I would say that would be very good indeed.

25753. Do you think that would be equitable?—Yes; a great many people from our place are sent to Cork, and they are sent to the Mater Hospital in Dublin; they are unwilling to come into Limerick.

25754. You think it would be a desirable arrangement if all the sick were supported of the county rate that there would be no preference given to one district; it has been contended that round about a County Infirmary, within a few miles, the sick go into that County Infirmary, and of course that district receives a larger benefit than a district ten or twenty miles away?—Yes, that is a very great hardship, we paying where we have no benefit.

25755. Has that been discussed by the Guardians at all?—I think it has, but they did not discuss it for this particular meeting.

25756. And if there was some institution established for the treatment of consumption it could be supported also by the same rate?—Yes, that would be very much wanted; consumption is very much on the increase; I heard a person say lately that Croon is full of consumption.

25757. In the Workhouse Hospital, although you may separate them, you cannot do much to cure them?—No, they don't get any benefit, for when they are commencing to get well, they go out to the same house and place and they lose whatever benefit they gained. Something is very much wanted for consumption; I know whole families die of consumption, and out of one house, a slatted house which cannot be disinfected, no light and no air, most valuable lives lost in that way. What adds to our sick are people coming from America broken down in health, and also they are sent home from America.

25758. You have had the boarding-out system for a long time in this union—you were one of the earliest unions to take it up?—I have only been a member since 1898.

25759. As regards the cheapness of relief, how you formed any opinion on that?—I think district rating as the fairest thing, for if the city has to pay more rates they get the benefit of all the money spent in the Union; certainly as regards outdoor relief it ought to be so.

25760. About how much do you pay for children at nurse?—I am not a member of the Boarding-out Committee; I have not gone into it.

25761. As regards tramps, would you be in favour of strong measures being taken with them to remove them from their tramping life if possible?—I think it is an evil that is decreasing very much; I don't think we are nearly so bad off here as in England.

25762. No, but still there is a large floating population continually on the march; would you be in favour of strong measures with them?—Certainly.

25763. Have the Limerick Board of Guardians considered the question of providing a sanatorium for the treatment of consumptive patients?—I don't think so.

25764. Have you any personal views on the subject?—I think it would be most desirable; the number of consumptive patients is on the increase; whether the patients themselves would object to being removed far from home—

25765. Of course it would be optional with them; you would not remove them by any compulsion whatever; do you not think any person once they go there suffering from a disease that is largely curable, would they not be willing to go under conditions where there would be a chance for their lives?—I think so.

25766. You say it is on the increase?—So the doctor told me a short time ago, and he can give you particulars.

25767. That is in your workhouse; of course although you may isolate the case you can do little towards benefiting the sufferer—you may prevent the spreading of the disease from those patients, but that is about all. Personally you think it is a most desirable thing?—I do.

25752. You think the ratepayers would not object if an institution were established as economically as possible, say perhaps for two or three counties to start with, not for your union by any means, but for a larger area—a couple of counties—Gloucester, Limerick, and perhaps Galway. What would you think of such a thing?—I think the ratepayers would object to any very large expenditure.

Mr. PATRICK BURNS EXAMINED.

25753. CHAIRMAN.—You represent the Limerick District Council?—Yes.

25754. Now we will be glad to hear your views on the question of amalgamation?—I have not any very definite views with regard to the unions we would abolish or amalgamate with; I have not worked it out.

25755. Do you think it desirable that there should be fewer workhouses in the county than there are?—I am quite positive about that. I believe our maximum expenditure is far and away too much at the present time.

25756. You would like to reduce the expenses of the staff?—I think there should be some limitation to the establishment charges. I have proved that already by going into the books of the union. Ten years ago we had in the Limerick Union 1,600 people; we had then eight officers less than we have now, although we have now only 1,000 people on an average, and we were paying in the year, in the aggregate, 2700 a year less salaries to the officers than now. I have gone into the question of the numbers in the house, and, on investigation, I find that we have on an average at the present time 1,000 people in the house and on inquiry I find that 163 of those were servants. I have computed that if I add the servants to the officers and their salaries, one-fourth of the entire number in the house were officers and servants. I am convinced that there should be some better supervision over this, and I don't think there should be such a large expenditure of money under existing circumstances.

25757. In what direction do you think economy might be started?—I believe there should be some definite system, by which duties would be allotted to officers, and there should be some limitation as to the number of officers in the house, and there should be some rate by which they would be paid—some definite rate. There is no finality; there is no fixed salary. I believe it is necessary we should have some sort of Civil Service system. At the present time it is not the best that gets the position vacant. It all goes, as is generally admitted, by favour and influence. That is admitted on all hands; I don't take it on myself to say that alone.

25758. You would have the vacancies filled by competitive examinations?—Yes, and I would have the posts graded. If a responsible position was to be filled, I would have the man in the next position to fill it. That is, by competitive examination, because, really, it must be admitted there is no defining what the abilities of an officer to take up an important position should be. I saw a case in point myself where a very expert man was required for a position vacant in the union, and a very expert man came forward, and all the votes he got were eight, as against thirty-four given to a man who knew practically nothing at all about the business.

25759. I hope you were one of the eight?—I was one of the eight, and the proposer. I don't attribute any blame to the officers; I am a bit indignant myself to get all I can for as little work as possible; it is a failing of human nature, but should be restricted by some means or other.

25760. Do you think the Guardians would agree to have the appointments filled as you suggest—by competition?—I don't see what really honest objection there could be to it. I don't think there is a sufficient watch at all upon the materially interested Guardians. I will instance that for you. In our board there was a strong rumour that a certain proportion of the Guardians were contractors to the board; I had no positive proof of that until very recently, when one man took it on himself to stand up at the board, and point out four of the Guardians that were contractors to the board.

25761. That is a matter we can hardly look into, because that is illegal. We are not here to look into 25762. It would not be a large expenditure when you consider the large area—it would be a very small expenditure—I am sure they would not object.

25763. A large number of cases might wish to go into it that could pay for their support, and in that way bring down the cost of the institution to, perhaps, a small thing?—Yes.

25800. It would not be a large expenditure when you consider the large area—it would be a very small expenditure—I am sure they would not object.

25774. Don't you think it is largely the interest of the local body?—It is the local body; but in the wind-up the union will rest with the individual. And if he does bring a charge against such a man as I have pointed out, it is not from any disinterested motives he does so.

25775. Your suggestion is that the Local Government Board should take steps for watching in every union. That would mean a tremendous lot of money?—I don't think it would require a lot of money. An example should be made here and there, and that is as much as the law can do in any case. People evade the law every day, and are only deterred by examples made from place to place. As a matter of fact, what I contend is, that there is no proper economic supervision over the unions, and that the representatives of the people are not sufficiently interested in making the working of the union economic; some other system must be adopted.

25776. What system would you adopt?—I would have an expert appointed to go in, give him a month's rest, and then give him twelve months to work our union in the most economic manner, and then show—"I can work this union several thousand pounds less than you," and lay that down as a standard that we are not to exceed per rate. No man has a sufficient interest in the union to do that, or, if he has, he is in a van minority.

25777. Mr. MURKIN.—Every year does not require the same amount of money?—Pro rata, I say. If an expert worked the union for so much with so many patients, I don't see why we should exceed that afterwards.

25778. That man might run it on close lines, and be very hard on the poor, in order to establish a character for economy—he would be himself interested in having a low figure?—I quite agree; but if there is a standard of dietary, it would be highly immoral to deprive any man of his due proportion of dietary.

25779. But there might be no improvements needed or improvements done in that particular year?—I say pro rata, putting everything down at the proper rate. I believe there is an unaccountable waste.

25780. CHAIRMAN.—Have you gone into that yourself to try and cut it down?—I have gone into it to seek an extent that I have knocked my head against a good many. I have been trying to retrench for a long time, but up to the present I have not succeeded. I have caused some minor reforms, but I have caused a lot of displeasure, and I have been knocking my head against deep-rooted prejudices. I cannot eradicate the old system.

25781. Mr. MURKIN.—Really, what harm has been done? Are you not aware that within the last five or six years the condition of the inmates of these institutions is very much improved; they are getting better dietary and more careful nursing, and the houses themselves are improved beyond recognition?—I don't question that at all. I quite agree that the conditions of the inmates of unions have improved, just in the same proportion as of outside people, for the working people are somewhat better off just now. I don't say in Limerick; the people in Limerick are not so well housed; but the inmates of the unions should not cost on an average £23 a head; that no mechanics or man in the city can allow his family to cost.

Dec. 1, 1904.

Mr. Patrick
Borke.

25792. That is undeniably a very high figure, and I agree with you that it is quite too high.—But, then, you will take children on the breast on that; they will be reckoned against you, and foundlings. In our union we have at present, on an average, 1,000 inmates, and it costs about £28,000 a year. Of course, you have out-door relief, which amounts to somewhere about £3,000, and you have to pay on losses; but I have made up my mind that, one way or another, our cost is on an average £23 per head.

25793. Dr. BOORM.—Tell me how you make it up?—I have not the figures exactly. If you take the total and take the out-door relief, and take the loans and one thing or another from it, you will find that coats, provisions, and clothing, and one thing or another, will amount to what I say, and you enter for 1,000 for £23,000.

25794. Mr. MURPHY.—You cannot charge out-door relief?—I am not charging it; I am taking the out-door relief from the £23,000.

Mr. GUINNESS (Clerk).—£27,000 odd, and out-door relief is about £5,000.

Dr. BOORM.—There are the medical officers' salaries, of course!

Mr. GUINNESS.—Yes. The average weekly cost in the house is only about 3s. 5d. or 3s. 6d. a week.

25795. Dr. BOORM.—Now we have brought it down to £23,000?—I am not taking those figures; I am taking it from the investigation that took place in Dublin a short time ago, and I will give you the pamphlet on it, where the inmates of workhouses in Ireland are mentioned.

25796. We don't want those fancy things. When you are talking about a particular union stick to the figures of it. You are living here, and you could get the figures of it far better than to make a broad statement of £23 per head per annum. It shows it could not possibly cost that. You have the relieving officers' and lots of salaries outside the workhouse out of that £23,000—the clerk's salary. You are putting everything down to the cost of the inmates; you would need a clerk if you had not a workhouse here at all—I say the upkeep of the union costs that.

25797. Medicine for dispensary doctors; vaccination for a district five miles away from Limerick should not be included in the £23 per head!—That is the way I am looking at it; I say the upkeep of the union costs that.

25798. Now you are talking sense. If you say the upkeep of your union costs £23,000, and your inmates vary from 1,000 to 1,500 a year, and at the same time you have a lot of other expenditure included in the £23,000, that will not bind you to £23 per head?—No, it is taken from the report of the Dublin investigation.

25799. If you investigated it a little further you might find it to disappear—I am taking the opinion of experts on the thing.

25799. CHAIRMAN.—At all events, you will see that it is not fair to take dispensary expenditure under the head of indoor cost!

Dr. BOORM.—And sanitary officers' salaries!—The union costs close on £23,000 a year, and I say those things ought to be covered by £5,000 or £7,000 or £8,000 a year. If you, gentlemen, go into it yourselves, you will find that establishment charges and everything connected with the upkeep of the paupers amounts to far and above what a tradesman or any mechanic outside can afford to spend on his family. I am not saying what is unreasonable, when I say the people in the workhouse are costing far more than a working man outside can afford to have his family cost him.

25799. Dr. BOORM.—A large proportion of your patients and inmates are sick patients; they require a large amount of attendance and nursing!—I don't question that at all. I am quite disposed to give everything that is essential to the inmates; I don't want to retrench in that direction; I think it is quite the wrong way to do things.

25799. I might say with you, to some extent, that in certain ways these might be economy effected if there was closer supervision, but I would rather you would indicate these points?—I am not bringing any specific charge; I believe it is a system that has been allowed to creep in, and I don't say the present officers are any more responsible than the officers who went before them. I say it is a system that has been allowed to creep from day to day. I say we have 600 people less now. I have proved this. I have taken it from their own books, and we have eight officers more than when we had 600 more inmates.

25799. Did you inquire what class those patients or inmates were—those they may not have been sick, and the proportion of sick might have been altered considerably?—We have one-third less now; that would hardly account for it.

25799. I would like to follow the class of inmates a little further?—Certainly.

25799. The nursing has improved of late years; you must improve with the times?—I am speaking within ten years; I am not going back to ancient times, when things were done in a primitive way; and I took it from the books, that while the numbers have fallen away by over 600, the officers have been increased, and the aggregate of the salaries have increased by £200 or £700 a year. Is not that inconsistent?

25799. Who raised the salaries?—I never raised one.

25799. CHAIRMAN.—At all events, you would very much prefer to see a scale of salaries and appointments made by competition, and economies introduced?—I certainly would; and I would like to see every man paid in a public employment at about his market value in the outside world, and I don't think he should be made any better off than the people who are keeping up the union, and have to compete in the markets of the world for their maintenance. I don't think there is anything unreasonable in that.

25799. I don't think there is; but we do not agree with the way you work out the calculation. We have been making these calculations ourselves as we went round, but there are a number of items that should be included?—That is where we disagree; of course, I may be wrong.

25799. The only thing is, if you are keeping people in the workhouse, you cannot put on the cost of their maintenance what you would pay for out-door relief?—I say in Doon?—Certainly not.

25800. You have to see how many items ought to come off before you divide it by the number of inmates?—Supposing I allowed £7,000 or £3,000 for that; but any way you bring it down it will cost £17,000.

25801. These general statements are not safe. You can easily do it. Get the actual cost, and divide it by the number of inmates!—I have taken off nothing. I confess, but the out-door relief and some sanitary officers, and then I thought everything that occurred after that was chargeable.

25802. It would not look to me as if you made all necessary deductions, but still you are quite right—there is room for economy!—Yes, without doing anybody any harm.

Mr. JOHN B. BARRINGTON, c.r., examined.

Mr. John B.
Barrington.

25803. CHAIRMAN.—You considered the number of unions that might be broken up in the county?—There was a meeting of District Councils here conjointly with the County Council, but they really did not come to any definite conclusion. Individually, all are in favour of amalgamation, provided it would mean a reduction of the rates; personally, I think there is room for a great deal of amalgamation everywhere.

25804. What unions did you yourself think might be broken up?—Looking at the map of the County

Limerick, Cross is forced on your mind as one at once, but there is a question whether the Limerick part of Mitchelstown should not come into Kilmallock. Swansdale, too, possibly might be broken up; but there is room, undoubtedly.

25805. Where a union is broken up, do you think it desirable to keep a small hospital for the acute sick?—I think there should be some provision for the acute sick or accidents; but the railway accommodation is very good, as far as Limerick is concerned.

25806. That does not help the acute sick?—No.
25807. The chief matter that taxed this subject on the attention of the Guardians and Council is the necessity of providing additional accommodation for the lunatics?—Yes.

25808. Are you personally in favour of the enlargement of the asylum, or the provision of an auxiliary workhouse?—I am strongly in favour of as least being left in any workhouse; it is a perfect scandal.

25809. Where would you remove him?—I think to an auxiliary, if it could be established under the asylum; a sort of branch, it seems to me, would be the most feasible, and the medical superintendent should have a certain control.

25810. And maintained at a cheaper rate?—Yes; but the ratepayers are frightened with the idea that the auxiliary asylum would have to be equipped; I don't think it would be necessary to have it expensively equipped as a first-class asylum.

25811. They should have had to work on?—Occasionally.

25812. You are chiefly connected with the Limerick Workhouse. If you got the lunatics out of the workhouse, that would give you a good deal of extra room?—It would.

25813. Do you think it is a proper place to keep children?—I think it is the last place. However, Limerick Union is very good about boarding out; every child that the present law allows to be boarded out is boarded out; but it might be extended, I think.

25814. Would you give the Guardians discretion to board out all children who come into their hands to be maintained out of the rates?—I would give them that power.

25815. Do you think that would be largely used in Limerick?—I think it would. Cases arise here where everybody wants to board out the child and it cannot be done.

25816. What do you think about the mothers; you heard the suggestion about having them in a different institution, a sort of reformatory?—I think that would be the proper sort of thing—a penal settlement of some sort.

25817. Rather a place where first offenders might go, not as a penal settlement, but where efforts might be made for their reclamation, and after a comparatively short time in those institutions they might get a fresh start?—That is what I mean; penal was the wrong word—a home.

25818. Do you think it might be possible in that way to close a workhouse altogether to women who enter it for the purpose of having illegitimate children?—I think it might.

25819. They could be taken into a district hospital or some larger hospital for maternity purposes, and as soon as the child was born they could go back to the penitentiary?—Precisely, and take the child from them, because we have instances of a girl born in the house that has married and had a baby, and the father and mother were both in the house; we are rearing a population.

25820. We, ourselves, have seen four generations in the same workhouse?—The children seem to be at the bottom of it.

25821. That would diminish the number in your workhouse enormously?—It would.

25822. If you had the lunatics, the children, and the mothers removed, you practically would have nobody left except the aged and infirm and the sick?—It would give a lot of room for the redistribution of wards.

25823. In that way you would have room in the Limerick Workhouse for the aged and infirm, perhaps of the whole county?—I don't know that we would; we possibly would; a considerable portion from the city comes in; that depends upon whether the Clare portion remains with Limerick.

25824. Are you prepared to speak about that?—It is very hard to speak about, owing to Limerick being situated on the bounds of the county; it seems unique, but how are you to deal with the Clare portion.

25825. It was suggested to us at Ennis that a cottage hospital might be started at Clonbeg, to which all the Clare sick should go, and the able-bodied and aged and infirm should go to Ennis?—There is no objection to that.

25826. Do you see any advantage from having the unions portions of the county—not going outside the county?—Except for the matter of clerk's work in the various offices and rating; it makes an enormous number of difficulties in rating.

25827. It has been suggested in a great many places that it would be wise to have the unions exterminate with the counties?—Except from that point of view I don't know that the thing struck me.

25828. If you could take all the able-bodied into one institution in the county; that would cause the greatest possible reduction in the staff outside; all the persons employed outside the workhouse, taking care of the aged and infirm, would cease to be officers, and that would mean a very large reduction in the rates?—They would all have to be pensioned.

25829. But that is a terminable charge?—It would mean a reduction.

25830. Do you see any disadvantage in bringing all the aged and infirm in the county into one institution in the county; it has been put before us that there is a hardship in bringing people so far from the place where they were reared?—As a certain extent, with respectable people, it is a hardship; their friends are not able to visit them.

25831. We have made inquiries about the visits of friends and find they are made largely to the sick, but very rarely to the aged and infirm?—I don't think any real hardship would arise.

25832. If such arrangements were carried out it might be possible to classify the aged and infirm, according to their character and conduct?—That certainly should be done, and I think there might be something in the nature of a privilege given to old respectable people of wearing their own clothes, and perhaps getting out.

25833. If one workhouse in the county were made into a large almshouse for the aged and infirm of the county, and the only other persons in the neighbourhood of that building would be the chronic sick of the union, you might have a great many privileges given owing to the different blocks of the buildings you have got?—Yes, you could, certainly.

25834. As regards chargeability, what do you think about that?—I think we ought to go back to the divisional; union rating has led to great extravagance. No Guardian is ever interested in any division now.

25835. Some Guardians say they are now all trying to pull as much out of it as they can?—Yes, they say somebody at the other end of the union has got something; why don't you get something too; you are no good as a representative.

25836. How far would you carry the divisional charge?—Outdoor relief ought certainly to be divisional.

25837. Do you see any advantage in making indoor relief cases a divisional charge?—Not very much.

25838. If they come into the house it is a severe test; you are not likely to reduce the number coming in by making it an electoral charge?—People would like to say that there was no one from the division in the house; but it is as important as outdoor relief.

25839. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—It sometimes happens that people come in who could afford to pay, and when it is not charged on a particular electoral division the Guardians don't look after it?—I don't think any person comes into the house who can afford to keep out; certainly divisional rating had a great effect.

25840. CHAIRMAN.—Would you not, in any way, give the towns any relief?—I think you would have to do something that way.

25841. Have you thought how far you would go?—No; I thought about it but did not arrive at any solution, unless something in the nature of a grant from the whole county.

25842. Different suggestions were made that, say three-fourths of the relief of the towns should be met by the towns, and the other one-fourth spread over the union?—You would have to give them some grant towards it; some proportion on these lines.

25843. Another suggestion was, that a close inquiry of some sort should be made to find out what, having regard to the past expenditure and the present circumstances, was about a fair amount to pay as a standard for each electoral division of the union, that as long as that standard was not exceeded it should be union-at-large, but the moment there was anything over it that it should fall back on the electoral division?—The only thing about that is in the case of exceptional distress in the city, and it was necessary to give outdoor relief, they would be tied to their standard; it would be severe on the city.

Mr. John B. Harrington.

Dec. 1, 1904.
—
Mr. John B.
Harrington.

25844. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Is there not the other danger, that each division would qualify for the full amount?—There is.

25845. CHAIRMAN.—It ought to be so low that they would not aim very high!—Yes. I think there should be some absolute law on the subject against outdoor relief being given to people who drink. I would like to see something in the nature of two convictions in twelve months disqualifying for outdoor relief, and then the auditor could come on it at once.

25846. Somebody would bring that before the auditor!—I would make it the duty of the relieving officer, who could be surcharged, or if he had the authority of the Guardians it should be surcharged on the Guardians.

25847. Do you think a relieving officer would continue to give relief if he knew it was misapplied?—I have heard a relieving officer asked, "What sort of people are these?" "They drink it a bit." There is a feeling against being too hard on them and cutting them off.

25848. What do you think of the Cork Guardians' idea of distributing it in kind?—I don't think there is much in that.

25849. Sending round a van?—Giving it in kind from a shop only opens room for speculation.

25850. That was inquired into and considered a very undesirable method, but distributing bread and potatoes in kind?—I think a poor person, with 1s. 6d. a week, would take out what the van for 10s. would not bring; they can work with some small sum per week.

25851. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Can you not see that these people could get more for 5s. furnished at wholesale rates than they could possibly get buying in pennyworths, besides it would do away with the danger of some of them spending the money in drink?—If they want to spend the relief in drink they will convert the goods rapidly into drink; I don't think I would be in favour of the van.

25852. Take the Charitable Associations, for instance the St. Vincent de Paul; don't they give their help in kind, and not in money?—I believe they do.

25853. And you may be sure members try to make the money go as far as they can?—They do; but that is more for the sick; not necessarily for the people who are really hungry.

25854. Guardians do it in Dublin?—I don't know about a country district; it might be more applicable to a city; but I don't think it would work in the country districts.

25855. You also think that power should be obtained to send inmates to their own homes or unions?—Yes; I think that ought to be.

25856. That is, people who are in the union would no longer be a charge if you could incur a small expense in sending them to where they belong?—Yes; people come into the Limerick Jail, which is the jail for Tipperary, Clare, and Limerick, and they are discharged and come into the workhouse; we have no power to send them away.

25857. You think that power might be given?—I think it ought to be. I think there ought to be some power that where there are respectable people in the house with children, and the mother wants to go out for work, that the children might be detained in the house for a specified time while the mother or parents are endeavouring to get work; discretion might be given to the Guardians. It is impossible for her to start again with the children trailing after her.

25858. That might lead to people leaving their children behind with you?—Yes; but the Guardians would know the people; cases do come up of respectable people who have got into trouble. And there ought to be power to give relief with a free hand to people before their home is broken up; a little at a particular period might keep the home together, and keep them there, and they cease to be a charge on the rates, whereas if there is a rule to give them nothing until they are absolutely destitute they can never get on their legs again.

25859. It has been suggested to us that poverty should be the test, not destitution. The question is whether such cases might not be left to the charitable?—What are you to do when they creep up at the Board, as they do; I think the Guardians might have a freer hand in that.

25860. Could you draw the line so that it would not lead to widespread extensions?—I don't know that it would lead to a very widespread thing.

25861. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Would not an electoral division charge and giving goods in kind be sufficient checks?—That would not pay the rent; suppose someone would be fired out next day if they did not pay the rent, the van would not help that.

25862. CHAIRMAN.—The electoral division charge would operate as a good check?—Yes.

25863. Dr. BOGGIN.—What class of cases do you refer to?—From time to time there is an application, the Relieving Officer says some calamity has come to a family; perhaps the father has died; that if they could keep the home together for a week or two they would get work.

25864. They are out of work?—I don't know that; that would be simply out of employment, but cases do crop up from time to time that are very hard.

25865. You think that these cases come into the workhouse on account of the want of a small allowance?—I think they do; the home gets broken up, and they remain on the rates for long periods.

25866. So you think it would be true economy?—It would.

25867. You say children of weak intellect are not fit subjects for workhouses, as they drift into the infirm and lunatic wards?—Yes, if there was some institution for all Ireland to take them.

25868. One for all Ireland ought to be quite enough?—I should think it would be quite enough.

25869. In the same way one for the same epidemic?—Would be sufficient.

25870. CHAIRMAN.—You think a sanatorium for consumptives is necessary?—I think a workhouse is a reasonable place for them.

25871. We had evidence yesterday in Ennis. One suggested for Galway, Clare and Limerick is a very good central situation at Corofin?—It is a good busy spot I should say.

25872. Neither consumptives, children, nor lunatics you think should be left in the wards?—Yes; there are 200 lunatics in the County Limerick unions.

25873. As regards payments by persons who are able to contribute some little or all the cost of their maintenance?—I should think that would be very desirable.

25874. Would you give the body power to declare how much was reasonably payable and power to enforce it at Petty Sessions or in a summary method?—I would.

25875. Leaving it to the discretion of the local body?—Yes.

25876. You say you have not many tramps in the Union Workhouse, but you have a great many in the country, as you are aware?—A great many, but I think it is entirely attributable to our Master in the Limerick Union.

25877. He gets them to pass on?—They don't like him; they don't like his methods.

25878. What does he do?—I don't think he does anything cruel, but does not let them out until they do a certain amount of work; he does not pamper them.

25879. Do you think it would be a better thing to have some system for all Ireland so that a man tramping round the whole country should be looked up and made to work?—I think there ought to be; we should distinguish between the man going about trying to get work and the man who is an idler from his birth.

25880. That could be managed by a certificate from any recognised person—the Relieving Officer could certify?—I think that would be very easily done; that would be very desirable to put a stop to them.

25881. And a man who had not such a permit would be liable to go to the labour colony?—Yes.

25882. You would approve of that?—Certainly.

25883. You would like to see the number of Guardians lessened?—I certainly would, one to each division. And in order to bring on lady Guardians—there might be a difficulty in getting ladies elected—I would like if there was power to put on so many ladies in proportion to the number on the Board, power to co-opt and combine a number of electoral divisions together to elect lady Guardians and return them at the same time? Is there any reason for going to that extent?—I think the simplest way would be to give the Board power to co-opt five; some ladies won't go forward in a contested election, and they are the most useful.

25884. If they were co-opted would you give them the full power of membership?—I would, the full powers.

Mr. JOHN M'LENNY, J.P., Chairman, Limerick Union, examined.

55885. CHAIRMAN.—We need hardly ask you—you are Chairman of the Limerick Board of Guardians for a considerable time?—Yes, I had that honour while you were our Inspector.

55886. What is the view of your Guardians as to amalgamation?—We took no view as Guardians; we did not meet on the subject at all, but they sent us here just to give our views.

55887. What are your own views?—I am for amalgamation if economy can be effected.

55888. Without hardship?—Yes, but I am not for auxiliary asylums. We at the Rennie Asylum Board instead of going in for an auxiliary asylum went in for building apartments for 450 new patients.

55889. At an expense of £50,000—£55,000; but I think they want to bring in some new arrangements. 55890. £45,000 has been sanctioned?—It has been sanctioned, but the new Council again are going to kick up a row about it.

55891. You personally would be in favour of an extension of the existing asylum?—I would on the ground of expense; I think if you take up an auxiliary asylum you will have to pension off the officers and then have a new staff; it might do later on when the county could better afford to pay, but at present we cannot.

55892. But if there was economy?—If there was economy I am with you.

55893. Do you think that an auxiliary asylum would cost more, counting the cost of building and interest on money, that it would cost more than the existing asylum?—That was our opinion in Ennis.

55894. The latest estimate is £45,000 for the erection, and that has been sanctioned by the Lord Lieutenant?—It has.

55895. Then it has to go before the County Council to see whether they will apply for the loan?—They have refused it once.

55896. If they decline to apply for the loan the whole matter falls through?—Yes.

55897. Do you think the addition to the asylum would cost less in the way of staff and other expenses than the auxiliary?—It would.

55898. And you would get 4s. a week instead of 2s. 7?—That was another reason that the Asylum Board went in for building instead of taking up this old house in Corvagh.

55899. You yourself belong to Class 1?—Yes.

55900. What do you think of the idea of Poor Law Unions being certificate-holders with counties?—Well, if we were commencing to build unions at the present time it would be all right, but considering the mileage, the way the unions are now fixed you cannot do it very well; if you were to separate the Clare portion from Limerick Union it would be twenty-five miles from Ennis.

55901. What do you think of the suggestion made at Ennis yesterday that a hospital sufficient for the society sick should be started at some central place in the County Clare part of the Limerick Union?—I was thinking first to myself that it would be more saving to us because we have been well visited under the Act. For instance I pay 1s. 3d. and 1s. 6d. more in my division than I did before the new Act on account of union rating. On the other hand if we were sent to Ennis we would have no representation there because the fellows would not go twenty-five and twenty-eight miles away to a Board every day.

55902. Where does your District Council meet?—At Limerick; we meet in the union.

55903. If Poor Law matters remained with your District Council, and if your District Council was part of the Poor Law system of Clare?—You mean to cut us off altogether; oh, capital; we would be getting rid of the big screw of the city.

55904. You would be quite willing if you had a hospital at some central part of your union to go to Clare?—There would be the bother if we had to meet at Ennis.

55905. If your Rural Council was made the Poor Law authority for Limerick No. 23—if it were I would be for it.

55906. You would not have to go to Ennis at all, but would deal with Poor Law matters in your own District Council?—I would be delighted with it; it did not strike me before now.

55907. As regards the children being boarded out?—I am heart and soul with it; I have been thirty-two years a Guardian, and I find the boarding out of children is the proper thing to do; they only cost you £28, while in Glins they cost £14, and while I say the Glins business is being capitally managed I find the children coming out of it are no good for an agricultural constituency like ours, and if they were boarded out they would know how to work on a farm as agricultural labourers and servants, whereas we require more than anything else. I had one myself out of Glins within the last two months, and he could not tell me the right or left side of an ass, and as far as the trades they are getting there they have no trade at all; they come out from there without knowing anything. I am not saying anything against the monks and the nuns.

55908. They are taken care of there capitally?—Yes, but for outside purposes afterwards they are no good, and that is the opinion of every man I meet; they are capitally taken care of; there is no doubt about that, but we find they are no use to us; they turn out in the end to be soldiers, and the girls as a rule soldiers' wives. A fellow ran out of my house; I happened to be ill and was away; he would do nothing for anybody.

55909. Where did he go?—I don't know where he went, we have not found him; he belonged to Limerick Union; he was an orphan, a foundling, a nice little boy I thought; they said he was one of their best boys in Glins, but he did not know anything, you should lead him along; he did not know how to tackle a donkey; he was like a boy you brought out of a hand-bag, but he was a nice gentle boy.

55910. Have you seen anything of the children at Clarina and elsewhere?—Yes, my wife happens to be one of the Ladies' Committee, and has charge of the Clare side; I drive her along and look after them, and they are carefully minded and are mixed with the community that they will have to live with.

55911. Do they ever turn up in the workhouse again?—Very few.

55912. There would all be children boarded out late in life?—Yes.

55913. They would not be as satisfactory as children boarded out young?—No; I should board them out from their youth—as soon as they are able to eat; I am dead for boarding out; from what I see they will be useful members of society after fifteen or sixteen years of age.

55914. You would not have any lunatics in the house?—I certainly would not.

55915. You would send the Clare lunatics to the Rennie enlarged asylum?—Decidedly; our idea is to send all to the asylum in Ennis—that was the reason we enlarged it.

55916. As you are so much in favour of boarding-out would you be in favour of an extension of the law so as to enable Guardians to board out all children that have to be supported out of the rates?—Yes; we can only board out foundlings now, and the mothers won't let us board the others out without their consent.

55917. That would again clear out your workhouse of children very largely?—Yes; they ought not to be brought up in the union at all.

55918. Then the other class are the mothers of these children—you heard the discussion here to-day?—I did, and I agree that something ought to be done—some change ought to be made.

55919. So that they would not be reared together in the workhouse?—Yes.

55920. In the workhouse you necessarily have to keep together the first offenders and the old hardened offenders?—Yes, they are all alike; it demoralises the whole lot; I find that we have people from Galway, West Clare, Kerry, and County Limerick Unions coming in here to Limerick with children to hide themselves; they go out for a time and come back again, and we have them all the time in the union; there ought to be something done in that line.

55921. The girls coming to be confined from distances are those first offenders?—Yes.

55922. If these girls had an opportunity of going to a penitentiary?—Yes, but the Magdalen Asylum has a bad name and people don't like to go there; there should be some institution for first offenders.

55923. And those who have fallen more than once should go to the Magdalen?—Yes; I would not mix them up with the young ones.

Dec. 1, 1904.

Mr. John M'Leanny

Dec. 1, 1904.

Mr. John
McInerney.

25924. You would have mothers and children and lunatics all taken away out of the house—then you would only have the sick and aged and infirm. Would you be in favour of having the aged and infirm for each county placed in a central institution where they could be chained?—There would be an objection to that—that the friends of those people could not go so far away to visit them; they would rather have them nearer home.

25925. I am speaking of the aged and infirm rather than the sick; that objection was made in places we visited, and we got information that these very old people who come in there are personally neglected and not visited. The sick possibly are visited?—I agree with you, they are neglected, but they are not a big number.

25926. So the question of removing them from their own neighbourhood would not arise in many cases, and if it did arise, do you not think out-door relief would be a way of dealing with it?—No; nor I don't believe in having insane people boarded out, it would not do at all.

25927. It would hardly do in most cases?—No.

25928. Their habits and customs would not do at all?—No; they should be in some place where they could be looked after by trained people.

25929. Then you would also have the vagrants and tramp?—I would take the tramps, and do the hardest thing you could with them; they are an idle, reckless crowd. If there could be some colony or farm, where they would be all put in together and made work, the same as if they were in penal servitude, it would be just the price of them.

25930. Possibly that might lead to their getting in-door habits, and then they could get permission to go out, and be brought back again if they did not get on well?—Yes. I should like that we would have the power of sending from our union people that belonged to another union. We have people here from different unions. They come here from the West of Clare, not so many now, a great number of Kerry people, West Limerick, and Cork; they come in here to Limerick; it is a big place, and they can get a job; they throw themselves on us; we want power to send them back to their own unions; we have hundreds of them turning up. Mr. Barrington gave evidence a while ago to the same effect; they turn up every day.

25931. I suppose the Limerick people turn up at Cork?—We would rather have our own, and transfer the others; we would run the chance of being at the best side.

25932. I dare say you could get some of the officials to make out a list of the number of persons who are from a distance outside the union at present in your workhouse?—Our clerk would do that very easily. I may say I am for divisional relief.

25933. Would you give any relief to the towns?—I would, such as was suggested a while ago. There ought to be some scale for the town. I would not be too hard on the towns, business, up to the present, a great many people have been hunted from the country into the town. That won't happen in the future. Formerly the landlords hunted a number of people into the towns, and there they and their descendants are. But when people work all their lives in the towns, and get to be paupers, the town merchants have a right to support them, as much as we do in the country.

25934. You would give them some relief—I would; something fair.

25935. About consumption. You know the County Clare?—It was suggested it would be a good thing to put one of the workhouses apart—Oarefin—which could be used as a sanatorium for consumptions?—It would be a capital place—excellent air and a fine house.

25936. Do you see any objection to that?—No. There is one objection I have to all new plans, and that is expense.

25937. You would have an institution there, where there was an institution before, and you would have the area of charge over three counties?—That would make it very small. Something like that would be a very good thing. I am for a single-member division.

25938. What would you think about the ladies?—I should say if you co-opt members five or ten, let them be ladies, and let the men fight their own battle, and get in or out.

25939. You would not oblige the ladies to go up for election?—No; I would have a certain amount of co-optation on every Board for ladies. I find them very good.

25940. You would not think it necessary to have any scheme of election by which ladies would only compete for certain divisions?—Oh, no.

25941. Supposing you had three groups of electoral divisions for the County Clare side of the union, and were able to elect three ladies for that, and only ladies were eligible for those divisions, would you see any objection to that?—I mean with a view of keeping up the idea of election and not of co-optation?—I understand you there, but I think it would be better if you went on the old system of one Guardian for every division, and for the whole union a certain amount of co-optation for ladies, and have no election for them. One for every dispensary district is the fairest way. I don't think it is right for us to put ladies to the trouble of a contest.

Mr. T. D. CLIFFORD examined.

25942. CHAIRMAN.—You read to be Chairman of Oron Guardians long ago?—Yes.

25943. Do you share the opinions of the other Oron witnesses that have been here to-day, that it would be disadvantageous to Oron to break it up?—I do, certainly, on the ground of inconvenience to the poor and economy.

25944. If the sick were treated in Oron, do you think there would be much inconvenience?—I do not think there would, if you had a hospital there.

25945. Then it would be a question of economy, and you would be guided in your opinion as to whether there was a substantial saving to the ratepayers or not?—I am confident there would not. On the contrary, I believe it would be a very large expense.

25946. If it turned out there was a substantial saving, would that alter your view?—In might, if you want the Oron Union, not to leave it idle. Oron is the lowest-rated union in the county. In Glin you have a rate of 4s. 1d. in the 2, while Oron is 2s. 1d. You have in the rural division of Glin a rate of 3s. 7d. of county rate.

25947. Not county rate?—Union and all. In Oron it is 2s. 1d.

25948. We have no power as regards county charges, but the union only—you have not the union charges?—I have not those.

25949. If Oron Union were, to a great extent, left idle, do you think it would make a suitable place for an auxiliary asylum, if the Limerick people wished to have an auxiliary instead of an addition?—I think it would; but I would rather prefer to have the lunatics together under one control.

25950. You would rather have one complete establishment in Limerick?—One establishment. I think it would be far better that all three would be kept together. You have a regular staff of physicians and doctors which, I think, would be a very great expense; I don't see how it could reduce the rates whatever. I think there would be an increase, and then the doing up of the house would cost a lot more. You thought you had got a house that was to do Glin, but it cost 24,000; still, it is a very good institution, and doing good work.

25951. What do you think about the chargeability?—I think it is fair, and should remain as it is. I live in a congested district, I am sorry to say it is not so congested now, but I don't see why outside divisions should see those labourers all their lives, and then, when they get sick, send them back to the Fodanore division.

25952. You did not suffer from that at Skibb?—Yes.

25953. But your district got relief just the same as a town?—Not so much; but it was relief. I would much prefer to remain as I am, compared with joining Limerick, and so would the whole of the ratepayers of Oron, I think.

25954. Have you had much experience of boarding out?—Not very much; but I think it is very good; they ought all to be boarded out at a most tender age.

25955. Are you one of the governing body at Glin?—Yes.

Mr. T. D.
Clifford.

25956. What do you think of the arrangements there?—I think it is very good; but I am afraid the children are not learning the trades as they ought; they are taken away too soon at sixteen; they have a right to be left for two years more.

25957. Have you had any experience of those children after?—Yes; I saw some of those children very good, indeed, as farm servants.

25958. You heard Mrs. Hartigan's evidence?—I did.

25959. You don't quite agree with her?—No; what I saw of those, I think they do their business fairly well; but I must say I never knew any of those to stick to the trade, whatever little trade they got.

25960. You think their education in trade was not any value?—I don't think it was much value; still, the moral training the little fellows get stands to them well.

25961. So Mr. Minnery said about his little boy, but he was not handy?—He could not be handy about a farm.

25962. What do you think is the best thing to do with destitute children who have to be brought up by the Poor Law?—First of all, they ought to be sent out to nurse, and after that I would send them at the age of from twelve to eighteen to Glin.

25963. Why would you do that?—Because I think they have some sense then to pick up anything they see; but I would not send them in tender years.

25964. With you the children have only gone from one institution to another?—Yes.

25965. You are not able to say what has been the result when children have been taken from the foster-parent and sent to Glin?—I am afraid they are left too long before they are sent to Glin, and I am afraid they are trained in the unions, and a young impression cannot be removed afterwards; it is not easy.

25966. Mr. McGinnis?—You don't think your workhouse could be done without as a workhouse?—No, I do not; I think it will be a hardship on the poor and an expense to the ratepayers.

25967. I suppose you are aware there is a general impression over the country that there are too many workhouses?—That is the impression.

25968. And the consensus of opinion of the representatives of Limerick here to-day is that Croon Workhouse could be done without?—That is what I expect, because they are going to gain something by it.

25969. What hardship do you see on the poor if a hospital were retained at Croon?—That would minimise the difficulty. I have nothing to complain of there but the water; they would be increased.

25970. How would they be increased?—By pensioning the present staff and employing another.

25972. You would not be asked to dispense with them at more than two-thirds of their present salary?—But you have a precedent in the Local Government Bill.

25973. In any case it would be only temporary?—It may expire in a lifetime.

25974. In that case it would be possible to classify the inmates by distributing them about—the children boarded out, harmless lunatics sent to an auxiliary asylum, and other classes sent to places where they would be better taken care of; do you not think there would be something desirable in such a plan as that?—There may be.

25975. You expressed your opinion that it would be better to keep the inmates in the asylum proper than to send them to an auxiliary asylum?—I think so; that is my opinion.

25976. Do you not think that it is not a good thing to have a number of men cooped up in a small area without the proper opportunities of giving them work; and don't you think it would be much better to have an auxiliary asylum for the harmless, where they could be employed at useful occupation on a farm, making themselves, to some extent, self-supporting, and, being occupied, their days would be more happy than in idleness?—But you have got all those things in connection with the asylum, more than you have at Croon.

25977. How much land have you got at your asylum?—Twenty-five acres.

25978. Suppose compulsory powers were taken to enlarge the area around the house, don't you think it would be a good thing?—Compulsory power to take land is very expensive.

25979. These people could be kept at a lower cost, and also classified. Are you aware that these inmates are cooped together—the violent with those who are peaceful, and quiet people have to associate with violent people?—As far as I am aware, they are very well treated always at the asylum.

25980. By having an auxiliary asylum, you might be able to classify the inmates very much better, and their days would be happier than at present?—No doubt of that.

25981. And I suppose you are aware that some of these inmates have long intervals that extend to weeks and months; don't you think it is a hardship to have those people associating with the violent, and dangerous cases?—I know it; but if you sent those people to an outside asylum, wouldn't you have people of the other class associated with them there, too?

25982. Not necessarily. In an auxiliary asylum, it will be possible to separate different classes, and, perhaps, people with long intervals treated differently?—They would be very few.

25983. Even if you had only ten or fifteen of the class, don't you think in common humanity and the hope of restoring them permanently, some change should be made?—Certainly; no doubt of it.

Mr. PATRICK HAYES, R.I.C., examined.

25984. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Killmallock Board of Guardians?—I am.

25985. What is the view of the Guardians on amalgamation?—They are against amalgamation.

25986. Would they be willing that some classes in the workhouse should be moved elsewhere—the lunatics?—No, they are not willing. I think they are as well treated there as in the asylum. What they want in Killmallock is a better ward for them and better food. There was a great improvement made there within the last two years.

25987. We are at the other day; it is not up to the level. You would not even like to let the lunatics go?—I think the harmless lunatics are as well off there as where they would be sent to.

25988. And the children?—I would have them all boarded out, and inspected by the medical officer every seven months, and reported on how they are treated. You could not expect any respectable person to maintain them for 2s. a week.

25989. You would raise it up to a proper figure?—Yes. There are 280 persons in the house, and these are small sheds; they are not a place to put human beings in at all, so I don't think you could put any additional people in there.

25990. You would get rid of a good many by boarding out the children?—We would; but still we would not have extra accommodation. First of all, where the consumptives are located is upstairs; and other people sick are under them.

25991. You would approve of a separate building for consumptives?—Certainly, out of the place altogether, instead of being mixed up with the inmates inside; it is very dangerous.

25992. Is there any other class except the children you would like to see going out of the workhouse?—I would like to board out all the aged that would be healthy with their friends.

25993. Would you be afraid that that might be abused?—I think not in Killmallock, as far as my experience goes. They have administered the last Act, up to the present, so well, it is not likely they would abuse the power in the future.

25994. What should the area of charge be?—I would leave it a union charge, except for sanitary works, which I would make divisional charges.

25995. All Poor Law expenditure you would make union-at-large?—I would leave it as it is. I want to get power to transfer people from one union to their own unions.

Dec. 1, 1904.

Mr. T. D. O'Shea.

Mr. Patrick Hayes.

Dec. 1, 1904.
Mr. Patrick
Hayes.

25096. You have a good number at present in Kilmallock?—We have a good number from Kerry, Tipperary, and Limerick. Some of them go there to be confined, and they are ashamed to go back to their own places.

25097. There was no place where we saw such a shocking number?—Yes, because they come from Cork and Tipperary and Limerick side, and we have no power to turn them back. I would not be for any change in the present representation.

25098. Would you have the two members?—Certainly.

25099. You don't find the boardroom too crowded?—Half of them don't attend; they attend from time to time.

25100. Except when there is something on?—Yes; as in the time of the old ex officio Guardians—when there was a job on. I know Croon, and I think it would be very hard to break it up. I think an auxiliary lunatic asylum at Croon would entail extra expense. You would have to get rid of the old staff and get a new staff. The cost of the new staff would pay for the interest of the new addition, where there would be proper supervision. You should have a resident medical superintendent in Croon and a staff, the same as in the present asylum.

25101. You think it would be more costly?—I do, the same as the Glen School; it means increased taxation.

25102. Your evidence is leaving things as they are, except giving power to board out all the children?—Yes, and to have the children examined every three months, and see the state of their health, and give them sufficient money to get respectable people to take them.

25103. You have that in your power?—But the auditor would come down on us.

25104. No, you have absolute discretion to increase the amount?—The majority of the Board are not aware of that. Then you would get respectable people to take them and board them out.

Mr. MARTIN MAHER, F.R.C., examined.

Mr. Martin
Maher.

25105. CHAIRMAN.—Do you agree with what the last witness has said, or have you views of your own?—I do not agree entirely with him; I think the representation ought to be cut down by half; there should be no co-opted members.

25106. Not even ladies?—Except for ladies, and I think that could be done by a resolution of our Board of Guardians to have it agreed to co-opt ladies only; and then as to the area of chargeability, I think it ought to be an electoral division change in all cases and for all purposes.

25107. You think that would tend more to economy?—It would undoubtedly, and put every member on his mettle.

25108. Would you give any relief to the towns?—All the money that is expended in relief would ultimately come into the towns; it is there that all the goods procured by the poor people would be purchased, and there is an inducement somehow or other to poor people to go into the towns to live, and I think that is a very unhealthy condition of things; it would be better for the poor people to live in the country, and this inducement would cease if the townspeople were punished by having a high rate and in the course of time things would equalise themselves. Of course there should be some residential qualification, or some time after which they would be chargeable, these people brought into the towns not to have them chargeable to the towns unless they were there for two years previous to the application for relief living in the town. Of course the several witnesses have suggested many things to my mind.

25109. Just tell us anything that occurs to you. I remember when I was at Kilmallock you took a considerable interest in the girls who were coming in with children, and the numbers are still large. Would you be in favour of excluding that class from the workhouse?—I think there ought to be some central place in the county set apart for their benefit. I am in favour of having an auxiliary asylum for lunatics in case the hospital was maintained at Croon or other union, but the difficulty is that there would be no administrative authority for it such as the Board of Guardians.

25110. If you had the Rural District Council and put that Poor Law on them?—That would work well—that would be a fine suggestion, and I think it would be in fact very desirable from every point of view to have some central place for the treatment of harmless imbecile people, such as I saw at Kilmallock, who are apparently neglected, with no one to attend to them except the workman, and he is not trained. A few days before the office became vacant he had not an idea in the world he would fill the position. Some people are fitted by nature and others by education for this position, but he by pure accident became an official.

25111. You think it would be wise only to have trained people in charge of the insane?—Certainly.

25112. As regards tramps?—I think the tramp question could be met long ago by the different Boards of Guardians if they set an investigation on foot regarding the antecedents of these people. These tramps do not give their proper names when they apply for admission to the workhouse, and if they made inquiries they could prosecute these for obtaining their support on false pretences and get them punished.

25113. That would be a costly job?—I don't know; I often thought the investigation was not complete enough.

25114. What would you think of removing these people off the road on a fixed date, and make them give an account of themselves, and if they want to live by the public put them in a place where they will have to work for the public?—The man would be a benefactor to humanity who accomplished that.

25115. You know there are a great many consensaries in Kilmallock Union—do you think it would be a proper thing to have a hospital where they could be removed from the danger of infecting other people? I think it would be desirable.

25116. Not on an expensive scale of course?—I always thought Kilmallock Union was built for the purpose of relieving the destitute poor within the union and all round, and I think it is a hardship that we have to relieve people who don't belong to the union, but of course people who come into the union for the purpose of settling down should not be treated as outsiders.

25117. A great many of the outsiders you refer to are people who come in as temporary servants?—I am sure they are.

25118. The girls from Kerry and West Cork?—Those are the class I object to.

Mr. S. P. HANNE, F.R.C., examined.

Mr. S. P.
Hanne.

25119. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a Guardian from Kilmallock?—Yes, I was one of the Guardians appointed to come in and give evidence. I agree with Mr. Hayes about union rating.

25120. You would keep on union rating?—Yes, I think it is the fairest way all round.

25121. You think it would be too hard on the towns?—I do certainly. As an instance of it myself, I was paying rates in the Kilmallock Division and also the division where I live; the rates were three times as high in Kilmallock as they were in Ugarra, and of course the old people go into the towns. You cannot prevent them, and I think it would be hardly fair to the towns to have to be paying the rates for that class of people who gave their services to the whole country when they were able to work.

25122. When they had been a long time in the town the case would be different?—Of course; if they had spent the useful part of their lives in the town the case would be different; but, as a matter of fact, I think a great many of those old people have a habit of going into the towns and living there; they like the sociability of it.

25123. Would you break up the Kilmallock Union?—I think the Kilmallock Union is very useful as it is there, and almost absolutely necessary for the use of the country it has to cater for. I don't see that there could be any better arrangement made than there is at present for the Kilmallock Union except in the way that Mr. Hayes says of boarding out these children.

25034. Would you agree with him or differ from him as regards keeping lunatics in workhouses?—I would think that a workhouse is not a proper place for lunatics. I think they should be under expert management, but of course where there are harmless lunatics I think it would be a very good thing, as suggested, to have some kind of work for them to do. I think it is very hard on the infirm people not to have some little employment of some kind; they are all sitting together and practically have nothing to do to employ their minds.

25035. Did it ever occur to you that it might be a good thing to have one central institution in the county for the aged and infirm where they could be employed in light work and only that class put there?—I think it would be a very good thing if something of that kind could be done, or else have a workhouse as at present arranged in some way that they could be better employed than they are now, that time should be made not to hang so heavy on their hands as it does at present.

25036. You have five workhouses in Limerick?—Michelevarren takes in part of Limerick.

25037. But you have five workhouses in the county?—Yes.

25038. If the aged and infirm of those five could be put into one, and only that class, do you think it would be beneficial to the rates, and that the people could be better treated?—Of course, I could not say about the rates, because I don't know what plan would be adopted, but I think it would be very much better for the infirm people themselves; their lives could be made pleasanter for them.

25039. At present you are keeping up the staff in five workhouses for taking care of the aged and infirm, and you would only keep it up in one in the future; that staff would be somewhat larger of course, but not as large as the five staffs, therefore you would have a saving there?—I think that would be a good plan, but what would you do with the other people that are in Kilmallock for instance?

25040. If you put out the lunatics and boarded out the children, and if the women and children went to institutions or penitentiaries under religious management, then you would only have the sick and aged and infirm, and you would still have a hospital in Kilmallock for the sick?—I think the hospital should be there anyhow.

25041. You would have all classes except the sick removed?—That ought to lighten the expense very much in some way, and having the infirm from all over the county in one institution would lighten the expense as far as they are concerned and make it better for them—that would be my opinion. About those tramps, the master of the workhouse suggested that those tramps should get a certificate from somebody leaving the workhouse that they were going to look for work, or as to their character, and it would be a good way of letting masters of workhouses know when they would arrive there whether they were really worth being taken care of for the night, and they could treat them accordingly and make them work if they were regular branks.

Mr. ALEXANDER W. SHAW, J.P., examined.

25042. CHAIRMAN.—You appear on behalf of the County Indemnity to give us some information about it?—Yes, sir.

25043. Dr. BROOKS.—What were the points that you wish to bring before us?—I have nothing very important to bring before this Commission, but I am prepared to answer everything I can of interest to you.

25044. How do your funds stand?—We are practically out of debt.

25045. Are you able to carry on the work with the grant you have got?—Not to our satisfaction; we have one ward closed.

25046. That was on account of want of funds?—Want of funds, and with an addition to the nursing staff we could run those ten beds; we don't want another matron, or cook, or porter, only the usefulness of the institution is impaired for want of additional funds.

25047. You could run it at a very little additional cost?—Yes.

25048. As regards any man who could not show bona fide that he was looking for work, would you be in favour of putting him into some institution where he would be made work, committed under a magistrate's warrant?—I don't know that I really would, because the tramping is more or less the result of our landless system here which has been such an injury to the country.

25049. Other people say it is the result of the short service system?—Everyone has his own opinion.

25050. At all events the tramps have been very much reduced of recent years—within the last twenty or thirty years—from what they used to be?—I would like to give them a chance of working out their own salvation by putting them to work.

25051. That is to give them habits of industry?—Yes, and if they were not able to do that after giving them a fair chance it would show that they were not inclined to exert themselves to make a living.

25052. It would only be in the case of men who were not really anxious to work that they would have to go into an institution if they wanted to live on the public?—But at present those men have not really been tried, and to take them off-hand without giving them a chance—25053. What chance would you suggest?—Something like these colonies.

25054. That is what I mean?—But I think they should not be treated as criminals.

25055. Certainly not, the object should be reclamation not punishment?—I think most people in the world if they get a chance will use it and become good citizens; I know it often surprised me to see the result of the world going to America and how they became assimilated there when they saw a prospect of making a living, and people that would not do any good at home were good citizens out there when they got a prospect of living, and I think there should be a chance given even to tramps in the same way to work out their own salvation in this country as well as in America. I would not approve of sending them to America—it is a wonder they have been receiving such people so long and working them up as good citizens.

25056. Dr. BROOKS.—Were you ever in America?—I was there eight or nine years.

25057. Mr. MICHELEVARREN.—Is it the custom that goes to America?—What I mean is that anyone who has done anything wrong in this country or in any country has to America, and a great many of them become good citizens there; the social conditions I suppose are different in a good many ways; there is a better prospect of making a living there.

25058. CHAIRMAN.—You would not treat those men as criminals, but as men with some good in them that might be brought out?—You can make a man bad by treating him as a bad man. I think they should be treated as rational beings that would work for their living if they saw they had a prospect of making a living by their work, and they should certainly get that chance before they would be forced to do penal servitude in any colony; they should be put into some colony and paid wages for working.

25049. What would you suggest to remedy that?—I think the County Council ought to get power to give us a larger grant or bring up some scheme whereby the nursing of the sick of the whole county should be worked from a central body. I heard some of the evidence given this morning, and one or two of the gentlemen I thought made very good points that way.

25050. That is put all the sick on a county charge?—Yes.

25051. And have your County Indemnity out of the same rate?—Yes.

25052. Do you approve of a consumptive hospital?—Decidedly; it is very badly wanted.

25053. Do you know if consumption is on the increase at all?—I cannot say, but I would risk a rough opinion that in the last ten years there has been an increase.

Dec. 1, 1904.
Mr. Alexander
W. Shaw.

25055. That is from the same cause—it is consumption in another form. Do many of your nurses go to nurse in union hospitals throughout the county?—Up to the present no; one of our qualified nurses went to England; there is one in Cardiff.

25056. That is when they leave your institution?—Oh, direct from us. No, we have no spare nurses.

25057. So that the county gets very little benefit from your trained nurses?—Not much at all.

25058. Would you approve of an extension whereby the county might get more benefit—not only the institutions but perhaps private patients?—Yes. Barrington's Hospital works on these lines; they have a number of auxiliary nurses that they send out to cases, and I think the thing has worked very satisfactorily; I wish we could do that.

25059. And they have a number of nurses trained there that have gone into institutions throughout the county?—Yes; there was a fear that the Local Government Board would not sanction the nurses from our institution.

25060. Your institution has been sanctioned for qualified nurses?—Yes, but only a short time ago.

25061. Two years ago. However, if there was some county system you think more benefit might be received by the county?—I think we could do a lot more work in the county infirmary for a little more money, very valuable work too.

25062. It was suggested yesterday, and it was suggested before, that if the county infirmary kept a larger staff—a sort of headquarter staff—that when a nurse was wanted for relief duty, or for sickness in the workhouse, she could be provided from the county infirmary?—We would have no objection to that.

25063. And when her services were no longer required she could be sent back?—I don't see why we should not work that system.

25064. A few nurses could do that for the whole county, which would be a distinct saving to the county, because they would be on a yearly salary instead of being paid a guinea a week?—We have to be very careful of our funds lately; we were afraid to take on one thing or another thing for fear of extra expense, and the initiation of the plan you suggest would cost a certain amount of expense, but once it was going it would be all right.

25065. It would be economy to get as much benefit out of the institution as possible?—Yes.

25066. CHAIRMAN.—But I gather you would be in favour of having all necessary expenditure of the county infirmary defrayed out of the county rates?—I think so. I would not altogether like to lose the annual governors, who are very useful members.

25067. Dr. BROOKS.—You get a large amount from paying patients?—We do.

25068. You would never think of doing away with that?—No, because there is a little profit on that.

25069. Mr. MURPHY.—Members nominated by the Governors would be a thing of the past?—I suppose they would, but I should be sorry to lose them.

25070. Don't you think the change would increase the rates of the county?—I am afraid it would.

25071. That is what we are here not to do?—But I think there is a bit of overlapping as it is.

25072. Dr. BROOKS.—And you would save under other heads the increased expenditure?—I think so.

25073. CHAIRMAN.—The old plan of the grant to county infirmaries was a very ancient arrangement, and as regards the Poor Law hospitals, the Poor Law Guardians defray all the cost; do you see any reason why a similar arrangement should not be adopted in both?—No, I do not.

25074. Mr. MURPHY.—Is it not a fact, that the class of patients that go to the county infirmary is a different class to those who go to the workhouse?—Well, yes; a little higher grade.

25075. The reason of the county rate is to make provision for the poor unable to provide for themselves in sickness?—Yes.

25076. CHAIRMAN.—How much does the infirmary make from paying patients?—£211 last year.

25077. That would go a very small way, and, in practical terms, that is the difference between the charges of inmates in the workhouse and in the infirmary?—Of course the paying patients are the best class.

25078. £211 is what they represent?—It is.

25079. That is the difference between the two classes, who use both hospitals, in money?—It is.

25080. Dr. BROOKS.—It is also true that you don't refuse admission to any person on account of their poverty?—Certainly not; we admit any one at all as long as it is suitable for the hospital.

25081. CHAIRMAN.—It is not a class hospital in any sense?—Not at all.

25082. Dr. BROOKS.—Your admission is according to the disease and not according to the circumstances?—Yes; the previous year, from paying patients, we got £172.

25083. CHAIRMAN.—It varies a good deal one year with another?—It does.

25084. Dr. BROOKS.—You do a large number of operations?—We do; probably more than most of the South of Ireland hospitals; a very high average of important operations.

25085. CHAIRMAN.—Are there any suggestions you would make apart from what we have asked you?—I don't think so, sir.

Mr. CHARLES MCCARTHY, P.L.G., examined.

Mr. Charles
McCarthy.

Are you in favour of putting all the aged poor of the county into one institution and all the children of the county into another institution?

25086. CHAIRMAN.—No; boarded out?—And all the women of the county into another?

25087. Not at all; one institution would hold enough for a great many counties?—Then how would you fix the area of charge?

25088. So much a head; when there were so many counties concerned it would be a small thing. What you are afraid of is that the same number of institutions would be still kept up, but applied to different purposes?—You save by sending all the aged poor of the county into a central place.

25089. Say Limerick?—Limerick would not be central; I am from the County Cork; how would you fix the area of charge?

Lady MONTAGUE examined.

Lady Montague.

25090. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the various suggestions to-day that have been given; was there anything that occurs to you to say with reference to them?—Well, there are two or three things I should like to say. I do not intend to give any evidence on subjects on which the opinion of experts would be necessary, though, of course, anyone who has had any experience of hospitals and workhouses—and I have been interested in them in Ireland for twenty-five years, and, to a certain extent, in England too—must see what a tremendous boon it would be if district hospitals could be established in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and auxiliary asylums for the insane and the imbeciles and the feeble-minded, and symptoms for consumptives. The changes I want to speak about are rather those that could be carried out without any structural alterations or almost perceptible increase of expenditure. There has been a great deal said about paying wards in hospitals, and I think there is just this to be remembered, that a good many people do pay to the hospitals now; they don't pay much, but they pay something, and at present they get absolutely nothing in return for that payment, absolutely nothing different from those who do not pay. I think that is a little hard. I think they should not only have the sentimental privilege of not having the stigma of pauperism, but they should have some slight material advantages, and those they could get without any great expense by allocating some wards with somewhat different surroundings as private wards for paying patients; they can be worked by the same staff. In many workhouses I know such wards could be arranged without almost any expense, and it would be a great boon to the patients if in return for payments, they could get some privilege; especially I think this is the case in fever wards. Many people are stricken down by fever who would never enter a workhouse otherwise, and they may be put in the next bed, so I have seen them, to people with whom outside they would never think of associating.

25095. The difficulty of separate wards in fever hospitals is considerable; different wards have to be kept for different classes of fever—I am talking of the country workhouses.

25096. I am speaking now with Rathkale in my mind; you could not do it there?—There are three fever wards there, two are generally allocated to typhoid and one to scarlet fever; one of those typhoid wards could very often be kept for paying patients. When I have been there I have very seldom seen more than two typhoid patients.

25097. Is generally comes in the form of an epidemic?—That perhaps the difficulty comes, but often you have only one or two cases of fever.

25098. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—I suppose you are aware that the Guardians cannot charge more than about 6s. a week?—I know they cannot, and of course it does not cover the extra cost, but if they are paying anything a week means a good deal to them.

25099. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians discretion to charge patients as little as they could pay or as much as they could pay up to the full standard?—Well, I don't think so, because I think the full expenditure would mean such a sum that anyone who could pay so much would never go into the workhouse hospital at all.

25100. It would hardly go up to £2 a week?—If they wanted to have a private nurse it would go to one and a half guinea a week, to say nothing of buying medical appliances; I think that would be hard. We have a paying ward in our hospital, but it is being kept for an imaginary wealthy patient who never comes; if they can pay largely they go somewhere else.

25101. You mean in Rathkale?—Yes.

25102. You have no power to charge more than the average cost?—We have no power; it was suggested that they might like to pay more and get into this ward, and it has been kept for them, but they don't come. Then I should like to say that I think that the maternity ward should always be considered part of the hospital, not as it is too often at present, no man's land in the body of the house. The head nurse ought to be always responsible for the supervision of it; I think that is really very important.

25103. She is responsible for the supervision?—She ought to be, but I don't know that it always gets quite the supervision it ought; it is often the most dreary of all the sick wards; the least cared for, and when one considers that sometimes respectable married women come into it—

25104. You are speaking of Rathkale now?—No, Rathkale is not bad; but sometimes the conditions are really unsatisfactory as well as quite unfit for the reception of respectable married women. I have had a case brought under my notice only the other day of a union in Ireland to which a very good maternity nurse has come, and in nine months the confinement cases have risen from four last year to twenty, because there has been a good nurse and the maternity ward is improved.

25105. There is evidently not any feeling there such as one would expect that women would be unwilling to let their children be born in the workhouse?—Not if the conditions are known to be satisfactory. It has been a kind of outpost place, separated from the hospital, with a very bad name, and hitherto it has been shunned. The greatest blot in the workhouses, as I think you said yourself, are the nurseries, both from a moral and physical point of view; they have been a simple disgrace—the breeding together of these innocent girl-mothers with all the old offenders has been quite dreadful.

25106. They are sure to fall to the same level?—Sure to, and to my mind it has been, for a very long time, a very potent factor in infantile disease. These distracted girls would rather do anything than enter these awful nurseries.

25107. What arrangement now do you think would be possible?—I should be certainly inclined, if they must come into the workhouse, to keep them entirely separated from the others.

25108. Suppose some arrangement outside the workhouse could be made?—I heard that suggested for the first time to-day so I have not had time to think over it; the only experience I have had of that has been in England, where the conditions are different; we found the best means of reformation for the girl-mothers was the love of their children, not to separate them from the mothers too soon, and as soon as the child was old enough to be separated from them to send them to service under the supervision of people who take a personal continuous interest in them and make them pay part of their wages for the support of their child. We followed up many of these cases for years and found them more successful than those sent to institutions.

25109. Do you think it would be possible, instead of having institutions for such girls, to board them out?—No; I should not do that.

25110. Would you not want to seclude them in some way?—I suppose so, at least for a time, and to train them.

25111. As a rule they come in two or three months before the child is born?—Then they must be kept separate from the others, and that is the difficulty in the workhouse.

25112. That is impossible?—I suppose there should be some institution, only an institution that should allow them to keep the babies for a little while until they have time to become fond of them, and able and willing to work for them; if they go to an ordinary penitentiary they are separated from the babies when they are three weeks or a month old. The condition of the children in the nurseries is often very bad; they don't require exactly a doctor's care, but there are many symptoms of discomfort and misery and improper feeding and all kinds of trouble which any trained eye could detect, but which it is nobody's special business to see, unless when they are under the charge of a maternity nurse, or some trained nurse, as they ought to be.

25113. The health of the children is absolutely under the doctor of the workhouse?—The doctor asks if they are ill and they are not actually ill.

25114. The doctor has his limbs and eyes to go and look after them, and he is responsible for their care?—I suppose these little details are more of a woman's business, so many little things for a nurse's eye or a mother's eye.

25115. In a great many workhouses the nurseries are under the maternity nurse?—Yes, a very good plan.

25116. And she would bring the doctor to see?—If necessary, but very often she would be quite sufficient herself to see what was necessary. It is not only that the poor little ones are suffering now, but they are laying up a store of ill-health for the future. And yet I do not think they ought to be placed out as nurses before three years old; I don't think outside they can get the proper care which they ought to get.

25117. It is really a matter for the doctor to decide when they should go out?—He could not secure proper care outside, and the staff of the workhouse ought to be sufficient to give them the care they need up to that age.

25118. We are supposing that the mothers go into some institution or into seclusion in some way until they can be started, as you describe having been done in England. As regards the children, how would you deal with the children from the date of separation from their mother. The mother has gone out to earn—the management of the institution considering that the mother is fit to go to care—would it be possible in any of these institutions to have a crèche of some sort where the child could be kept until it could be boarded out, never going near a workhouse or institution of that kind?—I scarcely like to say, in view of the dangers of aggregating young children.

Lady Montagu.

26119. What would you do with the child from the time the mother and it were separated?—The mother ought to make herself responsible at once for its support.

26120. Where would it actually stay—in whose charge?—It should be put by the mother into the charge of a nurse.

26121. You would not let it go to the nurse outside in this case until three years old. It would be boarded out as soon as it was three years old, the mother continuing to pay until she could resume charge or care of it—that I take to be your idea?—Perhaps really I did not quite explain; I would not allow a child to be boarded out from the workhouse until three years old. The case of a child for which the mother is directly responsible is different.

26122. We are trying to get rid of the workhouse idea for children altogether?—It would be very difficult to get children under three years of age taken care of.

26123. Suppose if in connection with the institution where the mother is placed in seclusion for reformation there was a crèche or place where the children could be maintained until they were of sufficient age to be boarded out?—That might meet the difficulty; I only mean that I don't think people outside for the money that they would get could afford to give the child the necessary care and attention.

26124. Would you be in favour of having the child elsewhere than in the workhouse—that is that the workhouse should never receive a girl mother or her child?—It would be a very desirable consummation if it could be attained.

26125. Do you see any difficulty—it would most probably be under religious management according to the religion of the mother?—Of course the expense comes in there.

26126. But the expense after all might not be very much more, because there are institutions already existing under the different religions in Ireland?—Very few where they take the child.

26127. But the question is if they could be stretched so as to receive the children, would you approve of that?—If they could, yes; I know in London often it was exceedingly difficult to find any institutions where they would take the child.

26128. It would be a very good and noble work if they would take it up?—I am sure it would. It has answered so well that it is spreading in England. After three I am all in favour of boarding out. From eight years' experience I am more and more in favour of it. As to the aged and infirm I think their lot could be lightened very much at once by having the "privilege wards" which have been found to answer very well; the more respectable ones are classified; they have slight privileges of food, surroundings, and clothing, which they value very much.

26129. Would you approve of a central aged and infirm almshouse or institution for, say, a county where they could be separated into different blocks and treated according to their conduct and character?—I am afraid they would feel leaving their surroundings even if they had not friends to leave.

26130. You have an experience of that at Glenties?—Did they feel that very much there?—There is no doubt they did.

26131. But they got over it—have you ever seen them afterwards?—Constantly.

26133. That is quite possible?—Yes, with some structural alterations, but meantime I think that small matter of classification would make the lot of the respectable aged poor more tolerable than it is; it is very hard at present; that might also apply to the blind, who certainly ought not to be penalised for their affliction. They should have special privileges, as they have no other treatment. This classification would not be so difficult in small country workhouses.

26134. It would be almost possible under the existing state of things?—Quite; I think in fact it has been done in some places. I think many of these difficulties could be got over if the rules were not quite so extreme as they are; they were drawn up for a perfectly different period, and apply equally to a workhouse that contains 100 people or 2,000; if a little more elasticity were allowed in the internal arrangements of the workhouse as there is in a dwelling-house.

26135. You would like a certain set of rules common to all workhouses, and additional sets of rules for each workhouse as could be arranged?—I should like to see that.

26136. The rules, after all, when one looks into them, would almost apply anywhere—does any rule strike you particularly?—No; but I think Guardians might, subject to the Local Government Board, be allowed some discretion in dealing with their special requirements.

LADY EMY examined.

Lady Emy.

26137. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a lady Guardian?—No, I am not.

26138. But you take an interest in Poor Law administration?—The interest I take is in boarding out children. I am President of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, which works here in Limerick.

26139. There are a large number of children boarded out near your own residence?—I have not very many; I have nine to look after.

26140. It used to be a place where a great many were boarded out?—Yes, some time ago.

26142. Do you think it would be a good thing if Guardians were given power to board out all children who come to be supported out of the poor rates?—Certainly, because they lose all knowledge of the workhouse, particularly when they come there young. I find that the foster parents treat them exceedingly like their own children and take the same interest in them; I mean the labourers.

26143. From your experience of the system is there anything you could suggest with a view to improving it?—I think it works very well, indeed, but I am afraid I don't quite agree with Lady Montagu about the age. I should like them to be sent at once, as soon as possible.

26144. Then there is the danger of injudicious feeding?—I think if there is a lady to look after them, if the children boarded out are in her neighbourhood she looks after them. I have had children who had been sent out at three months old, or two even.

26145. And they were brought up with the bottle?—Yes, because the lady has to guarantee that the foster parents would supply the necessities; I have always found it very satisfactory; they can generally get some milk.

26146. They have had good health?—Very good; they come wretched from the workhouse; one child I thought would never live, and I find it is very healthy now.

26147. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Do you find any difficulty in getting foster parents?—If there were many it would be difficult, but we have very few; the Guardians don't give us many at that age; I had only two of that age in my district. I do like them as young as possible for myself to look after.

26148. What would you suggest should be done in case foster parents could not be got for very young children?—I have never had a case of that, for I am always asking for children, and never can get enough; it is just the contrary you see.

26149. CHAIRMAN.—The system has been so long working here that the country people are quite used to it, and look for the children?—They like having them very much, in fact I am always asking the Guardians to let us look for more. I have nice people about me, and they are anxious to have the children.

26150. Dr. BRIDGES.—Are those foster mothers mothers themselves?—I have two who are not, but they take right good care of their children.

26151. How young do you sometimes have them?—Mrs. O'Shaughnessy has had those two children for four or five years; they must have come to her as infants almost; it was before I took up this work.

26152 CHAIRMAN.—In your own time some infants have been sent out?—Oh, yes; two have been sent out as infants, three months and two months old, and then some two years old.

26153 Dr. BROWN.—Your experience of the very young perhaps is not sufficiently large to form an opinion regarding the death-rate?—Oh, no; I only know my own little district. Certainly they are treated as well by their foster parents that I don't believe the children themselves know they come from the workhouse.

26154 That might be all right in a district where you have a proper supervision and look after them yourself, but in a large district or a large city, round a large city such as Dublin, that sort of thing would be very hard to get, and a proper foster mother?—Then I think the ladies of the district should look after that.

26155 Any inquiries that have been made regarding the death-rate amongst that class have shown that the death-rate is very large amongst children under six months old?—Who looks after them—is there a committee for looking after them?

26156 I think so, but the lady may not be there for three months?—Oh, that is quite different with us; we see them every week; not a week passes that I don't see them.

26157 I am afraid the ladies in a large union could not possibly do that with a large number of children scattered over a large area?—In Limerick we have a lot of ladies working.

26158 There is a great difficulty in getting ladies to work and in getting the right class of foster parents for the very young. After they get to be nine months or a year old the death-rate does not seem to be any more than the average?—I suppose they come from the workhouse and are very wretched.

Miss BARRINGTON, R.L.S., EXAMINED.

26159 CHAIRMAN.—You are a Poor Law Guardian?—Yes, in the Limerick Union.

26160 You have heard the evidence of Lady Montagu and Lady Emily?—Yes; I entirely approve of boarding out children, but it seems to me, from my experience of Limerick, that the sooner they can be sent the better. We send them out from the union as young as we can if we can find foster parents, but there is a difficulty in getting suitable foster parents for young children, but still we do it.

26161 Do you happen to know what is paid for infants going out?—£8 a year, and for the older children it is £8. There is a great mortality amongst infants in the workhouse; I think the foster parent is much better and gives them much better care than they can possibly get in the union, where there are a number of children with pauper women to look after them.

26162 Dr. BROWN.—How young do you know them to be boarded out?—Lately we sent one out a month old.

26163 How many under a year old can you remember having been sent out?—I am sure I could not say.

26164 Has there been sufficient that you could form any estimate of the death-rate amongst them?

26165 CHAIRMAN.—Have there been a dozen or so? I am sure there have been, under a year.

26166 Dr. BROWN.—Under six months or four months?—I could not say.

26167 CHAIRMAN.—Have you known of any deaths among the babies?—No, I have not, but there may have been; I don't think myself there have been many deaths during the time I have been a Poor Law Guardian.

26168 Dr. BROWN.—Have there been six or eight children under six months old boarded out?—I am sure there have, but I am not prepared to say; I have not gone into the figures.

26169 Had you any difficulty in getting good foster parents for those very young children?—It is difficult; some of them don't seem to have them so young.

26170 Do you make a difference between them at all—as you choose the foster parents for the very young children more carefully than for the older children?—That is left for the Visiting Committee.

26171 CHAIRMAN.—Would it not be better if you gave the full amount, £8?—Then they might be more willing to take them. I think the union is not a good place to have them. If there was, say, a couple for the young children that would be better, where they would CHAIRMAN.—Very often deserted children picked up in the street. Dec. 1, 1904.

26172 Dr. BROWN.—I think the death-rate is larger outside than in the workhouse; something like 75 per cent. or 80 per cent. of those boarded out under six months old die?—That sounds dreadful, but would they not have died in the workhouse too?

Dr. BROWN.—We cannot tell that.

26173 Mr. MURKIN.—One would think that the foster mothers had a material interest in keeping them alive?—Of course they have.

26174 CHAIRMAN.—But they have not the knowledge to clean bottles?—I should think unless they were looked after by a committee it would not answer so well.

26175 Dr. BROWN.—If you can get the class of parent that will really look after the foster child, the same as their own child, it may be very good and better than the institution?—My experience is very small.

26176 Mr. MURKIN.—Do you know of any orphanage in the county that take children in that way, founding hospitals?—No.

26177 CHAIRMAN.—The Convent of the Good Shepherd?—They have schools of course.

26178 In Cork they have an asylum for women?—So have the Sisters of the Good Shepherd here.

26179 Would it be possible for them to have a nursery or crèche for children?—I don't know, but they have got a very large number of children who live in the convent. An Industrial School I think it is called, and they take them at four years old, but I don't think they have got any infants; it would be very difficult to manage that. I never heard it suggested even, but I think they take them from three years old.

26180 And then they remain at school there?—They are brought up there altogether.

be under the supervision of a nurse trained to look after the children, but they are not in unions. Miss Barrington.

26181 Dr. BROWN.—Sometimes?—Well, not in our union.

26182 You are speaking of the present arrangements—that is, that you would rather have the foster mother to take charge of them at a very young age sooner than have them in the workhouse as at present?—Yes.

26183 But if there was a better arrangement of the workhouse where children would be looked after by a trained person who would understand the feeding of very young children?—Then perhaps they would be better; but at present the young children are in the hospital ward where the air is bad.

26184 And very much overcrowded—the place we saw was not fit for children or grown up people?—Children do not live there very well.

26185 CHAIRMAN.—I understand you to be strongly in favour of the boarding out of children?—Yes. Then in the schools—I think the imbecile and weak-intelligent children should not be left there; there should be some central school where they should be sent; I don't think they can be properly taught or trained here.

26186 Mr. Barrington suggested one for all Ireland?—I would approve of that if it could be had.

26187 Are the children you refer to backward children or distinctly mentally weak?—There are some almost idiot children, and some are more imbecile children, and perhaps some of them could be boarded out, but it is rather difficult to get foster parents for them. The children who come in and out, I think they should be taken from their parents if possible.

26188 What class of people do they belong to—are they chiefly from the city?—Yes.

26189 Thieves and people of drunken habits who come in and out?—Yes, the children are in the schools for a few days and then taken out.

26190 Do you think the parents of these children are really fit to have charge of children?—I don't think they are, but then I suppose it is difficult to take them from them unless they would pay for them.

26191 The reason they are in the workhouse is that they are not able to pay their own way, and therefore could not pay for their children?—Yes.

26192 Do you think these people are people who might with advantage have their children taken from them and themselves put under restraint in these labour places until they were broken off their bad habits and taught habits of industry?—I think that would be a good plan. And then there are the children of respectable parents who could perhaps get out if they had not to take their children with them; if there was some plan by which they could leave the children for a short time until they could get work they could start again; perhaps the father is dead and the mother comes in with the children.

26193. That would be one of the strongest cases one could imagine for outdoor relief?—But even so she has to take all her children with her when she goes; if she could get out a week or a month in advance of the children.

26194. Mr. MURKIN.—Would it not be better not to have her coming to the house at all—for the Guardians to be empowered to give her outdoor relief?

26195. CHAIRMAN.—That is a case that comes within outdoor relief. If she had only one child she could not get it—she would propose to extend the outdoor relief to mothers of one child?—Yes.

Mr. FRANCIS HARRIGAN, R.R., examined.

Mr. Francis
 Harrigan.

26196. CHAIRMAN.—You have acted as architect and engineer for a number of local bodies?—I am engineer for Rathkeale principally, Glina and Croon. I made this map from the county sheet (explains the divisions of the unions on map). As far as I can gather among the people of Croon there is a consensus of opinion that the union should be dissolved.

26197. You think they are getting reconciled to it?—Yes, the Croon people don't like any connection with Limerick; they would like to go to Kilmallock.

26198. The rates are cheaper there?—Yes, and the people are more of the same type as themselves—country people don't like to associate with city people. If you notice the faces of the children in the Glina Workhouse there is a remarkable difference in the children who come out from Limerick and the other children—their eyes seem to be suffering from ophthalmia.

26199. And the country children look like rosy apples?—They do, sir, and that is the reason the Croon people would prefer being joined to Kilmallock.

26200. Have you any idea what it would cost to put Croon Workhouse into the condition for an auxiliary asylum?—It would make an ideal sanatorium—it is about the only workhouse in Ireland where there are pine trees.

26201. How much would it cost to make it a sanatorium?—I suppose if you spent £1,000 to £2,000 according to the way you would like it.

26202. They ran up to £4,000 for the Glina School?—It was the sums and the Christian Brothers, and they built a church there, and we divided the buildings into compartments for the Brothers and got a good deal of furnishing for the schools.

26203. You think you could really put Croon into order for £2,000 for a sanatorium?—I think so.

26204. Would it be about the same for a lunatic asylum?—It would, I suppose; I don't see that the change would be much difference, except that you would have to raise the walls.

26205. That would be a big item?—I don't think the inhabitants of Croon would bless the Local Government Board for making it an asylum.

26206. Perhaps they would rather have an asylum than a consumptive sanatorium?—I suppose it would be better. While Rathkeale and Newcastle are only six miles apart it would be a very long distance for anybody about Fallowfield to have to go to Newcastle, or on the other hand from the opposite end of Newcastle to go to Rathkeale.

26198. Mr. MURKIN.—And to husbands temporarily deprived of work to keep the home going. The Guardians might have power to give temporary aid so as not to compel them to go into the house at all?—Then the old and infirm ought to be classified.

26199. What would you suggest about them?—I think the old married couples ought to be allowed to live together, and there should be privilege wards for the others.

26200. That would be quite impossible in the Limerick Workhouse as things are at present?—Unless the lunatics and children were removed.

26201. And mothers with children—if those classes were taken out then there would be room to separate and classify according to character and condition?—I think as far as possible the children should be left with the mothers for a time. And then there should be a sanatorium for consumptives.

26202. Yesterday there was a suggestion that Croon would suit—do you know it?—No, I do not.

26211. Mr. MURKIN.—Not a healthy person—the suggestion is that the hospitals should be continued; it would not be much hardship for a person in health to go six miles further?—I think it would be a great wrench to leave their homes.

26212. We have all wrenched to our sentiments sometimes—some have to leave the country and others go to many places where they don't like to go?—Well, sir, of course that is the chief reason—it is a sentimental reason, if you like, but after all no matter in what portion of life you are sentiment counts for a good deal, and these poor people, I know, like to have the idea that Paddy or Johnny, wherever it is, is not too far away from them, and can come to see them. The conditions of life in our workhouse in Rathkeale for the last six years—thanks to Lady Montagu and the Ladies' Committee and the country ladies around, who have given women's service—the whole of the Rathkeale Union has changed its face, and after a couple of years more when we get our water supply and some more things we will be the best-equipped institution in the South of Ireland.

26213. CHAIRMAN.—You have a good deal of levy to make up yet before you get level with the average workhouse?—We made tremendous strides for the last six years.

26214. Don't put them down too high?—Another point also I would like to mention—the great necessity there is for a dispensary in that district.

26215. That we cannot go into—it is not under the Poor Law but the Medical Charities Act?—About framps—in the summer time they are a perfect nuisance to us.

26216. Would you like to see them put under restraint in some labour place?—I would like to have a portion of the workhouse set apart for them where they would be made to do a certain quantity of stints every day.

26217. That would not be a good way of raising them to better things?—If they did a small bit of work I believe it would physically invigorate them.

26218. They get too much leg exercise and not enough arm work?—The master of the workhouse can get a ready market for broken stones. The only other use I see is to take a batch of them off before old Dr. Hagen for choice, one of the magistrates, and give them a month in jail, but that hardly improves their moral nature.

The Sitting terminated.

FIFTY-SECOND PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, JANUARY 17TH, 1905.

At the Courthouse, Tralee.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURKAGHAN, and Dr. COTY BIGGER.

Mr. WILLIAM McMAHON, M.C., R.E.C., REMOVED.

26225. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes, sir.

26226. The warrant appointing this Commission and the queries we issued were sent to the County Council, and considered by them, I dare say?—I don't think I was present at the meeting.

26227. You have seen those queries yourself?—Yes.

26228. What is your own view on the question of the amalgamation of unions in the County Kerry?—I was present at the County Council when that was discussed, and the opinion of the County Council was unanimous that there ought not to be any amalgamation in Kerry; that the distance from each union is so long, that it would not be advantageous to the poor or the sick.

26229. And the shape of the county is so peculiar, with those long arms stretching out into the sea?—Yes. For instance, if you take away Liswell Union, you would have to come from Tarbert thirty miles to Tralee, and the same applies to Dingle, you would have to come thirty-six miles.

26230. Supposing, as has been proposed by a great many witnesses, that in each of these remote places a small hospital should be left and maintained to treat the acutely sick, who could not be removed, what would your view then be?—My view would be that you would have too many coming here; that is, if all the Guardians of the district had to come here dealing with the general work of the union; you would have too many entirely, and that the work could not be properly done; it would take too long a time to go through the business; you have too many in the Board, and it would be a great inconvenience also to the Guardians at long distances to be coming here to Tralee.

26231. Suppose the District Councils remained locally, suppose the District Council of Listowel remained as it is, and the District Councils of Dingle, Glenties, and Keemans remained as they are, and do all your Poor Law matters that would come under their immediate notice, such as outdoor relief, and other matters, and the sick had a hospital in their district?—With the management of the rates?

26232. And the management of their rates, so far as it would properly come under them; under the changed course of procedure, what would your view be then?—If the managing authority at the central place would not be increased?—My idea would be that we are to look out for our own side, and that Tralee would have a great advantage, and they would manipulate a great many of the advantages themselves to the detriment of the other districts.

26233. If we start with the supposition that we are able to have what you might call the able-bodied and infirm centralized, and that if the result of such centralization would be a great diminution in the rates, would not that be a benefit, to start with, for the whole county?—Would you do away with all the existing officers of the unions, or would you materially reduce the expense of the existing officers?

26234. We are not suggesting that ourselves, but we have seen in various parts of the country that we have seen through, we have received statistics from a great many witnesses; of course the staff that is now maintained for looking after the able-bodied would be pensioned off, and no further appointments made to such staffs, and those staffs would cease to exist except for the life interest of the pensioned men?—Well, there is at present in nearly every union, at least in the Listowel Union, a great deal of the work done by inmates—the cleaning and white-washing, and the management of turf and other things, and a lot of labour outside.

26235. That, of course, would continue in the large central house; you would have inmates employed to do a great deal of the manual and drudgery work about the place. If you have a hospital maintained in each place for the sick, you don't have much work to do in the hospital; all the nursing, of course, is done by nuns or trained nurses?—I really think, sir, that it would not work so well.

26236. What objection do you see in your own mind that makes you come to that conclusion?—In the first place, we will have to pay nearly as much in pensions as in the existing officers.

26237. Surely not; surely you would not pay a man his full salary?—Well, no, but very near.

26238. You could not pay him more than two-thirds?—Then the expense of keeping up the remainder of the institution would be more again. You might get rid of some officers, but you would have to create new positions.

26239. In the central place?—No, but in the local places.

26240. The local places would be closed, according to the evidence that has been given to me, except the hospital?—Oh, of course, the hospital should remain; that is a matter of necessity. The hospital and infirmaries should remain, because many a poor crippled fellow cannot come a long distance, and many an accident occurs that must be treated locally.

26241. They would only have, say, in Dingle a hospital as the only Poor Law institution there; all the other people would be capable of being removed; they could come by rail. Would you see any hardship to the poor, or would you see any other disadvantages to either Guardians or ratepayers?—I would. I think it is a very long distance to be coming thirty miles for a poor person to come into the workhouse.

26242. How long does it take—an hour-and-a-half coming by rail from Dingle here?—It takes about three hours, I think.

26243. I suppose I must have had pleasant companions, but it did not seem so long when I went there?—I am not clear on that point, but I heard it was from two-and-a-half to three hours. Say from Tarbert, where there is no railway for ten miles, and Ballyvaughan the same.

26244. And Beale?—Strictly, longer again from Listowel. These poor people may not have the means of travelling by rail.

26245. That would be, of course, a charge on the rates?—The relieving officer should supply tickets and travelling expenses.

26246. He would supply travelling expenses?—Would he bring them from the different districts.

26247. They are now obliged to make for the workhouse; they might, under the new system, be obliged to make for the railway station?—I think it would be as expensive, and the ratepayers would not be as well satisfied with it.

26248. What makes you think they would not be satisfied?—They would be satisfied in a manner if they saw there was a saving.

26249. But I am not going on the basis that there would be a substantial saving, applying the scheme to all Ireland?—We can only speak for our own union.

26250. What is your own union?—Listowel. I would think it a great hardship on the poor in general, and I think on the whole we would not save much by it.

26251. Was there ever any question of a second hospital—since the abolition of the Glenties Union was there ever any question of a hospital at Tarbert?—No, only an infirming hospital.

26252. That is for the shipping?—Yes; we have a very good ambulance.

26253. How far are the sick obliged to come to Listowel Union from the most distant part?—Beale, about twelve miles, is the furthest, and Causeway is the same.

Jan. 17, 1905.
Mr. WILLIAM
McMahon.

Jan. 17, 1905.
Mr. William
McMahon.

26348. Is it not a good deal further, part of the Glin Union that you got, up to twenty miles?—Mr. FitzGerald could tell us that.

Mr. FitzGerald.—I think from seventeen to eighteen miles is about the furthest point; that includes portions on the County Limerick.

CHAIRMAN.—Would that be Loughlin?

Mr. FitzGerald.—That is the division bounding Loughlin.

26349. CHAIRMAN.—They come now that distance. Have you heard any complaints from the sick in those districts as to the journeys they have to make?—Not to the extent of the journey, but there was some time ago, when the man that had the contract of the ambulance was not bringing them in carefully, there were complaints then, but I have not heard any since we got our own ambulance—any complaints as to the distance.

26350. And they come twenty or twenty-one miles; do you think that is rather far to oblige sick people to come?—I do.

26351. Do you think it would be a judicious thing for you to have a hospital in a more central position for these people that would accommodate Bunde, Ballylengford, Glin, and Tarbert, and to put up at Tarbert a small hospital for ten beds?—I think it would be a great convenience to the poor.

26352. To be looked after by the dispensary doctor?—I do.

26353. That would be a comparatively trifling expense; the dispensary doctor could look after it?—He would be expecting a rise of salary.

26354. You don't think he would consider it a case for reducing his salary, on the ground of bringing his patients all together under one roof?—He would not apply for that; he would apply for a rise.

26355. At all events, supposing there was a small rise, you would have the doctor and the nurse?—It would cost £200 or £700 a year at least.

26356. How could it do that?—Between the nurse and keeping up the institution and repairs of the institution and all that.

26357. Supposing it was £250.—Dr. Figger seems to think £350 would be nearer the mark for a cottage hospital?—Well, he knows better.

26358. At all events, if a cottage hospital could be put up, if the expense would come to £250, that would not be so serious a thing?—I don't think it would be money thrown away, and it would be good accommodation to a large district.

26360. CHAIRMAN.—It is one of our questions. The evidence that a great many Guardians have given is this. They say the infirmity of the present system is that they cannot charge people who are well able to pay; and what they suggest is that the Guardians should have power, in their discretion, to fix how much a person claiming admission should be obliged to pay; and that they should be empowered to recover that by summary procedure at petty sessions. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians such a discretionary power—power to fix the amount up to the full actual amount expended?—Yes; but I think it ought to be recoverable by law from them.

26361. The suggestion also would give the Guardians power to recover the amount?—I would sooner fix the actual expenses to be recovered than leave it to the vote of the Guardians.

26362. You would be in a difficulty. Supposing a poor man sent his child in, and that the sending of that child in, at all events, saves him 6d. to 1s. a week in food, you could not ask that man to pay the full cost of maintenance?—No.

26363. But he might be very glad, if he had a little independent feeling, he might be very glad to pay as much as he could, say 6d. or 1s. a week, and all those little sums would come to a good deal?—If it were discretionary then with the relieving officer or Guardians.

26364. But my point was, where there are respectable people who are able to pay, but might not be willing

For instance, if a respectable shopkeeper, who was a man of substance and means, got fever, and went into your fever hospital, you might be obliged to have a special nurse for him at 14 guineas a week, and yet you would only be able to get back 8s. a week from him?—We have some of the doctors themselves going into our hospital at Liscarrow when they get sick, from cases. We charge them 6s. 10d., about the average cost.

26365. You would be glad to be able to charge the full amount?—Yes.

26366. Don't you think it would be a wise thing to give the Board of Guardians power to recover even small amounts?—Well, I would.

26367. The Guardians would be more likely to act on the side of generosity?—That is the reason I mentioned a while ago—that I was afraid they would.

26368. It has been tried in some county infirmaries, and the experience there was that the poor people, after the first expostitions, fell in with it, and were very glad to be in a position to pay a little, and in that way to be considered independent, and not come under a pauper arrangement?—Of course my idea was that those who were not able to pay would not be asked to pay; but you mean where there is a medium, where a person might pay a little, in that case it would be discretionary with the relieving officer of the Guardians.

26369. On the recommendation of the relieving officer, they would consult him, and the doctor, and the Guardians of the district, who would know?—Yes.

26370. Your opinion is still that you would not be in favour of amalgamation in any of the Kerry unions?—I can only speak for myself; but I know a resolution was passed here by the Council; it was discussed, but they did not go into minute details, as you are doing.

26371. You have had an instance of amalgamation in your own time and experience in the Glin Union—what has been your view of the amalgamation of the Glin Union?—I think Mr. FitzGerald could answer that better.

26372. We will have Mr. FitzGerald presently, but what is your own view?—I don't think it has lowered the rates 1d. in the Glin Union; and, of course, it has got them to a great deal of inconvenience.

26373. Your own opinion is that anything on the same lines would be a mistake?—Yes.

26374. Have you taken any interest in the question of lunacy administration; are you on the Asylum Committee?—I am not.

26375. Do you know whether the asylum at Kilmurry is full or overfull, whether there is any question of obtaining extra accommodation for the inmates?—There had to be an addition put to it last year.

26376. There is no further necessity for an addition, so far as you are aware?—I suppose not at present. But we complain that there are lunatics sent from other places into our asylum, but we have no satisfaction to get.

26377. Do you think a workhouse is a proper place to keep lunatics in?—There are a great many harmless lunatics that may be left in the workhouse.

26378. Have you considered this question carefully?—I think it is cheaper, and they are generally as well off.

26379. Do you think they are as well looked after?—I think in Liscarrow they are pretty well looked after.

26380. What arrangements have you made for their supervision?—We have a separate room and a caretaker, a night watchman and a day watchman, and the same for females.

26381. What experience have those people of the care and charge of lunatics before they entered on their duties?—None.

26382. Do you think that is a satisfactory system for people who require special care, and persons to look after them who have special knowledge; do you think that is a satisfactory state of things?—I would not, unless they were confirmed imbeciles.

26383. You will find in every workhouse lunatics who do require a certain amount of looking after?—Have magistrates the power to commit harmless lunatics to the asylum? Most they not commit some others first?

26384. I don't think we need go into that. We are dealing with the lunatics we have in workhouses; we are not empowered to go into the general question of asylum management at all, and the general evidence we have got all round Ireland is that a workhouse is not a fit and proper place to have lunatics. I wanted to find out what your personal view is, if you have considered the question?—My view is that a great number of them ought to be sent to the asylum in the early stages, but those confirmed and harmless imbeciles would be just as well looked after in the union, if not better. I have not a thorough knowledge of the system of the asylums. I must tell you that, and, therefore, I cannot give you clear evidence on it.

26280. Have you considered the question of rearing children in workhouses?—Yes.

26281. What has your view been on that?—In my opinion—and I have studied nearly since I was a child—I don't see healthier children reared anywhere than in Linstown Union. Much more clean and cleanliness than they will get in any home outside, and much better educated, because my idea is that when they are boarded out the people they are boarded out with will make the most they can of them, and keep them from school, and things they cannot be deprived of in the workhouse, and their dietary is much more wholesome, and there is greater cleanliness than they will get outside.

26282. Mr. MURKIN.—You have very little experience of boarding out in your union; you have one case only, so you could hardly speak with experience?—Not experience of my own; but seeing the way their children are so badly neglected, and rearing of baby-farming in England.

26283. CHAIRMAN.—I am glad to say that we have not had any experience in the rural parts of Ireland of baby-farming?—No, we have not. But still I hold a very strong opinion that they would not be so well cared for—as well fed, as cleanly kept, or as well educated as in the workhouse.

26284. Mr. MURKIN.—You have not tried it?—No; we have only one or two cases in our union.

26285. The same paid under that head is £44?—It is only tried in Linstown, where children are left orphans, and some near relatives would take care of the children. That is all we have tried.

26286. CHAIRMAN.—As a Board of Guardians, you have hesitated in putting into force the boarding out provisions?—Yes, we did.

26287. Are you aware that the boarding out Act has been largely availed of in unions not far from your own, in Limerick, for the last thirty years, and Rathfriland did not see how it worked there.

26288. We did receive evidence of the most encouraging kind from those unions as to the result of the boarding out system, and not merely from Limerick, but all parts of Ireland?—Of course, if there was an improved supervision, but I am afraid new the supervision would be very slight.

26289. You would first have the relieving officer, and then you would have the Ladies' Committee?—We have very few ladies there, with the exception of, perhaps, one or two, to take any interest in it.

26290. If they were energetic, that would be enough?—Of course.

26291. Do you think the ladies are not sufficiently energetic in Linstown?—I do; in fact, I know it.

26292. Then if you had a ladies' committee, you are afraid that would not be very effective?—Yes, I am.

26293. Then there are also lady inspectors appointed now, and I can tell you they are most efficient; they really let into the thing very closely—Miss Fitzgerald Kennedy and Mrs. Dickie?—We have very few ladies of any standing, only small shopkeepers' wives and that; and their time is taken up. We have no ladies in our locality with time enough; they are not there at all.

26294. But still any sensible woman who has had experience in bringing up her own children would be a good woman to look after children. You don't want people who have not had experience of the ways of the country; there would be no woman better than a sensible farmer's wife?—But you would not find them stirring enough to carry out ideas or report; they might scold or advise, but would not report. That is a good deal. I would rather have a person get a thing done by their influence than report on it. I am afraid they would not pay enough interest; you would want an intelligent person of standing.

26295. You are not aware of the favourable results of boarding out in other places; these children have really been absorbed into families; they have become contributing members of families, even after the Guardians' payments ceased; these children have continued in those homes as virtually adopted children, and have contributed to the support of the house in a large number of cases as they grew older?—That would be very good.

26296. And they did not come back again to the workhouse; they were out off from the workhouse, and never thought of going back there?—In Linstown we have the Glin Industrial School.

26297. As regards children reared in workhouses, what is their after-history?—Upon my word, as good as those reared in some of the lower houses in town and country; and I have seen a good many getting good situations out of the workhouse.

26298. Have you known cases coming back, and remaining in the ranks of pauperism?—Not lately. I don't see any of the children returning back to the Linstown union now. I know a long time ago they used; and when their friends took them over to England, they would get into the workhouse there, and be returned to Linstown Union; but that is not the case for many years.

26299. About tramp?—Oh, they are a nuisance.

26300. What would you do with them?—By Jove that is hard to say; of course the law at present is not carried out on them. There was a resolution sent down to keep them in until 12 o'clock, and I think it would be a great lot of them, but a lot of them come round—singers and others—and though they earn money they drink it and go into the workhouse, and where they get good accommodation in a workhouse they are sure to make that place a resort. I think they should be made to work and get but very poor food.

26301. You would make them work and keep them in longer?—I would.

26302. The English law has been lately changed and gives the Guardians power to detain them one, two, three, or four days if they think it necessary?—I would not like to be keeping them too long.

26303. It would be discretionary?—And there is one thing about giving them a night's lodging; very often they do damage outside if they are not let into the workhouse. I had a case myself where young lads set fire to the workhouse and burnt a lot of hay and straw over me. We, in Linstown and other parts of Kerry, complain a good deal that we have to contribute to the maintenance of the Tralee Fever Hospital, and Killarney Fever Hospital, and also to the county hospital, when we have those institutions, each in our own union.

26304. That you don't use the so-called fever hospital at all?—No need in our union anyway.

26305. You do use the county infirmary sometimes, I suppose?—Very rarely; we have as good nurses, and as good doctors, and as good accommodation in our own union as in any in Kerry.

26306. I am quite aware of that; I know what a good hospital you have?—And the nearest part of our union to Tralee is as near to Linstown, or very close on it; it goes near Garrymore, but Orlery and Ardara are in the Tralee Union. I brought out a patient myself from Linstown to get a ticket in Tralee and got him in, and he was turned out of the infirmary in two days after.

26307. As incurable?—I deny; he could not tell me the reason; he made some excuse that I did not believe, and I won't give it in evidence.

26308. Dr. BAKER.—Did he leave of his own accord, do you think?—Oh, no; it was the eyes that were bad, and I think the excuse was that they were not treating the eyes here, or something like it. In my opinion when a county infirmary is not able to take up all general cases there is no use of subsidizing it.

26309. CHAIRMAN.—The eye is not a general matter; it is a special case?—Even so; a county infirmary ought to be able to deal with it.

26310. I don't think you will find any county infirmary with full apparatus; I suppose you do send your eye cases sometimes to be treated in special eye hospitals?—In Dublin or Cork.

26311. Did you send these cases subsequently?—No; I think Dr. Dillon did not think it a case that could be cured.

Mr. M. J.
Flavin.

Mr. M. J. FLAVIN, M.P., EXAMINED.

25317. CHAIRMAN.—The Commission have been asking your colleague on the County Council what his views were about the amalgamation of unions, that is to say, the breaking up of workhouses, leaving however, at each place, adequate provision for the acute sick of the neighbourhood, and we asked him what his opinion would be of such a transaction, whether he would be in favour of removing those sick who could easily be removed, provided sufficient accommodation was left for the sick; what would your view be?—Of course, Mr. Chairman, I can only express my individual opinion, because, in the first instance, I have had no experience of the Poor Law system either under the old Board of Guardians or the Rural District Council.

25318. You are a County Councillor?—Yes, and my only qualification is my experience on the County Council, and therefore I would not like to express a decided opinion on the Poor Law system, but I do believe, that owing to the extensive area of Kerry, and the distance the unions are separated, it would be almost impossible to amalgamate one union with another. I have been thinking, but I have not consulted the Keshmone people about it, I have been thinking that there would be a possibility of abolishing Keshmone Union and making a sanatorium of it. From my knowledge of the County Kerry I think some active steps ought to be taken before now, or by you if you have power, to make some recommendation for a sanatorium in Kerry.

25319. You think Keshmone would be a suitable place?—In the first place I am not a medical man; I am simply expressing an outside opinion, but having had a considerable experience of life in Kerry I think either in Keshmone or somewhere convenient for the people. I think it is absolutely necessary because I believe consumption is on the increase instead of on the decrease, and as far as we are locally concerned I don't think it is our fault, because we are doing all we can to raise the standard of living and improve the habits of the people, notwithstanding the fact that I believe we are one of the heaviest taxed counties in Ireland.

25320. I believe the heaviest, but that is largely owing to your railway guarantee?—Yes, largely. They were £27,500 or £18,000; they have been reduced under the Local Government Act. Mr. Bullock was kind enough to put a clause in the Local Government Act which gave us a rebate of about $5,000 a year. This year our rates are rather low although they appear large because there is a reduction of $7,000 on account of money we got out of the purchase price of the Waterford and Limerick railway, but that will be only a temporary thing. I fear our rates must be higher than they are in the present year.

25321. If some attempt were made to centralise the poor of the county and to dispense with the staffs that look after the able-bodied, as distinguished from the acutely sick, that would mean a considerable economy?—If such a thing could be done; of course you have a wider experience of Kerry than I have, and a wider trained knowledge of the Poor Law system.

25322. The Poor Law system, but I wish I had your personal experience at the back of it?—I am afraid you would not carry my position; I would yours.

25323. Keshmone, at present, is the only one that occurs to you?—I don't know whether I am correct in saying so, I think Keshmone has the smallest number of inmates.

25324. Cahersiveen is small?—But it is so much further removed from any central place; either Dingle or Keshmone; I express a preference for Keshmone, but I have not consulted any of the Keshmone people about it and they may be quite opposed to it.

25325. You are merely offering that as a personal and not carefully considered suggestion?—Certainly not; and it is more because I spent a fortnight or three weeks in Keshmone, and I think the situation of Keshmone Workhouse, with considerable internal arrangements, is very suitable; there may be more suitable places in the county, I don't know; that would be a question more for expert medical opinion.

25326. You know Cahersiveen?—Fairly well.

25327. You know where the workhouse is?—Yes.

25328. About two or three miles out from the town; are you aware that there was a fever hospital in Cahersiveen where now the meetings of the Guardians are held; it is the Rural District Council office now and where the dispensary is?—No; I could not say that I have an intimate knowledge; I have seen the building. Having lived the greater portion of my life in North Kerry, even the Kerry people have not the same intimate knowledge of other parts of the county that people might think they ought to have.

25329. When we were inspecting Cahersiveen, and seeing that very good shell, for it is as well as far as hospital purposes go, it occurred to us that we might possibly receive evidence to show that if the workhouse were closed that the sick could be amply accommodated in that building which used to be the fever hospital?—I would not care to express an opinion; I have only been asked by the County Kerry Infirmary to give evidence, but Col. Bowen is here who has the whole financial matter in his possession, and my evidence I give would be only expressing my personal opinion.

25330. You are the County Councillor for the Sween District?—Yes.

25331. Taking the stretch of the country from Keshmone round to Cahersiveen you go through Sween?—Puckinella, Cahersiveen, to Waterville.

25332. You have a dispensary doctor at Sween and another at Waterville; the rest of the Sween District have a considerable distance, I should say about sixteen miles, to go to Keshmone?—Sixteen or eighteen miles, but there are no railway facilities, you know; they must go by road.

25333. If a small cottage hospital, that would hold about half a dozen beds, to be looked after by a resident nurse and the dispensary doctor, provided the cost could be kept down to something like $200 or $250 a year, were established, do you think, in the event of amalgamation, that would be a fair and prudent thing to do for the good of the sick?—I think so; a great many of the extremely sick people have to be removed at the last moment a considerable distance over roads to these hospitals; I think there is a considerable danger to their health.

25334. That is as regards the situation of Sween to Keshmone; then when you come to Waterville you have pretty much the same condition there with regard to Cahersiveen?—Not so far?—About twelve miles.

25335. But then there is a great stretch of country up the lake from Waterville, and these people have to be brought all round from Waterville to Cahersiveen, which would make a considerable stretch of country, fairly populous; would you think that a similarly small economically-managed cottage hospital should be established at Waterville under the dispensary doctor there with a resident nurse, who could also act as a district nurse if the hospital were for any time empty?—I thoroughly agree with you in the suggestion; I think it would be most wise, but eventually I greatly fear that if this occurred as the result of the amalgamation of two or three unions, after these hospitals were in existence for ten years, instead of a reduction of taxation our taxes would be quite as high. In the first place you have to build your local hospital, equip it, have your medical officer there and one or two nurses, furnish it, and have attendants.

25336. Such a hospital as is contemplated would mean three or four beds for males or females?—If you place one in Sween and one in Waterville, surely if you give them facilities down there you must give other parts of the county the same facilities.

25337. Where else should you do so except at Tarbert?—Between Tralee and Dingle, at Cahersiveen or Annascaul; just look at the great stretch of country from Tralee to Brooma, or Killarney to Brooma.

25338. You have a hospital at Chailisland?—But it is twelve or fourteen miles to Brooma, open country. I am afraid they would make a claim for the same treatment as other parts of the county.

25339. The population of Brooma is nothing like as thick?—It is; I think it is a congested district, but I would not say it is so congested.

25340. Conception does not mean over-population?—Not necessarily; for instance, I think we, in North Kerry, the Limerick Board of Guardians and the Rural District Council, have done more to improve the condition of the working classes than any union in Kerry, but still we have more inhabitants employed under $4 valuation than any union in Kerry, notwithstanding the fact that we stand very high with the number of labourers' cottages, and I don't think we can get more money for houses.

25341. We had evidence from the last witness that the sick have to be removed twenty or twenty-one miles in parts of the Listowel Union, and then the question arises whether a cottage hospital at Tarbert would not be a desirable change so that the sick of Ballylongford and Ballyvaughan could be taken to the sick of Glenties and Glenties, and on the other side of Glenties could be treated there; what would your opinion be of that?—Even admitting, for the sake of argument, there was a possibility of amalgamating one or two unions.

25342. Apart from amalgamation altogether, do you think it is a hardship that the sick should be obliged to come such a long distance?—I certainly do; if it could be avoided with a minimum increase of taxation.

CHAIRMAN.—It would have to be on a very moderate scale; the difficulty is when witnesses say "We don't think a cottage hospital is necessary at Tarbert, twenty-one miles away"; that would be an argument in favour of amalgamation, because if twenty-one miles does not matter in one case it does not matter all round.

25343. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The expense of such a hospital as the Chairman has outlined would be very small; you have already a medical officer and the district nurse.—We have invariably been told, in older times in Kerry when anything was proposed, that there would be a very small cost on the rate-payers, but, from my experience in financial matters coming into a public body for the first time in my life, under the Local Government Act, I found the taxation has been going higher and higher in connection with guarantees of railways and the building of the Strand Pier which we thought would be a financial success, but we find a portion of the county that has no benefit from it has been taxed three or four thousand pounds.

25344. Our object in coming here is to try and keep down taxation, and you may be perfectly satisfied that this Commission will not recommend anything that will not lead in that direction.—I am entirely in favour of that, but I would not cut down taxation to an extravagant amount if I thought there was going to be any injury to the poor.

25346. There is a good deal of expense in connection with small workhouses; for instance take the workhouse of Dingle, the inmates there cost per head, under the head of salaries alone, twice as much as they do in Tralee. In Tralee the cost is £3 per inmate under the head of salaries, in Kilmurrah the same costs £3. Our object is to devise a plan to get rid of this unnecessary expense and bring additional benefits to the sick poor at the same time. Now if some scheme, such as has been outlined, was adopted in the Co. Kerry—a system of separation—for instance, if the children were removed from the workhouse, which everybody admits is not a good place for them, if they were distributed amongst the farmers, a very considerable sum would be saved, because they already cost £4 or £5 more in the house than they do outside. Then take out another class, the harmless lunatics, and send them to a place where they would have better treatment; there might not be any saving under that head, but certainly there would be more humanity and more efficiency. Then, again, you could make reformations in other respects. If something of that kind could be done would it appeal to your sense as a representative man?—Unquestionably. Speaking generally I have had no experience of children being taken out to farms, but I would be strongly in favour of it with proper supervision, and I think, in an extensive county like Kerry, supervision would be very hard to maintain. I don't think, myself, the workhouse is a suitable place to train up any young children. I would prefer to have them out of doors, and give them, in the first place, plenty of fresh air, which is absolutely necessary for any Kerry boy or girl, or any boy or girl, and give them a fair amount of work. I believe they have tried it in Tralee.

25347. They have quite a number in Tralee and in Kilmurrah; boarding-out is not tried in Listowel to any extent, or Cahersiveen?—Looking at it from the taxation point of view there are portions of Dingle which pay for that Dingle Railway alone 1s. 6d. in the £.

25348. CHAIRMAN.—The Blackets?—No, but between Tralee and Dingle on the mainland, between Kilmurrah and Headford Junction the average rate for that railway is about 9d. in the £, and only for the grant we get under the Local Government Act it would be, perhaps, 1s. or 1s. 4d.; the average rate is 2s. 6d. in the £ on agricultural land, and then a rate of 8d. or 1s. in the £ for the railway on some of the poorest of the poor people.

25349. I suppose the Blacket Islands have to pay these charges?—I suppose so, but Mr. Quinlan, the Secretary of the County Council, can tell you. As Mr. Murtaghan knows, for six months I am away, and perhaps don't attend more than one or two meetings of the County Council.

25350. You seem to have been doing good work for them while you were away?—I endeavor to do it; I have seen the burden of taxation so high my object has been to reduce the taxation but at the same time not to see the poor suffer. I am prepared even to increase the taxation by giving greater facilities for the housing of the poor people.

25351. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The Dingle poor rate is very high, the second highest in Ireland.—3s. 1d. in the £ last year.—Speaking roughly I should say the rate in the urban district of Tralee is fully 10s. in the £. I remember one time in Listowel the rates were 12s. or 13s. in the £, owing to a scheme of water works proposed.

25352. CHAIRMAN.—That would be under the Public Health Act, with which we are not concerned.—The whole thing proved a fiasco and the people have to pay for it. We are rather chary about promises; our experience in Kerry is that lots of works were proposed, and the taxes were to be nil, but we found that the taxation has gone up by leaps and bounds. I quite agree that your only object is to cut down taxation and in that I am quite with you.

25353. You mentioned that one of your objects in coming here was with reference to the county infirmary and that Col. Rowan would go into the details; is there anything you would wish to say about the county infirmary?—I don't think there is anything in particular, but I would agree with what Mr. McMahon said; it is hard on North Kerry, but it is not so poor as other parts of the county; it is very hard on an impoverished place like Sneem to say they should bear as high a burden of taxation as the rural district of Tralee or Listowel.

25354. Did you ever hear the question raised whether the acutely sick might not be made a county-at-large charge, as a class that would not be increased by anything except what we might call a visitation of Providence, would you consider the question of making every hospital in Listowel, Dingle, Tralee, Kilmurrah, and everywhere else, making the support of the sick a county charge?—What do you mean by the sick?

25356. The only reason I put you that question is that you are pointing out the hardship of people from a distance like Listowel, Dingle, and Kilmurrah, paying the same per £ of valuation as they are in Tralee; the County Infirmary then would not be the only county place for the sick, but every place where the acutely sick are treated, as in the infirmary, would be a county charge all over the county?—Then you would give no relief to these very poorer districts by that suggestion; Sneem would have to pay for Tralee, and Tralee for Sneem, and you would have a universal rate over the county. If a large number of patients came from Sneem to the County Infirmary they ought to pay for any patients they send; I am in favour of that.

25357. That would rarely come into operation, because you will not have many people from Sneem coming to the County Infirmary.—You would not. I must say under the Non-Resident condition of everything in the infirmary is far improved over what it was three or four years ago.

26356. Do you think that instead of being a relief to Smeem or Listowel to have the support of the sick made a county charge, it might result in being a still greater injury to them?—I am afraid it would.

26358. Dr. BROOKES.—Under the system the Chairman mentions the Tralee people would be helping to support the small hospital at Smeem, supposing there was one there.—The size of the hospital in Smeem would be very small as compared with the one in Tralee; then if you take the poverty of the district and the poverty of the people themselves, and their present high rates, for the rates at Smeem at the present moment are far and away higher than in any part of the Tralee Rural District, and that on the poorest part of the county.

26359. Unless you establish some such system it will be awkward to establish a small hospital at Smeem unless you put it on another district?—If the Chairman's suggestion was carried out they could not be worse than they are now.

26361. You would fear it might be a serious injury instead of a benefit making it a county charge?—That is outside the question altogether, and I know it does not come within your Commission; I don't want to discuss the land question, but fully half the tenants round Smeem have never got any hands from the Land Purchase Act, and, being agricultural capitalists, necessarily the taxation must come on them, and they are not able to bear it. I have no hope for the future of some of the congested districts in Kerry.

26362. Mr. MURPHY.—And there is the further danger of want of supervision; if it was a county charge no one would be interested in seeing what patient was able to pay—many people who go to public hospitals are well able to pay?—A great many are. In many cases we find the greatest difficulty in getting anything from people who are well able to pay, with the result that we have to tax the poorest people in the county. My impression was that a County Infirmary was for the poorest of the poor, but people who can pay ought to be made pay something reasonable to meet the rates.

26363. Dr. BROOKES.—You mentioned about a sanatorium for the county—is there a very general expression of opinion about the matter?—I don't think people generally in the county have considered the question seriously. I know at a meeting of the fever hospital twelve or eighteen months ago the Committee of which I am a member—I am very seldom asked to attend the meetings, why I cannot say—but there was a resolution passed in favour of it. From my knowledge of the County Kerry I certainly think the time has come—in fact the time has passed—that some steps should have been taken in my judgment.

26364. You know there is a great deal of consumption in the County Kerry?—I believe there is a great amount of it, I am sorry to say.

26365. Have you any knowledge where consumption has been spread by one patient to another in the same house?—I think amongst the medical profession themselves they are decidedly of opinion that it is not hereditary.

Dr. BROOKES.—Oh, there is no question; it is beyond that now.

26366. CHAIRMAN.—It is generally accepted as infectious?—In my opinion that is so, and consumption in a great many cases can be prevented if taken at its initial stage.

26367. The institution would not only cure so many cases, but would prevent the spread of it to others?—In my opinion, yes.

26368. Would you put it on the same basis as the County Infirmary, and make it a county charge?—I certainly would make it a county charge; I believe one portion of the county will suffer as much from consumption patients as any other portion, and the most likely to suffer are the poor places who can pay the least.

26369. Or possibly you would make it a charge embracing two or three counties?—I would like to spread the cost, because it is a question that the Local Government Board or some of the many bodies we have in Ireland ought to take up and insist that the Government should take an interest in it, and have a Government contribution.

26370. You think a Government contribution might fairly be asked for it?—Unquestionably; I have often heard Mr. Wyndham say he has been inclined to help those who help themselves; I think we in Kerry have helped ourselves, from the taxation point of view, more than any other county in Ireland, and some portions of it have received no benefit.

26371. As regards your lunatics—is your asylum large enough?—It is only lately it has been increased.

26372. And there is no question of any further increase?—I am afraid there will have to be.

26373. Have you formed any opinion whether workhouses were proper places to keep lunatics?—I should not object to see a separate ward in the workhouse kept for harmless lunatics.

26374. You have not studied the question personally?—No.

26375. Because the members of this Commission, I think, are impressed with the great weight of evidence given to them that the workhouses are not desirable places?—If you take them out of the workhouses they ought to be put in some institution and not allowed to wander at large.

26376. Then you have not considered the question of whether it is wiser to extend the lunatic asylum by further building, or whether it would be possible to keep as at Youghal, Co. Cork, an institution on a more moderate scale of expenditure such as would be obtained if a workhouse were closed?—If it were possible that one of the workhouses should be closed I should be in favour of putting harmless lunatics there and making that a general institution.

26377. In the first place you save the extra expense of additional building in the County Asylum, and you will have one class of harmless lunatics practically all in the same state of lunacy, and all more or less incurable but harmless, and who can be treated with a nominal expense. You are aware that in the last Session of Parliament Bills were brought in, I don't know how far they went, for establishing labour colonies or places for vagrants or tramps who obviously were not doing anything to gain a subsistence for themselves?—I am not aware of such Bills.

26378. I may tell you the scope of the Bill, as far as I understood it, was that power should be given to create, Petty Sessions Courts I suppose, for remitting to such labour colonies or workhouse persons who were going about the country obviously in order to get their subsistence out of the public, and that there they should be taken and placed to work, and efforts made to put them in the way of industrious habits, as all events keeping them from preying on the community by wandering about?—Speaking without knowing the details of the case, I would be largely in favour of it. I have been always in favour of anybody that can work being made to work.

26379. We have a large class of people in Ireland who keep walking about the country caputally avoiding anything in the way of work and obtaining their support partly in workhouses and partly by mendacity?—I think emigration would be a very good cure for that; if they were sent to America they would be made work.

26380. You are aware there is an Act of Congress prohibiting the landing of such people?—I know, but the people who go to America have to work there.

26381. If we could not dump these gentlemen on some foreign territory do you think the next best thing would be to provide some place where they could be kept at labour at home?—I would be in favour of it, but I have not heard the question discussed before, and therefore would not express a decided opinion. Even a limited amount of work will do gentlemen like these more good than harm.

25384. They might be put into industrious habits, some of them?—Certainly.

Mr. Walsh (Solicitor).—I am anxious to ask you a question.

CHAIRMAN.—We are here to ask questions, I am afraid, not to answer them, but there is no harm for you to put it.

Mr. Walsh.—How are the officers to be dealt with?

CHAIRMAN.—That is a matter for the Legislature.

Mr. Walsh.—I mean officers whose positions have been abolished?

CHAIRMAN.—That is a matter for the Legislature; we are not empowered to deal with anything, only to make a report, and on that report legislation will be founded. I may say that I think we are all pretty well of opinion that it would be very unjust to take away a man's living from him without adequate compensation; does that answer your question?

Mr. Walsh.—Would that apply to the case where a teacher in the workhouse has been deprived of his position?

CHAIRMAN.—I should think it would apply to any officer who received a salary.

Mr. Walsh.—In the case of an officer whose office has been abolished, would you give a recommendation that he received some compensation?

CHAIRMAN.—I am sure we shall; personally I would.

Mr. Walsh.—Otherwise it would be very hard on men that had been all their lives there.

CHAIRMAN.—It would be inconceivably unjust that anything should be done except to make such a recommendation.

Mr. Quillen.—The County Council have passed a resolution on this subject, which I will hand in (produced).

Jan. 17, 1866.

Mr. M. J. Flavin.

Mr. PATRICK FOUNT, Vice-Chairman, Dingle Union, examined.

25385. CHAIRMAN.—You are Vice-Chairman of the Dingle District Council or Board of Guardians?—Of both.

25386. What resolution have the Dingle Board passed on the subject of amalgamation?—As far as I am aware they have passed no resolution whatsoever.

25387. What is the general opinion of the Board on the question of amalgamation?—I would not like to venture to speak in the name of the whole Board.

25388. Was there a division on the subject without coming to an actual decision in numbers—was there any division of opinion on the subject?—No; I think the question was not considered, only marked read and persons nominated.

25389. What is your own personal opinion on this question of amalgamation?—I say that it is expedient to dissolve the whole of the Dingle Union except the hospital, which could be converted into the district hospital, possibly under Section 90 of the Local Government Act.

25390. You would close the workhouse except for the purposes of the sick?—I say cut away two-fifths of the union and amalgamate it with Tralee; Tralee would be as convenient for the sick part of two-fifths of the union as Dingle. I refer to Castlegregory and portion of Anascahan Dispensary District, because that chain of mountains is very troublesome, and it is one of the highest in Ireland, and I think the District Committee would manage the hospital.

25391. Then for the sick of the country to the west of the range of mountains you would keep the hospital in Dingle?—Yes.

25392. You would let the sick of Castlegregory and the northern part of Anascahan district go to Tralee?—Yes.

25393. As regards the able-bodied for the whole of the present Dingle Union you would let them go to the central house at Tralee?—Yes.

25394. And you would only keep up wards for the sick of that portion west of the mountains?—Yes. There are four dispensary districts in the Union of Dingle—Ventry, Dingle, Anascahan and Castlegregory. Anascahan and Castlegregory are on this side of Dingle. I am sure you know the district.

25395. I have a sufficient general knowledge to follow you?—The Castlegregory patients sometimes have to go back to the Junction and then to Dingle. The Relieving Officers are compelled to send them that way, and when they get to the Junction they would be much nearer Tralee. The Relieving Officer at Anascahan has to travel nine or ten miles by rail to attend sick at Dingle every Board day, and it would be almost as convenient for him to attend in Tralee. Most of the Anascahan district lies near to Tralee—in fact nearer than to Dingle. Now, taking Castlegregory, I have already pointed out to you about the difficulty of crossing the hill. I would have the whole of the old and infirm at present in Dingle Union treated as hospital inpatients.

25396. Where?—In the Dingle Union; I would have them classed as hospital patients.

25397. You would have a very large number, more than three-fifths of the inmates?—Yes.

25398. Did you make an estimate from the register or through the Master of the number of infirm and sick you would have?—Yes. Let me draw your attention to the expense of maintaining the Dingle Union. The population of the union in 1851 was about 1,200, but according to the present day requirements of the Local Government Board it is capable of accommodating 853 inmates. Now I wish to draw your attention to that number. We are required to keep up a building at considerable cost to accommodate 853 inmates; that was taken by me in the week ending December 15th. I find that the state of the workhouse for the week ending Saturday, 14th December, 1866, showed that only 150 inmates were in the workhouse, and of that number 70 were in the hospital. At present very few able-bodied persons visit the workhouse excepting night lodgers or casuals. It would appear monstrous that a poor district so heavily taxed as the Dingle district is, should be asked to maintain such large buildings. The average cost of maintaining these buildings and keeping them in repair amounts to £200 a year. I beg to state for your consideration that two and a quarter hours in a train from Dingle to Tralee is not too much for any able-bodied person. I cannot say what the accommodation in the Tralee Union is.

25399. We will have the figures and can apply them for you?—I am sure they could accommodate all the able-bodied men in the Dingle Workhouse here in Tralee. I would send all the able-bodied persons of this district of twelve months' residence thence into the Tralee Workhouse, and I would reserve the Probationary Ward for urgent cases. I would have the Dingle Hospital under a District Committee, in connection with that point I would wish to say that in case of contagious diseases I would have the Medical Officer to use his own discretion as to whether it would be advisable to send such persons to Dingle or Tralee.

25400. You don't contemplate sending the sick anywhere except to Dingle from the two-fifths?—I do not, but in any case where the Medical Officer of the district in the case of contagious diseases in the three-fifths would think it convenient to send them to Dingle, to let him use his discretion.

25401. What has you in your mind?—A fever case in Anascahan or part of Castlegregory.

25402. Which would be the worst institution?—Dingle would be the nearest, but it is very often the case that you could not enter Connor Hall, and in that case I would allow the Medical Officer to send them to the nearest place; I would like to impress that on your minds; that would remove all hardship, and to remove the Dingle Hospital managed by a District Committee appointed by the Board of Guardians of Tralee.

25403. Do you contemplate the breaking up of the Rural District Council as distinguished from the Board of Guardians?—No; I would abolish the Board of Guardians at Dingle and substitute a Committee of Management.

25404. Why could not you let the Rural District Council of Dingle manage it?—I would have different men altogether for Guardians; the representation at present is too large.

25405. Would you trust the Tralee men more than the Dingle men?—No; I would have representation from Dingle in Tralee by converting every three electoral divisions both in Tralee and Dingle into one rural district electoral division, each division to have only one representative elected.

25406. Would not that make the attendance very slack?—I think that would hardly interfere with us if we had the hospital as a district hospital.

25407. You would have the district hospital managed from Tralee?—Only by a District Committee appointed.

25408. I don't quite see the advantage of having the district hospital managed by people resident in Tralee who know nothing about it?—I would have it composed of men of the Dingle district, but nominated by the Trades Board of Guardians on the same principle as committees are appointed by the County Councils for the management of railways, hospitals, &c.

25409. Why would you not have the Rural District Council of Dingle manage the hospital?—I think the number entirely too large.

25410. Mr. MURPHY.—What is the average attendance at Dingle?—It is very small, not over six or eight men on an average?—Yes, on the average I think it is, but you will find it is the same members almost that attend to their duties sweating after meeting. The majority of the others come for some special purpose, and, after disposing of that, run away; and therefore I think the men from the town of Dingle would be better able to manage it.

25411. CHAIRMAN.—Have you fifty District Commissioners?—Forty-four.

25412. There are ninety-three in Trades?—I think the representation all round too large.

25413. If you think you have too many in Dingle you would be going to ninety-three instead of forty-four?—The law should be altered so as to reduce it all round.

25414. What is your next head of evidence?—I wish to point out to you that if we keep the Dingle Workhouse in its present state it cannot be worked at all. I think it is a waste of time to ask forty-four men to assemble Saturday after Saturday in Dingle Union for the admission of 151 patients, considering that 178 cases, embracing 311 destitute persons, are relieved outside the workhouse. I wish to direct particular attention to this paragraph about the workhouse for the Dingle Workhouse—your Board is continually hammering at us to bring water to these buildings.

Some years ago it was proposed to bring water to this hospital from the springs at Ballyhea, but here it was found that two mill rights were concerned and should be compensated. Your Board has been continually coming very hard on us, and your Inspectors daily repeating, but I regret to say they have never suggested anything like a practical remedy, and in that way we have been put to unnecessary expense; and I certainly say if it was any other Board in Ireland with the same powers conferred on them as is conferred on your Board with power to surcharge, they certainly would have surcharged you, because you have had all this information before you.

25415. I am not sure that I understand the position correctly—the position is there is a deficient supply of water for your workhouse?—Yes, owing to the height of the buildings.

25416. You have not a sufficient supply of water?—Nor so easily means of getting it.

25417. Have you ever consulted any engineer on the subject?—Yes, and even your Board advertised an inquiry to be held into it, and the Inspector never turned up—the people petitioned against it.

25418. Did you ever get any engineer?—Yes, we got Mr. Goodwin, the County Surveyor.

25419. What did he say?—He said that it could be; I have his report; he estimated the cost at something like $5,000, that and the sewage of the workhouse, but it was found then again that his estimate was not sufficient, and besides the source of supply runs short there owing to the height of the buildings. I say that there is no remedy at all if we are to comply with the requirements of your Board; I don't see how it can be done unless you sink the whole district, or the workhouse must go.

25420. Your evidence will be on record, and you may be sure it will be carefully considered?—It is a great expense to our union to be losing so much money in getting plans and specifications and sending them up and down, and paying engineers, and this scheme has no earthly chance of being carried out owing to the height; it is utterly impossible to get a certain supply of water for the sewage of the hospital. Several attempts have been made, and large sums of money have been expended, in formulating schemes and proposals, and they were all blocked. Some years ago it was proposed to bring water to this hospital from the springs at Ballyhea, but here it was found that two mill rights were concerned and should be compensated, apart from the difficulties arising from the question of costs, source of supply, and mill rights. I see another great objection, namely, where the sewage of the workhouse would be discharged. There is no doubt in my mind that, in consequence of the water in Dingle Harbour being so dead, and the mud banks so numerous, but that all the sewage matter would be thrown up into the town by the tide and would create an offensive stench when discharged so near the town. Therefore it would be necessary to convey it in pipes beyond the Dingle Pier, and there erect a tank that would discharge with the ebbing of the tide, or, as an alternative, it should be conveyed a mile and a half beyond the town, otherwise the inhabitants of Strand-street, Quay-street, &c., would resent such a scheme as that proposed by the county surveyor. After giving this matter my most careful consideration, to the best of my judgment and ability, it would cost the ratepayers at least $20,000, before it could be considered as satisfactorily completed. Of course I may err in that estimate, but it is the best I can give; you will observe, that that sum, with interest, would be a crushing burden upon a poor district like Dingle. I have already pointed out to you the source of supply, the situation of the workhouse buildings, and the height of them over the sea. The springs in the workhouse, which were pointed out to you, with a small scheme of waterworks near the town, in the land of Misses, would be sufficient for the flushing of a district hospital. Remove from the orphan and deserted children the gutter brand by boarding out as many as circumstances would admit, of course under proper supervision of the police and the relieving officer, and send the remainder to some central institution. I am under the impression that children brought up in the workhouse are unfit for the outside world; of course I observe the difficulty in trying to get illegitimate children boarded out.

25421. Some difficulty in getting proper homes?—I think no person would take out illegitimate children.

25422. Our experience is very different to that—I don't think in the Dingle district you will find any proved.

25423. All over Ireland they do so!—When they arrive at fifteen years?

25424. No; when they are two or three years old!—That won't work in the Dingle district. I believe those children in the workhouse learn everything by rote and they are quite useless for the outside world. Then in the Dingle Union, if that scheme were carried out, I would abolish the office of master, matron, schoolmistress, and baker, subject, of course, to pension and compensation for loss of pay that would have to come some fine day whenever it would be abolished, and transfer the office of clerk of the Guardians, at reduced pay, to that of the district hospital committee. By taking away Anneson and Castle-gregory you would be able to reduce the staff in the hospital. I would have the management of the hospital in the hands of a district committee and medical officer. At present the hospital is under the management of the medical officer, and, of course, with a district committee checking him I think it would be sufficient. Great care should be taken in providing the proper supplies for the hospital. Food stuffs should be inspected by officers from the Local Government Board or subjected to some test before being taken into stock. I should think that that would be the most important part of the business.

25425. You might generally trust the workhouse nurses—the man in charge—not to receive bad food for her patients; they are very particular on that subject?—Ah, yes, but there are very often so many flaws left in the specification, and in the form of tender that those things could be put in spite of them. Contractors will try, it is only natural, to send in inferior things. That has been my experience, in fact it has been the most impudacious thing, and you may remember that two inquiries have been held in connection with the meat, and even at present the contracts are not satisfactory. I think if those food stuffs and supplies were inspected by some officer and subjected to a test that there would be as earthly chance of that being done. I would be in favour of converting the office of master and porter into that of a storekeeper, who would be a porter in the hospital.

25426. If such an officer would be necessary at all?—I think some person would want to look after the stores, and also over the admission of patients into the workhouse. Idiots and lunatics should be sent to some central institution; this would reduce the expense, and they would be better cared for. The present state of the law, requiring outdoor relief to be raised wholly at a union charge, is most objectionable. Since outdoor relief was raised as a union charge it has considerably increased, and in this reagent Guardians are inclined to support all applications from the electoral divisions they represent. If these cases were charged to the electoral divisions which these gentlemen represent I am of opinion many of them would never find their way into the relief list.

25427. Would you have the cases of outdoor relief dealt with at Dingle only, those west of the mountain?—Yes.

25428. The others would be dealt with in Tralee?—Yes. On this matter I beg to refer you to the report of the auditor for the half-year ending 31st March, 1901.

25429. If you give me a reference to the date of the report we can refer to it ourselves?—"Banner's Hotel, 2nd September, 1901." He says: "I notice that the expenditure on outdoor relief shows a decided tendency to increase, the amount so expended this half-year being £335 10s. 10d. as against £256 18s. 8d. in the corresponding period of last year. I cannot ascertain what any greater distress prevailed in the half-year under notice as compared with the half-year immediately preceding it, still the relief given is £78 10s. 10d. higher than any half-year since March, 1900. I would ask the Guardians to be very careful in the granting of outdoor relief, as, unless carefully looked after, the expenditure in this respect is apt to increase very quickly."—C. H. O'CONNOR.

Of course the system of raising outdoor relief as a union-at-large charge materially benefits the poorer workmen. In order to prevent an abuse of the outdoor relief I would suggest, as a remedy, that supplies be contracted for by the Board of Guardians and inspected by persons to be appointed by the Local Government Board, then let the relieving officer issue a ticket to the shopkeeper having charge of these supplies, with directions to give relief in kind, to the amount allowed by the Guardians or committee appointed by the Guardians for that purpose.

25430. At Dingle only?—Yes.

25431. So people from Smerrick would have to come into Dingle for their relief?—Yes; I should think there would not be any hardship at all; they would send persons in. At present the relieving officer does not go ten miles to the west of Dingle; they send in their passbook with some friend of theirs.

25432. Are you not aware that the relieving officer notices himself liable to demand if he does not visit these people periodically?—I fear many would be dismissed, and I think there is no necessity for such a strict rule.

25433. Are you aware, when visits are not paid, that people sometimes die and the relief is continued to be paid to the dead person's representatives?—I am glad to say that does not occur to my knowledge, and I never heard of a case occurring.

25434. You would not look on it with favour that a relieving officer should not carry out the instructions under which he was appointed—to visit the people periodically?—They go through the district very often, and they know the district very well and Dingle.

25435. I am only taking the most extreme case when I say death; there are plenty of other circumstances; if they get a resistance from Amos or something that would make them, independent for a long time of any relief, would the relief go on as usual?—I am sorry to say in the present state of the law it would go on.

25436. Not under the present state of the law, but under the present state of the administration of the law?—It will go on no matter what we think of it, I fear.

25437. Do you think the union-at-large charge is a waste charge?—I do.

25438. What save would you have?—Of course I would have, first of all, a certain scale laid down to run as a union-at-large charge, but any part that exceeded that I would have the excess charge put on those portions, except in case of epidemic or some exceptional circumstances.

25439. Take the ordinary relief, so I understand you to say that you would first have a portion of that a union-at-large charge?—Yes.

25440. And anything over that amount per annum or per week; anything that was over that you would levy it off the electoral division?—That is my point.

25441. What do you think would be a fair proportion between the union-at-large and the electoral division, would it be half and half, or three-fourths and one-fourth?—I would take the average rate for three years before the passing of the Local Government Act, and I would take that altogether as the union-at-large charge, and anything exceeding that I would have an electoral division charge except in cases of exceptional distress.

25442. That is dealt with under a special clause of the Act of 1898?—Yes; but I think it is the County Council has the levying of it and it must be raised as a county-at-large charge.

25443. Partly, to the extent of 5s. 6d.—Take for instance that a tradesman from the parish of Dranganee was drowned at sea, or two or three people, it would be very hard to raise that excess on the electoral division, but I would give power to the ratepayers of that district to petition the Local Government Board and have that levied as a union charge.

25444. Mr. MURKIN.—What benefit do you see in that?—It would check the present tendency to increase the relief.

25445. Don't elaborate so much, I want to know what benefit you see in that; do you not see that every electoral division would rush in and qualify up to the standard?—Oh, no.

25446. Would not every electoral division insist on what they are getting now?

CHAIRMAN.—There would be no motive for economy?—I think there would.

25447. Mr. MURKIN.—Would not the representative of each division insist he would get his present benefit?—What I propose is to raise a regular rate all over the union and then the excess—

25448. I know; you would suggest that the average for the last three years should be taken as the standard, and anything over that should be an electoral division charge?—Yes.

25449. I ask you where you see the advantage; would it not happen that each representative of an electoral division would try and qualify to get as much for his division as would bring him up to the standard; otherwise his constituents might very well say he was neglecting their interests. Perhaps there is another way of doing it; your object is to benefit the towns, to give them the advantage they possess at present?—Oh, no.

25450. CHAIRMAN.—Your object is to reduce expenditure on outdoor relief, or rather to prevent its increase?—An abuse of the present system, because I believe it is abused; every man will rush in, and when they see one man getting in from one division he will say he himself is entitled to it also.

25451. Coming to the root of the matter, do you think there has been a little but over-generous administration of outdoor relief since 1898?—I do.

25452. Therefore don't you think the expenditure since 1898 has been excessive?—I do.

25453. Why then would you take an average of three years since 1898 as the proper standard for outdoor relief?—I say before 1898.

25454. Mr. MURKIN.—May it not happen that, though the amount has increased, the number in the house has diminished and the people now are living outside on outdoor relief at a less cost to the union than would be in the house now; may not that happen?—I don't know that.

25455. Cases where it does happen could be cited, where, though the outdoor relief has increased, the sum total has decreased, because the cost outside is much less than the cost of in-maintenance; that is a matter that would have to be inquired into.—Taking the number of patients in the workhouse before the passing of the Act, and afterwards, I took a note of them last night and I find the number is exactly the same.

25456. Perhaps some of the people in those days were fairly well able to support themselves and during the process of time got old and feeble and were not able to do so; while outdoor relief might appear to increase, the general cost of the Poor Law to the union might not, because those people, if they did not get outdoor relief, might have to come into the house?—My point is that we have the same number still in the workhouse that we had before the passing of the Act; the same number just as we have to-day, and outdoor relief is increasing.

25457. I am afraid the average standard would be of little benefit to check expenditure on outdoor relief, because every electoral division would insist on qualifying up to the full quota?—They could not quality. Then they would not expect it because they would know they would have to raise the charge on that electoral division.

25458. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Marzaghian's point is that at all events you would stereotype the outdoor relief as it was for the three years before 1893; if you go on the other plan of saying that a proportion, say half and half, that half should be paid by the district and half by the union-at-large, there you would have a motive for making the expenditure as small as possible?—That would not benefit so much the poorer parishes, but I would agree to three-fourths.

25459. You mean where the population is most numerous; there you might have the old provision that was in the Act before 1893 for a rate in aid for those who were most highly taxed; you are aware that before 1893 there was such a provision?—I am not aware exactly of that provision.

25460. There was such a provision, and that added the towns and populous places?—That is what I would like.

25461. That would naturally come back if divisional rating came back in any form. If you adopt a standard the tendency would be that this expenditure would never go below that standard?—I certainly believe that, while the Guardians all round the union would be inclined to keep it down, a man representing a certain division, when he knew he would be responsible if the rate on his division was raised, he would make sure not to allow them to succeed; that is my point in case you should not adopt giving relief in kind.

25462. The suggestion of relief in kind has been made already; there is a good deal in the suggestion, but how far it is practicable is another question. It is easy enough in the towns; all the outdoor relief in Dublin is given in kind?—I would not have it in any town given in any other way. I am sorry to say that I believe some of the outdoor relief is drunk. The law excluding the child of an able-bodied person from entering into the workhouse at the death of its mother, or refusing to grant outdoor relief, should be altered and amended. I consider it the greatest hardship on any poor man, with seven or eight in family, whose wife is dead, and has left seven or eight children—the youngest probably only six months old—and cannot find any person to take charge of such child unless he comes into the workhouse, that he cannot be relieved in any way. The mother of children can travel about, but the poor man so circumstanced is the very hardest case I ever experienced, and in many cases I thought it right to err on the side of mercy and strain the law and relieve the applicant.

25463. At present I suppose he is driven to the hazardous experiment of a second marriage?—I don't know that at all. What I wish to impress on this Commission is that a poor man so circumstanced, after losing his wife, cannot be relieved. The law that gives auditors power to surcharge the Guardians in such a case, which they will always do, is a very bad law.

25464. The auditor is bound to surcharge?—And he does it. I would suggest amending the law so as to enable destitute fathers, having the care of children under three years of age, to be relieved inside or outside of the workhouse. Also I would be in favour of enabling farmers, whose wives should die, to send any child under three years of age to the workhouse, there to be relieved by way of a loan; I say children under three years of age; a farmer would not get any servant to come to the house; that is my experience of the West. When one or two cases of this kind occurred the doctor, I think, did strain the law by giving certificates of illness to the applicants for the hospital, and the Local Government raised no objection.

25465. They know nothing about it, I suppose?—The matter was referred to them. Now in connection with the auditors; if it comes within the scope of your inquiry I would like to bring it under your notice because it affects the starving of paupers for outdoor relief; the proper persons to be appointed as auditors are the clerks of unions, provided that they are good accountants and possess sufficient knowledge of the Poor Laws. It is of the utmost importance to all the public bodies in Ireland that the present law, regulating the surcharging of Guardians who sign the treasurer's authority for the payment of goods delivered in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the majority of the Guardians, is defective. In my opinion the Guardians refusing to accept the lowest tender for the best value ought to be the parsons surcharged, and not the three men who sign the authority as is now the custom. If auditors continue to surcharge such persons it will be the cause of leaving the authority for outdoor relief unanaged. Power of taking the auditors before a county court judges with a right of appeal ought to be allowed persons surcharged. I think it is a hard thing that a person has to go before the Local Government Board.

25466. He has only to sign a petition?—It is carrying the auditors before his own court after all.

25467. If you look to the statistics of decisions you will not find much in that; you will find the number of reversals is very large; we have your suggestion anyway?—I would certainly wish to impress this point on you, the outdoor relief will certainly be brought to a standstill if the men who sign the authority are surcharged. It is a monstrous thing to say that a man who goes into the union; all the information he has is from the clerk; the resolution may have been passed at a previous meeting; he has no reason to think there is anything wrong, yet, when he signs the pay-sheet, he may be surcharged. If the person who supplied these goods, even if not supplied strictly in accordance with the law, still the contractor will take a person into the county court and secure him, and then the auditor will turn round and surcharge the person who signs the paying authority. I think the proper persons to be surcharged are the persons who were the cause of having the goods supplied to the workhouse. The Commissioner of Valuation can be taken to the county court, and it is strange to say the auditors of the Local Government Board cannot be taken.

25468. A court of law has to deal with legality and legal questions; we have a note of your suggestions, but I don't fancy you would gain very much by an appeal on legal grounds, because an auditor will not make a surcharge until he is satisfied in point of law?—Both in law and in fact, I think it ought to be carried out.

25469. You don't give legal tribunals those discretionary powers conferred on auditors?—Parliament would not be very long in doing it.

25470. Parliament does not customarily do a thing of that sort; legal tribunals are confined to legal matters?—If the auditors are allowed this fall upon the Boards might as well not be there at all. The principal point is the treasurer's authority; the clerk, who knows all about the resolutions that are adopted, and does not point this out to the person who signs the treasurer's authority before signing it, ought to be made accountable and surcharged.

25471. I think the clerk would be acting very improperly if he did not put that view of the case before a Guardian?—But they don't do it.

25472. I think they do it as a rule?—A resolution might never be rescinded; then it is binding on the Board. A clerk should, at any rate, satisfy the person signing the treasurer's authority of all the circumstances connected with the case and make some minute of it, which he should produce before asking it to be signed.

25473. You have it in your own power to ensure that. Instead of having cheques presented during the hurry and scurry of a Board meeting, if you had a finance committee, who had nothing else to do, to come there an hour or an hour and a half before the meeting of the Board of Guardians and go carefully into these things?—That has been done.

25474. Then it is very queer you would get surcharged without knowing the whole story?—Let me take a printing contract.

25475. I don't think you need go into details; we have your suggestion, and that is quite enough?—In my opinion the proper persons to be inspectors of workhouses and hospitals are the masters of workhouses. Every other day we have inspectors visiting our union and finding fault, but never suggesting any practical remedy. In case of elections, and the appointing of a person to any pensionable office, I would be inclined to have him elected by ballot; this would ensure the election of better officers, and remove corruption. In the case of tramps and casuals, I would have those go to the police barracks for tickets of admission to the probatory ward instead of going to the relieving officer; it would discourage those who go to the workhouse, and prevent drunkenness, and lead to the detection of criminals. The police need not be called to the workhouses for the purpose of ascertaining whether any criminal was admitted. In connection with the county infirmary and fever hospital, I protest against that being charged to our district.

Mr. THOMAS O'FLAHERTY, P.L.O., examined.

26476. CHAIRMAN.—You have been here during portion of the evidence of Mr. Foley?—No; I have not.

26477. Apart from what he stated, perhaps you will kindly give your own views on the question of amalgamation of unions in Kerry?—So far as amalgamation is concerned, and so far as Dingle is concerned, I think it would be altogether unsuitable.

26478. Would you make any change in the existing system or allow matters to proceed as they are?—To proceed as they are; the only change I would make would be with regard to the pumpkins brought up in the workhouses. "The subject of the moral and intellectual culture of workhouse children, as well as of their industrial training, is one that demands the serious attention of the public, affecting, as it does so deeply, the question of the education or perpetration, perhaps I might have said propagation, of pauperism in this country. Whilst it must be admitted that a good deal has been done in the line of minimising the helplessness and improving the general condition of the class above indicated, it cannot, at the same time, be denied that in our system there is still a void that requires to be filled up before anything like results, satisfactory and permanent, become discernible. Howard's labours in the reformation of a class, the members of which were the immediate cause of their own sufferings and miseries, have, and justly so, gained for his name immortality; but who will deny that there is as much, if not more, real philanthropy in devising and adopting measures calculated to prevent the orphan, the deserted child, the other unprotected offspring of our race, from being, as they advance in years, dragged into the vortex of crime and its consequences? It is true that, during the years of their helpless childhood, maintenance, clothing, and housing in the workhouse are provided for those advanced to; but when they pass that age what provision has been made to so educate them that instead of continuing in after life a heavy, permanent burden on society, they may be converted into intelligent reproductive citizens, looking upon labour, not as a slavish drudgery, but as an honorable, invigorating occupation? As matters stand at present, the workhouse-trained child, when he passes a stated age, is launched on the tempestuous voyage of life without chart or compass to guide his course. Brought up as he has been, in comparative isolation from the outside world, possessing no acquaintance with, or experience of, how he may raise himself above the condition of absolute dependence in which he has hitherto, as it were, reposed, he leaves, what he looks upon as his natural home, as aimless and helpless as the very infant. To remedy this state of things several plans have been from time to time proposed; but, beyond more speculative suggestions, no tangible steps have, up to this, been taken to carry into practice any of the various proposals. The workhouse training, if training such discipline may be called, is as confined to prepare the proper child for the ordinary duties of life, as are the mechanical contrivances that enter into the construction of an automaton, to endow it with feeling and thought, and reasoning faculties. How long, it may be asked, is this stereotyped unprogressive condition of affairs to be allowed to continue? Have philanthropy and humanity as well as another noble trait in the Celtic character, namely, an innate tendency to sympathise with and relieve the distressed and the belated, vanished as an attribute of the disposition of the Irishman of our day? I believe not. The question now arises: What are the most effective and economical means that suggest themselves to so raise the status of the workhouse-trained child, that, instead of looking to the workhouse as a permanent home, and pauperism as an inheritance, he may be transformed into a self-reliant, reproductive member of society, according the idea of living on the wages of industry and mendacity—public or private charity. What a blot on civilisation, what a blot on humanity, that the condition of a creature, formed after God's own image, should attract so little interest. The destitute and infirm members of our population that need relief are, unfortunately, only too numerous. It is then, let me ask, a wise policy to raise up a reserve to recruit the ranks of destitution as they become thinned by death. Our present elementary system has no better tendency." I have not finished the paper; I have not made suggestions.

26479. I must say it is a very finished production?—What I would suggest is this, that for these children, when they pass a certain age, that a district school be established within the ambit of a limited number of unions, Tralee, Listowel, and Dingle might be combined for this purpose.

26480. Would you not be at all afraid that the machinery for producing an automaton might operate there too?—It is possible it may, but it is possible not; I would combine these three and establish a district school, that the children from the three unions would attend, and I would further have a pretty good-sized farm attached to this where the children could be taught agriculture or other industries, if necessary, according as they had a taste or a talent for them, and then send them on the world when they pass sixteen or seventeen years, and they will be prepared to earn a livelihood for themselves. As it is all known that workhouse children are quite useless. When they leave the workhouse they become nothing else than tramps or vagrants, and then something should be done, and I consider it is quite necessary, in fact it is philanthropy to do something to rescue these children from future misery.

26481. Don't you think that it is a little bit too gloomy a view to take of the way in which workhouse children turn out?—I don't think it is; I have seen some of them leave the workhouse and they were as useless in the world as infant children.

26482. They are not handy or self-reliant?—No; they would hardly know the horse's tail from the horse's head if taken in by a farmer.

26483. Mr. MURKIN.—Why do you not send some of the children into the country to learn the habits of ordinary life?—I cannot say what is the reason.

26484. Your Board have never done anything in that way?—No; I say children are brought up quite useless in the workhouse; they are like a sort of laboratory to change food into nutriment, but so far as amalgamation is concerned—

26485. CHAIRMAN.—You would let things remain as they are except as regards the children?—Except as regards the children.

26486. What would you do as regards outdoor relief?—I think as it is given, it is given very economically in our union.

26487. You don't see any necessity for safeguarding it any further?—I do not indeed; I don't think there could be more economy practised than there is in our union.

26488. As regards tramps, do you think anything might be done to prevent the supply of tramps continuing or increasing?—My suggestion would be that a tramp be not allowed into the workhouse without an admission ticket from the police.

26489. What instructions would you give to the police?—If the tramp was able to work I would send him to jail.

26490. You would have to supply some place to which these people could be sent, the ordinary jails would not be sufficient?—I think they would; in Kerry at least they would.

26491. You would make them ordinary prisoners? Undoubtedly.

26492. You would not put them into a labour colony?—After they were sent to jail I would make them break stones.

26493. You would put them into some place where they might be trained, and, if possible, give them an inclination to industry?—Most of the tramps I see are beyond training.

26494. You would be afraid that they are incurable? Yes; incurable; I know it is a great nuisance.

26495. Mr. MURKIN.—The younger ones might be cured?—They might, certainly, when they are under twenty years of age, but when they pass twenty I do not see that it is possible to cure or reform them.

26496. CHAIRMAN.—At all events if you caught the young ones you would stop the further supply.

Mrs. FORAN, P.R.C., Listeral, examined.

Jan. 12, 1906.

Mrs. Foran.

25497. CHAIRMAN.—Will you tell us your views, please, on the question of amalgamation?—My own personal views are that I would wish amalgamation, but the Board does not desire it.

25498. The best plan is for you to give us your personal views. What would you suggest as regards the part of the county you are acquainted with?—My suggestion would be to abolish workhouses as they are at present.

25499. Are you speaking generally of all Ireland or the County Kerry?—I am speaking of all Ireland. The idea is that there should be no longer establishments in which different people of different classes are huddled together; and I think that people requiring specific treatment of one kind or another should not be in the workhouse altogether. The strongest of my views is about children. I think, as a gentleman who sat here just now said, that children reared in the workhouse are absolutely useless for anything. They are reared in an atmosphere that is bad in every way—morally and physically.

25500. Not made useful or handy, no initiative?—Yes.

25501. How would you propose they should be brought up?—I think by a system of district schools. 25502. Such as Glenties?—Such as Glenties; but there should be different methods; there are several complaints about Glenties. No later than a fortnight since I heard a tiler and bootmaker, who both had children from Glenties, complaining that they did not know how to do anything. I am very sorry for that, because I thought Glenties was a very good establishment.

25503. We were through the shops, and they looked very workmanlike, and the boys seemed to me to be working very well?—I am afraid in schools like that the environment is too narrow; and they are not in sufficient touch with the world.

25504. For a little boy learning to make boots—that comes to the concrete. They seem to be making boots there, and the tailors seem to be making clothes; we stood sufficiently long to look at them doing work?—Were you satisfied with it?

25505. We thought the boys were doing good work?—Those might be individual cases to which I referred. I went to Glenties once or twice, and thought it was a very good school; it certainly is a very great improvement on rearing children in workhouses. We adopted a system of boarding out about two years ago. It was passed unanimously; and then one of the Guardians, I think, Mr. McMahon, got the idea into his head that people would take these children for baby-farming and he asked to have the resolution rescinded.

25506. Was it?—No; we came to an understanding that the children would be boarded out with relatives, but I am afraid it has not been very successful; we have not tried very much.

25507. There is only one child boarded out at present?—I believe if we could find places like they do in the North of Ireland, and in the West, where it has been very successful, and if we could find respectable people to take them, we could have them all boarded out, but we find it very hard to find people that would take them without being well paid. We have really made no strong effort there.

25508. You know the country people, and how important it is to most small houses in the country to get a jump 48 a year in cash?—We allow 48 a year.

25509. Even take 48, you know what tremendous advantage a 48 note is in cash to a family?—Yes, but somehow it does not appear to be a sufficient inducement.

25510. I can understand people in the country being unwilling to take a child who has learned bad ways, but most householders would be glad to take little children of three or four?—It would be an excellent thing if we could do so; it brings the children in touch with the world.

25511. And they become reared as agricultural labourers. Would that system be even better than institution rearing?—Infinitely better. I think epileptics and idiots should not be kept in the workhouse. We have in our workhouse, certainly, a very excellent female attendant, and a good male attendant, too; but certainly it would be better that these poor people should be in separate institutions, and have specific treatment.

25512. They have no exercise ground and no occupation?—No; and the scale of dietary laid down by the Local Government Board is not satisfactory for them.

25513. That is laid down not for the insane but the ordinary poor inmate. You would prefer to have these people brought to a place where they could have some occupation?—Yes, and have the treatment of a specialist.

25514. Is there any other class you would remove from the workhouse?—Yes, the old and the infirm. We have not any married couples in our union; but if there were, I should say we should keep them together, and if possible extend their privileges. In the case of epileptics, sometimes there are some wealthy families who are unfortunate enough to have an epileptic or an idiot in their family, and I think these people should be made responsible for their maintenance according to their means.

25515. That power exists at present, it is merely the administration that is defective. Most of the aged and infirm who go into the workhouse remain there for life?—I think there is a great deal of money mis-spent over the treatment they get in the workhouses. The strictly inmates we have cost £1,060. I think that £1,060 is very badly spent. These people have no occupation or special treatment; and I think if they were put under the care of the nurse—

25516. You have power to do that as it is, as the law stands; and in a very large number of workhouses, such as Galway, that is done?—But I would have them removed from the workhouse. I think they should have a special place for themselves, and special treatment, and be allowed greater liberty. The female infirm in our workhouse are locked into a ward two or three stone stairways up, and the greater part of them never see the outer place of all. I think they should have greater liberty.

25517. If they are well-behaved?—Yes, and then have privilege wards, as a matter of after-consideration. Each workhouse hospital should be made a district hospital, so that persons who would be able to pay would be charged for their treatment and maintenance as in private or ordinary hospitals.

25518. You would give the District Council power to fix what should be paid by each person, according to their means, and power to recover?—I would prefer that it should be fixed by law, by Act of Parliament.

25519. It would be very difficult to fix it by law; you would be bound to fix limits that would not fit all classes; the full average cost is ridiculously small for some persons and a great deal too high for others?—If the workhouse hospital were made a district hospital, it would remove the ban of respectability, and it would be on a broader basis, and be more satisfactory all round. I should think that cottage hospitals would be very necessary.

25520. Where would you say in the Listowel Union?

—Well, Tarbert, and a sanatorium for consumptives.

25521. That would be for the county or a larger area?—For the county, one sanatorium. Consumption is very much on the increase. I don't know if you know that in the ordinary farmhouse you have a number of people sleeping in one apartment.

25522. We are aware how favourable the conditions are for the spread of it?—Usually, they sleep in a bed with a number of curtains round, and probably leave the microbes of consumption for years in the apartment. I think it would be very necessary to take the strongest possible measures to instruct the public as to the great danger there is in proximity to persons so affected.

25523. Make it a notifiable disease, and have separation?—I think the strongest possible measures should be taken about consumptives. It is one of the worst things that has come under my observation. I think tramps should be placed under the absolute control of the police.

25524. And taken from the Poor Law?—Yes; also the law as regards vagrancy, as to strengthen the hands of the local authorities.

25525. Where would you authorize the police or magistrates to send them?—To the police barracks.

25526. That would be for the night. You would make vagrancy an offence. Where would you place them that committed that offence?—In a place set apart under the supervision of the police.

25527. It has been suggested that four for all Ireland—one for each province—would be sufficient?—Surely a tramping union up in Listowel!

25528. Send him to Cork, or wherever the place would be, and keep him there for so many years?—Yes. In our union it is one of the greatest misdeeds.

We have the same tramps coming in this week and next week; they seem to make a home of it; they get nothing to do; they simply come in, and have their food, although perhaps it is not of the best quality, and does not cost very much, yet they give a louse to the rest of the establishment.

26529. And not a very high tent?—Not a very high one. Likewise, I think, would afford you most material statistics on the subject of amalgamation. The average in our union is 270 inmates; it costs £2,422. That seems a great deal. The rates are being paid without any real advantage to the poor people, especially the old and infirm.

Mr. O'Flaherty.—Would it be out of place for me to make one observation with regard to Dingle. Amalgamation would be very inconvenient with regard to Dingle. Dingle is thirty-one miles from this, and there is another district about nine miles to the west of Dingle. You would have to pay the train fare and expenses of the pauper coming in here, and when he wanted to go out you would have to pay it backwards again. The provisions supplied to this Dingle Workhouse are bought from the Dingle shopkeepers; they pay a great part of the rates, and it would be very unfair to take this little advantage away. So far as the tramps are concerned, there was formerly in Dingle a house of correction; that is available still; and if they were sent in there with a person in charge of them, it would suit very well.

Jan. 17, 1896.
Mrs. Fenn.

Mr. FRANCIS FITZGERALD examined.

26530. CHAIRMAN.—You wish, I think, to mention to us some of the results of amalgamation on portion of the old Glin Union now attached to Limerick?—Yes, sir. As to the question of amalgamation, I am in favour of amalgamation generally. At the time the Glin Union was amalgamated, there were seven divisions joined to Limerick and six to the Rathfriland Union. Since then the rates in the Glin division—that is, the four County Limerick divisions—are 43 per cent. higher than any of the neighbouring unions.

26531. That is a tremendous increase?—They were in one year, I think, 1892, 130 per cent. higher than in Rathfriland and Newcastle.

26532. That is owing to the very small valuation?—Of course, it is on account of the district charges principally, not so much the union charge.

26533. We are only sitting as regards the Poor Law, but you want to point out that the result of the Poor Law change and the breaking up of the Glin Union was to put a tremendously high cost upon your neighbourhood under other Acts?—Yes, most oppressive. Then, speaking about the management of unions generally, I would be in favour of paid Guardians for every county.

26534. You would be in favour of—?—Abolishing the present system of management. In the first place, the Boards are cumbersome; you will have forty or fifty or eighty Guardians in one Boardroom.

26535. Or ninety-three in the Tralee Union?—You have very nearly ninety in Limerick, and half the time it is not the business of the union or the poor ratepayers they are thinking about at all, simply that there is some job on. They are quarrelling, and business is not done; but three paid Guardians could do the whole work of the county, supplemented by electing three highly-qualified Guardians in each union.

26536. Three representatives of the ratepayers?—Yes, on a very high qualification; and I would go for co-opting a few lady Guardians in each as well. There is a system of jobbery; it was bad enough before the Local Government Act passed, but it is seven times worse now. I am speaking from twenty years' experience.

26537. Mr. MURRAY.—That is a very strong statement for you to make. You make a very sweeping charge requiring proof; would it not be well to give some instances of how the increase comes about, or how the rates have increased generally, because they have not increased over the county-at-large?—They have increased in our district.

26538. That may be the case, for reasonable cause, in a particular union?—Now you have half the rates paid by the Government, and still the rates are as high as before the grant was given.

26539. If you confine yourself to Poor Law expenditure you will find that the increase in the Poor Law expenditure is very small in the last six or seven years; in fact in some cases it has decreased.

Mr. THOMAS O'CONNELL, A.P., Chairman, Limerick Union, examined.

26540. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Limerick Union?—Yes.

26541. We would be glad to hear your views on this amalgamation question?—In the first place, I am opposed to it. As regards divisional rating, I would go entirely for it, because I believe plural rating is a waste.

26542. What do you mean by "plural rating"?—That is, two Guardians for one division.

CHAIRMAN.—That is over Ireland, Mr. Fitzgerald?—Well, I am speaking of the two counties I have knowledge of.

26540. And you are considering all rates, not merely the rate for the relief of the poor under the Poor Law Act?—I think the relief of the poor is abused. Why, when the Guardians of one portion of the Guardians recommend relief for their friends, the other Guardians say, "We will do the same for ours;" there is no check on it. If you have divisional rating there will be more caution.

26541. That is the evidence we have received very generally—that a great many of those who aim at a very economical administration of the poor rate say the present union-at-large rating is productive of extravagance, and suggest going back to the electoral rating—you are in favour of that, too?—I am in favour of that. But I think the valuation of the divisions should be nearly equalised; because if you have an electoral charge, the low division is pressed very heavily by the establishment charge of the house.

26542. I don't know how you would propose to equalise the valuation?—By amalgamating the lower-rated divisions.

26543. You would not make an electoral division unless it was a proportionate value of the entire district?—I would bring the divisions to the valuation of £4,000 or £5,000.

26544. That would be the standard valuation in your neighbourhood?—Yes. I agree with almost all Mrs. Fenn said. I am thoroughly acquainted with the working of the Glin School, and I have seen from time to time for the last eight or nine years a great many boys and girls turned out, and taking up situations, and becoming very useful servants. I know some of the boys earning £1 or 30s.

26545. You think that school is a good institution?—An industrial school should be in every county, if possible.

26546. On the lines of Glin?—Yes; nothing could be more satisfactory than the way the Glin School is managed.

26547. Mr. MURRAY.—It is certainly a great improvement on the present workhouse?—A great improvement; because the ladies there look after the orphans once they leave the institution, and keep trace of them as long as possible. As a rule, they see they get proper situations, and look after them even after leaving the place. Then, where that could not be met by the establishment of schools of the kind, I would be for the boarding out of children in the workhouse, removing them away from the bad influences of the workhouse.

26548. You would exclude children from the workhouse?—Yes; the Parish Committee could see that they were sent to some thrifty, tidy people that would teach them good habits.

Mr. Francis Fitzgerald.

Mr. Thomas O'Connell.

26542. You would halve the size of the Board of Guardians?—I would reduce them by half, because I believe it increases out-door relief by having—

26543. More to recommend it?—Yes. As far as expenditure in other ways, for waterworks, they should be charged on the dispensary district. Sanitary purposes—

26544. We are not dealing with the sanitary expenditure, but I understand what you mean?—As for tramps, we should impose some penalty on them, that may improve their condition, and cure also.

25555. Would you be in favour of the Guardians getting power to charge patients admitted into their infirmary such sums as the people might be considered reasonably able to pay?—I would. But those who are able to pay, I would charge them up to the full amount; and then I would suggest they should be charged according to their circumstances.

25556. Giving the Guardians discretion to look into their circumstances, and charge them accordingly?—Exactly.

Mr. William
McMahon.

Mr. WILLIAM McMAHON, M.C.C., F.L.C., further examined.

We feel a great deal of difficulty in dealing with the surcharger, and very often with the auditor's report. In the beginning, after the Local Government Act came into force, we were under the impression, and I think the auditors acted on it, that it would be the proposer and secondor and the party that voted for these illegal acts or contracts, whichever they may be, who would be surcharged; and it is still the opinion of the County Council and the Listeral Board of Guardians that that should be strictly enforced.

25557. CHAIRMAN.—You would like to put the saddle on the right horse, and make the man pay who initiated the illegal expenditure?—Exactly. In this Council and the Rural District Council we place a great deal of confidence in our officials; they make up their quarterly payment or half-yearly payments. Say it is for roads. We ask, "Has the county surveyor certified for these roads?" We were told "He has," and we, believing that once the county surveyor gives a certificate the contractor can recover payment, and then, in order to save expense, and not knowing that it was illegal at all, we signed the cheque.

25558. These District Council matters are outside our function?—I have been surcharged myself as not being present at a meeting of the Board of Guardians for signing a sheet for £725, and there were three items picked out of that, and I was surcharged; and, as reported to the public, it looked as if I were guilty of a gross fraud in favour of some near friend of my own. The whole of the items picked out only amounted to £37, and the excuse given by the auditor was that I was not present when these sheets were signed. My name appeared in the minutes voting and carrying a resolution, my name appeared in the partners' books, and still I had no remedy, only to appeal to the Local Government Board, and they remedied it. I will deal with the case of the printing contract in the Listeral Union.

25559. You have only shown us in that instance that the right thing was done?—I want to show that the Local Government Board don't always know what is the proper thing. Now, after the Local Government Act came into operation, the Listeral Board of Guardians advertised a yearly contract for the printing, and it was taken for £50; the next year it was advertised again, and the contract was given at 1½d. a line, and

I think it amounted to £200 or £250. Well, we came to the conclusion that the Press in Kerry—there were three papers there—had joined, for the purpose of getting as much as they possibly could. The next year they wanted 1½d. a line, from four newspapers, and it was refused. The contract was re-advertised, and the Limerick Leader, circulating in Limerick, but not having much circulation in Kerry, was declared contractor for £50. Then the Kerry Press would not send a reporter to the union to report the proceedings.

25560. I suppose you considered that an advantage?—No; the people looked against it, and said we were this and that, so we had to give in. Then, at some suggestions of the ratepayers, another paper was started, which did away with the combination; and, knowing that the paper would break down the combination and enable us to get our contracts cheaper, not alone in our union, but in the County Council as well, in order to try to break down this combination we did give, in some cases—the old contractor began to cut down his prices for the sake of breaking down the opposition, as tradesmen generally do—we did give, for the purpose of cutting down our rates, bigger prices to the new people, and we have been surcharged for that; so that it is not at all times that the Local Government Board can grapple with local circumstances, and be properly represented.

Mr. QUINNELL.—Is any ratepayer entitled to ask Mr. McMahon a question? Mr. McMahon says the cost of advertising has been reduced, not only in his own Council, but in the County Council. Are you aware that when the County Council started the cost of advertising was £200?

Mr. McMahon.—I could not tell you what it was the first year.

Mr. QUINNELL.—Do you know now that it is £200?

Mr. McMahon.—I know you had a tender in here for £2,500, and it was cut down to £200.

Mr. QUINNELL.—That was not the tender at all. I am asking you for positive figures now.

CHAIRMAN.—I presume, from what has occurred, that you have been the contractor. We are not here at all to go into questions of that sort.

Mr. QUINNELL.—He has been giving evidence—

Mr. McMahon.—I gave the figures of the Listeral Union; those are all the figures I gave.

Mr. St. JOHN HENRY DOWNMAN, J.P., M.C.C., examined.

Mr. St. John
Henry Downman.

Shortly, I am in favour of amalgamation of the unions. With regard to the County Council, they passed a resolution against amalgamation; I was not present, so I cannot speak on behalf of the County Council, but my personal view is that we should amalgamate.

25561. If you could effect a substantial saving, and at the same time not inflict hardship on the sick poor? Yes; but outside even the actual saving, I think the advantage would be to the children; to have a place for them separate from the grown-up people would be a very great advantage to these young people coming out afterwards. My experience of these children who have been reared in the union is not favourable to them. If you take an industrial school, they bring the children up in such a different way; they are useful men, and respect themselves better.

25562. Are you aware of many instances of the after-life of children from industrial schools?—I have had experience of about twenty individually.

25563. And those have turned out in an average way well?—Yes; good tradesmen, or labourers, or servants.

25564. What do they turn out as generally?—I know one who is a tailor, another is a carpenter, some of them are farm labourers.

25565. Have you ever considered the question of the expediency of turning out those that you may call waste and strays on society, giving them trades such as you have mentioned, equipping them with trades that could not be aimed at by small ratepayers for their own children?—That is the advantage for these poor people, who have no resources.

25566. Is there much necessity of agricultural labourers in this country?—Oh, yes.

25567. Do you think that the better course for paper of children, or children that we to be supported out of the public rates, do you think it might not be sufficient to aim at putting them forward as agricultural labourers and not as tradesmen?—Possibly, that might be the best, if they were properly trained and in a position to follow that.

25568. What do you think would be the best training for children as agricultural labourers?—I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject to say that.

25569. We have had evidence that the best possible training for an agricultural labourer would be to be trained up from early youth in a farmer's family and obliged to take whatever share of labour came to him or her?—Of course that is one of the ways. But there is a lot of technical knowledge now that is coming out, even with regard to farming work, that you would not learn in an ordinary place.

25570. They will get that too in this way—if they are boarded out in a farmer's family they have to go to the National School and receive such technical instruction as the other children in the community get?—

When they are in a farmer's family they are not treated possibly the same as farmers would treat their own children.

25571. There would be a degree of feeling there certainly, but hardly of treatment?—Well, not exactly treatment, I suppose, as you say, but there would be a strong difference of feeling.

25572. The evidence we have got from a great many quarters is that those boarded-out children were virtually absorbed into the family—they became in after-life often the support of the family?—That has not been my experience.

25573. Have you seen many cases?—Only a few, five or six.

25574. The evidence we have got has been very considerable—and one interesting experiment that has been made in that respect was made by the Cardinal Archbishop, Dr. Logue. He has founded boarding-out for his diocese from a fund placed on his hands for charitable purposes, and there he, in conjunction with a committee of parish priests of the Archdiocese, has children boarded out with families, and the Cardinal has appointed a young lady who acts as inspector of those children, and the result we learned, what up there, has been most satisfactory?—Well, that is very important; we have not that system down here.

25575. You have been connected with the administration of the Kilmaley Lunatic Asylum?—Yes.

25576. Is there any possibility of further accommodation being wanted—for instance, if all the lunatics in workhouses in Kerry were discharged from the workhouses—do you think they ought to be kept in workhouses?—I do not.

25577. Would the asylum be sufficient for their reception, or would it be necessary to consider whether an institution such as that at Youghal or a further extension of the asylum would be the better policy?—I think we should have a separate place for the imbeciles, set the lunatics, the violent lunatics who are treated in the asylum. Where you have idiots I think you should have an idiots' home.

25578. You would have the curable in an asylum, and those who were incurable or required comparatively small attention could go to the auxiliary?—Yes, that would be my view.

25580. As regards the system of payments or contributions in all institutions supported out of the county rates, would you be in favour of giving the local managing body power to ascertain what the patients or patients' friends could, without difficulty, pay, and oblige them to pay such amounts from a very small sum up to the entire cost of maintenance?—I would be in favour of making them pay, and give power to recover. In some of our hospitals we do get donations from people who go in, but that is voluntary.

25581. Mr. MURPHY.—Would you not insist on the managing body seeing for themselves who were able to pay?—It should be compulsory on them to pay.

25582. At present it is optional, and there is a tendency on the part of some members not to make a charge—to be generous at the expense of the ratepayers—do you not think it would be proper to make a provision that those who had means should pay?—Certainly; I know I am connected with the Fever Hospital and Infirmary, and always try to get money out of the people, and do get something a week out of them when they are able to pay. If a farmer comes in who has twenty or thirty cows he pays us so much a week.

25583. CHAIRMAN.—Are you connected with the County Infirmary and Fever Hospital?—Yes.

25584. You have a magnificent hospital at the Fever Hospital adapted for the treatment of diseases—the County Infirmary is also a fairly good hospital?—But it is an old style.

25585. Not a hospital suitable for surgical treatment?—Would you say that? In some surgical cases where there is fever you want a big ward, but if a man is only lying in bed—

25586. At the Fever Hospital you have wards that will compare with those of any modern hospital. Did it ever occur to the people of Tralee that it might be a good thing—the number of patients dealt with in the Fever Hospital is very small; the number of patients dealt with in the County Infirmary is relatively large—did it ever occur to you that it might be a good thing in the interests of the sick to make an exchange of the two buildings, to put the fever cases in the County Infirmary and the surgical cases in the Fever Hospital?—I don't think so. You want good air for fever especially, and you would be right in the town with the old infirmary and rather crowded. The Fever Hospital stands by itself in an open place, and there is less danger of contagion.

25587. There is no danger of contagion, I think, in either?—Possibly not.

25588. Take a hospital in Dublin like the Hardwicke, which is close to a most thickly-populated place, the North Dublin Union, fever cases, including small-pox, are treated there?—On account of the building being larger and well ventilated everything is in favour of it, and the infirmary is rather small.

25589. That is the reason why for surgical cases it is not so good?—A surgical case does not want so much air.

25590. It wants such wards as you have in the Fever Hospital?—The doctor knows better about that.

25591. Dr. BIGGER.—It would be a very desirable change if it could be made. You have more room and air space in the Fever Hospital than in the County Infirmary.

25592. CHAIRMAN.—You have very few cases of fever?—About thirteen in the year or eighteen.

25593. Dr. BIGGER.—The number going into the County Infirmary being larger is should be a larger building?—They are not in the same danger.

25594. You can keep fever from spreading very well? They are able to walk out in the garden with a broken arm.

25595. You have not much ground at the County Infirmary?—There is a field at the back.

25596. Not large?—It is not as large as the Fever Hospital.

25597. So even for convalescents you have better ground?—Yes.

25598. Surgical dressings, and operations, and having fresh air and all that kind of thing?—Oh, yes; the Fever Hospital is an ideal hospital.

25599. We were sorry to see such a magnificent building made so little use of?—There was fever there some time ago.

25600. You will find fever ceased or diminished a good deal after the Public Health Act?—Four or five years ago there was a very bad epidemic in Castle Island.

25601. There you have a hospital already—do you think it would be a good thing to reopen that as a small general hospital?—It is rather far bringing people from Bessons into Tralee.

25602. You have a nice building there going to ruin—would it be a good thing to reopen that?—The view I would have is that we should have small hospitals scattered round the country where bad cases could be treated at once, and the doctor of the district could do it. Sometimes a fever case could not be carried the whole distance, and it might kill a person to be carried a long journey.

25603. Such small hospitals would bring the relief to the neighbourhood of the people?—More directly.

25604. And it seems a pity to see the Castle Island Hospital falling into decay when it might be of the greatest use to the neighbourhood as a general hospital?—Yes.

25605. Is there any other matter I have not alluded to?—I don't think there is—only the matter mentioned by Mr. McMahon, that is the unfairness of having to pay for the County Infirmary, that is under the Act.

25606. What do you think about that?—In a way I think each place ought to bear their own liability, but when the Act is there—

25607. We are taking evidence with the view to the introduction of another Act—do you think that is a matter which ought to be amended?—I think so; I think each district ought to bear its own expenses.

25608. On what basis would you put the County Infirmary?—That is a difficult question. We have cases from Cahercross, Dungin, and Listowel.

25609. The evidence we have got from a great many surgeons of County Infirmarys is that the proper thing would be to make all the workhouse hospitals district hospitals, and as the District Councils are connected with the County Councils as the district hospitals should be connected with the County Infirmary, and doctors have a right to send up patients for special treatment without extra cost to the County Infirmary; that the County Infirmary surgeon should, where required as part of his duty, go down to the local places to carry ent operations, he presumably being a skilled operator, and in that way you would maintain a high-class hospital in the county, and no ratepayer would then object as he would be getting value distinctly—I would be thoroughly in favour of that.

25609. And further, making the County Infirmary a training school for nurses and head-quarters for the nurses of the county, that they should be County Kerry girls trained in the infirmary, there should be a small staff kept there, and, as required when exceptional illness broke out, they would telegraph for a girl to the County Infirmary, and she would be sent down, so you would not have to pay high fees to nurses in Cork or Dublin as at present—I would be in favour of that.

25611. Mr. MURTAGH.—Are you quite sure you would be?—That girls should be trained in Kerry, but as to keeping a thoroughly trained nurse on after she had been trained—25612. CHAIRMAN.—You would keep her on, she would become your officer, and the engagement would be terminated like that of any other officer?—If you get a couple of nurses the expenses would run up; you would want four or five.

25613. You would only keep the necessary number—you would not admit a probationer except to fill a vacancy. You have six nurses in the county, you would want two nurses for each perhaps?—And they would have to reside in the infirmary?

25614. One would be always down there, and then you would want a couple of emergency nurses?—That would add to the cost.

25615. They would be probationers under training?—When they were trained what would become of them?

25616. You might arrange that you would have a claim on their services for two or three years, or turn them out straightaway when they get the certificate—the power would be in your own hands.

25617. Mr. MURTAGH.—Although that sounds very nice, are you not afraid it might mean greater cost and also lessen still more the benefits to outlying districts; there are outlying districts far removed from Tralee that do not get as much advantage as electoral divisions close to it; you would be extending that principle by establishing a county hospital, centralising things more than they are, taking from local men the supervision necessary for the care of their own interest, leading to expense and taking away from the very poor the assistance they have at present?—I would not take away the assistance.

25618. That is the danger?—There might be danger in that case. We have sent nurses from the infirmary out to districts when they wanted them on a few occasions, to the poor districts. In the same way we have had to bring in nurses from Cork when we have had an epidemic, but we only did that temporarily.

25619. I am a member of a Board of Guardians that is particularly well situated in regard to infirmary nurses. The nurse is within half a mile of the workhouse. The Guardians have to pay almost as much for that nurse from the County Infirmary as if she came from Belfast, and more than that, there is the danger that the local men will send for these nurses very frequently when perhaps they could be done without if they were not so close to hand; is there not danger of that?—As to the financing of the question it would require a lot of consideration; I had not time to consider that fully.

25620. CHAIRMAN.—People from a distance object to contribute to the County Infirmary at Tralee; they say, "We don't use it." That would mean either that there should be a special rate adopted, or much paid by the ratepayers within so many miles, or else that it should be all payable by the Tralee ratepayers. Do you think the Tralee ratepayers would be apt to continue an institution if they had to pay the entire cost of it?—They would think it very hard, certainly.

25621. You have a big hospital at the workhouse, a satisfactory County Infirmary where good work is done here; do you think the Tralee people would hesitate before they would continue both institutions if they had any option?—If they had the option they would hesitate, certainly.

25622. Mr. MURTAGH.—The Tralee people are particularly well circumstanced in the matter of rating—their rating is very small in comparison with the other unions?—That is to the credit of the Guardians.

25623. You would not wish to add a burden to the heavily taxed unions outside—would it not be better to make the low-rated Tralee Union pay for its own sick and relieve Dingle and the other highly-rated unions from the cost of the support of the Tralee sick? I think it would be fair that each district should keep its own sick; if we had not an infirmary they would have to go to the union.

25624. And if these outlying unions had no person to send to the County Infirmary let them send them to the union and pay for their own sick?—Yes.

25625. CHAIRMAN.—Out of what rate would you pay the establishment charges of the County Infirmary?—I would spread the charges all over the county.

25626. You would have the establishment charges still a county charge?—Yes, they would have the benefit of it, but where the patient is from a district that district should bear the burden; that would be the easiest way of getting over the difficulty.

25627. Mr. MURTAGH.—The outlying people have naturally a complaint?—They have; it is a considerable complaint.

25628. Dr. BROOK.—It is a most desirable thing to have a County Infirmary where cases can be treated which cannot be treated in a local hospital?—Certainly, because we have appliances they have not in the others, and it would not be desirable to have these appliances in other hospitals, because it would be very expensive.

25629. CHAIRMAN.—And a great many doctors have not kept their hands in touch for operations, and would not operate except in cases of extreme urgency. They told us that?—Oh, yes.

25630. Dr. BROOK.—Any doctor will admit that even the best of general practitioners. They will tell in others to do the operations although they know all the steps of it, but still they have not that much confidence and practice?—There was a case once in from Dingle to the infirmary, it was a very peculiar case and we had not the appliances to treat it. Dr. Hayes went up himself with the patient to the North Infirmary, Cork, and the doctor there operated and the operation was very successful, but that was a case that would not have occurred in twenty years probably.

25631. It is a great advantage to a district to have surgeons in connection with the County Infirmary whose services can be availed of in an emergency, even to the ratepayers who are paying for the support of that place?—Yes.

25632. Whereas if you had no such institution you might have to telegraph to Dublin or Cork for a surgeon to come down at a large expense, and that comes out of the ratepayers' pockets?—It does.

Miss DOUGAN.

Miss DOUGAN, P.L.O., examined.

25633. CHAIRMAN.—You are a District Councillor and Guardian for Tralee?—Ballinaclogh, in the Tralee Union.

25634. Have you looked at all at the question of amalgamation of unions, or has your attention been directed to the reform of the Poor Law?—I have been thinking of both, and I would certainly recommend amalgamation for the whole of Ireland as well as for our county; and for our county I think one of the unions might be made a technical school for the workhouse children, another might be made a hospital for consumptives, and the other one might be made an auxiliary asylum for those lunatics that could not be sent to the lunatic asylum.

25635. Have you thought what union workhouse it would be possible to close for general Poor Law purposes?—I thought of Keshmure, Dingle, and Caheriveen, leaving Liscarrow, Tralee and Killybeg.

25636. Keshmure for consumptives?—Keshmure for consumptives, because they say the air there is particularly good for the chest and lungs, and the site good.

25637. What did you think for a lunatic asylum?—I thought, perhaps, Dingle, but I cannot be so sure, and for a training school, Caheriveen.

25638. Have you seen Caheriveen Workhouse?—I have seen it passing, but I have not been in it; it stands away from the town and has six acres of ground.

Jan 17, 1906.

Miss Doreen.

25620. It is a most unfortunate old gable!—I have never been in it; then, perhaps, it would be better to make an asylum for these harmless lunatics.

25621. As long as it would last!—The Dingle people were saying the water supply was so bad that it would not do for a large school, while the idiots are a small number.

25622. They want a good deal of washing!—I suppose they could sink wells like an artesian well, because of course water will find its level, and the Dingle Workhouse being so high, I think they could sink a well; I don't see why they should not.

25623. They don't seem to have adopted that!—No, they have that to do; I think it is most necessary that the children should be taken out of every workhouse; I would not leave one child in the union from my experience as a Guardian, and I have been so since 1897, so I remember the old time and the new; I think not one child should be left in the union; they are brought up useless members of society, and people don't care to have them for servants.

25624. Even with the best intentions, do you think it possible in a union workhouse to bring them up in a thoroughly practical way?—No.

25625. Why do you think that?—I don't know why it is, but the whole atmosphere of the workhouse, the whole system I consider bad.

25626. Can you say yourself after your experience that that makes a workhouse an undesirable and difficult, if not impossible, place to rear children satisfactorily?—I think they are only just taught their letters, but they are not really trained to be useful members of society.

25627. Is there in a workhouse any possible means for teaching?—There is a master and mistress.

25628. Take the girls, for instance—what could they be taught in the workhouse?—Only a little washing.

25629. Could they be taught that, even without seeing too much of the undesirable class of adult females?—They could not; it would be very difficult—impossible almost.

25630. They would have to take a day a week if a day could be spared!—Yes, but I am for putting every child out of the union; I should think in a great many places boarding out would be the best, but I am against boarding them out with other children, for I think the class of children that are in workhouses are not children that would improve the farmers' and labourers' children.

25631. I don't mean now for existing children—suppose one puts out of one's mind the children who are at present in the workhouse—they undoubtedly would be undesirable companions for farmers' children in a great many cases for they know too much of evil, bad language, and matters of that sort, but take into consideration workhouse children of the age of two or three years old, do you think that a good system would be to board out young children of that age who are innocent?—Yes, but not at a later age; much better to board them out then, and I would recommend that they should be boarded out with people who had no children or with people whose children had grown up and had gone to service or to America, and those sort of old couples would be very glad to have such children; they would get fond of them and make them their own.

25632. That would be an ideal place to put them if it could be got?—Yes, and any widows or any persons who had no children of their own.

25633. Would you not try to put them, if possible, with people who had land?—Yes, and let them be trained to agricultural pursuits, and farm pursuits for girls.

25634. Dairying, if there is any left in the country?—Yes, but I am afraid there is very little dairying left in the country with the creameries; they have done harm in that way that the general body of girls do not understand anything of it now. But in converting a workhouse into a training school, you should have part for the girls and part for the boys.

25635. You have visited Glenties?—I have not, but if it could be done, if there was land enough, the boys could be taught practical farming and the girls domestic work, cooking, farm laundry, and needlework.

25636. As far as your experience goes, have you ever had an opportunity of observing any girl from an institution employed as a servant?—Yes; personal experience of it.

25637. Will you tell us what you thought of it?—We got a girl, but she was really kept on until she was eighteen at the Industrial School in Tralee; she was kept on, I think, not exactly in the school, but as a sort of a little mistress by the name; we got her as a servant when just eighteen, and we never had a better; she was good, honest, and affectionate to my brother's children and a good needlewoman; she was kept on to a good age. Sixteen is rather young to send girls out; I would recommend that they should be kept to seventeen.

25638. Did she remain with you any time?—Five years, and then she got married and she is a great friend of ours. We had two others, but they were not quite so satisfactory; they were very honest and nice, and thoroughly to be trusted.

25639. Not such as we have heard the workhouse girls are?—Oh, no, perfectly different; such discipline, such obedience, and treating everyone with respect. That was my experience of three servants.

25640. That was most valuable experience!—That was from the Industrial School, trained under the Sisters of Mercy, and judging from that, I think if a good training school could be organized you might turn out very worthy members of society out of our poor workhouse children, who are now worthless and go back again; in fact they tell me at our workhouse that a good many of these won't stay with farmers; they grumble and come back and say, "Oh, he was so cross with me." They have for nothing, whereas a child trained under religious or very good lay teachers really does not mind a little correction; they are thankful for it; they know it is for their good, but these workhouse children don't like that, and they are thoroughly lazy.

25641. That is because there is no opportunity in workhouses for keeping them employed at real work?—Yes, and the great mixture of children, too.

25642. It is often because there are too few children to organise any work?—Some of the children are really too bad; they go in at an age when they have been trained to thievery by their parents and spoil the other children; but I would recommend if you could see your way to it a training school, and boarding out others with people whose children are grown up, and who would be very glad to have a young person to help them, or with widows, or families without children.

25643. Have you gone into it practically in your union?—There are sixteen children boarded out, but not in my district; more in Knocknagoshell and Castle Island.

25644. It is thickly populated from your house over to Ardara?—It is, but they don't board the children out there; they don't seem to want them.

25645. It might be well to try and get houses for them there?—It would be a good thing to get the very young ones; I don't think our people would like young ones that have been spoiled.

25646. You would not care to introduce a child into a family that would bring evil associations and language?—Not at all; I am for boarding out under certain conditions, and against it in other ways; I am not for indiscriminate boarding out; some people think it is the only means, but I am for a good training school.

25647. People who put it forward as the only means are really thinking of the future when they could board out children at a very early age after exhausting the present number of hobblerboys, boarding out for the future any that can be boarded out; what would you suggest?—A training school.

25648. Do you see any necessity for multiplying the number of schools—you have that school you speak so highly of at Tralee?—That has been limited by the Act that came in not permitting magistrates to commit them.

25649. Supposing power were given, if it did not already exist, as I believe it does, to place workhouse children in such a school as that who could not be boarded out?—I don't know, really; perhaps it would work; I have a great objection to putting the nasty children with the good children.

25650. There are a great many workhouse children who have been in the workhouse only, but the children who are worst?—They should be sent to the Reformatory, and the others should be sent to an Industrial School.

25651. Boarded out at so much a head—that would be the most economical thing for the ratepayers of the country, not to start a fresh institution?—If you turn one of the existing workhouses into a training school, each district which sent children would pay for them at the school.

25652. It would mean an increase in the rates?—They are paying for them at present in the union to make them idlers. We are trying to save as much as we can instead of starting a fresh establishment for children, if you utilised the existing Industrial Schools that are suitable for them, and the Reformatory Schools that are a grade lower.

Jan. 17, 1905.

Mrs. Downes.

25672. Are they sufficiently large, the accommodation in them. The Industrial Schools are already full notwithstanding the recent stringent regulations—I don't think so; I have rather a fancy for training schools, and would like to have one of the existing unions made into one; they cost so much at present—would they cost so much more to send them to an Industrial School?

25673. The expense of turning a workhouse into a training school is very large. I forget the number of thousands it cost in Ulster, it was very large?

Mr. O'Connell.—It was large, but it was not complained of by the ratepayers.

Witness.—You consider it a success, do you?

Mr. O'Connell.—A great success.

Mr. O'Flaherty.—There is not land enough attached to the workhouses for training children.

Witness.—I don't see why we should not get additional land, and would not the Government help us?

25674. CHAIRMAN.—You have their help if you send them to Industrial Schools?—Can they not help other schools? I think they are not treating us very fairly; they tax us so highly in other directions.

25675. Ultimately that comes out of our own pockets. What branch would you turn to next?—I consider the state of the aged poor in the workhouse is one of the saddest things; I would never recommend any respectable person to go to the workhouse, because there is not proper classification. An old servant who has been very happy in a family, she has had a happy and comfortable life, honoured and respected; perhaps the master and mistress die, and this poor creature has had nothing saved to support her.

25676. She has been perhaps supporting her own relatives?—Yes, and she may become blind; I know one instance; her daughter went to America, forgot her, never sent her anything, her stepdaughter, who was very good, died; she had to go to the workhouse; I think it was the saddest thing; I went to see her there, I know her in a happy home; she had a life of kindness, and there she was, a wretched, unhappy creature, herded with those other people. I think these respectable aged poor should either be put into almshouses or boarded out—in some cases could they not?

25677. That is one of the topics on which we are anxious to get evidence?—I think it would be a very good thing. I know another old servant, she is unfit to take any situation, but if she were boarded out well, a farmer's family she could mind the children and do a little household work, and if the farmer's wife was out she could take care of things, and if we paid a small amount they would be very glad to keep her, I think; the respectable poor ought not to be left in a workhouse.

25678. Have you considered outdoor relief as a method of relieving that class?—I have, and I think it would be a very good plan to relieve that class by outdoor relief and not in the workhouse, and if a more judicious system of outdoor relief was organised, but at present it is abused, and very much abused. At present people who get outdoor relief go to the public-house and drink it, and if it was properly supervised I think it would be the best way of helping those aged poor, especially the old married people, because then they are not separated, and are able to live in lodgings and perhaps keep up their little home, and it would be a much happier thing for them.

25679. Do you think we are able at present, with our infirmity and kindly humanity, to sufficiently safeguard our present system of outdoor relief?—do you think it would not spread and get many more people on it?—At present I think the Guardians are perhaps a little afraid of the workhouse and of the very poor people themselves. A poor person that might abuse the Relieving Officers and speak untruthfully of them, they may give relief to, although if they acted conscientiously they might say they were not fit persons for outdoor relief, but through fear they would say, "Give the outdoor relief to them." I think there ought to be an impartial independent Inspector that would go down to every part of the country and suddenly pounce on those who receive outdoor relief and see if they are deserving cases, consulting the parish priest, the doctor, and the Guardians of the district, and ask if they considered the person a fit person. With regard to the Catholics consult the parish priest, and with regard to the Protestants consult the parson, and the doctor, and then you would find out the deserving subjects, and the undeserving would be left without it. But at present a great deal of the ratepayers' money is wasted in giving outdoor relief to very undeserving persons, drunkards, and thieves.

25680. Do you find that relief is often given at your Board of Guardians without very much consulting the Relieving Officer, but brought forward by individual Guardians and recommended by individual Guardians?—I think so.

25681. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the course usually pursued when an application for outdoor relief comes up?—They put in a notice of motion to consider it at a Board, and it is passed.

25682. CHAIRMAN.—Is a relief case dealt with by notice of motion?—Yes; you put on a motion that you will bring forward the case for outdoor relief.

25683. And meanwhile?—The Relieving Officer can give in the meantime; in an urgent case he always gives.

25684. Mr. MURKIN.—Is he also instructed to make inquiries and report?—Certainly; the Guardians give every instruction, and they always say the Relieving Officer ought to investigate the cases, but I don't think they investigate the cases sufficiently, but through fear and a desire not to be alarmed.

25685. A desire to please?—Yes; you cannot blame these very much, their lives would be made unpleasant by those people; they attack them and annoy their children.

25686. CHAIRMAN.—You think there ought to be a strict inspection?—An independent inspection.

25687. To test the bona fides of the recipients of relief?—Yes; otherwise I don't see how it can be really safeguarded.

25688. Mr. MURKIN.—Does not the outdoor case on the same rate as?—Yes, but that is all figures; that is not inspecting the cases in their own homes. I mean an inspector to go to the houses and consult the parish priest or rector or doctor; I think another principle that is not very good is giving the outdoor relief sometimes in a particular shop.

25689. Is that done?—That is done; some of the people say to me they are told to go to such a place to meet the Relieving Officer; I think it would be better if the outdoor relief was given in an office. It is very hard sometimes for the poor people to come to our workhouse, it is a mile outside the town; if there were some office for the Relieving Officer.

25690. Do you know you are only recommending what is the law, and if it were known that any Relieving Officer did not carry out the law he would find it a very serious matter?—I know several cases told me by the people about my own district; they said, "We had to go to such a shop for outdoor relief."

25691. They might not be telling you what is accurate, but if you trace that and speak to the Relieving Officer I think you will very easily put a stop to it. It is a bad principle.

25692. It is a bad practice, the principle is all right.—Bad practice I mean.

25693. What you recommend is a careful exercise of discretion in giving relief to proper cases?—Yes.

25694. Have you got any practical world-wide method for contributing towards that end?—I am afraid I am not a financier.

25695. You are aware of the difference between union-at-large and electoral chargeability?—Of course I am. I thought when it was on the electoral division—

25696. It brings it home to a man more clearly?—Yes, and I think it was decidedly better; I know it was better in our district.

25697. Would you rather revert for outdoor relief purposes to the old law?—Yes, I would; but of course where there are heavily congested districts it has been a relief to them to have had a union-at-large charge; I know in my own district it has been exactly the other way.

25698. For towns union-at-large has been a great help—would you be disposed to give them any help by way of a grant in aid. Perhaps it is hardly fair to ask these questions?—I am not a financier, as I said.

25699. Mr. MURKIN.—Still you think the divisional charge is better?—Decidedly better; in our district it was much less when it was a district charge.

25700. Have you any particular view as regards the giving the outdoor relief in money or kind?—Decidedly in kind.

25701. CHAIRMAN.—Not in order to a particular shop?—Sometimes the money is not so well spent, or it is spent carelessly.

25702. When you give it in kind, what exactly do you mean—do you mean to give the actual bread and actual tea and meat if necessary, or whatever might be ordered?—I think so; it would be better.

25703. Or do you mean to give an order to the shops for these articles—if you come to distribute the actual food it becomes an intricate method?—I suppose the order would be the best.

25704. That is what you object to?—I did object to it in that way; it is the money that is given in the shops; perhaps it is better to leave it as it is.

25705. Mr. Murnaghan is considering a scheme suggested in Cork that all the outdoor relief should be given in kind—actual goods—a car should be employed to drive round and deliver the bread and meat to the houses?—Would not that be rather expensive?

25706. It might be rather a saving in the end—so many people would rush to receive money, and so few to receive bread?—Yes, but the deserving poor will.

25707. Would you be in favour of distributing the actual articles to be consumed or not?—By a car like that, I think it would be a very good plan where it would be possible.

25708. In some mountain districts it would be difficult?—Yes, it would be very difficult then, and perhaps money would be better.

25709. Mr. MURPHY.—If depots were established here and there, the Relieving Officer has to go over his district weekly, and if he had certain stores and depots where he had these commodities they could be bought by the Guardians at a far lower price than by the individual person, so that the idea is that they would get better value under the kind system than under the cash system?—I think so.

25710. And children who under the present system occasionally suffer would especially benefit by the arrangement?—I think it would be good.

25711. CHAIRMAN.—Now any other class in the workhouse?—With regard to the idiots I think they should be taken out of the workhouse.

25712. All weak-minded people should be taken out?—Yes; they are another class that are very badly managed in the workhouse; there is no proper person over them. If one of these workhouses could be turned into an auxiliary asylum for harmless lunatics—of course the dangerous lunatic or curable cases would be sent to the lunatic asylum—but where you have these silly people that are harmless it would be a very good thing to have them, all in one institution, and getting better food and care probably they might be taught to do things for themselves, knit their own stockings and make their own clothes, and the women could do something for themselves, and that very occupation would improve their minds; so if one of the present workhouses, say one of the three I mention, I think Kenmare ought to be kept for consumptives and Calverton or Dingle might be made into a school or auxiliary lunatic asylum for harmless idiots.

25713. I don't know whether you have considered the class in the workhouse so difficult to deal with—that is the class of girl-mothers?—Not so much; I suppose send them to a reformatory or these asylums where the nuns keep them.

25714. The Good Shepherd Convents?—Certainly; I would send them there because the Good Shepherd nuns have done more in that way than any others; I would advise that.

25715. Some witnesses think it might be possible to exclude that class altogether from workhouses?—A very good thing.

25716. The result would be that a girl coming in in that condition for public relief and care would never go to the workhouse, but first go to the maternity hospital and then afterwards to such an institution or penitentiary?—I agree with that; I think that would be much the best method; they don't get comfort in the workhouse, and the only chance would be in the Good Shepherd or other penitentiaries like that.

25717. You would treat the sick of course locally?—Yes, I think all the existing hospitals should be retained and made into district hospitals under a district committee.

25718. Why not have it under the District Council?—No; I would have some independent people on the committee too, people that were not Guardians or District Councillors, a few outsiders on the committee; but I would have the District Council and Guardians well represented; I would form a committee of different people, suitable people, and also have the Guardians represented, but I would not leave it altogether in their hands.

25719. Take now Dingle—we have been speaking of the aged and infirm, the girl mothers, the children and lunatics; if we take those out of the workhouse, apart altogether from the tramps, you will have nobody but the sick; what objection do you see to allowing the present body to deal with the sick—do you think a body such as you suggest would be more useful or better acquainted, or why do you recommend a change in the governing body?—Less jobbery perhaps if there were an independent committee.

25720. There could not be a great deal of jobbery where you have only a doctor and chaplain and nurse?—Oh, yes.

25721. Do you see any objection to leaving it in the hands of the District Council as at present?—Well, no, I don't see any objection.

25722. And leaving there also the administration of outdoor relief?—Yes; but supervised, as I say, I think there is no objection to that at all, because, as you say, all those other classes would be taken from them. I think tramps ought to be really made work hard. I suppose you have been studying up these labour homes in Germany and Belgium; they have been most satisfactory; would it not be possible to start some such place in Ireland?

25723. A great many people would like a labour home or colony to be established for each province in Ireland?—I think it would be very good.

25724. Where they would be detained under magistrates' warrants for a considerable period?—Yes. As it was mentioned by some of the other witnesses to-day, to give the police more supervision over that class of people.

25725. The police would do for starting the committees?—At present about a thousand tramps in the year pass through Tralee.

25726. If you take up such a system as that, if it is made illegal for a man to search about the country without any visible means of earning money, it would come to this, that on a certain day or throughout every tramp in the county would be arrested, and you would have to have houses for them, and all these men, women and children would be taken up and put into provincial houses and there detained, so you would have no tramps at all in the country after one week or a month?—If they thought they would be arrested a great many of these people would work, and then there is a great want of agricultural labourers. In my district the farmers have to come in and look for labourers in Tralee.

25727. These men that we see tramping about the country don't seem to have much capacity for work, wastrel and useless sort of creatures, but if they were fed up for a bit in a labour colony they would become useful and would perhaps be taught habits of industry—you would be in favour of such an institution?—Yes.

25728. It is rather a big interference with the liberty of the trailing public?—With regard to a consumptive hospital, that is a most essential thing for Kerry, because consumption is spreading, and it is really through ignorance. We have put out notices in a great many of the districts, but they don't understand it. In one case that came under my notice a poor man got consumption and he had two boys and a girl. The little girl was only three years old, a great pot of her father's; he always had her on his knee; he used to get but tea and milk and, after drinking some, hand the cup to the child. Lastly, I found it out. I told his wife about this, and the child was sleeping in his room. "You should take her out of his room," "Oh," she said, "I don't like to hurt his feelings." I said, "You will have all your children dead and die yourself." They did make up a bed in the kitchen for him; I hope it won't spread.

25729. That is recently?—Comparatively recently; he only died a year ago and he was three years in consumption; they don't seem to understand a bit about it. If there were an institution for consumption and the cure of it, and taking it in in the initial stage it would be a splendid thing, but I think it would be difficult for the county to support that; I think it should be helped from the Imperial rates or even make it a provincial institution; but one county could not support it.

25730. Dr. BROWN.—Would not a provincial one be making the area too large?—It might.

Jan. 27, 1905.

Miss Donavan.

26733. Would not a county or two counties be better?—Is would; the financing of all these things is difficult.

26732. CHAIRMAN.—That would be decided according to the number of cases and examination of statistics?—Yes, but unless something is done I am afraid it must spread; I have known families wiped out, one not taking it first and then another; they don't disinfect their houses.

26733. Dr. BRIDGE.—The houses are very difficult to disinfect?—They don't understand the danger.

26734. You have not thought of any provision of district hospitals except in connection with the present workhouses—not in places where they are not at present?—I think it would be a very good thing to have a few extra cottage hospitals on a small scale; decidedly I would approve of that.

26735. You have not located any in your own mind?—I think they mentioned some districts to-day, Broom and Waterville, and to re-open the Castledown one.

26736. CHAIRMAN.—I believe in Kerry you have had some experience lately of Jubilee nurses?—I have not had any personal experience, but in Killarney they have done great good, and in Killarney given the greatest satisfaction.

26737. This would be rather an argument for establishing these cottage hospitals, the nurses of whom might act as far as their time permitted as district nurses under the direction of the dispensary doctor?—Yes.

26738. You have nothing special to put forward about the Lady Guardians?—Of course I approve of lady Guardians; I think it is a good thing to have them all over the country; they look into little things that gentlemen don't have time to look into.

26739. We got a suggestion lately that instead of having ladies elected as District Councilors that there should be power given to the local Guardians to co-opt after being elected themselves; that they should be empowered, or directed if necessary, to co-opt a certain number of ladies on each Board of Guardians, so that ladies would not have the trouble of representing, but go on as a matter of course—would you prefer going up as an elected fellow member or as a co-opted candidate?—With regard to myself I really don't mind; you ought to consult the ladies in Dublin about that.

26740. I think most of them would prefer to get in without a contest?—That does not matter to me.

26741. You don't know the feelings of your colleagues, the lady Guardians?—I am sure in Tralee; we have a Ladies' Local Government Association.

26742. You don't know what their view is?

Mrs. O'Connell.—Would a co-opted lady Guardian have the same power?

CHAIRMAN.—If she was co-opted she would have exactly the same power.

WILLIAMS.—Would she be a Rural District Councilor also?

26743. CHAIRMAN.—If the law said so I—should not like to give that up; at present all the Rural District Councilors are both Guardians and Councilors.

26744. What interests you most in the rural work?—Several things; so many turn up. In some of these Boards of Guardians they might not wish to co-opt a lady—would they be obliged to do so? Mrs. HALLAM says that all through Ireland a great many would not be co-opted if it was optional, and she would like it to be obligatory. I am a member of the County Infirmary and I see you are very anxious to get the Fever Hospital for the infirmary; I do think it would be very bad to get fever cases in that part of the town where the infirmary is. Say an epidemic broke out of smallpox or of diphtheria; it might cause a great loss of life.

26745. There are rows of houses built up to both institutions?—I think it would cause almost a riot in the town.

26746. Mr. MURPHY.—It is a good building doing comparatively nothing?—That row of villas you speak of is quite a modern thing; they only built these lately, and it is their own fault for building them.

26747. Dr. BROWN.—It shows they were not afraid of fever when they put them there?—I would not like to go and live there.

Mr. William O'Donnell.

Mr. WILLIAM O'DONNELL, Chairman, Tralee Union, examined.

26748. CHAIRMAN.—You have been present during a good deal of the discussion and evidence to-day?—I am here all day.

26749. I don't know whether it is necessary to take you aside through the different questions, but if there is anything you wish to say on any of the subjects we have been discussing. What do you think about amalgamation for the County Kerry?—I would not be in favour of it.

26750. Would you leave all the unions as they are? I think so, from the remoteness of the districts.

26751. Supposing you left the workhouses as they are, would you remove, for instance, lunatics from the workhouses?—Yes.

26752. How ought they to be dealt with best—would you extend the existing system or have an auxiliary asylum on a cheaper scale?—I would be for an auxiliary on a cheaper scale for the county.

26753. Where would you suggest such an auxiliary building might be got?—Really, I cannot say.

26754. Somewhere within the county?—Yes, centrally.

26755. Children in the workhouse—what do you think of allowing children to be brought up and reared in the workhouse?—I would not be in favour of rearing them in the workhouse. We have seen a great many out to nurse, and they are giving great satisfaction, more especially for the last couple of years; a lady inspector made a surprise visit through the county and has done remarkable good, so that the children are doing remarkably well. Herebefore it was in the town of Tralee the children were sent to nurse; they were sent into the lanes and alleys; there was an order from the Local Government Board that we should send them into the country districts, and an old woman who had charge of some of the children took a place at Blennerville by the seaside.

26756. Took a seaside villa residence—how many children would she have?—This woman had five children.

26757. Was not that rather large?—She kept the children splendidly clean; she was getting it a week for each child and every day she was taking the children to school; it was a great heartbreak to her when the law said she should only have two. We had to take three into the house, and then send them to other nurses out to Broom. They are doing well; the only thing Miss Kenney said was that we were sending some of these to grand-parents, and it was a thing she did not approve of. I went through the schoolrooms of some of these children sometimes ago and the female teacher showed me some of the work done by these children—knitting—a great deal of stockings knitted by these children, and it was remarkably well done.

26758. Do the little children appear strong and healthy?—Yes.

26759. Well fed and well clothed?—Yes, that is the children at the union school.

26760. I mean the children boarded out?—Yes, they are doing very well; we had one or two cases where the old women getting the children in charge saved the clothes, and when Miss Kenney saw the children she asked where were the clothes, and the women said she had sold them to pay the rent, so the children were taken away from her. Small farmers don't take these children as a rule; it is poor widows who generally take them.

26761. Who cannot give them milk?—Yes.

26762. That is a pity—would it not be more in the interests of the children, and ultimately of the ratepayers, that a little more should be given for those children to tempt the farmers who could give them good country work and food, a man that would have haw and pigs?—Yes; if they got an encouragement that way I am sure these parties might take them. Of course the rule is laid down at present that we cannot give more than 3s.

26763. That is not a rule?—It is sanctioned by the Local Government Board.

26764. Oh, no such rule is made by the Local Government Board?—It may not have been made by the Board itself; it must have been made before my time.

26765. Dr. BROWN.—They are giving 6s in Tralee?—I think we never exceed 3s. I went through the union and saw these children taught by the schoolmaster, and the knitting is remarkably good. We have a tailor now for the last four years and we had one little boy who got in to be attending at the bakery and became an efficient hand, and is now earning 3s. in Tralee. There was an order made some time ago that these little boys from twelve years of age should go to apprenticeships in the houses for shoemaking and tailoring, but a farmer would come in and take those boys, so that that was lost, and we are making no tradesmen since.

25766. The children you would board out as far as you could—what would you do with those who could not be boarded out?—I would like to send them to some industrial school.

25767. Would you be in favour of using the existing schools and reformatories as far as possible, or would it be necessary to have additional separate schools such as Glenties?—I would like to start an industrial school for the whole county.

25768. You have one at Tralee at present?—Yes, and it is giving general satisfaction; the only fault is that a boy up to fourteen years of age has to leave. I may not be accurate as to the time, but the boy has not his trade.

25769. Our object in coming round is to try and reduce taxation—do you see any object in starting additional institutions if you have already institutions for the purpose?—I think there is no necessity as far as Tralee is concerned, but take Dingle and other districts.

25770. What difference would it make to Dingle if they were sent to an industrial school already existing, or to one created under a new Act?—In Tralee there is accommodation for 210 boys, and there is at present not more than ninety-five.

25771. There is a big gap there; then you would be in favour of getting children out of the workhouse if you could?—I would.

25772. And the Junction?—Yes.

25773. I don't know whether you considered the question of girls going in to have children?—That is a most painful transaction.

25774. Do you think it would be a good thing to put them under religious influences with a view to their redemption, and, if possible, to take situations again?—Yes, the law, I think, is against us. I saw a most respectable girl; she met a little misfortune and could get no person to take her child and then she came before the Board; I am subject to correction, but I believe the law is such that she should take the child with her; it was most painful to us; we could not keep the child; we wrote to the Local Government Board about it, but we failed.

25775. In such a case as that do you think it would be a wise thing to have a prefabricatory where that girl could be received and paid for out of the rates at a cost of what she would pretty nearly cost under the existing system, and could keep the child until it was two or three years old and could be boarded out, getting the support from the girl or the child's father?—Exactly. We have a few cases now at present, one of them came in and after some time she claimed her discharge, and we had to leave her out; twelve months after to my surprise she came in with another child, and we have one that has had three already.

25776. That shows the necessity of not letting them into the workhouse at all?—Oh, yes.

25777. Moving them dealt with outside. Then if you had these women and their children, and the general school children, and the lannets out of the workhouse and the tramps, what would you do with the tramps?—I would put them into some labour colony.

25778. If you had all these classes out of the workhouse the only class you would have left in would be the aged and infirm and sick?—Yes.

25779. Do you think the aged and infirm and sick ought to be left in each workhouse in the country as they are at present?—Well, really, of course if I could do away with these amalgamation could then take place.

25780. You have approved of taking the various classes out of the workhouse; if you had only the two classes left—everyone admits that in most cases it would be impossible to shut a hospital for the sick in any place now—but the question is whether the aged and infirm who could travel or be sent by rail, whether it would be possible that for all Kerry they could be sent to a central institution like Tralee, which should be made an almshouse for the entire county?—I think that could be done.

25781. You would save the cost of all the different establishments, because all the aged and infirm would want would be a master and mistress and sometimes a wardmistress over them, so you would save a large amount in salaries and retinue; would you be disposed to agree to a proposal of that sort if it were found a large saving would result and no hardship?—I would.

25782. Mr. MURPHY—Miss Denovan said it would be a charitable thing to board out some of the respectable old people in the houses where they could find a home amongst their neighbours at a cost of 3s. or 4s. a week?—I would call that outdoor relief, but we are rather scrupulous when an old person is there; the most they get is 1s. or 1s. 6d. a week.

25783. Would you approve of something like that which would lessen the number of aged and infirm inmates considerably?—I would very much.

MR. WILLIAM MCGUIRE, P.L.O., Ardara, examined.

Well, gentlemen, I have listened very patiently to the evidence given here by our worthy chairman, and I certainly concur with him in everything he said, but one thing he did not mention, and that is divisional relief. I am watching in the Board of Guardians very attentively, and I find where the abuse in outdoor relief is in Tralee and Castleland. I have to say to you that in Castleland and Tralee there is more abuse than in all the rest of the divisions of the union; it mostly goes in drink; we have a better check in the country districts than in the towns.

25784. CHAIRMAN—Former publichouse?—In Ardara, when they were supplied with goods, I knew many of these people to come to me for money in place of goods. I believe if this was made a divisional charge you would not have half the abuse in Castleland; it is almost impossible for the Relieving Officer to come at them there are so many nooks and corners in the towns of Tralee and Castleland, and even there is a lot of influence brought on him by people in towns to give this relief to Jack, Bill, and Harry. I agree with every word Mr. O'Donnell has said; it is a gross injustice for us in the villages and country districts to have to pay for the expenses of Tralee and Castleland, for I believe there is very little abuse in the villages and country districts compared with Tralee and Castleland, and I would impress on you to make it a divisional charge.

25785. Would you give no relief to the towns?—I would and to the deserving classes.

25786. I did not mean to the individual recipients of relief, but to the ratepayers of the towns—would you make them bear the full charge?—I would end the responsibility of it.

25787. You would be going even further than then was the case before the Act of 1898—then they had a whole?—It is very hard for the Relieving Officer to resist inducements, for every shopkeeper who has a workman or a workwoman would say, "Give this person so much."

25788. Are you speaking now in a general way, or have you come to your mind where persons in the employment of ratepayers are put forward by those ratepayers for outdoor relief?—They are, and they influence the Guardians.

25789. Without asking you to mention names, do you know of cases where the persons getting outdoor relief were already in receipt of wages from ratepayers?—I do, where they are widows of workmen who are working in townpeople's shops; they speak for them to get relief and they give them some wages. Even going into publichouses in town I see the recipients of relief drinking porter at the counter.

25790. Would they be employed as that shop?—No, but they drink the money they get in that shop and several others. I would impress on you again to have the children boarded out by all means.

25791. Would you be in favour of giving relief in food?—No; I have to say to you when I was supplying these recipients with food where it would be 2s. they would come and ask for 1s. in cash.

Jan. 17, 1892.
Mr. William
McGuire.

25792. Supposing the Belling Officer from his depot or cart, as in Dublin, simply hands down so much bread and meat?—That would do in a town, not in the country.

25793. Would it in Tralee and Castleland?—It would.

25794. These are the only places where you say there is abuse?—Yes, I would go far that strongly. Then to go to the children; it is a shame and a scandal to human nature to see children kept in a foul workhouse where there is no air and foul sewage.

25795. It is often only the smell of soil except—It is bad sewerage, too; go from the country air into that workhouse and you will find the difference; it is closets and sewerage; it is not a place at all for children; you cannot have a healthy child there no matter how you feed them; it is air they want.

25796. You think there is sewerage gas and other foul air?—Yes.

25797. Apart from the sewerage gas and foul air, do you see any other objection to children being in the workhouse?—When they go out to the farmers they are regular manurecrops, not reaped at all, but after a bit they get seasoned and are able to earn their bread.

25798. You have seen children going out of the workhouse and becoming industrious and satisfactory?—Industrious and good; they work with farmers.

Mr. MICHAEL COCHRAN, F.R.C., examined.

25803. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of the Chairman, Mr. O'Donnell, and of Mr. McGuire; is there anything you would wish to observe that they have not observed?—I mean to deal with the main question, the amalgamation of unions; I consider we are not in a fit position for any amalgamation. The only place we could amalgamate with is Dingle, and it would be a penal law on the poor and an injustice to the ratepayers, to amalgamate with that union.

25804. That is from the point of view of the Dingle people?—Yes; the poor of Dingle would have to come here, and their friends could not see them again or take them home when they died, so they would have to be buried here at the expense of the union. With regard to the ratepayers, when this Poor Law valuation was made sixty or seventy years ago there was little or no valuation put on the mountain part of Dingle, whereas the land in Tralee was set down as ploughland, most of it; ploughland was supposed to grow wheat, and what was 2s. 6d. a rood, and the hire of a man was only 7d. or 8d.; that fixed the valuation and the same valuation exists now, although wheat is 3d. and the hire of a man 2s., and the sowing of it is abandoned altogether. Land in Dingle for grazing is nearly as valuable as this land here, and the Poor Law Commissioners based their rents on the valuation.

25805. They would not agree with you in that?—Perhaps not, but all their work shows it; I think union rating was a great injustice to the ratepayers.

25806. You would rather go back to the old law?—Yes, because I see what the Guardians are doing now; everyone is trying to get as much money into his own division as he can. In the electoral division of Tralee they are all merchants, and more money will go through their hands; since union rating became law they have risen to £200 a year or perhaps more; they don't care as long as the rural divisions will have to pay it.

25807. You would rather go back to the old law?—If it were electoral division rating every Guardian would see that no one got it but someone who wanted it badly.

25808. Of course you remember that under the old

25799. At what age does the farmer wish to send them?—From twelve to fourteen; they are under the first twelve months, but afterwards they become practical.

25800. Do you know any farmer who has received them yourself?—I do round Ardara.

25801. Do you happen to know whether they objected to them as too young or far had habits?—No, the only thing they complain of is that they are touchy and not economical and unable to stand the cold; they get used to it, and I have known them to get from 6l. a quarter to 85s. a year.

25802. As a Guardian you have often seen these children come back again dissatisfied with the situation they got?—I think 95 per cent. of them don't come back unless they are regular blackguards.

25803. Do many of them come back?—Very few; the only fellows that come back are from the towns.

25804. Tralee and Castleland?—Yes; I very seldom see any from the country. Now whatever you do, get some little place for the tramps by themselves. They are the class of people who live by begging. If they are beguiled and cannot get to a town for lodgings the first thing they will do is to go into a haphazard and sleep there; they light their pipes there, and a great deal of the blemishes in the country are done by these tramps.

Mr. O'Donnell.—We are after spending £300 on our sanitary works in the union.

low outdoor relief did go up enormously, while electoral divisions were in existence, in Lisnord particularly, and I also think Tralee, it did go up to a very high figure—I am not aware of it. I got a schedule of accounts before the union rating and it showed there was a great increase under union rating; that was in some divisions.

25811. Did you happen to look at any considerable number of unions and see what effect it had. Did you look at Kesh, for instance, and see whether outdoor relief was much up since 1890?—I did not see the Kesh return at all.

25812. Do you find outdoor relief is much up in Tralee since 1890?—It is in some divisions.

25813. Do you remember the total amount in 1890 or 1897?—I kept no account.

A Guardian.—It is only £100 a year.

Mr. O'Donnell.—I am happy to say the outdoor relief has gone down.

Witness.—Gone down as a whole he means; in some divisions it is low and in others higher.

25814. CHAIRMAN.—You have told us now you prefer electoral rating, as a country Guardian?—Yes.

25815. Is there any other subject you would like to refer to especially, the children for instance?—I think boarding out children would be very good; it would give them good habits, and they would not be returning to the workhouse.

25816. Do you know of cases coming back to the workhouse?—I did know of some cases coming back that could not be kept out of it.

25817. As regards lunatics, would you keep them in the workhouse?—I think they should be sent somewhere where they would be better cared.

25818. Some special establishment for them?—Yes.

25819. You told us I think that you would not think of taking the aged and infirm from Dingle away from their friends?—I would not.

25820. So practically you would let the present system remain as it is except that you would have district rating for outdoor relief, lunatics taken away from the workhouse, and children boarded out as far as possible?—That was all.

Mr. THOMAS LAWSON, Clerk, Tralee Union, examined.

For the year ending March, 1899, the outdoor relief was £2,432 6s. 7d. and three years afterwards; for the year 1892—

25821. CHAIRMAN.—Have you last year?—I have not.

25822. I would rather have had last year?—Three years after the passing of the Act it was £2,813.

25823. Give me last year if you have it?—I haven't it, but I can say it has not gone up to what it was in 1890.

Mr. MURPHY.—According to the report for last year it was £2,033.

Mr. COCHRAN.—What is the increase in Tralee?

Mr. Lawson.—I have not the particulars in respect of any electoral division, but I can furnish them at any date you require them.

Mr. Thomas
Lawson

Mr. RICHARD O'MAHONY examined.

Jan. 27, 1906

Mr. Richard O'Mahony.

About the outdoor relief—it is not the poor people who are relieved—supposing some of the country people are ejected and sent into the towns—

25624. CHAIRMAN.—You would be in favour of electoral division rating?—Certainly, we are all Kerry people; why not get the same treatment?

25625. Is that the only matter you wish to dwell upon?—Yes; Mr. Fitzgerald said that there should be three paid Guardians.

25626. Would you like to be one of them?—If there was a good salary attached.

Lieut.-Colonel BOWEN examined.

25627. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Treasurer of the County Infirmary?—Yes; I made out some little statement that you might wish to have; there are two large wards and six small wards in the house, and they contain thirty beds.

25628. How many nurses?—We have a night nurse and three day nurses.

25629. In addition to your superintendent?—And a superintendent.

25630. Is she trained?—Yes; she is one of the Ben Secours, and there are two sisters.

25631. What is your total expenditure?—The total expenditure for five years, excluding the amount spent on structural alterations, was £5,856.

25632. That is £1,160 a year?—Yes.

25633. Is that the amount of your county grant?—The county grant was £5,025.

25634. Then you got very little from subscriptions?—Very little outside.

25635. I suppose the falling off in subscriptions dates from the Act of 1866?—Somewhat, but they were not very many at any time.

25636. You have not many annual or life governors?—I mean the life Governors; we had as many as fourteen annual at one time, but that was a very large number.

25637. Would your view be in favour of retaining the present premises, or have you an open mind on the subject?—I think the premises are large enough for the present requirements, because our average number for the five years is under twenty.

25638. Can you tell me what is your highest number—are all your beds frequently occupied?—Well, no, I don't think so; they are very seldom fully occupied.

25639. Have you had to refuse to admit patients for financial reasons?—Never.

25640. So that your funds have been sufficient, and your premises sufficient?—We have never gone up to the maximum contribution from the county, and of course we always draw on the county for what we want; the maximum is £1,400 a year, and we have never got more than £1,160.

25641. What I say is accurate that your premises and your contribution are adequate?—They are so far.

25642. Tell me about the number of patients and the radius of distances from which they come?—I have got returns here for the half-year ending 1903, the half-year 1904, and the whole of 1904. I could not find the other half-year. During that time there were 421 patients admitted; of those 211 came from Tralee Union, that is 77½ per cent.; 22 came from Listowel Union, 5½ per cent.; 30 came from Dingle Union, 9 per cent.; 16 from Killarney Union, 4 per cent.; 10 from Cahirciveen, 2½ per cent.; and only 6 from Keshmarr, 1½ per cent. The charge for those on Tralee Union was 30½ per cent.

25643. What do you mean exactly by the charge?—The cost.

25644. For the county-at-large?—Yes, but the proportion of it charged on the Tralee Union.

25645. That is on the valuation?—Yes; 39½ per cent. of the whole amount was on Tralee; Listowel, 25 per cent.; Dingle, 7½ per cent.; Killarney, 12½ per cent.; Cahirciveen, 8½ per cent.; Keshmarr, 7 per cent.; Dingle is the only case where the contribution is nearly the same; it contributes a little less than it gets.

25646. Dr. BROWN.—These percentages are on the total cost?—Oh, yes.

25647. Mr. MURKIN.—So that Tralee gets double the advantage?—Quite so. Of course you have to consider that the class of cases that comes from the out-unions would be the most difficult and expensive cases to attend to.

25648. Dr. BROWN.—And, after all, this is not really the cost; have you gone into the question of how long each of the patients was in?—No, but the number of patients during the last five years was 912.

25649. The percentage of cases is, according to the number of patients, I presume according to the rateable value of the union, not according to the cost of the entire for the time being?—I did not go into that.

25650. Or how long they stayed, or the cost of the operation?—No; that would be a very intricate calculation; the cost per patient is about 55 per head, and the cost per bed occupied is now £61; the average daily number was 16½.

25651. Mr. MURKIN.—You say there were on an average twenty patients a year, and it cost £1,100 to finance the institution; that is 555 per patient per year?—It is 261 per bed occupied, but I am taking the number of patients admitted altogether, and they cost 55 per head.

25652. But per annum per patient?—No, per person received.

25653. Taking the average number of inmates in the year at twenty, and the cost at £1,100—it is 555 per inmate.

Dr. BROWN.—How many beds have you?—Thirty, and the average number per day is 16½.

25654. Mr. MURKIN.—It is under twenty; but you will admit the outlying districts get a very much less return than Tralee?—Undoubtedly.

25655. And there is some real grievance on the part of the outlying districts?—I don't deny that.

Mr. M'Mahon.—There is a hospital kept up at Killarney at the cost of the county also; I see there are cases returned from Killarney.

Witness.—That is one of the old district hospitals where you give £1 from the county for every £1 subscribed.

Mr. M'Mahon.—It is £2 from the county.

Mr. O'Donnell.—There is another hospital in Valentia.

CHAIRMAN.—But that is only getting a small county grant of £30 a year; it is the best we have seen; we have seen nothing better in the way of cottage hospitals anywhere; it is quite a model.

Dr. BROWN.—It is a pity they don't get a larger grant from the county.

Mr. FLINN.—Other districts would not complain about contributing to the County Infirmary here were it not that they have to contribute locally to the upkeep of their own hospital. If it was made a district charge I think it is only fair the outlying districts should pay for the patients coming in.

Mr. O'Donnell.—People come from Cahirciveen, Dingle, and Listowel into Tralee and meet with an accident here; they may not be six months in Tralee when they have to go to the county infirmary, and they return themselves as from Tralee.

Dr. BROWN.—Even a person coming to consult a doctor, and staying with friends might be so returned.

Mr. O'Donnell.—And there are parties that come from other countries, such as fishermen, and men that suffer from railway accidents, are brought into the County Infirmary; we had a couple of men from Fenit. Witness.—When a patient enters you ask him where he was living at the time and he says Tralee. With regard to what you said about making this a central hospital and having a staff of nurses it would require an enlargement of the building.

25656. CHAIRMAN.—Yes, or else a change to the other building; there would not be any difficulty in that if you changed it to the fever hospital?—There would be plenty of accommodation there. Of course it would not be so convenient for the management, because the consent of the Ben Secours, who manage the infirmary, strikes the premises—they are next door. I would not be so convenient to them I mean to say. I think the public also in Tralee would object to bringing the fever hospital into a crowded part of the town. It has to be done in cities we know, but still there would be a prejudice against it here.

25657. As regards future expenditure on that infirmary—supposing you stay where you are, have you any funds for further expenditure?—No funds except what we get from the county; they can give us up to £1,400, and out of that must come any structural improvements.

25858. The doctor is satisfied with his operating room there?—I think so; it is a very nice room; in fact it was under his directions it was fitted up a couple of years ago.

25859. You are in an unusually good position for a County Infirmary as regards funds, for you have not tapped your full grant?—We never get the full grant; of course the expenses of late years have increased.

Mr. McManus.—You get a large grant for improvements?

Witness.—We did not go up to the £1,400 last year.

25860. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything as regards Poor Law reform you would like to mention—you have had a very long experience?—I was a Guardian for a good number of years; I think union rating is an inducement to extravagance.

25861. You would prefer to go back to divisional rating?—I think the outdoor relief is extravagant at present.

25862. Do you think putting it back to divisional rating might tend to bring it more closely before the Guardians—the present Board of Guardians seem to have reduced the expenditure?—I think the present Board of Guardians are doing their work very well in Tralee.

25863. And the presumption is that they would be able to do still more in that way if it was made divisional rating?—Yes, practically; Listowel and Tralee Unions gave no outdoor relief until up to 1861, and the rates of those two unions compared with Kilmurphy—which always gave outdoor relief—was much lower.

25864. Listowel has gone on steadily increasing from 1861?—They have, but they are giving a good deal of outdoor relief now; I think it is the outdoor relief that is responsible.

CHAIRMAN.—I remember when I was inspector of the union I had to look into it very closely.

25865. Mr. McMANUS.—It gives more outdoor relief than any union in the county?—I have not compared it in that way, but I know that at one time there was none given there at all, nor in Tralee.

The Sitting terminated

FIFTY-THIRD PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, JANUARY 19TH, 1905.

Jan. 19, 1905.

At the Court-house, Kilmaree.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. COET RIDGER.

Mr. DAVID M. MORGAN, Chairman, Kerry Co. Council, examined.

26866. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the County Council of Kerry?—Yes, sir.

26867. The County Council, as far as we learned at Tralee, did not pass any resolution?—They passed no specific resolution, but the matter was discussed, and while they thought it was a matter more for the different local Councils, and for that reason passed no specific resolution, still the whole feeling of the County Council, as far as I can see, the unanimous feeling, was against the amalgamation of unions.

26868. What is your own opinion on the subject?—My own opinion is the exact same as that of the County Council, and I have some means of knowing a good deal about different unions in South Kerry.

26869. You are familiar with all Kerry, practically. I suppose?—With all South Kerry; I consider the distances so very great between the different workhouses that it would be practically impossible to work an amalgamation scheme.

26870. Were you considering the question from the point of view of closing the workhouses in toto, in the case of the dissolution of a union?—Yes.

26871. Did you consider the question at all in the point of view of retaining wards for the sick and bringing to a central institution only the other inmates, those who would be able to travel?—That would, to a very great extent, entirely obviate the difficulties of the case; of course those who are sick would be less able to travel, and in the next place those who are sick are those who want a lodging in the hospital more urgently and quickly than those who are not sick.

26872. In any suggestions that we have received in going through Ireland there seemed to be a general consensus of opinion, such as you have indicated, that it would be inhumane almost to close the local hospitals and give people the option either of not going for hospital treatment at all or obliging them to go prohibitive distances?—It would be impossible in this country.

26873. Supposing the hospitals were kept up at Kilmaree and Cahirciveen for the treatment of the sick, would that, in your opinion, diminish your objection?—It would diminish the objection. But is there not outside that the question of general administration, the difficulty of Guardians attending from twenty-five miles away, from places separated by a chain of mountains, because there is a chain of mountains between us and every other place here.

26874. Supposing the administration of the Poor Law was left with the local District Councils of Cahirciveen and Kilmaree, and that they would have the administration of their local hospital and the administration of outdoor relief, and that they would, as regards inmates taken to a central institution, pay per capita, or as it might be arranged, that would take away the difficulty of obliging Guardians to come long distances; they never would have any place to attend except their own place as heretofore?—That is so.

26875. That idea did not perhaps occur to the Council?—No, most decidedly it did not; but after all would not that mean you would have the same Guardians, and you would have to have very nearly the same staff.

26876. We will come to that. You see the scheme which has been put before us in a great many places is that the local Council should continue to be the Poor Law authority dealing with the sick who are relieved in their district hospital, and dealing with any cases of outdoor relief and Poor Law administration generally, and paying the cost of persons who were relieved in outside institutions. The question I was going to put to you is do you think there are any classes at present in workhouses that might with advantage be taken out of the workhouses. We might take lunatics; do you think it is desirable, from all you know of the workhouse administration, to keep lunatics in workhouses?—Our asylum I can speak for as I am Vice-Chairman of the Board, and we are dreadfully crowded.

26877. Although you have enlarged lately?—Although we have enlarged, but we did not enlarge as much as the doctor wanted us to do.

26878. Can you tell us the capacity of the asylum?—About 500.

26879. Would there be that number in the asylum?—Oh, yes; we are full nearly all the time.

26880. Perhaps you have heard of the experiment in the County Cork of taking an available building and starting there an auxiliary lunatic asylum where the incurable and relatively harmless lunatics were placed?—Yes, I know of that.

26881. Do you think it might be desirable to take away from the different workhouses the inmates that are in the workhouses and place them, if the building were available, to place them there and treat them pretty much the same as in Tralee?—Unless the medical men say there would be something great to be gained by it from a medical point of view, I don't see what the gain would be from a financial point of view, because we have not come to the point yet that we are so crowded out as to need an additional building; we are able to get on with what we have just barely, and with the help of the workhouses who keep these inmates who are not violent.

26882. You think at present you would leave them there?—I think so, and I think it would be cheaper than starting an auxiliary asylum.

26883. You know you would get in an auxiliary a contribution in aid which you do not get in the workhouses?—We would, of course.

26884. Have you thought whether an economy would not result by having an auxiliary asylum rather than a workhouse?—I am sure it would not result; you would first have the cost of the building; the cost of the additional staff and a more medical staff never does alone; you must have other officers, and when you tot it all up it would, in my opinion, more than counterbalance the rate in aid.

26885. Is it your opinion that the Tralee auxiliary is worked at a financial loss to the ratepayers of the County Cork?—I would not say that, for this reason, that they were put to do it in the County Cork, that is to say that the existing asylum was not able to meet their needs; they were put to do something, and if we were put to do something that might or might not be the cheaper course, but I say, in a county where the asylum meets the present needs, putting up an auxiliary asylum merely to take a few inmates from the workhouses would entail an additional cost.

26886. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—There are eighty of them in the workhouse of Kerry; do you know that at 2s. a week per head that would bring a contribution of over £400 a year?—Yes; that would be £500 a year.

26887. Don't you think they could get better treatment in an institution specially adapted for their case than they can possibly get in a workhouse; don't you think they would be better cared and better treated?—As far as I can see, from our experience of the asylum, that class of patient is nearly hopeless.

26888. CHAIRMAN.—We are assuming that they are all incurable, that the curable would be in the main asylum, but on the ground of humanity and fair treatment would not sending these people to where they would have a decent amount of exercise instead of a little cramped yard, and occupation, and certainly more cleanly keeping and all that; would not that be desirable apart from economy, to have them in a separate institution, and would it not be a saving as well?—That depends on two points. First, on what medical men would think would be better for them, and I am not a competent judge of that; and it depends, in the second place, on the treatment they at present get in the workhouses, and, of course, the local people can state that better than I can.

Mr. David M. Morgan.

Mr. David M.
Molony.

25589. You are not prepared to give evidence as to the treatment of lunatics in workhouses?—No, sir.

25590. Medical opinion rather favours the keeping of lunatics in asylums?—I dare say, but going back to the financial point as to which alone I can give any opinion; what you have mentioned about the numbers shows we would have a rate in aid of £600; that would just about pay the medical officer-in-charge and the county would have to pay all the other expenses.

25591. It would pay nearly the whole staff according to the Younghusband experience?—But they would be applying for increases of salaries.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You must remember that there are attendants for this particular class in workhouses at present.

CHAIRMAN.—In the six unions you have at least twelve paid officers, and most likely more, looking after these lunatics.

25592. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—And you would not require as large a staff if they were centralised?—Do you mean to say that that staff you mentioned are looking after them exclusively and not after the others?

25593. CHAIRMAN.—Exclusively?—As I said, I know little about the internal arrangements of workhouses.

25594. You would have a male and female attendant in each workhouse at least?—Looking after the imbeciles alone and not after the other sick poor?

25595. Exactly; you cannot give them other duties because they must always have the lunatics under their observation; their time is fully occupied; they must always be in the yard?—Still there they have the building; there they have the ordinary administrative staff, and all these things would have to be newly provided for in the auxiliary asylum, and I am nearly certain, of course one cannot be too positive, but I am very nearly certain that most of the public men in the county would agree with me about that, that the auxiliary asylum would be a greater expense to the county, and in a county where we have very heavy rates.

25596. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You say there they have the building and the staff; if there is any reform in the Poor Law they won't have the building and they won't have the staff?—I am talking of the present condition of things.

25597. CHAIRMAN.—We are thinking of a probable reform for the benefit of the ratepayers and the poor; under any change of system you would not have the present condition of affairs. It takes twelve attendants at present to look after eighty inmates; if three people were put into an institution apart for themselves perhaps half that staff could do the looking after better than at present?—No; would you not have to have a cook to cook for them, a scullery maid, housemaids, landlady, porter, and so on; you quadruple the present staff.

25598. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You would be able to relieve your present overcrowded institution?—I said already if we needed that we would favour an auxiliary asylum.

25599. Don't you need it at present; you are full?—We are full; but not overcrowded.

25600. Is not the tendency to increase?—No; we have decreased within the last year.

25601. You are exceptionally fortunate, because in every asylum I am acquainted with the tendency is to increase?—That has been so with us up to last year.

25602. Would it not be some advantage to make an arrangement that you would not have to increase your present building?—I would sooner wait until the necessity arose before launching the ratepayers of this county into additional expense. At the asylum the doctor wanted us to go in for much more extensive buildings than we did; we fought the thing out and cut things down as low as we could, and in the result we found that the additional buildings which we went in for were sufficient for the present needs.

25603. You have reached a point when the medical authorities say you should have more room; now do you not think it would be a good thing if any reform was to take place that you would provide some place for these harmless inmates in your central institution so that you would not be called upon in future by the medical authorities to extend the present premises, if that could be done without any increased cost. You are going on the assumption that the change suggested would mean an additional burden on the ratepayers; I take a different view of the matter, and I would only be inclined to recommend it if I was certain there was to be at least no increase?—Everybody looks at it from their own point of view, but the point of view from which we representatives of the ratepayers look at it is that we would prefer not to incur expense to meet what I call hypothetical contingencies, that we would prefer only to incur expense to meet present actualities.

25604. Dr. BRUCE.—Your idea is, I presume, that if you did require additional accommodation for fifty or sixty extra it would be cheaper to have them in the large building?—The probability of any increase here, of any substantial increase, is so small, having regard to the fact that there has at last come a decrease in the past year, the increase being small a small addition to our present building at the asylum would be cheaper to us than a big auxiliary asylum.

25605. Simply because you have your cook and porters and all that sort of thing, and medical expenditure; you would not need any increase there, and the additional attendants you would require for fifty or eighty extra would be very small?—Very little. I can send you down, from the Asylum Board, the actual numbers in the asylum.

25606. Was there any objection by the asylum to taking in the lunatics from the workhouses of the county?—No objection, but of course they would not like to do anything that would lead to overcrowding.

25607. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Would they be able to take in the eighty inmates scattered through the workhouses now?—No; not without a new building or an additional asylum.

25608. Is it your view that the eighty inmates should remain in the workhouses?—Yes.

25609. Dr. BRUCE.—About a year or two years ago the Local Government Board sent a circular to the different Boards of Guardians asking them to send in the cases that would be most suitable for asylum treatment; do you know was there any objection raised by the asylum authorities to receiving them?—I don't know that there was; it did not come before our Board, to my recollection.

25610. CHAIRMAN.—Leaving the class of lunatics for the present, we may take up the children; do you think, if your experience enables you to offer an opinion, that the workhouse is a good place in which to bring up children?—My opinion on a matter of that kind would not be equal to the opinion of one of the Guardians, but speaking merely as an outsider, I think it is not, and that the boarding-out system is preferable; of course I glean a lot of information talking to people who look after these children; from the neighbours and so on.

25611. You are aware that under the existing law only orphans and deserted children could be boarded out?—Yes.

25612. Would you be in favour of extending the powers of the Guardians by law to enable them to board out all children who have to be supported out of the public rates?—I would, most emphatically.

25613. Do you think it would be desirable, in the interests of the children themselves, and ultimately of the country, that these children should be removed from a workhouse training?—I do, undoubtedly; they are brought up in different surroundings; pure, healthier, and cleaner.

25614. There is another class, the tramp or vagrant, casuals and people who come in and out for week ends, and others of that class; some of them are absolutely idle always and some only work in an intermittent way; have you thought what might be done with that class?—That is almost the great problem that workhouses have to face; my own idea is that the time of their lodging ought to be limited as much as possible; keep them on the move.

25615. That is the present system; they at present come in late at night and they leave early in the morning; that suits them exactly; they just want a night's shelter?—I thought they stayed longer than that usually.

25616. No; they like to get off as early as they can. In England the Guardians have been authorised to detain them for one, two, or three days, according to the frequency with which they claimed hospitality at the union, and some witnesses have recommended that the Irish law should be assimilated to that of England; others put forward a suggestion that what are called by some labour colonies should be established, say one for each province in Ireland, where this class of about 4,000 people or more should be sent when they were not maintaining themselves; that they should be committed on magistrates' warrant for long periods with a view of endeavouring to give them habits of industry, and at all events keep them from preying on the ratepayers—I think that would be a capital idea, provided, of course, that the industry they would be engaged in would not interfere with any local industry.

26917. That, I think, you may take for granted will be always provided for. Even if it were an interference it would be very small; but you think one ought to be taken that there should be no competition with local trades?—Oh, I think so, because Ireland is a bit behind-hand in the industrial race.

26918. Then there is another class, women and unmarried girls who come into workhouses to have illegitimate children; you are aware that they are not a very large number, but still a considerable number of such inmates, taking all Ireland?—There are some.

26919. Have you any idea of your own as to that subject?—No, sir, I have not.

26920. We have received the suggestion from many places that such girls should not be eligible for admission into workhouses, and it has been proved to us in evidence that these girls, when they come in in that way, very often become the mothers of other children, and that instead of going back to society on as respectable a basis as possible for them they remain on the downward grade in the workhouse, rearing families there at the expense of the ratepayers?—I have heard of that happening in Kerry.

26921. It has been suggested to us that the workhouses should be closed to those girls, as it is not considered by those witnesses a good place for them; that those girls should be placed, before their confinement, and then after it again in some penitentiary or place under religious management, where they should be paid for at the rate of so much a head, with the object of reimbursing them as soon as possible, leaving them only a burden on the rates for a very short time, putting them back to ordinary life again and giving them a chance of reclaiming, and also save the increase of this illegitimate population?—I think that would be clearly the only way out of the difficulty, and a very admirable way out of it.

26922. You would approve of that?—Most decidedly.

26923. Then there is another class in the workhouse, that is, the aged and infirm class; it is almost the largest class in workhouses; about the same number as the sick; at present in workhouses they are necessarily all kept together; they cannot be subdivided, according to, we will say, respectability or any other test; the only subdivision at present is not, males put in one set of wards at one side of the house and females in another. It has been suggested by a great many that this class should be subdivided, that there are a great many respectable old people who have to herd with troublesome and undesirable associates, and that this question is rather wrapped up in the question of amalgamation. As workhouses are at present the classification of such inmates is almost impossible except in a few workhouses, whereas if the suggestions that we have received that the aged and infirm should be taken and kept, say, in one institution in a central place in the county, say for Kerry to either Killarney or Tralee, was carried out it would be possible if you had all the aged and infirm of the county brought in there, and if you had other classes moved out of the workhouse it would be possible then to classify those in a way that would be more humane and better altogether. What do you think of that?—Of course if there were amalgamation I suppose that would be possible, that is to say you would apportion out certain workhouses.

26924. Well it would rather work out perhaps in this way. You have in workhouses, first, the sick, you have the aged and infirm, the mothers of illegitimate children and their children, the general mass of the children, the lunatics and the vagrants. If the vagrants go to a workhouse or labour colony that would take that class out; if the lunatics were to go to the pauper house, the head lunatic asylum, where it was big enough, and failing that to a dissolved workhouse; that would get rid of that class; the children would be boarded out, and girl mothers would go to the penitentiary, the sick would always remain in the local hospital, and you would only have the aged and infirm to deal with. If you had, in Killarney Workhouse, your local hospital still, and the rest of the house converted into a sort of county almshouse in which the aged and infirm would be housed and graded or classed according to the best way possible; you would be able to do that there?—Yes, sir, but I would almost think that would be the most difficult problem of all, for this reason—there is the conflict between two feelings, everybody has the greatest possible pity and compassion for the deserving poor who are too old and infirm to support themselves, and everybody would wish them well and wish them to pass their declining years in peace and comfort; then on the other hand the ratepayers have a terrible difficulty of making their workhouses hotels; the phrase has often been used, as Col. Kirkwood knows, by local Guardians in different places; you would have a conflict between the two tendencies; in your desire to do a benefit for the people, who would undoubtedly deserve it, you would make the thing as comfortable as you might have too many people.

26925. I omitted to say that in such a county almshouse you would not have them all treated on the same dead level; you would have them classified according to respectability, and the troublesome folk would get as hard a time as it would be possible, consistent with humanity?—You would find it very hard to carry it out in practice.

26926. I think not, because they would be in different parts of the building; you would have separate day-rooms, and dormitories, and exercise places for the different classes?—Who would decide between two old men of sixty-eight years of age?

26927. The managing body?—That one should receive really hotel treatment and the other should receive rather plank-bed treatment.

26928. If you thought the local body would be unwilling to discriminate fairly between the different classes some check could be placed upon it?—Well, if some check could be devised.

26929. It is quite possible, if it were to tend to result in a dead level, putting all on hotel treatment, that would be so obviously out of keeping with the idea that it would necessitate a reconsideration of the practice and a clipping of the wings of discretion, if discretion were not well used?—That is a problem they could get over more easily in England than in Ireland; in Ireland you get the poor in the workhouse from a poorer class than the poor class in England.

26930. Do you really think so?—Oh, yes, and one in which the conditions of life are not at all so high and therefore there would not be so much hardship to these people.

26931. Do you think the inmates of the large workhouses in England are not of a class who have been accustomed to greater hardships than are conceivable in this country; take the poor of London, Manchester, and Liverpool; they are accustomed to a state of want and actual hunger that labourers of the rural districts here could never conceive or deem possible?—That is so; I know when there is want in London it is very bad.

26932. It is never free from want?—But what I mean is if you take the labouring class in this country; the conditions of life amongst the labouring class in this country and amongst the labouring class in England are totally different; the standard of food, clothing, and habitation is all quite different, and on a lower standard in this country, and then if you go in for giving them in workhouses, I won't say Brussels carpets, but something very much above their present condition, you may tempt in a number of people who would otherwise stay out.

26933. Do you think any one comes into a workhouse or public institution in Ireland that could possibly keep out of it no matter what the treatment is?—They don't at present.

26934. And although the treatment has improved very much in the last ten or twenty years in public institutions yet the increase is nearly altogether in the case of people coming into the hospital where of course now they are sure of the best possible treatment and skill and attention?—Yes, and in the case of people coming into the workhouse who cannot keep out of it; that is a state of affairs that the country would prefer to continue once there was no undue hardship on the infirm and aged poor.

Jan. 10, 1906.
Mr. David M.
Moistery.

26035. Don't you think the healthy will always keep out of a workhouse if they possibly can?—I would not like to be too sure of that at all.

26036. Have you individual cases in your own mind of people, I don't say who accept outdoor relief, but of people who accept indoor relief when they might have stayed out?—I am saying, under the present condition of things, no, but under the ideal conditions, which are being thought of, it might be open; and I do know of instances, in the lunatic asylum, where lunatics asked not to be discharged; they were very comfortable.

26037. That is when they were weak in their hands?—They were not so weak; they were very comfortable, and preferred staying where they were.

26038. You do things on a high hotel arrangement in lunatic asylums?—Well, I suppose they are more comfortable than in a workhouse, and it is right they should be of course. I know of two such cases in recent times.

26039. I could supplement your information on that point with cases I know of lunatic inmates unwilling to leave a place that they get used to. Some of the people from Italian dungeons, as soon as the doors were opened turned back again, but still you would not consider that a sign that their conditions were satisfactory?—On the other hand we are agreed that nobody will at present go to or stay in a workhouse that can keep out of it, but people will stay in a lunatic asylum that can keep out of it, and I say the reason is that the standard of living and comfort is higher in the asylum, and if you go in for making the standard of living and comfort in the workhouse higher you will have the same condition of affairs.

26040. Don't you think the deprivation of liberty and a strict adherence to discipline will make the people outside keep out of the workhouse?—Take the old people; what is they case about a little control or discipline; it would not mean hard work for them.

26041. They don't like it; they are the people most loud in objecting?—I am afraid if you give them punched eggs for breakfast and meat at dinner you would augment the numbers very considerably.

26042. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—I hope you don't consider that we are desirous of making the standard of living in workhouses of such a kind as to attract the ordinary public?—I don't know what the ideas of the Commission are at all; if I may be pardoned for so saying, I thought I was being asked the ideas that might be in the minds of the County Council or in the minds of outsiders.

All that has been suggested is that perhaps it would be a better way to have one particular class in one institution where there could be a better system of classification, and perhaps a little kinder treatment, without adding very much to the expense.

26043. CHAIRMAN.—The object of this Inquiry is, in the first place, to try and save money for the ratepayers; that is the reason we are here. We are here to try and recommend some changes in the administration of the Poor Law that will lead to economy without impeding efficiency; economy is in the foreground of our warrant?—That is what they would be very glad of in this county if you could effect it.

26044. But we cannot effect economy if everybody says "My workhouse is to remain; it is impossible to effect economy if everything is to go on as before?—Every herring hangs by its own tail; there are counties in which workhouses are very much nearer each other than in Kerry; Kerry is a very large county and the workhouses are separated by long distances.

26045. Arms of the sea stretch up between long peninsulas?—Yes, and chains of mountains; I regard it as quite an exceptional county.

26046. It is; there is no county like it except West Cork. If you were asked by your County Council to devise a plan by which money might be saved under the Poor Law could you make any suggestion with that object?—Do you mean in the direction of amalgamation?

26047. Any direction you like?—I think as regards what you say about the tramps—sending them to a labour colony—that would effect a saving almost immediately.

26048. I am afraid not, because the cost for a tramp is fractional; he only gets his bed and breakfast?

Mr. MURKAGHAN.—2d. or 3d. would be the most.

Mr. Clegg, Clerk.—Twopence.

26049. CHAIRMAN.—You could not hope for a saving as regards the tramps except in the beneficial way of taking them off the county-at-large?—Some workhouses complain tremendously of tramps; take the Millstreet Workhouse; it is a sort of half-way house for tramps.

26050. So it is; but the number of tramps they had in Millstreet for the year was 770; take Mountmellick with 2,215; Athy, 1,123; Shillelough, 1,563; Callan, 2,555; Thomastown, 2,567; it is nothing to compare with these?—Still whatever saving there would be, large in some cases and small in others, I think there would be a saving in that respect by sending them to a labour colony; it is the dearest effect. Of course these would be the cost of the labour colony all through; these gentlemen would strongly object to go there, and it would have that effect. Then as regards sending these girls to a penitentiary, that also would be a saving because they would cease to be a permanent charge and it would be beneficial in every way.

26051. Are there any other suggestions which occur to you by which economy might be effected?—I will tell you another. A parent is liable for his child in the hospital provided the child is under fifteen years of age; I don't see why there should be an arbitrary limit as low as that; I would say provided his child was under twenty-one years of age, because every parent will, in this county, maintain his child until the child is in fact beyond twenty-one.

26052. Then comes to the general question I will put to you a little later on; at present the Guardians have power to order relief by way of loan, and then they recover the full average cost; that is more than a great many can pay; and on the other hand take a fever hospital; there a respectable man may go in from any class of life to be treated and they can only charge him the full average cost?—That is all.

26053. Would you approve of an amendment in the law that would enable the governing bodies of local hospitals, whether Poor Law, county infirmary, or fever hospitals, to charge, according to their discretion, such sum as they think the patient or his friends can afford to pay; in the case of a very poor man, 6d. a week, and in the case of a wealthy man up to the absolute cost, perhaps £10 or £20, and to recover it by summary process?—I would be most strongly in favour of that; the only thing as I would like to see some sort of grading or classification fixed on beforehand, because, I am sorry to have to say it, but I am afraid local bodies are inclined to be lenient. I will give you an example. In our asylum you know we can recover from the relatives of patients a certain amount for their maintenance, and those of us who are strongly in favour of doing that have found the greatest difficulty now and then in getting the majority of the Board to agree to get the amount that we think ought to be got from respectable farmers.

26054. You would rather have the law made mandatory instead of permissive?—I would if it were possible to fix on a classification or grading beforehand; it might be done according to the valuation for instance.

26055. That would do as regards farmers, then when you come to the labourers and artisans and small shopkeepers?—Once you come to labourers it is very hard to say what they can pay.

26056. They have such a scheme in operation in the county infirmary of Fermagh, and there they get as little as 6d. per week, and the result is that the salary of the surgeon to the infirmary is about paid by the contributions so levied, and the people there have come to like the system because they feel they can go in to a certain extent as a matter of right, feeling they are paying their way.

26057. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Without going so far as having it mandatory, how would 6d. strike you? Supposing it was necessary that the decision should be by two-thirds of those present how would that most matters?—Would not that make it worse; that before we could fix a sum for maintenance on a farmer we should have a two-thirds majority to do it?

26058. No; but the other way that it would be necessary in cases where people were being let off who could pay it would require a majority of two-thirds to let them off?—I have never found an instance where they would say they ought not to pay at all, but when you come to the amount, how would you fix it? Take the asylum; £11 is as much as we would want; if we set more than that the relief goes to the Treasury.

28958. We are the Treasury ourselves; it is our money which goes into the Treasury!—It does, but £1 or £2 will make very little difference.

28959. Mr. MURKIN.—It is taken out of the local taxation account which is now very low!—But when it comes to a question between £11 and £5 how would you fix it?

28960. CHAIRMAN.—Take it in this way; you would be afraid of some such result, but if the discretionary power was given to local bodies, let it be seen how far they exercise their discretion and then make it more stringent afterwards, if necessary, by law; you would rather have the scale at first?

Mr. MURKIN.—Amenable by a two-thirds majority.

28961. CHAIRMAN.—I did not mean that; if in the Act of Parliament the actual discretion was given to the body, and if they abused that discretion then it might be time enough, after a couple of years' experience, to change it!—That would be, perhaps, the fairest way. Local government is very new to the people of Ireland, and it would be better perhaps to give them their chance first. But I repeat, as far as I can see, the people are honestly trying to do their best everywhere, and then if that failed, what your colleagues suggested, namely, making it mandatory subject to a change by two-thirds majority would, I think, meet the difficulty.

28962. Is there any other way by which economy could be effected in your opinion in the Co. Kerry?—I do not think so; I suppose it is a disappointing answer to give.

28963. I dare say you have in your mind only indoor relief; have you considered whether any economy would be practical under the head of outdoor relief?—In what direction?

28964. Well we have received evidence at Tralee and a great many other places from a large number of witnesses in favour of divisional rating as against town rating. I may say before you answer the question that it is, to some extent a question between the towns and the country; the towns have got a great boon under the Act of 1896; they have got the outdoor relief placed on the union-at-large, and the number of applicants for outdoor relief largely comes from the towns; the towns consider that under the old condition of things they were unfairly treated and they get this boon. Now the country Guardians say "We are paying more for outdoor relief than we need and there is no reason why the towns should not support all the outdoor relief in the towns!"—That is the very point I had in my mind, and I thought at first when divisional rating was changed to town rating there would be a tremendous drop in the outdoor relief.

28965. It has dropped in some unions!—I thought all the country Guardians would say, "Nearly all the outdoor relief goes to Killybegs town and we will cut that down."

Mr. CURRY.—It has come down by a couple of hundred pounds.

28966. How much do you pay for outdoor relief?

Mr. CURRY.—About £1,500.

Mr. MURKIN.—It was down to £1,512 last year.

Witness.—For that reason I think town rating is an advantage.

28967. CHAIRMAN.—But if in the country districts pay far more than they used, because they pay according to the valuation on the £1,500, whereas before they only paid for the outdoor paupers they had in their division. Have you the last year before 1894?

Mr. CURRY.—£1,754 to be paid. Our figure to March, 1903, is £1,715.

28968. Are you including the boarded out children in that?

Mr. CURRY.—Yes.

Mr. MURKIN.—The boarded out children cost £126.

28969. CHAIRMAN.—What would it have been for the year ending March, 1903, including the boarded out children?

Clerk.—We had very few at that time; it was £1,754 outdoor relief and provisional relief.

28970. A suggestion was made that having regard to the hardship it would inflict on towns, and perhaps unfairly inflict on towns according to the view of witnesses, it would not be fair to go back to the old law, and some witnesses suggested a compromise, that it should be ascertained, as it could easily be done from the figures the clerk of the union has now given us, what would be the present or fair amount for outdoor relief on the union-at-large as it stands, then to say, to guard against any increase, to say that it is not to go higher than that, and any case that is given in excess of that amount should go on the electoral division!—That is to say when you say the amount for the whole union you mean the amount for each electoral division of the union, and anything in excess of that should go on the electoral division itself?

28971. Yes; that would guard against an increase, but it would not help much towards a diminution, because the people would all try to get their share!—All through there is a conflict between town and country; you will find these country Guardians telling you all the time they don't see why they should pay for town relief at all.

28972. And the townspeople say they are only relieving the countryside who come in!—That is so. I don't like taking sides between them.

28973. Mr. MURKIN.—Suppose it was found out what Killybegs was paying last year. Consider the amount that that is in the £ to Killybegs; consider what that would be under divisional rating to Killybegs, and make the balance as the standard amount to be contributed as a union-at-large charge, then Killybegs would have its present benefits!—You would take the amount last year of the out-door relief in Killybegs—you would consider that as the standard?

28974. Yes; in essence, I would consider the number of inmates that are in the electoral division of Killybegs at present and the amount they would be paying under the old arrangement!—Supposing it was divisional rating; supposing £1,500, we will say.

28975. And consider what it is paying under the present arrangements, making the difference stereotyped as a regular union-at-large charge for the future as a contribution to the Killybegs poor, then you would arrive at a reasonable arrangement, according to the present conditions, and you would be giving to the towns the advantage now possessed!—You would levy the whole amount on Killybegs and charge the balance to the union.

28976. Let me give an instance of a particular union. Last year the town paid £150 for outdoor relief; under electoral divisional rating it would have to pay £250. My idea would be to subtract the amount it is now paying from the amount it would have to pay, and give the difference (£100) in future as a contribution from the union-at-large to the town!—I see.

28977. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing it was not a fixed contribution, but went up and down according to a rule-of-three calculation, so that there would be an inducement for the whole union to keep as low as possible—that that £250 should never go up, but should go down, if the numbers went down?

Mr. MURKIN.—You see the way I mean. Find out what it is paying at present under the union-at-large charge, find out what it may be paying under an electoral division charge, subtract one from the other, and make the balance the amount the union-at-large should contribute.

CHAIRMAN.—Make that the maximum, and let it diminish in proportion to the diminution in the number of persons on out-door relief.

Mr. MURKIN.—There is not any possibility of a diminution in out-door relief; the tendency is all the other way. Under the system outlined it is certain there will be an increase in out-door relief.

Witness.—The country Guardians would prefer the reverse way—that the £250 should be put on the electoral division, and the balance, if any, on the union-at-large.

28978. Mr. MURKIN.—We have had evidence from a good many rural Guardians, and they all have admitted that under divisional rating the towns did suffer, and they agree that the present benefits should be continued to the towns; but in order to ensure better supervision and provide against extravagance, they say the electoral division charge should be the future one; that would give the present advantage to the towns, and it would give the future the different Guardians the power to look after their own divisions!—As a Killybegs man I am in somewhat of a difficulty in answering this particular question; but, still, I think it is only fair that there should be some sort of equitable distribution, such as you mention.

Jan 16, 1903.
Mr. David M.
Murray.

Jan. 19, 1907.

Mr. David M.
Molony.

CHAIRMAN.—There was under the old law a rate-in-aid. Although it was smaller, the principle was practically in existence.

29378. Mr. MURKIN.—You see the point is to give to the towns some additional benefit, and ensure in future careful supervision over the expenditure.—So that if there was any across the towns would have to pay something for it.

29379. Would have to pay for future increase, if any occurred?—That would be true.

29380. CHAIRMAN.—I am not sure whether you are giving evidence as regards the Killybegs Union or as Chairman of the County Council?—As Chairman of the County Council.

29381. You have in Killybegs a county fever hospital. The area of charge for that is the entire county. We have received evidence in Tralee from Listowel and other places objecting to that arrangement; saying it was not fair that the fever hospital of Killybegs should be supported by the entire county while the fever hospital of Listowel was supported by the district. Have you any view on that?—I can give you the views of the County Council as distinguished from my own views as a Killybegs man. The view of the County Council is that it is unfair that the county generally should contribute to the expense of the county infirmary at Tralee and the county fever hospital at Tralee, or to the county fever hospital at Killybegs. They look upon the county infirmary as being purely a Tralee institution, and not one for the benefit of the county-at-large, and they look upon the fever hospital at Killybegs as being purely for the benefit of the barony of Magnolia, and for that reason people from Listowel and those other districts object most strongly to the contribution. On the other hand, the people of Tralee and Killybegs are satisfied with it, even though the Killybegs people have to pay for the county infirmary at Tralee. The two localities are, naturally, in favour of what benefits them, but the rest of the county is strongly against them.

29382. There is a nice little hospital at Castleland?—They don't get any county contribution, as far as I know, but Valentin does—a small thing.

29383. Have you visited that hospital?—No, I have never seen it, but I am told it is a good one.

29384. Dr. BOSSER.—Do you know what it takes to keep up the fever hospital in Killybegs?—I forget. I am on so many committees.

29385. Does it only serve practically the union?—Practically speaking, only the barony of Magnolia; but now and then there are cases from outside that. There have been cases from Kenmare side and Glenbeigh district, but the big majority of them come from the barony of Magnolia.

29386. We had some evidence in Tralee regarding the advisability of starting a consumption sanatorium for the county?—The medical men are all very much in favour of that; and any laymen, I think, who have intelligently studied the subject are in favour of it, too, because knowledge is beginning to spread now amongst laymen what doctors were perfectly aware of for a long time, that is that consumption is highly infectious. I know one family, living about five miles from me now, where every single one of them, one after the other, five healthy young men and women, were all swept off by consumption. I can attribute it to nothing but their want of knowledge as to the infectious nature of the disease.

29387. If the first case had been treated in a sanatorium, and there learned how to prevent the disease spreading to other members of the family—I believe that family would have been saved; because they were all, to all appearance, physically strong and vigorous people.

29388. That is occurring constantly in any number of families. It was proposed in other places that to equalise the treatment of the sick—that is, to make no injustice where the county infirmary is charged to the county—the acute cases should be put on a rate, whereby all the different hospitals would be supported. If the sick in Listowel and Kenmare were supported out of the county rate?—For all the local workhouse hospitals?

29389. Yes, what will be district hospitals, acute hospitals, if they are all supported out of one rate, and more or less in connection with the county infirmary; that is, that cases of operations that might require extra assistance in Cahirivreen, Killybegs, or Kenmare, the county surgeon in Tralee could be telegraphed for. He could go down there with special instruments and perform the operation?—That would be more treating Tralee like you would treat Dublin, where, of course, in their hospitals they have every possible modern appliance and skill and all that. One does not like to enter on such a topic; but, doubtless, the Killybegs and Cahirivreen doctors would not consider the Tralee doctors as a bit more skilful than themselves.

29390. CHAIRMAN.—Hardly that. I think the local doctors all over the county will readily admit that their hands are not in training for operations, whereas the surgeons of the county infirmaries are in training?—I don't know; I know a doctor in Killybegs who has great practice in operations.

29391. But I am speaking generally. Generally, the doctors throughout the county have no opportunities of operating?—In the country districts, outside towns and workhouse hospitals, they have none at all.

29392. And in workhouses there are no rooms or instruments fit for operations?—I thought more the question I was asked was whether or not the surgeons of the county infirmaries at Tralee could, for instance, come down to the infirmary in Killybegs to perform an operation.

29393. If the case could not be removed to Tralee?—I don't see the necessity for that. I think Dr. BOSSER could perform the operation as well as anyone in Tralee.

29394. Dr. BOSSER.—It might be all right with one particular doctor. You are speaking of Killybegs; but, perhaps, in Listowel or Cahirivreen?—Dr. Macaulay, in Cahirivreen, does operate.

29395. Apart from that altogether, would it not be more equitable to have the sick supported out of a county rate so that the remote parts of the county would be getting the same benefit as Tralee people from the county infirmary?—Do you mean that the richer districts should pay for the poorer?

29396. Yes, to some extent that would happen—a county-at-large charge.

CHAIRMAN.—That the county-at-large should pay for all the acutely sick. You have at present the sick in the infirmary a county-at-large charge. The people at Listowel and Dingle and elsewhere object to that. It has been suggested that one way to meet that might be by making the sick everywhere a county charge.—Any answer I give is subject to this—that that is a matter that has not been before us, and we may be having sight of a consideration that should be present to our minds; but, subject to that, I think we would be opposed to that entirely, because we would lose all the benefits of local control.

29397. Do you look upon the sick as a class that could be limited in any way by any area of charge?—It is not the number of sick; it is not a question the same as of the poor coming into the workhouse, but it is the greater expense attending it. There have been questions already; in fact a Local Government Board inquiry as to the expense attending local hospitals already. I think it was a Local Government Board inspector that I first heard saying that a certain hospital was not to be a hotel. What I say is, if you have the local control and the local Guardians looking very anxiously and carefully as to the administration of their local hospital; if you make it a central business there will be extravagance and expense, beyond all doubt. I say this, that the doctors naturally look at it from a professional point of view, and are desirous to do all their best for the patients, and spare no expense; and they are right enough from their point of view, but their point of view does conflict with the views of the ratepayers.

29398. Dr. BOSSER.—Do you not think getting the best treatment for the sick an economical arrangement. Look at the rate you spoke of. The loss to the county as well as to the family of four or five lives?—Once you come to the point at which the best does not conflict with economy. But I heard a Local Government inspector ask a doctor whether or not he had been painting the ward with iodine. I don't say the doctor wasted the iodine; I am quite sure it was not he; but I say there is a necessity for local control in these matters.

29399. CHAIRMAN.—Some curious results that we could not foresee would, no doubt, result if you made it a county charge. You would have a man paid for the sick at Listowel, and as soon as it became a county charge the Listowel people might have to pay a good deal more than they do now, even for the county infirmary—I mean on the present scale of expenditure!—Yes, and especially taking what I have been all along insisting on—that the county is a very large county, with big distances separating all its chief towns, making anything like supervision by the central body extremely difficult, if not impossible.

27000. Dr. BROWN.—You would make the same-ness a county charge?—I think so.

27001. CHAIRMAN.—Or, if necessary, groups of counties might be combined for the purpose?—I should say groups of counties.

27002. According to the accommodation necessary in each county. If one county, like Cork, was able to support an institution, it is obvious little counties like Carlow and Kildare could not!—Oh, no.

27003. Therefore, you would have groups of counties supporting a sanatorium and a single one where it was large enough?—I think that is a very pressing need. I saw one master mentioned in Tralala; I don't know whether it comes under the scope of your inquiry; that is, about the question of exchanges in Poor Law matters.

27004. Poor Law matters would, but not roads or District Council matters?—It was with regard to that; I think Mr. McMahon speaks very well; I should not mention that so.

Jan. 18, 1905.

Mr. David M. Morarty.

Mr. EDWARD FITZGERALD, D.P., Chairman, Cabercreven Union, examined.

27005. CHAIRMAN.—Your union has not given us any answers to our queries, but they have nominated you to explain their views. Would you tell us, in the first instance, what are the views of the Cabercreven Board of Guardians as to the possible advantage or disadvantage of closing up your workhouse?—We had a very large Board recently, about a fortnight since (forty members), and they were against the amalgamation of the Cabercreven Union. We are so very remote; we are forty-five miles from the nearest workhouse.

27006. What was the chief reason which influenced the Guardians of Cabercreven in deciding against the expediency of amalgamation?—The long distances would affect infirm and feeble people; they might die on the journey, and the expense of carriage would be so heavy.

27007. The number of aged and infirm in your union is very small?—Forty-five or fifty.

27008. Thirty. The sick would be forty, and the others about thirty, and the other classes number about twenty?—I don't think any of these poor people could get to Kildare or the sick or the infirm.

27009. There is nothing to prevent the aged and infirm taking a railway journey?—You would almost have to send a guide with them on their journey; they would go astray, perhaps, changing at Farrington.

27010. Why should you fear that?—From their feebleness. Some of them never saw a train in their lives.

27011. How long did it take you to come from Cabercreven to-day?—I think about three hours.

27012. You had one charge?—One charge. That does not affect able-bodied people, but it would seriously affect the aged and infirm. The sick, of course, would remain always in the hospital there.

27013. The forty acutely sick would remain at the local hospital. Do you see any reason why those who are able to travel should not be sent to the central institution?—I don't see the economy in the first instance.

27014. But if it were made obvious to you. If, as soon as the statistics are collected from all Ireland, it appeared obvious that a great economy would result from such a centralisation of healthy inmates, would you, as a ratepayer and Guardian, object to the breaking up of Cabercreven Union?—Of course not, if I found it would be economy, with a due regard for the feeble.

27015. We are unanimously of opinion that we ought not to make any recommendation disturbing the existing state of affairs except on the ground of considerable economy, and no suggestion has been made to us that the sick should be removed such practically prohibitive distances; it is that the number of hospitals locally might be increased rather than diminished?—We have scarcely an able-bodied person in our union.

27016. We have all had the advantage of going over your workhouse lately, and seeing that the inmates are pretty much the same as the inmates anywhere else?—We have a very good hospital for the care of the sick, with a Sister of Mercy in charge.

27017. We cannot endorse that. You certainly have got a very able staff for looking after the sick, but as far as the convenience given to the doctor and nurses they seem in a very backward condition?—We always meet their requirements.

27018. That building was an old dwellinghouse?—It was a portion of it.

27019. And, of course, naturally, it is in a very decayed condition?—I think it is not in very good condition, but we have a very good fever hospital there and infirm wards.

27020. Fever hospital?—Yes; a very nice operating room.

27021. You are fortunate in having a very able staff in your hospital. You have converted an old fever hospital into a District Council meeting-place and dispensary; under what circumstances did that change come about? Why was it converted from a hospital to its present purpose?—The original fever hospital was built by public subscription; it had been paying no rent; we were paying rent in Cabercreven for a dispensary, and also for a boardroom, and were anxious to get the Sisters of Mercy in charge of the sick, because the poor were very badly attended to, with very indifferent nurses. We amalgamated the fever hospital with the workhouse, and got the Sisters in charge, and made use of their house as our dispensary and clerks' office, and boardroom, for economy.

27022. You wished to bring your sick as near as possible to the new nursing staff?—Yes.

27023. You have hardly any income at Cabercreven?—No, we have two landless.

27024. They are classed with the others?—They are. They are made do a little work, such as drawing out; they are very quick.

27025. Do the Guardians often visit their workhouse?—Not very often; it is too inconvenient; but we are in telephonic communication with the workhouse, and it is very useful in urgent calls for the doctor or clergyman, or sending out ambulances.

27026. Take the aged and infirm wards, they are not under the daily control of the doctor; he only goes there when called to see a sick patient?—Yes.

27027. And they are not under the Sisters of Mercy?—I believe not; they are under the master and matron.

27028. And the Guardians don't make a practice of inspecting these wards with a view of seeing that the people get looked after properly?—Whenever they do go up they do go through these wards.

27029. I suppose the officials have the advantage of knowing through the telephone when they are coming?—I am not aware of that. There is no intimation given, as far as I know.

27030. You have very few cattle or tramps, you are so remote?—Only about a dozen in twelve months.

27031. Mr. MURPHY.—You say your objection to any change in the workhouse system is that you don't see any advantage to be obtained by it in a monetary way?—Yes; also taking into account the feebleness of the class of people that remain in our workhouse.

27032. First, under the head of saving—are you aware that owing to the very small number in your workhouse you are paying a great deal more per head per inmate than in other workhouses in the county; you are paying something like $6 10s. per head per inmate more than in Tralala?—That may be. Our staff could attend to three times as many.

27033. Under that head alone you could effect a very considerable saving, and you give a very large amount of out-door relief for the sake of the institution?—I believe we are the most congested in Kerry; I think it is the poorest district in Kerry; the valuation is very low, and the land very bad.

27034. CHAIRMAN.—The union is congested under the Congested Districts Board?—It is.

27035. Mr. MURPHY.—If your sick were provided for locally, do you see any great harm that would

Mr. Edward Fitzgerald.

Jan. 18, 1905.

Mr. Edward
Fitzgerald.

arise if the other classes could be taken somewhere else at a lower cost and the children boarded out?—We have no children boarded out.

Mr. T. C. Fitzgerald.—There are fourteen children in the house.

27033. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—That means almost 20 per cent. of the inmates. Don't you think they would be better outside amongst the farmers?—That is the question. If they are of a suitable age we do try to get places for them, and there are applicants from the small farmers for the children when they are twelve or fourteen.

27034. If the law were so altered that you don't board out the children now eligible, don't you think it would be better to have the children outside, where they could learn the handicraft of the fields?—I don't think they arrive at an age in our workhouse where they could be taught anything.

27035. Could they too learn, like other children, to make themselves useful and handy?—It could be tried.

27036. CHAIRMAN.—Those who are in favour of boarding out are of opinion that the best age for boarding out would be between two and three years, so that they could grow up under healthy conditions, and be trained up as labourers, and be useful. You have rather the view of hiring out when they are work. Looking at it from the point of view of boarding out in infancy, would you be in favour of such an arrangement, so that the children should know nothing about the workhouse?—It would be very hard to depend on the people to whom they are sent to take care of these children.

27037. You have an efficient relieving officer?—But they have large duties, and the children could be neglected in their absence.

27038. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Don't you think the neighbours would keep an eye on a child that was boarded out, and see that it was well looked after?—If you give the people sufficient to induce them to look after the children, but for 2s. or 3s. a week they would not do so.

27039. If you raised the money to 4s. a week?—That might be; but I think it would be better to send them to an industrial school.

Mr. DENIS J. SULLIVAN, M.C.C., P.L.O., examined.

27040. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council, also?—Yes.

27041. What is the view of the Kinnaree Board of Guardians as regards the closing of their workhouse for all purposes except the treatment of the sick?—They would be entirely opposed to that; because of the great distance the destitute would have to be carried, because of the extent of the union, if we were amalgamated with Killarney. We go to the south side of the Kinnaree River into Cork twenty miles.

27042. How near do you go to Eyre?—About two miles of Eyre.

27043. Do many inmates come from as far back as Castlecoole?—Yes.

27044. Do you think many people come to be treated in your hospital from Castlecoole and Smeem?—A fair share.

27045. Are there a great many cases in which people cannot be removed such long distances?—The Guardians have an ambulance van, and if there is a serious case the medical officer at Smeem wires to Kinnaree for an ambulance, and it goes down.

27046. Castlecoole is twenty miles from Kinnaree, and you have not heard of any bad results or objections raised by the people of that district; they think it is sufficiently near with your good ambulance?—I have not heard any objection, but Mr. Sheehan knows more about that district than I do.

27047. You don't think that is too far to move them?—I don't think it is.

27048. Would that be about as much as you think it would be right to remove people?—I think it is quite.

27049. You would not stretch to thirty miles?—No; Castlecoole is far enough—twenty-four English miles.

27050. Have you ever heard any question or suggestion made about putting up a small hospital for half-a-dozen or eight beds that might be under the dispensary doctor at Smeem?—I did not hear it, until I saw it in the evidence of Mr. Flavin.

27051. Well, Mr. Flavin was only asked about it; he did not volunteer any statement on the subject. But 27052. Dr. Brown.—Does the Valencia Hospital not relieve your hospital somewhat?—I think it is useful for that locality.

27053. Do the Guardians give anything for the support of that hospital?—I don't think we have the power to do so; we are paying so much already; we cannot be as generous as we would wish. I think it is supported by subscription. It is a very nice hospital.

27054. There is no waste there?—I am sure not. It is very useful for treating men and such.

27055. CHAIRMAN.—Yes, and for residents on the island?—It is very useful.

27056. Did you ever consider the question of the treatment of the sick at Waterville, and for the county on the back road towards Smeem along the lake; they have to go long distances to your workhouse?—Yes, but our workhouse is about central for the county union.

27057. Do you think a little hospital, something like the Valencia Hospital, would be desirable at Waterville, to be looked after by the dispensary medical officer?—It may be able for a large portion of the year, and you would be paying the staff.

27058. The staff would be the doctor, who would be there in any case, and the nurse would be a person who could act as a midwife for the district?—I think it would be very useful, except it may entail the expense of the building of a hospital.

Dr. Brown.—It would be very small.

27059. CHAIRMAN.—You may get important contributions at Waterville from the telegraph people—these employees would be sick, like other people?—They are pretty well found. There is a doctor in charge, and they have good premises. I hardly think they would come into the hospital.

27060. Is there anything else you would wish to mention?—No; I think Mr. Moriarty has almost answered for the whole of us. We think it a great hardship to have to support the county infirmary—no sewer send any patients there.

27061. We have a list which we got in Yvels showing how many come from Castlecoole?—They must be very few.

CHAIRMAN.—It is not a large number.

Mr. Denis J.
Sullivan.

27062. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council, also?—Yes.

27063. What is the view of the Kinnaree Board of Guardians as regards the closing of their workhouse for all purposes except the treatment of the sick?—They would be entirely opposed to that; because of the great distance the destitute would have to be carried, because of the extent of the union, if we were amalgamated with Killarney. We go to the south side of the Kinnaree River into Cork twenty miles.

27064. How near do you go to Eyre?—About two miles of Eyre.

27065. Do many inmates come from as far back as Castlecoole?—Yes.

27066. Do you think many people come to be treated in your hospital from Castlecoole and Smeem?—A fair share.

27067. Are there a great many cases in which people cannot be removed such long distances?—The Guardians have an ambulance van, and if there is a serious case the medical officer at Smeem wires to Kinnaree for an ambulance, and it goes down.

27068. Castlecoole is twenty miles from Kinnaree, and you have not heard of any bad results or objections raised by the people of that district; they think it is sufficiently near with your good ambulance?—I have not heard any objection, but Mr. Sheehan knows more about that district than I do.

27069. You don't think that is too far to move them?—I don't think it is.

27070. Would that be about as much as you think it would be right to remove people?—I think it is quite.

27071. You would not stretch to thirty miles?—No; Castlecoole is far enough—twenty-four English miles.

27072. Have you ever heard any question or suggestion made about putting up a small hospital for half-a-dozen or eight beds that might be under the dispensary doctor at Smeem?—I did not hear it, until I saw it in the evidence of Mr. Flavin.

27073. Well, Mr. Flavin was only asked about it; he did not volunteer any statement on the subject. But say a hospital for six or eight beds, that would be under the dispensary doctor and district nurse, who would look after the sick in their own homes, if she had no cases in the hospital, what would you think of such a hospital at Smeem, to take in the people that are in the workhouse behind Smeem and over to Castlecoole? How far is the Blackwater Bridge?—Half-way between Kinnaree and Smeem. I don't know much about Smeem.

27074. What would you think about a little hospital of that sort, supposing the expenditure came to what would be a small sum on the union—say, £250 a year?—I think one district hospital in Kinnaree for it is the centre of the union—ought to be sufficient for the whole union.

27075. You think it is no hardship asking the people to go twenty-four miles from Castlecoole and twenty miles from Smeem?—If you put a hospital at Castlecoole you should put up one at the other side, at Tuelist, which is as far away from Kinnaree.

27076. Is the population anything like as numerous?—I could not answer that; but I think it is very near.

27077. At all events you think that if a hospital were necessary at Smeem it would be most likely that the people of Tuelist would be likely to ask for it?—Yes.

27078. That is where the dispensary doctor lives?—There is a dispensary doctor there.

27079. Do you think they would be reasonable in looking for it?—They would think they had as good a right as the people of Smeem.

27080. Your own opinion would be against giving them the hospital on the ground that it would lead to greater expense, and that twenty-four miles is not so undisturbed hardship on the people who live that distance from hospital?—It is not, considering the country. The roads are good, and we have an ambulance van.

27081. Supposing Kinnaree Workhouse were to be closed for all classes except the sick, would the people of Kenmare be anxious that, instead of remaining empty, it should be devoted to some other useful purpose, such as a sanatorium?—Certainly, they would be most anxious. A sanatorium for consumptives or an industrial school.

22073. If that were done, would your chief objection from the Kenmare side of the country disappear if it were continued for some useful purpose?—It would not. The Kenmare Workhouse was built for 500 paupers; at present we have only 90 or 100; and we would have plenty of room for keeping the paupers in it if the children were sent to an industrial school.

22074. If you put two or three hundred of some other class of inmates into a sanatorium there, which would be the most useful—to continue the Kenmare Workhouse for the healthy outside or to convert it into a sanatorium for the consumptives for the County Kerry?—I think it could be used for both purposes.

22075. It could not, most emphatically. You could not have the ordinary inmates running through the consumptive patients?—That would be an objection.

22076. There would not be room either. If you had to get one or the other, which would you prefer?—I think it would make a very good place for a sanatorium for consumptives, if it was decided that the workhouse should be closed up.

22077. Is there anything special as regards the union of Kenmare? You have heard the evidence of Mr. Mackenzy and of Mr. Fitzgerald; if any of Mr. Mackenzy's answers struck you as different to what you yourself would give, we would be very glad if you would mention them?—No, I quite agree with Mr. Mackenzy; and especially I quite agree with him as to the injustice of poor people, like those in Kenmare, being called upon to contribute to the county infirmary, and the fever hospitals in Tralee and Killarney, when we have an infirmary and fever hospital of our own.

22078. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you agree with Mr. Mackenzy in his general evidence?—Yes, I do.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. SULLIVAN, Chairman, Kenmare Union, examined.

22079. CHAIRMAN.—Now we have had the advantage of hearing your colleague; you are the Chairman of the Kenmare Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

22080. And you live at the place mentioned?—At the Twonist side; at the north side of the Kenmare River, towards Castletownbere.

22081. You heard the questions asked and answered about a cottage hospital at Sneem, and Mr. Sullivan said he thought if one was put at Sneem the Twonist people would say they should have one too?—Yes, quite likely.

22082. You are familiar with the condition of the country?—Certainly, and I don't hear of any complaints in that district.

22083. If there is much sickness, you hear about it?—Yes.

22084. Do you hear of many sick going to the Kenmare Hospital, or are they chiefly treated in their own homes?—The ven is sent out when there is a fever case. There is hardly any case from that remote district unless there is an outbreak of fever.

22085. They have at odd sickness of other kinds. I suppose?—Yes; but they can come into the workhouse on an out-call.

22086. If a man had pneumonia, that is a disease of the lungs, he would not be in a condition for an out-call?—Certainly not; he would go in by the ambulance.

22087. Can you tell me whether many serious cases, such as pneumonias, are dealt with in their own homes along that north side of the bay and up in the mountain passes, or are they brought to Kenmare?—Very few are brought to Kenmare; they are mostly dealt with in their own homes; there are very few destitute people.

22088. Sickness does not stop at the line of destitution, a good many comfortable people get sick, too?—These are dealt with in their own homes.

22089. People of small valuations—£5 or £10?—£7 is the average valuation in that district.

22090. They would be dealt with in their own homes?—They would.

22091. How many rooms would they have in a house?—They would have two or three rooms.

22092. A kitchen and a bedroom, most of them?—A little upstairs, too.

22093. A loft. Would the loft be used for sleeping?—The room is used for sleeping, and the young portion of the family sleep upstairs.

22094. What rooms would you have in the ordinary run of houses? First, there would be the kitchen; would there be a bed in it?—No.

22095. Then you would have at one end a room of the kitchen, where you would have the husband and wife?—No; in the well-to-do houses there are no beds downstairs at all; there are two rooms upstairs as well as downstairs.

22096. You have two-storied houses in that district?—Yes, in the majority of them.

22097. Stead or thatched?—Half-and-half.

22098. Have you two-storied thatched houses in that district?—You have lots in most of them, and windows on the gable ends that will allow the light to come into the loft.

22099. Where do the man and wife sleep?—Upstairs, in the loft.

22100. And where do the boys and girls sleep?—Upstairs, too. There is a partition through the rooms above as well as below.

22101. And the girls and boys are in the same loft?—I suppose something like that.

22102. Do you think that these loft accommodations with the gable and short head-rooms are proper places in which to treat sick people?—I don't believe it would be; but they have an objection to come into the workhouse.

22103. But if they had a nice little hospital in their own district, where they could go in, with no workhouse objections, and could have their own doctor, who is used to looking after them, and a nurse that they would get to know, do you think that would be a popular thing?—I object to it on the score of expense. I think we are over-rated at present.

22104. If we could pull down your rates, and give you that little advantage?—By all means, I would be in favour of it. I heard you say it would cost a couple of hundred pounds in Sneem.

CHAIRMAN.—But if we saved a couple of thousand to Kenmare—I don't perceive you that.

22105. Mr. MURPHY.—It might be possible to use in one place, and distribute the saving all round. Kenmare has a great advantage. Its sick can be treated locally, whereas the people of the distant districts don't get the same advantage?—I would be in favour of divisional rating (instead of union rating). I don't think the rates would go up so much if we had the old system of divisional rating. There is a more or less tendency to give out-door relief when it is union rating. For instance, in my own division, I have nothing to account for at the end of the year to my constituents as long as it is union rating; formerly, if I reduced the rates £d. in the £, there was something thought of me.

22106. CHAIRMAN.—And if you found you had to bring home to them the news of an increase of £d., you would rather come home by a back way?—Yes. I would also be in favour of single representation instead of double representation, because it creates a lot of confusion when a lot of us meet together at Board meetings.

22107. You speak factually. As Chairman of the Board, you would rather control thirty than sixty?—I would rather control ten than thirty.

Mr. JOHN J. SHANNON, C.B., examined.

22108. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Kenmare Rural District Council?—I am.

22109. You come from Sneem?—Yes.

22110. It was about your district that I asked the questions as to the cottage hospital. There is a large country about Sneem along the mountains, and along the sea coast to Castletown?—I—So there is. Castletown is nine miles from Smeem and sixteen-and-a-half from Kenmare.

27111. A cottage hospital under your dispensary medical officer, with a district nurse to look after the sick, would cost, roughly speaking, £200 or £250 a year for the whole union. Do you think the sick at Smeem and the district round Castletown are sufficiently benefited by hospital accommodation at present?—I know that the doctor at Smeem has taken the precaution to send people to hospital in time before they got too bad to be sent.

27112. He is often called in too late, though?—Yes. These cases, such as pneumonia, cannot be sent to hospital. I think a cottage hospital would be a very good thing; but in the meantime, of course, the expenditure is very high.

27113. Your view is that you would not suggest this cottage hospital to add to the rates?—I would not; but if a reduction in the rates were clearly demonstrated—27114. Would you approve of devoting some part of the money, without increasing the former rates, to the erection of a cottage hospital?—Most undoubtedly.

27115. The district about Smeem is one of the poorest in Kerry?—It is.

27116. The ratio between valuation and the population is very low?—Very low.

27117. The people there are not yet the owners of their holdings—they have not purchased?—Not yet; a part of the estate is under sale negotiations.

27118. Naturally, all the ratepayers look very closely on all the questions of local taxation as coming from the ultimate purse of all?—Yes. They are very sensitive as regards the taxation and the expenditure.

27119. They would welcome any reduction?—It would be very welcome, I assure you, sir.

27120. You are one of the Board of Guardians who agreed to a unanimous resolution that Kenmare Workhouse ought not to be closed?—I did.

27121. Did the Guardians then consider that the closing of it would not mean any substantial saving to the ratepayers?—The question they went into chiefly was that they did not see that Kenmare could be amalgamated. In the first instance, Castletown being twenty-five miles and a half from Kenmare, and the nearest union being forty-one miles, they did not see how they possibly could agree to the amalgamation of the Kenmare Union with any other union in Kerry.

27122. They voted against amalgamation—what did they think would result from amalgamation?—They thought there would be undue hardship inflicted on the poor.

27123. What class of the poor?—The class that would be taken from Smeem to another union; the people in the body of the workhouse.

27124. Not the sick?—Not the sick.

27125. What hardship did they think would result to the healthy people, who would be in the body of the house? Supposing the healthy people in the body of the house were removed to Killarney or Tralee, what hardship would result, in the opinion of the Kenmare Board of Guardians?—In the first place, the people would have no representative on the Killarney Board.

27126. Supposing the District Council of Kenmare remained as it is, and it would have charge of the hospital at Kenmare that would be left there, and that it would have charge of the cottage hospital at Smeem and Tralee, if such hospitals were erected; and that they would then have the administration of the out-door relief, and never go to Killarney or Tralee for out-door purposes at all, but manage all the Poor Law business themselves, as heretofore, except that they would send cheques for the able-bodied that would be maintained at the central institution at a lower cost than at Kenmare?—That is a question that did not arise in the inquiry we held.

27127. They rather looked to the breaking up of their body?—Yes.

27128. They did not consider that their body might still be maintained, and it would meet locally to discharge Poor Law and other duties, as heretofore?—That was the view the committee took of the matter.

27129. Without in any way pledging your colleagues, but merely speaking your own personal opinion, and without due consideration, but on the spot of the moment, how does the thing strike you now, looking at it from this new point of view?—I am still of opinion that I cannot see how economy would result from amalgamation, considering the distance the paupers would have to go from Smeem to Castletown, or Smeem to Killarney.

27130. A healthy man or woman gets in need of relief at Castletown; heretofore he would go to Kenmare, but instead of going to Kenmare Workhouse he would go to the Kenmare relieving officer, and be put in the train there, and be labelled for Tralee or Killarney, as the case may be. Where would the hardship be over and above the fact that he would have a railway journey after getting properly entertained by the relieving officer at Kenmare—he would have a railway journey to Killarney or Tralee—do you see a hardship in it?—I do. I see a hardship on the representatives, in the first place. If our paupers are to be transferred to Killarney, no Guardian would attend at Killarney from Smeem.

27131. The Guardians would still remain at Kenmare?—They would not appear to be a very great hardship in that case.

27132. The people would go to the central institution; how the central institution would be governed is a matter for future consideration. It might be dealt with by the Guardians or Council at the place where it would be, at Killarney or Kenmare; a per capita, or so much a head, would be charged, and you would send them a cheque; or it might be managed by a committee, like the asylum committee, on which every district would have its share of representation, as might be thought best. There would not be any word of representation?—I would like to be satisfied of that first.

27133. How does it strike you at first sight?—If we have representation, and then if we had officers who would see that the paupers would be properly transferred to Killarney.

27134. It would not be so objectionable as you thought it was when you voted in favour of retaining things as they are?—Not quite so objectionable, because that question did not crop up at the inquiry.

27135. Mr. MURKIN.—With the extension to the Guardians of the power of giving out-door relief in cases where they could not at present, so that they might, when they thought it a hardship to send the people from the locality, give them a sum of 4s. or 6s. a week to board them in their own neighbourhood, instead of sending them to the central house. If the Guardians thought it proper in particular cases not to send some respectable person away from the locality, to give them power, instead of paying for them in the county almshouse, to give them a certain sum per week to support them in their own locality.

27136. CHAIRMAN.—In Castletown?—I don't believe it could be done at all.

27137. Mr. MURKIN.—You think there may be some hardship in sending people away from their own locality—Kenmare, for instance. If the Guardians had their powers enlarged, so that in particular cases they could give out-door relief to some of these people instead of sending them to the central almshouse, would not that remove the sentimental objection?—There are some people you never could keep at home.

27138. But in particular cases, in which it would be well to do so, they should have the power to do so?—It would be very desirable in certain cases.

27139. CHAIRMAN.—Are you in favour of relief by out-door relief instead of indoor relief—which relief do you prefer?—Outdoor relief is cheaper, of course.

27140. Taking it at so much a head, it is cheaper. Do you think a great many more would ask for out-door relief than would ask for indoor relief?—I am not in a position to say that.

27141. There are a great many people who would take a little money weekly who would not think of going into the workhouse?—The class of people who would go into the workhouse, I think, they would take no money outside at all.

27142. There are a great many people outside who would take money, but would not go into the workhouse?—That is quite so.

27143. Would you be rather afraid that if you had a scheme for out-door relief, without safeguards or without sufficient safeguards, that too many people would run for relief in their own homes and neighbourhood, or if you have such a scheme, do you see what safeguards you might introduce to prevent too much expenditure of the rates?—It would all depend on the amount of relief given.

27144. Do you think it would be a sufficient check if such additional relief, in addition to the amount at present given, if the relief in future of such cases were to be levied on the electoral division; do you think electoral division rating would make people look so closely after the amount given that there would be no danger of any abuse?—I believe so. Of course, while that is so, I find in the Kenmare Union at the present time union rating has been just as cheap as divisional rating.

27145. You, personally, would be in favour of continuing the union rating?—I am.

27146. You are resident in the town, I suppose?—I am resident in the village of Skene.

27147. Your colleagues who preceded you spoke strongly in favour of divisional rating. He said since it has been done away with there is no incentive to representatives being particularly interested in looking after the finances of the division?—I am of a different opinion. I say the union expenditure has not been increased.

27148. Kilgarvan, Sween, and Kenmare are the three populous centres of your union; would Kilgarvan be in favour of union rating?—I could not say.

27149. But Kenmare is, and Sween?—Yes.

Mr. T. J. O'Sullivan.—There are two divisions that were highly rated before, and there has been a saving there.

27150.—Dual representation on these Boards I consider a great abuse. There is a great deal of time wasted over doing business on these Boards.

27151. CHAIRMAN.—You speak as Chairman also?—Yes. As regards the county infirmary, I consider it very unfair that we should be called upon to pay towards the county infirmary; we never send any patients from Sween or the neighbourhood.

Mr. DAVID J. HEART, F.R.C., examined.

Mr. David J. Heart.

27152. CHAIRMAN.—Did Mr. Moriarty express pretty clearly the views of the Killarney Guardians as well as his own?—Well, he did.

27153. You are against amalgamation?—If I thought it was a benefit to the rates I would not be against it, because the rates are very high, and people are not in the way to pay them at present; but I don't see how it would be a benefit.

27154. If this Commission could make a report and produce evidence that would lead you, and men able to form an opinion on such a question, to believe there would be a substantial saving, would you be in favour of amalgamation if it could be carried out without hardship?—Of course I would; we would want a considerable saving.

27155. From your resolutions, you were evidently of opinion that if Kenmare and Calverdown Unions were broken up the sick would have to come here?—Yes.

27156. That, of course, you have learned to-day would not be the case, because the sick would continue to be treated locally; and, if anything, further accommodation would be recommended for the convenience of the sick?—Yes.

27157. That takes away one of the chief objections?—Indeed, it does.

27158. You heard the suggestion that Kenmare might be converted into a sanatorium or an institution for the isolation and cure of consumption?—Yes, I did.

27159. Would you approve of that, if the institution were not used for Poor Law purposes?—Yes, it would be very useful.

27160. What is your opinion about children—would you think it desirable to board them out?—Yes.

27161. You have done a great deal in boarding out in the Killarney Union?—Yes. My experience is that the children are better off, and much more likely to become useful in the world by and by, than if reared in the workhouse. They are not workhouse birds, and not likely to come back to it again; they are able to do something when they come of age.

27162. The Killarney Board were of opinion that lunatics would be better treated in an institution for the insane than in a workhouse?—Yes.

27163. Did you form any opinion as to whether they should be in the full-blown lunatic asylum or in an economically managed auxiliary?—As far as possible, I think they should be in the asylum.

27164. You think that might be more economical than using a fresh institution?—Far more economical.

27165. But if the opposite appeared to be the fact; if you were satisfied from the experience of Loughal, where the experiment is being tried, and other considerations, that an auxiliary asylum was more economical, would that cause you to modify your opinion?—I am for economy every way I possibly can; if I was satisfied of that I would be fully for it.

27166. Subject to humane treatment, of course?—Oh, yes.

27167. As regards outdoor relief, you say that outdoor relief, or old age pensions, judiciously administered to the respectable aged and infirm, especially married couples, would be preferable and more economical than indoor maintenance?—Yes.

27168. Would you be afraid that too many people might seek for such relief from the Guardians?—I don't think so.

27169. Would you have any such test as the workhouse test before giving them a pension or outdoor relief?—I think it would be well. I would be in favour of it.

27170. Mr. MURPHY.—What advantages would that bring?—If a family are so destitute that they have to become inmates of the workhouse, I would prefer giving them something outside.

27171. They would simply come in to qualify, as deserted wives now come in, to have their husbands arrested?—If it was explained that they were so destitute that they would have to come into the workhouse, or get relief outside, I would prefer giving the relief outside; and as there might be a great many looking for it, I would have a test.

27172. CHAIRMAN.—As regards the existing number, you would prefer dealing with them outside to inside?—I am very much in favour of that.

27173. Is there anything else?—I say that people who have means should pay their actual cost of hospital; it is very hard on the ratepayers.

27174. Do you mean the actual cost?—Yes; because some of these people pay, but only pay as much as a humble pinner, and they cost the union £1 or more a week. There is another class of people, who, when their children come of a certain age, won't pay anything. I consider that is unjust, also.

27175. Your object would be to get as much for the ratepayers as you could without inflicting any hardship?—Yes.

27176. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians power to fix and recover summarily such sum as they thought that the patients or their friends could pay?—Yes. I am also in favour of single-member representation and divisional charabability.

27177. Mr. MURPHY.—Single responsibility?—Yes; it will make people more cautious.

Mr. DANIEL SWEENEY, F.R.C., examined.

Mr. Daniel Sweeney.

27178. CHAIRMAN.—Do you agree with your colleagues who have just given evidence?—Yes.

27179. Is there any question on which you differ from him?—I do, on divisional rating.

27180. You would prefer the union?—Yes; simply because Killarney is the centre of gravity; and these people, when they become destitute, generally speak of the union to be nearer to get this relief.

27181. I suppose that is more true of Killarney, as a centre, than of any place in Ireland, owing to the number of people coming here, attracted by the tourists?—Yes, and they come from other unions; and I wish we had power to send them back to their own unions. They come sometimes as beggars, and then take refuge as citizens in the town. They are a very heavy responsibility on the general taxpayer.

27182. It is lightened a good deal by the union rating, but it is a heavy cost, even on the union?—Yes, I know it is.

27183. Was there any other matter?—I am one of those who dissented from my colleagues—I am for amalgamation.

Jan. 16, 1905.
Mr. Oswald
Steele.

27183. Did you think to what extent amalgamation might be carried out in South Kerry or in the whole of Kerry?—There should be two central bodies—one in Tralee and the other in Killarney. Then, for out-door relief, where a man would have a nice little cottage, that he could be comfortably kept in with a little assistance from our consolidated fund; the ratepayer at the present time, the way he is taxed, could not maintain those people, and it should be given like an old-age pension. We are giving a great amount of taxes, and would like to get something back.

27184. Would you leave the sick in their own neighbourhood?—Oh, certainly.

27185. You would not dream of closing Kinsale and Caherciveen hospitals?—No. It would be very painful to these people if they were near death to be removed to the central place, because their friends are very tenacious, and wish to bury them in their own graveyards; and they might have to come fifty miles to take their relatives away.

27186. That objection would not be so strong if you had the sick treated in their own locality?—Certainly, we should not know any more about that grievance in Killarney if they were treated in their own district.

27187. Except as regards the infirm?—Oh, the chronic cases could be removed to the central place to lessen the staff of the hospitals.

27188. But, of course, you would be prepared to give any people whose situations you touched generous and sufficient compensation?—Oh, certainly; we cannot get rid of them otherwise. If I could do away with some of them I would—unworthy servants!

27189. Who don't exert themselves sufficiently; that would be individuals; that is all right. Are there any officers in situations you would get rid of?—For the imbeciles we have night nurses, and we could do away with them.

27190. You would do away with the master and matron if you brought the healthy all into one institution; you would do away with the masters and matrons of the other five?—So you would; there would be a saving in that alone.

27191. And do away with the food in the healthy wards of five houses?—And the clothing.

27192. They would still want the clothes?—But the clothing of the houses would be reduced a good deal by out-door relief.

27193. What I would take most interest in would be how you would safeguard out-door relief in a way that would prevent its spreading too much—have you no fear of that?—I have not.

27194. You are in favour of union rating; how would you safeguard with union rating out-door relief, so as to prevent its becoming an undue burden?—There is nothing to my mind, from my experience, that the Guardians safeguard more than out-door relief, and are more reluctant to give it. Every Guardian represents a different division, and he feels aggrieved if too much is spent. If you make it a divisional rating, you will prevent that; because if one Guardian finds out that this is a friend or any connection, he will be inclined to increase the out-door relief more than he would if it was union rating, and that would be a sledge of one section against the other.

Mr. James
Steele.

Mr. JAMES STEELE, P.L.O., examined.

27195. CHAIRMAN.—What is your opinion—the last witness was in favour of amalgamation, if duly safeguarded?—I would agree fully in that.

27196. You would rather have amalgamation, if there could be a substantial saving without hardship to the poor?—I would; it would do away with a good deal of officials in other unions.

27197. The cost of the fuel and the cost of keeping up these institutions out of the poor rate would disappear?—Yes; I would be far superseding all the officials that would be done away with.

27198. The compensation could not be as big as their salaries, and it would drop according as the lives dropped?—When they would be going off duty, they could not expect to get as much as when on duty.

27199. What is your view about out-door relief?—I would be very much in favour of divisional rating. I am speaking from long experience, and I certainly think divisional rating would be a great saving. From my own experience, I know that when it was divisional the ratepayers were a great check on the Guardians. I am speaking from experience; it has been on me myself. If the ratepayers of the division found the rates were going up, they would not fail to tell me so; and actually inquire as to how it did go up, and I would have to try and give them an explanation. I would also be in favour of only one representative from each division; when there are two it is too complicated.

27200. You think it is too big an assemblage to discuss matters in an ordinary business-like way?—I know perfectly well it is. On some days scarcely a quorum may turn up; whereas if there is an appointment, a terrible Board turns up, and there is confusion.

27201. Mr. MURKIN.—There is a further difficulty—the two men may not see things the same way?—Yes; and it is easier to get a good, intelligent man very often from a district than it is to get two.

27202. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you would not be limited to two intelligent men in any district in Kerry?—No.

27203. Mr. MURKIN.—If there is only one representative there is the responsibility on him to look after his division?—That is so; and, of course, under the old Poor Law Act, I must say the ex-officio men dealt with the out-door question; it was the elected Guardians had the management.

27204. You don't, then, agree with the last witness, who thought the Guardians as a body look more closely after out-door relief when it is a union charge than when it is divisional?—I do not. I agree with Mr. Healy.

27205. You think there is a direct scrutiny of out-door relief when people in a small area have to pay it?—Oh, yes. I remember your speaking about those families who have illegitimate children. It would be a good idea if those people could be sent to their own unions. I know instances in Killarney Union where they came from other unions and other counties. They persisted when leaving their own localities that they are going to friends of theirs.

27206. CHAIRMAN.—I think you would find that it is as broad as it is long. That is undoubtedly a fact in all unions, that a girl naturally and instinctively runs away from her own locality to a place where she won't be known in her shame; and if people from a distance come here, the girls from here go to a distance, and if you had an interchange, it would be as broad as it is long!—Perhaps so; but if confined to their own localities they would be less likely to fall again.

27207. I am afraid the falling takes place quite irrespective of union changeability?—I think if confined to their own locality there would be a check on that.

27208. Mr. MURKIN.—If the workhouse for the future were closed to that class, you would get rid of the difficulty?—I think it would be a great boon to the country.

Mr. Patrick
Coxey.

Mr. PATRICK COXEY, Clerk, Killarney Union, examined.

27209. Mr. D. STEELE.—Is it your experience, from what you have seen of the working of the two Acts—the old Act and the new Act—would Killarney suffer by a divisional charge?—Certainly; I believe the supervision on out-door relief now is a great deal more and more effectual than it was formerly. When a man formerly was giving out-door relief, if it was a divisional charge, all his colleagues did not mind; now, when it is a union charge, they all exercise supervision over it, and supervise it very carefully, and, in fact, prevent it altogether.

27210. CHAIRMAN.—Have you known many cases in which, when it came to a decision, the Guardians refused the out-door relief recommended by the Guardian of the locality; now that is a concrete question?—I could not place my finger on it now, but I believe there have been such.

27211. Where out-door relief has been refused after it was recommended by the Guardian of the division?—Yes, and the Guardian of the division may recommend an increase where it has been substantially reduced.

27212. And his recommendation is not always followed?—His recommendation is not always followed. They have passed a resolution that out-door relief is not to be increased without a notice of motion.

27213. That you are aware, is illegal?—I am; but it gives the Guardians an idea of what is going on. The out-door relief long ago used to come to £2,000, and now it is down to £1,500.

27214. Mr. MURKIN.—When you speak of long ago, what date do you mean?—Before 1895, before the Vice-Guardians came to Kildarey Union; of course, the out-door relief was diminished then, and it was low for two or three years afterwards.

27215. In 1898 or 1899, what was it?—In 1899, £2,000.

27216. Because it would be no test to take 1899 of 1901?—Oh, no.

Jan. 18, 1905.
Mr. Patrick
Corry.

27217. Your evidence is certainly very different to that of the average witness. Most witnesses say that since union rating has been established the supervision of out-door relief is not as close or as careful as it formerly was?—I could substantiate it by fact and proof that the supervision of out-door relief is a great deal more; because now the whole Board takes an interest in it, and formerly only one person or two took an interest in it.

27218. CHAIRMAN.—Did you hear that very interesting evidence of the Chairman of the Keshmone Board of Guardians; does not that show that the ratepayers of the district are a very real check on the individual Guardian?—I don't think that affects them very much.

The sitting terminated

Feb. 4, 1905

FIFTY-FOURTH PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1st, 1905.

At the Boardroom, Croon Workhouse.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURRAGHAN, and Dr. COBY BODEN.

Mr. JAMES COSTELLO, P.L.C., examined.

Mr. James Costello.

27218. CHAIRMAN.—What is your opinion on the general question of amalgamation of unions? Do you think, taking the general question throughout all Ireland, or throughout the Co. Limerick, or any other district you are acquainted with—do you think it would be desirable that any union should be dissolved?—I have no information whatever on the amalgamation of unions in general throughout Ireland; I simply confine myself to the financial position of our own as compared with the surrounding unions. I object to the dissolution of this union, because no matter how the poor may be benefited, if they are benefited at all, the ratepayers will suffer by amalgamation with the adjoining unions in consequence of the difference in rating. I certainly believe that if we are to adopt any better measures at all for the condition of the poor here, and carry out better classification, we can expend a vast amount of money in improving the condition of the poor before we come up to the standard rate of the surrounding unions.

27219. Are you the lowest rated union in the county?—Yes. I would ask you to take in evidence the figures in the Blue-book.

27220. We will do that, of course.—That is our main point.

27221. We will ask Mr. Conway to prepare a form for us giving us all these facts up to date.—Then, of course, there would be a great difficulty, if this union was dissolved, in removing the poor people. It is very hard; the doctors find it difficult to recommend their removal in many instances.

27222. What is the most distant part of your union from Croon?—Ballygarry, to the east.

Mr. Kelly.—It goes ten miles further west.

Witness.—Our main argument is this: that no matter how we may set to work improving the condition of the poor—and we can make many improvements and better their condition in many ways—we will not afterwards come up to the standard rate of the surrounding unions.

27223. Your objection, so far, is mainly on the ground of the possibility of extra expense to the ratepayers of the Croon Union?—It is, by dissolving this union.

27224. I am not saying such a scheme is possible, but if it were possible to make a scheme by the Commissioners who are here, taking into consideration not merely this union and the adjoining unions, but the unions of all Ireland, and making a series of schemes under a general scheme for all Ireland, and if under such a scheme the existing rates that you pay here in Croon could be reduced by some change without inflicting any hardship on the sick—I am only supposing that—would you then have any objection in addition?—Surely, any rational man could not in such conditions.

27225. If the present rates could be pulled down, and at the same time no hardship caused to the sick, is there any other reason that you personally could put forward why Croon should be allowed to have its own workhouse as at present?—I don't know of any other under such circumstances, if we get these conditions. I am not a ratepayer at all; it is more in the interests of the poor than of the ratepayers. I would like to have the poor served within the limits of justice and fairness.

27226. You say you are not a ratepayer?—Only a very small one, indeed; and, personally, it does not concern me, but I represent the district.

27227. But looking at it as regards merely the question of breaking up this union and amalgamating it with Rathkeale and, say, Kilsaule, on the present Poor Law system, you are of opinion that it would be a distinct loss to the Croon Board of Guardians?—Undoubtedly.

27228. But if a scheme such as you have not in view could be introduced which would be a saving to the ratepayers, and still no hardship to the sick, that would take away your main objection?—It would.

27229. In considering the question of breaking up the Croon workhouse, had you in your mind an idea that the sick could no longer be treated here in Croon?—I had.

27230. But if the sick would continue to be treated in Croon?—Of course, I have no knowledge of how that scheme might be carried into action.

27231. And if the only people who would be removed would be the healthy, would you still see much objection to the change?—I would have every objection to have any contact with the surrounding unions.

27232. Supposing your own District Council was left untouched and would still continue to exist?—I believe that would be a wiser policy, for I certainly think a man acting in a dual capacity as District Councillor and Poor Law Guardian, going to one union as Guardian—

27233. Oh, I had no such idea; supposing the District Council remained and continued to be the Poor Law authority, as at present, and they would still meet and look after the people whom they had under their charge, say the sick, and also administer the outdoor relief, and pay so much a head for such able-bodied people as might be moved from the Croon Union to any other place?—That is, if it would not incur any extra expenditure.

27234. Subject always to the rates being lowered?—Certainly; we would agree with that thoroughly, and think it a very sound policy to adopt here.

27235. There are a large number of classes of inmates in this workhouse. First you have the sick. If we leave the acute sick here to be taken care of as heretofore, then the next class would be, say, the lunatics—there are some lunatics here. Would you see any objection to taking away the lunatics and putting them either in a lunatic asylum if there was room?—I don't know that there is any need of taking them away; I think they are fairly well cared for here.

27236. Are you aware that is not the general opinion of those experienced in looking after such things; the general opinion is that lunatics cannot receive that care and have that amount of exercise and employment that is desirable for them in a workhouse, in any workhouse?—We have no lunatics here except imbeciles; they are incurable in every sense of the word.

27237. I mean people with a diseased brain; call them idiots, lunatics, or imbeciles, what you like; any people suffering from brain disease you have some here, practically?—No.

27238. Then it does not affect you much here; you already do what is considered the proper thing; get them taken into the lunatic asylum?—Quite so.

27239. Another class you have to consider are the girls who come in to have illegitimate children?—These are hardly any in Croon.

27240. But still there are some from time to time. Would you approve of the suggestion that has been made to us in a great many places by Guardians and persons having an interest in these cases—would you approve of removing these inmates, or, rather, never admitting them in the future to the workhouse, but as soon as a girl who has had a misfortune, as soon as she has to go to hospital or some place of that sort three or four months before her confinement, would you approve of sending her to a Magdalen asylum or some institution under religious management, where she would be paid for out of the rates at somewhere about the same amount as it costs for her at present?—I would, surely.

27242. The witnesses who have come before us have suggested that, and the way they put it is that, sending a girl to such an institution would stop her from having further children; there would be a chance of reclaiming her and putting her in good ways and getting a situation for her afterwards, where she or the father of the child might contribute to the support of the child. That woman would come to be a burden on the ratepayers, and would not be coming back to have further children, and be a further charge on the rate?—I agree with that.

27243. That would be desirable from the point of view of economy, as well as saving the poor creature from an unhappy life. You would approve of that?—Yes.

27244. That would get a large number of women out of the workhouses in Ireland; and many of the children you have are the children of such women. Supposing the child is taken into an asylum—I don't say that such an asylum exactly exists at present—but supposing the existing asylums could be modified so that the girl could be first received into the asylum, and as soon as the time came she would be sent to the maternity hospital to have her baby, and as soon as she had her baby and could be discharged from the hospital, that she should come back to the asylum, that she would see her baby for a year or two, and that efforts would be made to bring her to a sense of her condition and try to get her on the right road again; that the baby should be boarded out as soon as possible at the cost of the mother or the father of the baby, and that you should in future exclude all such cases from the workhouse, would you approve of that?—I would, sir; but about the boarding-out, I think it is very hard to find proper persons to take charge of them generally; they take them for the sake of making some profit on them, and in spite of all the vigilance they are neglected.

27245. That is an inducement we are all liable to: we all like to make a little money. You would not like to take an entire person into your house without having compensation for him, if you know you could get compensation?—Some people are more covetous than others, and you cannot make a choice without a trial.

27246. Many small people in the country find it very hard to get a bit of ready money?—They are very apt to grasp at it.

27247. Small people rely on the earnings of hens and eggs, and they reckon on that as buying tea for them, or whatever it is; if they had so many pounds a year coming in to them—if they were small farmers those few pounds would go a long way towards buying meat?—I don't believe you will get many small farmers in the Co. Limerick to take children; the people that would take them are labourers, and they don't bring up their own children too well.

27248. They have up to this being doing it under most unfortunate conditions, living in hovels; but now going through the country it is very changed to what it was twenty years ago: you see decent houses, and they can keep their children in comfort and decency now as far as houses go?—They can; and the Compulsory Education Act may help them to send their children to school.

27249. Have you ever tried to get small farmers to take their children?—Not to my knowledge.

27250. Would it not largely come to the question of how much you would give them?—It would.

27251. If you were foolish enough to say to a farmer, "We will give you £50 a year for keeping a child," you would have great competition for them?—I scarcely would.

27252. And if you come down to a fair sum you will have a demand for them if you send them out early enough?—I would be slow to deal with parties if we bring them down to a fair rate of maintenance; the parties that would apply for them would not be the best. However, if the matter had to be tried—

27253. Are you aware that in some other unions very large numbers of these children are boarded out with farmers?—I have heard so.

27254. And they get good milk and starchout, and food of that sort?—I have seen a couple of little boys in the Rathfriland Union taken by farmers, and their lives were miserable, and I have had a fair share of it.

27255. How long ago would that have been?—Probably twenty years back.

27256. What age did they go out to the farmers?—They bought them out in service.

27257. That is hiring out, not boarding out?—But the boarded-out will be used in the same way by parties.

27258. Are you aware that there are stringent regulations now about boarding out, that ladies' committees look after them, and the relieving officers have strict instructions, and there are two ladies appointed for all Ireland to inspect these children?—Under such vigilance I would be in favour of boarding out.

27259. The cases you refer to are cases where farmers would take a grown-up child, because they knew they could get work out of them at a cheap rate. But the question I was rather putting to you was the question of boarding out a little child as soon as it was able to use its teeth, at two or three years old; so much a year would be paid for that little child to the farmer's family; there would be children in the house, and the little child would fall in with the rest; it would not cost much to keep it, and it has been found that a great number of the farmers treat these children as if they were their own?—The scheme would work very well when there would be a vigilance committee to attend to them. You may find several people that would treat them as one of their own, and other parties may be deterred from treating their badly by the inspection.

27260. Another class you have in the workhouse are the tramps and vagrants?—We are most anxious to get rid of them.

27261. We have had a great many suggestions made through Ireland that this class, if they have made up their minds to live on the public, either partly out of the rates and partly out of forced donations—that if they are going to live on the public, they should be obliged to work for the public. It has been suggested that they should be liable to arrest if found going about without any visible means of earning their subsistence—they should be liable to be arrested and placed in what is known as a labour colony under a magistrate's warrant for a certain time, and confined there and made to work either for the whole term they were put in for or for such term as the managing body of the institution thought necessary, giving them leave to go out if the managing body thought they would be fit to work again. Would you be in favour of that?—Oh, certainly. I am sure some of them are skilled workmen.

27262. A great many are warriors?—But their children would be nothing at all, and would become the very worst members of society.

27263. You would be in favour of withdrawing them from the road?—Yes.

27265. Take, here, your Crown Workhouse according to its present arrangements; if you were to consult your master or doctor or anyone who has a knowledge of the classification and the apartments and wards of the institution, do you know that it would be impossible for you to carry out such a scheme of classification under existing arrangements?—I know very well that it should be done, but I don't know whether it can be done here.

27266. In my opinion it would be impossible in most workhouses to carry out any such scheme of classification under the existing system?—I don't you think it could be carried out here with the number of aged and infers we have—that an attempt could be made at classification in this house.

27267. I suppose you would have about seventy; take it at from fifty to seventy—say fifty even for argument—I can refer you to Dr. Hartigan, a gentleman of long experience of this house, and I am quite sure he will give you the fullest information on that particular matter.

27268. If we suppose for a moment, for the sake of argument, that it would not be possible to classify them in this workhouse, is there any objection that you see to putting them into the central institution?—Not that I am aware of, if it cannot possibly be done here.

27269. I don't say it could not be done, of course, but supposing you could not have such classification done here would you see any reason against removing them in a central institution?—I could not very well answer that presently. But if you take away the able-bodied and aged and infirm we have no business with the house at all.

27270. Except for the sick and any other class that might be put into it in a centralising way. Suppose you were one of the workhouses that would be used for centralising some other class in, because it is not merely a question about Croon; all these questions I am putting to you are exactly the same as we have put in other unions in Ireland, it is not specially for Croon. Then as soon as a scheme for the redistribution of inmates would be considered it may or may not be that Croon would be selected as a central institution for some class?—Personally, I am in favour of improving the condition of these afflicted people in every way, but I am utterly opposed to throwing any excessive burden on our ratepayers for the purpose of assisting the surrounding unions, relieving them in any way. I think it is only fair we should help our own.

27271. I start with the idea that any change would entail a saving for the ratepayers?—Of course, I could not go into such a matter as that; it is rather wide for me.

27272. Have you noticed anything in this union about the distribution of out-door relief?—No; on the contrary I think it is distributed too small to some parties, and I certainly think the auditor is very hard in that respect.

27273. You may be perfectly sure that the auditor is not harder than the law. What change would you wish to see in the law, to give the Guardians the power to be a little more generous as you would call it, I suppose, in the administration of relief?—Parties holding one rood of land and having large families—catties in great distress, they are excluded.

27274. You would repeal the quarter-acre clause?—I would.

27275. Would you limit the amount of land to be held, or would you leave the whole matter in the discretion of the Guardians?—I think it would be better to leave it in the discretion of the Guardians; there are some poor farmers owing five or six cows, and they are worse off than the labourers; adversity, sickness, and many things make their condition very bad at times; but, of course, there should be a strict line drawn.

27276. You are aware that at present a widow with one child cannot get out-door relief?—Yes.

27277. Is that a desirable exception—would you wish to have the power of giving her out-door relief?—I would, until the child would become strong.

27278. Until your own discretion thought it time to stop it?—Yes, if the widow herself is not very well able to work she should get it.

27279. A widow with two children is eligible for out-door relief. You give it in a great number of these cases; in some I think you would not give it. Would you wish that a widow with one child should be put on the same level as a widow with two, that is, that you could give it to her, if you wished?—Oh, certainly.

27280. Have you ever thought of the question of the old married couple, living together and becoming destitute, who would have no means if they did not get relief, coming into the workhouse and being separated. Would you approve of making that class eligible for out-door relief when they are worn out?—I would, until they would become infirm.

27281. I am talking of them being infirm—the case I would assume would be a man and wife aged and infirm?—Living with a son or daughter.

27282. No; living with no son or daughter to support them?—I don't see how they could provide for themselves.

27283. They could not provide for themselves, of course, if they become destitute; I am assuming that they become destitute, they apply for out-door relief and they don't get it?—As far as they could make use of it I would be in favour of their getting it, but it won't be much value, they won't get an outsider to attend them without paying.

27284. I am not talking of them being bedridden?—But they cannot get their little necessities in the house without somebody to go for them, for water, milk, and other requirements.

27285. The view I have heard put forward about these old couples is that it is a little bit hard to oblige them to come into the workhouse and be separated. Would you be in favour of giving such people a small sum, say 5s. a week, or whatever it would be, rather than bring them into the workhouse?—Oh, certainly; any one that could maintain themselves abroad, that could be kept abroad, it would be much better.

27286. You are aware that that would be a very small sum?—Very few.

27287. There are very few married couples in the workhouse at present?—Very few; and very few outside without somebody to look after them.

27288. Therefore giving a discretionary power to give out-door relief in that case would not be very much abused; it would not apply to many?—No.

27289. Have you ever noticed, in the course of your life as a Guardian, people coming into the workhouse to be treated when sick who could really afford to pay something for their maintenance in hospital?—Well, I don't know.

27290. That is not an abuse that has come under your observation here?—No, not to my knowledge.

27291. Is there any matter I have not asked you about that you would like to mention?—There is not, sir.

Rev. T. Lax, P.P., Croon, examined.

Rev. T. Lax,
P.P.

27292. CHAIRMAN.—You are the chaplain in the workhouse?—Yes. In reference to the infirm, my idea is that they should remain in small hospitals through the country, for if not you separate them from their natural surroundings where they had spent their lives. To bring them into a central place would be like exile. There are not so many of them here. In this union you have between 100 and 110 sick generally, and only about fifty infirm people. Then you talk about classification in a central place. I think you could still have the classification in a place like this fairly; classification is not such a great matter in a country place; they are generally the one class you find there.

27293. You mean they are respectable poor people, and there is not the necessity for classifying that there is in a large city like Limerick?—Exactly. Then about the tramps; there is no doubt the nuisance is a great one, particularly here. The number of tramps seems to be excessive. The tramps were—50 May, 1864, 135; for December, 1864, 236; and for January last, 88. This is on the highway for tramps; they ought not to live on other people's industry. I have been twenty-two years connected with the jail, and I find the tramps there are generally vicious, and if they are not inclined to work the jail should be the place for them, or some labour colony, where they would be made to work. The reclamation would be very much, but you would prevent their children becoming tramps.

27294. It would be hardly fair, if you took their children from them, that they should be given a free leg to start fresh families, perhaps?—Yes.

27295. Now with regard to the inmates?—There are about twenty-four or twenty-five well-minded. I really think the system, if it could be managed, of boarding those out under family care, would be the best. They have very little business here, and if, as in other countries, they could be put out, it would be far better; let the Guardians pay so much for each one.

27296. Would you think of having them boarded out with their own relatives or with strangers. Their own relatives very often are very anxious to get them out of their own house for obvious reasons?—I think so; the strangers would be far better; their own relatives don't ward them, their presence would always be a reproach to them. Very many, both in the Limerick Asylum and other places through the country, could be boarded out, and there would be no necessity for any new surplus asylum.

27397. Would you be afraid, owing to the limited space in the ordinary country houses—would you be afraid that difficulties would arise in the housing of those, where they would not be members of the family?—I do not think so; of course, it would be the business of the doctor or some other to look after that; but my experience is that places could be easily got, just as easily as for the children.

27398. There is a very formidable objection to it, a matter more of medical knowledge which has come before us incidentally; but a great many of these feeble-minded and insane people, although harmless, have, unfortunately, vicious habits?—Not all. Take the Limerick Asylum; you have an average of 500 there; of that 500 you would very readily get between 100 and 150 with scarcely any of these vicious habits, or habits that might not easily be overcome.

27399. We visited an asylum lately, and were told by the Resident Medical Superintendent and his assistants that 91 per cent. of the males had those vicious habits, and the head-warden intervened and said he only knew three in the whole institution that had not?—That has not been my experience. Of course, some are liable to very sudden fits of anger, but you would not call that a vice.

27400. No, such a person would, of course, be eminently one for keeping in an asylum; you refer to those who would not be dangerous outside?—Who are a good deal imbecile, and whose mental energies, after a year or two, wear away, and the anger they show in the beginning, or sometimes, seems worn down after a certain time. I think boarding those out, as in other countries, would be a very good system.

27401. But that would have to be restricted to persons who had not filthy or vicious habits?—Certainly.

27402. We would be rather afraid, if you excluded from the number who could be boarded out those who have filthy and vicious habits, that the number would be very small?—That is a matter that should be gone very carefully into, but as far as my experience goes it is somewhat the other way. I would say, at least in any asylum if not an exceptional one, you could get 50 per cent. who could be boarded out.

27403. Are you aware of the very interesting experiment being tried at present at Yeough of keeping up what they call an auxiliary lunatic asylum. It is got up to relieve the Cork Asylum, which was overcrowded. There was an old industrial school vacant, and it was acquired by the Governors of the asylum. The Asylum Committee manages the parent house and the new Yeough house; but they put into the Yeough Asylum those harmless cases and cases that are incurable, and there they maintain them, roughly speaking they say, at about half the cost that they cost in the asylum?—I should like to know what the whole lunatic asylum in Cork costs; my idea is, if you get an auxiliary system it would be a new burden on the rates, whatever the promise now made, whereas if you have one central asylum, and then adopt a system of boarding out those who are harmless, you will relieve the congestion and things would be far cheaper.

27404. Would you be afraid that they might not receive sufficient attention in houses where they are boarded out?—They should have a special inspector to see to that, and pay visits unexpectedly and report on it, and then the parties could be punished and the patient removed.

27405. You would, obviously, like to try the boarding-out system for lunatics; it is tried in Scotland?—Yes, and Belgium; now it is getting into Germany and England. At a meeting in 1862 at Antwerp, where you had many experts, they strongly recommended the boarding out of lunatics, and our lunatics cannot be different from lunatics in other countries.

27406. No; but the houses of the ordinary farmers and labourers are not on the same lines as the houses in Belgium?—In country places in Belgium you will find very much the same condition of things prevailing with regard to houses. If you take the Co. Limerick, you would get accommodation for at least 100 lunatics. For your auxiliary asylum you may, in the abstract, draw up a very good scheme that would seem to lessen the rates, but when it goes into working order you will find the rates will be called upon.

27407. You would be afraid of starting a new institution with a fresh staff?—Yes, it must in the end grow into that.

27408. Do you think the reduction of institutions and the reduction of staffs would be likely to tend to economy?—If you increase any institution to a very large and unwieldy size then economy ceases, but if you keep a certain number at a certain reasonable size, in that way you will have the most economy.

27409. Mr. MURPHY.—Are you aware the experts say that the maximum number ought not to exceed five or six hundred in an asylum, and they have reached that in almost every asylum in the country?—But then they have not tried the boarding-out system.

27410. Are you aware that the experts seem to think it would be a dangerous experiment in this country to send out this class of people, because already they attribute the increase of lunacy to the fact that inmates temporarily recovered from their affliction go out, participate in public life, get married, and come back into the house, and then their offspring inherit the tendency; and that is one of the sources, they say, of the great increase of lunacy?—That does not meet my case exactly; I speak of the number of parties who would be beyond marrying, who are quite harmless. You speak of parties who come out for a time, get married, and then go back, and then by heredity their family contracts the disease.

27411. Don't you think there would be a danger in sending out people of that class?—It is largely tried in Belgium and in Scotland, and is a success there; it has not been tried at all in this country. It cannot cost much to try it. It would be far better to try the boarding-out system than building an auxiliary asylum. If the boarding out is a failure, they can be withdrawn.

27412. The experiment is so new, would it not be a dangerous thing for us to venture on it until it had a better trial?—No, I don't think so. Although the experiment is fairly new in some countries it is old in others. When you are fortified with two Commissions, one at Antwerp and one in Edinburgh last year, I cannot see why you are not well fortified, and it would not be dangerous for you to recommend it.

27413. Supposing some of the workhouses become empty, can you see any reason why they should not be adapted as homes for harmless lunatics?—If you empty some of the workhouses you will create the evil I speak of. The infirm people will be removed to some central place, and that is a great hardship on the poor people. Take a poor man or woman who grew up about Cork, and age comes or that person gets infirm, it would be a great hardship to send him ten or twenty miles, where he knows no one.

27414. If you take up that position, you can make no changes?—I can make large changes. I could take out the epileptics; I could keep the tramp nuisance. I would certainly have a separate institution for fallen women; I would have here only the infirm and sick.

27415. By that method you would be increasing the rates considerably. You would be retaining the staff keeping up the same expenditure as at present, but lessening the number in the house?—The number in the house would be very few; there are generally 110 sick.

27416. CHAIRMAN.—That includes the lunatics?—Anyway, say there are 200 in this house; you have about 100 of those really sick, and you have about 80 infirm; that is about 150 out of the 200. The lunatics are very few. In reality, you only get rid of two permanent parties—the lunatics, and those women and the children—and you would make a vast improvement in the hospital; you need not have the beds crowded as they are.

27417. But you could not do that without increasing the cost. Our mandate is that we are to recommend some changes that will not add to the cost?—As far as I understand, your mandate is twofold. It is, first, to try to economize; and, secondly, to make better provision for the sick poor and infirm. It is very hard to do those two things; but you will certainly make better hospitals for the sick poor and infirm, and make the aged and infirm comfortable, and there could be a great deal done for the sick. I would be quite in favour of a central hospital for the fallen women, but not for an auxiliary of any kind.

27418. Dr. MURPHY.—Has there been much consumption in this district?—Not very much.

Feb. 1, 1890.

Rev. T. Lee,
R.N.

Feb. 1, 1905.

Rev. T. Lee,
P.P.

27319. Have you considered any way in which cases could be better looked after or the disease lessened?—Certainly. I think in every hospital you should have a special place for consumption, apart from anything else; and that parties in the initial stages of consumption should be recommended to come into such a place, because in the initial stage you will have some of the family nursing the patient, as there is an erroneous impression amongst them that consumption is not contagious. So it happens, if you are in one family the oldest boy or girl get sick, the others will nurse it, and will get consumption. If you had a comfortable place for those to go to in the first stage you would do a great deal of good by your recommendation.

27320. Have you known consumption to spread much from one member to another?—Yes; I have known it go from the eldest to the youngest. You might have one or two survive, but in a family of five or six you generally have three or four affected if that family gets consumption.

27321. Do you think isolating them here would be better than having an institution for the whole county or one or two counties?—I think it would. If you have to remove them a long distance from home, the difficulty is to get them to go; for a long time it is not very acute, and they will stick at home.

27322. Then you have only a few cases here, and it is not so easy to isolate them and carry out your arrangements, to show them the benefit of open-air treatment?—You cannot have everything thoroughly like that, but you could make a vast improvement. You cannot get them removed from home to a distance in the first stages, you will only get them when it is very acute; but they will come into a place near home, and whatever can be done, I think it would be better to try and effect it in the local hospitals.

27323. We have some experience of early cases trying to get into the National Consumption Hospital at Newcastle, County Wicklow. They come from all parts, but there is not accommodation there for them?—You might have parties who are well-to-do, but my experience is it is very difficult to get the poor in the first stages to go into the hospital if it is distant.

27324. I happened to be at Galway last week, and the Guardian wanted to know could they get two cases into Newcastle by paying for them. They will have to wait several months, and by that time perhaps the chance of recovery has passed?—You will find in that case the disease had made fair progress before they thought of it.

27325. Even in cases that have made considerable progress, there is still a chance of the disease being arrested?—The two things would not clash. It would be a very good thing to have hospitals, like at Newcastle, scattered through the country—three or four, one for each province; but at the same time it would be desirable to have arrangements, I think, to isolate cases here.

27326. The sanatorium should be only for early cases—to show them how they could carry out the treatment at home, and save other members of the family; whereas a hospital like this might be kept for later cases?—Consumption is making such ravages I cannot see why you should not have preventive hospitals throughout the country, and also a consumption ward attached to a place like this.

27327. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any other point you would like to mention?—Except this one. I think you are making a leverage of an "if" about rates; you think on the scheme the rates will be made all right, but perhaps after a time experience would show the opposite; and we now in this district are so situated that our rates are 1s. 6d. in the £ lower than those of Limerick or Rathkeale, our two nearest rivals; so that it would be a very dangerous experiment to try and touch this, and say you did it for the country around.

27328. If the rating area was contained as at present, that would be in your own hands?—Suppose you sent all the infirm to a central hospital; the people should pay so much per head for them, and it would not then be within our power.

27329. It would be per capita of the institution?—But then the per capita would be higher than they could do it for at home.

27330. A figure less than at present?—That is the question.

27331. You are bound to have it; where you have four or five hundred persons, you can keep them at a lower rate per head than one hundred?—We are rather suspicious in this part of the country of schemes, and you may find instead of the rate being lower that they would be higher.

27332. Take the case of Youghal. It is supposed there that the cost per head per inmate is something like £15 a year; now the cost per head per inmate in the future almshouse of the county could not be higher than it is in the Youghal Institution, and you are not keeping any inmate in this or any institution in the county at £15 per head?—My answer to that is this: first, Youghal is a newly got-up kind of thing; it is worked from Cork, and I would like to see all the figures; because Cork people generally manage the world in a very economic way, until you come into close contact with them.

27333. The things on paper?—A good deal on paper.

27334. That "if" that you referred to, was, as Mr. Murnaghan has explained, that the view we are going on is—that it is more economic, et cetera, perhaps, to keep up a large number than a small one?—It seems so on paper; but when you have a certainty, and lower rates, why should the ratepayers go from a certainty to an uncertain "if"?

Mr. JOHN O'KEEFE, P.P., examined.

Mr. John
O'Keefe.

27335. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of Mr. Costello and Father Lee, and you heard from that that our idea, from evidence that was given generally all over Ireland up to the present, would be in favour of continuing to treat the sick locally; would you be in favour of what you might call a county institution for the aged and infirm, or would you be opposed to it?—If it would better the condition of the sick poor at the same rate I would.

27336. Or a lower rate?—Or lower.

27337. Would you be in favour of a central institution if the condition of the sick poor could be improved without increasing the cost?—Yes; but I thought we were summoned here to know whether this union would be ameliorated or otherwise.

27338. Would you give us your views on that?—My view on this head is that there are two questions to be answered. They are—would it reduce taxation—

Rev. T. LEE, P.P., further examined.

Rev. T. Lee,
P.P.

There is one point I wish to add. It is just about boarding out children. My experience is that the more are boarded out the better; and that institutions, whatever they are, do very little for the children.

27339. CHAIRMAN.—They keep them in good health and all that, but you think they are not as serviceable afterwards?—They are not as serviceable. Under the system of family care they grow up from youth, and will be far better able to work in after-life. That is their natural groove, but when brought together in large numbers they become half idiotic. Since the workhouse children have gone up to the public schools they are far better than before. When they get into these institutions the boys are generally brought up to a trade. Well, as a rule, there are too many tradespeople; because you have mechanics' institutions and other things in large cities, where the children of the mechanics follow the trade of their fathers, and others, trained up differently, are put out, and don't get work, and you will find them in jails and elsewhere. The best thing for the girls would be to be reared up to know something about ordinary dairy and farm work; both boys and girls are wanted for farm work.

Mr. JOHN O'KEEFE's examination continued

Feb. 1, 1905.

Mr. John O'Keefe.

I was just going to say there were two questions to be answered in the queries we received some time ago, namely—whether it would reduce taxation, or improve the condition of the sick poor. In my opinion, it would do neither, and I would answer these two questions in the negative. I am thirty-one years in this institution, if I live until March next, and I have found the average rate of that institution during that time 2s. in the £, and I don't know, nor cannot understand, nor see any other union so low-rated as that. Then and there I don't think it would serve the condition of the newspapers one bit by altering or changing it. I must say I have no interest whatever in halting this institution here but the interest of the newspapers and the poor.

27340. Mr. MURKIN.—Am I to understand from you that the average rate since you have been a Poor Law Guardian has been something like 2s. in the £—2s. in the £ for the keeping up of this institution. We had no district Council then.

27341. CHAIRMAN.—But you had the dispensaries? We had the dispensaries, and no other union in the county could compare with that.

27342. Mr. MURKIN.—Are you not aware that there is an opinion abroad in the country that these workhouses are not desirable institutions, and that something ought to be done to reform them?—Some of them; when they are tired of the heavy rating; when they are not managed properly; but an institution such as this is—it may be better managed entirely—but it is the best of them all in my mind. If there is any good management at all it is here; and you know something of that, Mr. Mickin, for you were our Inspector here for years and years.

27343. Are you quite sure it is due to good management?—We do our best, at all events.

27344. I do not say that it is or it is not, but I would suggest it is not due largely to the fact that you have a high valuation and a low number of inmates in the house?—That would serve the purpose surely, but I don't think that Croon Union is higher rated than any other union in proportion to its inmates.

27345. Any change we suggest is to economize; our desire is to keep the cost as low, if not lower, encouraging at the same time to effect improvement, and increase efficiency?—I know that is your object.

27346. Do you think that the children should be sent into the country and reared there?—A very good idea.

27347. And don't you think it could be done at a price lower than at present?—I don't think it could be done at a price lower, but their condition would be improved.

27348. In the house they cost per head from £15 to £16 a year; you can get them boarded out for 28s. if you make 25s. a head on thirty inmates, is not that something?—Yes, provided they are properly done; but I can tell you from my experience in the country, that you won't get every house where a child is properly cared.

27349. You have no experience of boarding out in your union?—We have not.

27350. You give it no trial. I come from a union where we have given it a trial, and we have numerous cases, and are keeping our children there for something like 20s. per head, and getting them well looked after. We believe it much more economical, and much better for the children and the future of the country, to send these children out, and let them grow up with the population. Would it not be a good thing for Croon to try something like that?—It may. The only thing the children would derive benefit from would be to educate them outside, and if educated outside I think they would be good members of society by any by, not to mind the rearing of them as servants, because they mix with the country people just as if they were reared outside.

27351. On that score, under the head of children, you could save £150 a year—could not that be worth trying?—It would, if the children were properly treated, as they are here. They are very well cared for here.

27352. Guardians should insist on proper treatment; you have only your own fears that they would not be—I have heard something to that effect.

27353. CHAIRMAN.—About hired-out children?—Exactly.

27354. Mr. MURKIN.—The management of the thing would be in your own hands. If you found a child boarded out was not properly looked after, and you would have the means of finding out, because you would have your relieving officer visiting the place once a month and reporting to you. You would have a ladies' committee looking after them and their clothes, and you would have a lady inspector looking after them with a very inquisitive eye, and all those things would protect the children?—She might have something to do with protecting them, but I would not depend on a committee. I don't want to make enemies for myself. I would not like to go into a woman's house, and say—"These children are badly treated."

27355. But why would you not?—It would be my duty, I know.

27356. CHAIRMAN.—You would not get the ladies to be so nervous as that?—You have put me in a corner, where I cannot answer you.

27357. Mr. MURKIN.—Anyhow, if you could get the system improved without adding to the rates, you would be in favour of it?—Quite so; but of that I have my fear; because I don't believe that until there is some other plan adopted besides amalgamation, or what you have proposed, that it will reduce the rates.

27358. You have no other plan to suggest to us?—I have it to your heads. There can be yet something to lower the rates, some other plan adopted besides amalgamation, for to my mind amalgamation won't do at all.

27359. CHAIRMAN.—Suppose we don't call it amalgamation at all. Suppose your District Council is left untouched, and you still have the administration of the Poor Law and still deal with applications for relief outside in institutions, and suppose you keep an institution here for dealing with the sick, and pay so much for the cases that are sent to the central institution, in the same way that lunatics now are charged for over the whole county; supposing it remained a district charge still, would you be the same objection—because it would not be amalgamation, you must remember, it would be a sort of combination of buildings throughout the county for different purposes—you still would have your local body dealing with things, and Croon would be still the rating area?—Under that head you won't lessen the rates; I don't see how you can.

27360. I will tell you one way you will do it: You pension and lose your entire staff for looking after the healthy, as distinguished from the sick; you have no free to keep up in any part of the institution except your boardroom and hospital, and those items, of themselves alone—salaries, ration, fuel, and light—come to a very large sum?—Oh, I know that.

27361. Fear outside expenses would be that you would have to pay your bill for the aged and infirm and lunatics?—Would we have a saving, then, by paying outside for those?

27362. The union would remain—it would be merely a transfer of inmates?—I don't believe you would pay so much out of the rates by keeping those outside as you would lose by keeping this house in order.

27363. I suppose you can see on general grounds what Fisher Lee says may work out right enough—but on general grounds you ought to be able to keep one institution with one staff at a lower cost, with a larger number of inmates, than you would be able to keep up five or six institutions, with five or six sets of officers, light and fuel, and a small number of inmates in each, because the smaller the number of inmates the larger the amount per head it costs?—I know that very well; but, all the same—

27364. If you were to take all the police—I am not recommending it—but if you were to take all the policemen in Ireland and put them in one big barracks, you could keep them at a smaller cost than in little barracks all over the country?—I know that; but if I pay to send these poor people which you have just commended into other unions once-and-a-half as extravagant as this is.

27365. Mr. MURKIN.—Perhaps other unions are not extravagantly managed. It may be that they have a relatively low valuation compared with the number of their inmates?—There is something in what you say, but I don't know if it is a fact. How is Croon so lucky to be a high-valued union?

Feb. 1, 1905.

Mr. John
O'Keefe.

27355. CHAIRMAN.—There is another reason—that you have done things on what you may call a very close scale!—We thought so. We were very moderate in our way of doing business, while other people were very extravagant, and it would be most uncalled for to ask us to join the other unions.

27356. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—It may not be necessary to do that. All you are asked to do is to try and improve the Poor Law system in your own union, and you all agree that there is room for improvement!—Certainly; but I don't see why the Croon people should be asked to join other people.

27357. CHAIRMAN.—You are not joining!—It is all the same; when you are sending the inmates here and there you must pay for them in proportion.

27358. You would not be sending them to the workhouse of another union, you would be sending them to an institution for the inmates of a certain class for the county. Supposing you were sending them to Rathkila, Newcastle, or Croon, if these places were made central institutions they would be county institutions.—That has not existed yet.

27359. It would be what you may call an almshouse for the county!—I understand; there may be some saving in that, but we have not experience of those things.

27360. It is a jump in the dark you feel, and you don't like jumps in the dark!—No.

27361. Do you see much of the tramps?—Too many of them.

27362. Have you ever to act as a magistrate?—No, I have not that honour, if it is an honour; but then I know, that there should be hard and fast rules adopted against some of the tramps, because they are a perfect nuisance. Some of them that I have met on the roads could have been in the fields, sowing hay. If they visited a certain house or institution more than once in three months they should be sent to prison.

27363. What would you think of the suggestion mentioned earlier in the day, that if they go about the country without being able to account for why they do it, that they should be sent to the labour institution, and there obliged to labour for their support?—I think that would be rather hard; but when they come in here you have a grip on them.

27364. A great many witnesses recommend that the workhouse should be closed to this class, and that when they are found tramping about the country they should simply be brought up before a bench of magistrates, and if they cannot satisfy the magistrates, it might be a question for reference. They say—"Father and so on—So could explain I am an honest man." They could put him aside, and communicate with the referee, and find out whether his story is true. If his story is not true, and he is simply a tramp, walking about to prey on the community-at-large, it has been suggested to me that it would be a good thing in the interests of the public, and of the poor people themselves, that their children should be taken from them, if they have any, and the adult people placed in an institution where they would be obliged to work for their support?—It is a noble suggestion; but you must pass an Act for that. I would agree with that; it is a very good idea.

27365. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians and managers of local hospitals power, in the exercise of a humane and kindly discretion, to charge as much for a person coming into the hospital as it was thought that person or his relatives could afford to pay without hardship?—Yes; but it is a very hard question to decide. Some people, apparently, may be very well able to pay, but when their affairs are looked to they would be very far from it. In two counties the committee of the county infirmary have drawn up regulations, that all the patients should either themselves or their friends pay; and the governor of the infirmary who recommends the case mentions about how much he thinks that person could afford to pay. It may be as low as 6d. a week, or if it were a well-off person, and an extra amount might be necessary, it might be as high as 43 or 44. These bodies come to us, and say—"We think it would be a proper thing for Parliament to give us the power to charge patients or their friends so much a week as we think they can pay without hardship, and power for us to recover that by summary process at petty sessions." Do you think that would be a fair suggestion?—It would be very fair, provided you could arrange the amount.

27366. That would be a case for the Guardians themselves; it would be in their discretion to settle the matter. A labourer in receipt of 15s. a week would send in a child; that child coming into the workhouse hospital to be treated would, at all events, relieve the labourer of 6d. a week!—That was according to how he was circumstanced at home; if he had a big family.

27367. It would cut off 6d. a week at least!—It may; and he may want another 6d. to support his family.

27368. That would be a matter for your discretion. If he was otherwise able to pay, would it not be fair to ask him to pay that 6d., and so on, according to his means?—It would.

27369. Then you would be in favour of such a discretion being given to the governing body?—Yes. Out-door relief, I think, should be given more freely—be allowed to be given by the Guardians more freely in certain cases.

27370. In what cases would you give it more freely?—If a poor man was stricken down by a visitation of sickness.

27371. You have that power!—I don't think so. The relieving officer has power to give out-door relief, but there are many other things which would require a few shillings which the Guardians are deterred from giving.

27372. In the case of the sickness of the wage-earner of the family, don't you give relief?—We are not allowed in any case of a person having land.

27373. Would you remove the restrictions about land?—I would, certainly; because there are poor people toiling, with a few acres of land, who are, if I may use the expression, a damn sight worse off than people having no land.

27374. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—I think if the matter was brought under the notice of the Local Government Board they would permit you to give relief in that case!—It did not come within my knowledge.

27375. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else about out-door relief you would like to mention?—Well, no; we ought to be more liberal in giving relief, and in some cases it is too liberal.

27376. Do you like the union as large as the area of charges?—I don't see that there should be any objection to it, because the townspeople suffered long enough. In former times the tyranny of the landlords sent the poor people into these towns, and it would be too bad to compel the townspeople to pay for that wrong that was done, and it is time they should get relief. I would not be for a divisional charge, although I am speaking against myself.

27377. There are no very large towns in this union?—Croon, Ballingarry, and Adare, and they are villages.

27378. It is not a very pressing question in your union?—I would not say so; I would be very well satisfied with you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if you left us at we are.

27379. You don't want any further improvement?—I do not; nor I don't want any change.

Mr. EDWARD CORRY, F.R.S., examined.

27380. CHAIRMAN.—What are your views on the question of the amalgamation of unions?—I would be for it if any scheme which proposed economy was brought up.

27381. If there could be a substantial saving without hardship to the sick or the ratepayers?—Yes.

27382. The expression of the opinion of your Board of Guardians, I believe, was unanimously that they did not see how any economy could be effected owing to the relatively low rates Croon has when compared with the other unions in the Co. Limerick?—Yes, sir.

27383. You have heard our discussion here to-day, in which it was not so much what was in the Guardians' mind, the question of amalgamating with other unions, but rather leaving the sick here locally and providing for the other inmates either by boarding out or sending to other county, or district, or provincial institutions?—Yes, sir.

27384. And leaving your Council as it is, the authority for dealing with Poor Law in your area, either as regards out-door relief or looking after the sick, or paying for the inmates that might be in the county or other institutions, the same way that you do now pay for sick people that you send to what are known as casual hospitals, hospitals in Cork or Dublin?—My belief is that any alteration will cause greater expense in our neighbourhood, any departure from the present system.

Mr. Edward

27390. Why do you think that additional expense will be incurred if you abolish the cost of the staff for looking after the healthy here, and shut up the five acres in the chief part of your building, and stop the salaries of the officers that have been looking after the healthy, and were all the healthy elsewhere?—It would appear in that way that there would be a saving, but all the new schemes I have known have abolished one old office and established two new ones.

27391. Give me an instance of that?—Well, generally speaking.

27392. Give me one instance?—I should not bind myself down to it, but it is my impression.

27393. If you give me any scheme that you had in your mind by which the reduction of one office was followed by the creation of two, I would understand what you meant?—The Local Government Act. I don't see, though we got a grant-in-aid, that we are benefited a shilling or the country improved; there is no doubt we got self-government and control.

27394. That was a solid improvement?—A solid improvement, but financially I don't see our benefit.

27395. You mean rates are as high now as before 1865, although you got large grants in aid of county cess and poor rates. Do you think the sums levied from the ratepayers are as large now as they were before 1865?—I don't say they are entirely as large, but we don't reap the benefit that was proposed or hoped for.

27396. What did you hope for?—We hoped for many things we did not receive by it. I did not come prepared to go definitely into the matter, but that is my impression.

27397. We would like to follow the working of your mind in the matter and get at the principle which leads you to object to any further continuation of leases?—If you submit a scheme after your Commission to us or to any other union in the county, which we would have time to think over—

27398. We will submit a scheme to the Government which issued the warrant to us to do so; of course it is a scheme that could not be carried into effect otherwise than by an Act of Parliament, so that before the Act of Parliament would be passed or a Bill introduced even, the country would have the amplest time to criticize it and look into it. What we are sent to get is the opinion of the local administrators on possible changes; you think that no change could be made that would not lead to greater expenditure, and I want to get from you what are the ideas that cause you to give that opinion?—Well, general experience; I did not build it on one particular case at all.

27399. If I could ever come at anything that influences your mind. Nothing was done, was there, by the Local Government Act as regards workhouses?—Nothing.

27400. Has there been any change as regards locative anyones or county infirmaries?—There has been a general change all over the country; I could not point to individual cases; I believe the county did not benefit by the grant-in-aid as it should.

27401. That was not a question of criticizing inmates?—It was not.

27402. The grants-in-aid were very large, amounting to half the poor rate and half the county cess in a certain year?—We were deprived of about 25. in the £ under any other union.

27403. That occurred owing to the exceptional rating?—The rating one year; the rate that was actually levied.

27404. Did that result from cutting down your weekly clerk's estimate?—I suppose it did.

27405. I don't see where the increased expenditure resulted from the change you mention; you get less of the particular grant than you expected, that is all; the grant was based on certain definite expenditure, on figures as they existed?—Glin, for instance; the district school—

27406. Do you think that the children who are sent to Glin cost you more per head than if you had them in your own workhouse?—They do; and altogether they don't reap the full benefit that we expected. They are as well kept, but their position when leaving school is not so much improved as if they spent their time here, and the extra expense is not worth it.

27407. Have you seen many of the children that come from Glin?—No; but I have heard from the gentlemen here who go down and attend the meetings.

27408. Who are the gentlemen from Croon who go to Glin?—Mr. Power and Mr. Roddy are here.

27409. You have learned from them that the results of the education there are disappointing to them?—They are disappointed that the children, when allowed out, are not as useful as they should be.

27410. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you say the children out of Glin institution are less useful than those reared in your workhouse?—I have heard there is no improvement.

27411. Have you any ground more than hearsay for the statement? Did you follow the career of any of the children?—No; but just when they were allowed out they did not show more capacity to get into positions than if kept here.

27412. You were just told that, and don't know any case yourself?—I have been told of cases, but did not follow it up; I was not so much interested in them.

27413. We visited Glin and were greatly pleased with the way the institution was carried on, and the boys and girls were usefully employed; we thought it a well-conducted institution, and far superior to the workhouse.

27414. CHAIRMAN.—Was there anything else that you would like to say to us as regards outdoor relief, either as regards the extent of it or the method of it?—No; but as Mr. O'Keefe mentioned, there are cases of great necessity that are barred by having land; there should be relief given to these.

27415. Would you take away the restrictions about land?—To a certain extent I would put a limit on it.

27416. What limit would you put on it?—Say five acres; and there should be a discretionary power to the Guardians; they would not be over-generous.

27417. Are you aware how the outdoor relief has gone in this union since the Local Government Act passed?—It has increased something, not very much in some districts, but nothing alarming.

27418. Is there any dissatisfaction on the part of the Guardians on the question of outdoor relief?—I think it is fairly granted they take up the matter very carefully.

27419. Mr. MURPHY.—You would make the maximum in Croon five acres?—Yes.

27420. Five acres here in Limerick would be as good as twenty-five acres in some parts of Kerry?—Croon is about the poorest union in the county.

27421. CHAIRMAN.—Taken five acres of Skula Bog?—You will get as bad as that in the district.

27422. Mr. MURPHY.—Would not the valuation test be a little safer?—It might be, perhaps; the valuation of land varies very much.

27423. The people living in the rich lands would have a great advantage over the people living in the poor lands, who would need it most?—It does not follow; the poor lands are higher valued in proportion to their character than the good land; that is so in this union. When Mr. Griffith made the valuation this land was very fine wheat land. I know land in Kilmallock that would not grow wheat at all, yet would fetch the same bidlock you could find, and the valuation is the same.

27424. Still acreage would not be a safe standard?—Well, I would say to about the value of five acres roughly.

27425. CHAIRMAN.—The value of five acres in the Croon Union?—Yes.

27426. Have you anything to say about giving the Guardians power to charge so much to the friends of patients?—I believe that would be proper; something should be paid—od. or 1s., according to the position of the person.

27427. As regards the tramps, what do you think on that subject?—As soon as they arrive they should be put to some work.

27428. You would put them to work under restraint until they were given habits of industry?—Yes.

Feb. 1, 1903.

Mr. Edmund
Gessely.

Feb. 1, 1905.

Mr. Thomas
J. only.

Mr. THOMAS BERRY, F.R.C.S., examined.

224534. CHAIRMAN.—How many of you from Croon go to Glina?—Four.

224535. You go into Linerick street?—No; from where I live, in Ballygarry, I go by Foyes and drive.

224536. How often do you make that journey?—Once a month.

224537. And you attend pretty regularly?—I do.

224538. Do you find the committee of management, composed of Guardians from so many unions—do you find yourselves a harmonious body?—Well, yes; there may be a little rough corner at some Board, but after all they are harmonious in the working of the institution; what don't interfere with the working, if one man's views clash with another's.

224539. And they express them a little bit freely; but the institution is well managed?—Yes.

224540. Are you in favour of keeping up such a committee for the management of the institution?—Yes.

224541. Would you be in favour of turning that school into an ordinary industrial school and simply leaving it under the management of the present local officers, and to pay so much a head for the children you send?—Is it not actually an industrial school?

224542. I mean under the ordinary Industrial Schools Act; it is a Post Law school now?—I cannot say; I have not been thoroughly acquainted with the others; but so far as I think, this is working well.

224543. There are in the country a large number of industrial schools?—There are, but I am not acquainted with them, and I don't know how the other system works.

224544. Would you be in favour of keeping up the present system?—As far as I know, it is working well. There are boys getting good trades there.

224545. That would equally happen in an ordinary industrial school?—Well, whichever would be the cheapest and best for the ratepayers.

224546. The expenses of the committee are paid going there, of course?—Yes.

224547. That would be a saving?—That would be done away with if it was worked as well the other way. There may be some other expense come in in lieu of the committee's expense if it was worked another way.

224548. Do you see any other expense that might come in?—The appointment of some officers to rule the institution instead of the committee; they might be paid higher than the committee.

224549. Are you aware the ordinary industrial schools are practically owned and managed by rates?—We have none in Glina.

224550. Supposing the committee were withdrawn, and the rates left there?—If it could be managed the same as any other industrial school; I don't know would that cheapen the matter.

224551. At all events it is a new idea, that has not occurred to your mind before?—Yes; I could not give you an opinion on it.

224552. If it were an ordinary industrial school, you would simply pay so much a head for the children that were sent there?—Then what would be done with the children not able to pay.

CHAIRMAN.—They would be charges to the country.

224553. Mr. MURPHY.—You would lose supervision, and these people may ruin the figure.

CHAIRMAN.—Have you heard of any cases of children, the result of your training, that you were not satisfied with after being at Glina?—No. I happened to get two shoemakers, young lads from my own district, and the party who got them was very thankful for them. They are two very good boys.

224554. And what he would call useful apprentices?—Yes, indeed.

224555. What did he pay for them, do you know?—I think he paid the master £5 or £6 a year.

224556. What master?—The master of the institution.

224557. They were not hired out from the institution. What wages did he give these boys when he got them out of the institution?—They started with £5 or £6 a year.

224558. And their food?—That is what I mean.

224559. Dr. BROWN.—Was he very thankful because he got so cheap?—He was thankful for their services.

224560. CHAIRMAN.—It was cheaper than a farm labourer's wages?—That was for a start, and bound to advance in time.

224561. Dr. BROWN.—How much did he advance?—I don't exactly know. One of the boys has died, the other is working on still.

224562. Have you a knowledge of any of the boys—say, two or three years after leaving?—Well, no; it is not so long since they came out. The first boy happened to get ill, and died, and the second is only a year-and-a-half with this man.

224563. What did the boy die from?—He was in bad health when he got him.

224564. Consumption?—Something like that.

224565. Mr. MURPHY.—These are the only two cases you know of?—Not in my District.

224566. Your view does not support that of the previous witnesses—that the Glina children don't turn out as well as the boys who are in the workhouse?—I am no fault to be found with them.

224567. Would you prefer Glina to the workhouse?—I would. They are very nicely trained there; well kept and nicely trained, both girls and boys. I was through the institution several times.

224568. Have you any experience of children who left the workhouse, after they went out into the world?—Not much.

224569. You don't know how they get on in after-life?—Not much.

224570. Dr. BROWN.—Have you any knowledge of the girls after they leave Glina?—I have not.

224571. CHAIRMAN.—You don't know any of them that went as servants to anyone in your locality?—I do not.

Dr. Hartigan.

Dr. HARTIGAN examined.

224572. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you would like to say?—They only thing I would care to say is to endorse every statement Father Lee has made with regard to the boarding out of the children, the lodging of these women that fall case, and also to try and convert as much of this place as you can into a place for old people, sick and infirm, and try to lodge the hospital for contagious diseases.

224573. Since you came here first the number of fever patients has fallen away very much?—Yes.

Mrs. Hartigan.

Mrs. HARTIGAN, F.R.C.S., examined.

224574. CHAIRMAN.—We already had your evidence in Linerick—was there anything you forgot to say to us there?—I think not. Some of the Guardians say the county makes a big grant to the county infirmary, and we in this union reap the benefit from it. Very few from this district avail themselves of the county infirmary at all.

224575. Which hospital in Linerick do they go to, if they have to go?—I don't think they go to Linerick at all; they go mostly to the Mater, in Dublin.

224576. Not to Barrington's?

Dr. Hartigan.—No.

Witness.—If the grant were distributed amongst the country hospitals they could be made more efficient.

224577. There is very little fever in the country now?—There was an outbreak at the time of the introduction of the crematoria.

224578. Until such time as the machinery was put into a sanitary condition, but with that exception you have been wonderfully free from fever?—Yes, and contagious diseases.

224579. You attribute that largely to the working of the Public Health Act?—Yes.

224580. Close the county infirmary?—Yes; make it a Linerick institution for contagious diseases, perhaps.

224581. The county does keep a fever hospital in Linerick in addition to the workhouse fever hospital?—St. John's?—I did not know that.

Dr. Hartigan.—There was an idea that Barrington's might be left specially for surgical cases, and St. John's could be for contagious diseases, and the present county infirmary given over to Linerick, and utilized for ordinary diseases.

Witness.—There are a great many people who want medical care and cannot afford to have nurses in their own homes, and if there was a district hospital they would avail themselves very much of it.

Dr. Moseley examined.

Feb. 1, 1890
Dr. Moseley.

One of the subjects that was touched on was giving outdoor relief to old, worthy people living out in the country. There is one great danger now that arises, and that is when they get ill they have nobody to nurse them. It is throwing a great strain upon the resources of their neighbours, and very often they don't rise to the occasion.

27432. CHAIRMAN.—They are not well enough instructed to do it wisely?—They very often neglect them, and very often there is blackmail levied on account of the condition of affairs. People won't go near a dying person who has always lived a very worthy life, but from ill-health or age has got poor, and has been getting outdoor relief; and I am sent for to see whether they can be removed to hospital, and he or she cannot be removed to hospital, and the next thing is to get enormous wages from the relieving officer by someone to nurse them.

27433. They see the opportunity of making a little money, and take advantage of it?—Yes.

27434. Would it meet your view if a system of joint midwife and district nurse were more largely introduced?—That would be a very good thing.

27435. It might not be such a great expenditure, having regard to the number of payments for isolated nursing?—It would not. Lately we have had cases where there were three worthy old people left in a house together; they had a little farm of land, and a cow; and I never knew such a condition as they were in. They all died between Christmas and New Year's Day. A gentleman took up the case, hearing of it from me, and really found the greatest difficulty in getting anyone to go into the house to them.

27436. Did it end in the appointment of a paid nurse?—There was a woman that undertook it, and went in and stayed up with the people with payment out of their means. I believe it was found in the end, out of their own resources, they were not very poor people, and they were not on outdoor relief. There is another case since that occurred a couple of days ago, where a poor woman was dying, just near me, and we had the greatest difficulty in getting anyone to stay up and nurse her.

27437. Is your view, with the sick who cannot be removed, that there should be some definite provision for nursing them?—There is the danger of encouraging people by giving them outdoor relief when very old and infirm, instead of bringing them into some institution where they will be cared for.

27438. Have you in your mind altogether illnesses that, humanly speaking, must terminate fatally, or an ordinary illness that may be recovered from?—It is the case of infirm poor people in receipt of outdoor relief, who die that out a little bit, perhaps, by begging, and in the end these persons have nobody to provide for them, and they die under very sad circumstances; without care, as a rule. We don't know it in time. I am just sent for to find out are they in a state to be removed to hospital, and I very often find that they would die on the road.

27439. Putting aside that case for the moment, have you many cases in your ordinary practice that you would not think of directing to be removed to the union hospital, but which would require some little poulticing or bandaging, or things of that sort, from a nurse, if there was one in existence?—Yes.

27440. Would a nurse, in other words, be fully employed in the ordinary dispensary district?—I think she would.

27441. From what you know of your patients, one with the other, would a nurse be fully occupied in going round to these people seeing your directions were carried out?—She certainly would—in my opinion.

Colonel Fisher examined.

Colonel Fisher.

I have only one word to say about outdoor relief. We have one case where a man has become a helpless lunatic, and has been sent into the lunatic asylum at Limerick; his wife and a very large family are left starving, and cannot get outdoor relief. I wrote myself to the Local Government Board, and I think they said it was against the Act of Parliament.

27442. CHAIRMAN.—You would like greater discretionary power to be given to the local Board of Guardians?—I think so.

27443. Have you thought carefully as to how far you 27432. And there is a certain amount paid?—To a midwife.

27433. And there is a certain amount paid to untrained and unqualified people for sitting up and looking after dying people?—There is.

27434. Do you think there would be very little extra expense if in future appointments the midwife of the district were also obliged to possess some general medical and surgical nursing qualifications?—I think it would be very useful.

27435. You would find it a comfort for the sick, and it would relieve everybody?—It would be a great relief to my responsibility and the relieving officer's responsibility, and a great relief to the sick people, above all.

27436. Dr. Moseley.—You have a midwife in your district?—Yes.

27437. Is she able to do the whole district?—Yes.

27438. What means has she of getting about?—A bicycle.

27439. You cannot avail of her services at all in these cases?—We would have no power to call on her at present; she is only trained in the one thing.

27440. But she would be so much better than the people you do get. Have you many cases of consumption in your district?—We have a good many cases, off and on.

27441. Do you find that it spreads much from case to case?—Very much.

27442. Goes over the whole household?—It does.

27443. What means would you suggest for the lessening of the disease?—Isolation is one thing; and if commencing cases could only be sent to a sanatorium, and be educated as to the means of isolation and the preservation of their own health, but it is impossible to teach them under present circumstances. The cottages are often very small, with a large family in them, and they are all in too small a place, breathing the poisoned air.

27444. CHAIRMAN.—And expectation freely indulged in, perhaps?—Yes.

27445. Dr. Moseley.—You find that there is very little use in telling them preventive measures?—It is the constant habit that has been formed, and this cannot be broken through by being told. I think if they could be sent for some time in the commencement of the disease to a sanatorium they would be drilled, and would understand the difference when they came back.

27446. They would know what to do, and become accustomed to it?—Yes.

27447. You heard what Father Lee said about having wards in the local hospitals as well, perhaps; for advanced cases do you think that is necessary?—I think some form of isolation would be of great use, different from sanatorium treatment, to protect the other members of the family in a small house.

27448. Where they cannot be properly nursed?—Where they cannot be properly nursed.

27449. And the very fact of having a sanatorium for the earlier cases might have an effect on the larger number of more chronic cases going into the local wards?—Yes; I think it would lessen the disease, certainly.

27450. CHAIRMAN.—You know the County Clare, of course, very well. We had evidence at the inquiries we held in Clare and Limerick as to Corofin being a good place for a sanatorium for Clare, Galway, and Limerick?—I know it stands fine and high, but I have not been through the place. It is very well situated.

27451. That would be convenient. Practically, there is well from nearly every workhouse in the three counties. There is a railway that brings the patients to Corofin?—Yes; I think it would be very convenient, and easily got at.

27452. I thought just as the other witnesses said

27453. You would remove the quarter-acre clause, and allow discretionary power for further cases?—Yes; we have all been speaking over it.

27454. Have you noticed anything you would consider an abuse in the administration of outdoor relief in the union?—I cannot say I have. All the Guardians do the best they can, as represented to them.

27455. And the amount is not excessive, in your opinion?—I think not.

The Sitting terminated.

FIFTY-FIFTH PUBLIC SITTING—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25TH, 1905.

At the Courthouse, Cork.

Present.—Mr. MCKEE (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COOKE BIGGER.

CHAIRMAN.—We shall be glad now to hear any evidence from the County Council.

Mr. E. COLLAMAN (Secretary).—I am the Secretary, and I did not get any instructions. The County Council did not appoint delegates to attend here.

CHAIRMAN.—Then, as far as you know, they are going to leave this matter to the local unions themselves.

Mr. COLLAMAN.—Of course, it was understood that any member of the County Council may come forward, and in his individual capacity give evidence.

CHAIRMAN.—But they are not taking corporate action?

Mr. COLLAMAN.—No, they are not.

CHAIRMAN.—Then we will take each of the unions afterwards. This evening we will take up the question of a sanatorium for Cork.

Dr. P. J. CREMIST examined.

Sept. 25, 1905.

Dr. P. J.
Cremist.

27527. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Cork Branch of the National Association for the Prevention of Consumption?—Yes, sir.

27528. You are a long time connected with some of the medical institutions of the city?—I have been physician to every hospital in the city in turn.

27530. The approval of the Local Government Board is required for the purpose of getting a loan for building, I suppose?—Well, it is required, I think, for the sanction of the site. As to the desirability of erecting such institutions, I should wish to perfect my evidence by a few remarks, as it appears to me that the scope of sanatorium treatment seems to be much misunderstood, even by the educated classes, in this country, many of whom seem to think that its advocates look upon it as the sole panacea for the cure of consumption. I wish to state emphatically, as I have often done before, that this is not so; and that it must occupy a minor, although important, position in any scheme for eradication of this disease, and will ask your indulgence whilst I quote a few statistics as to what has been done by other measures, or at least principally so. The mortality in England and Wales in the years 1881 to 1885 was 28.05 per 10,000, in the period 1895 to 1900 it diminished to 15.23 per 10,000. What was the cause of this diminution in the mortality? Koch's discovery of the tubercle bacillus was not made until the close of the nineteenth century, so that it cannot be attributed to that. The only conclusion that can be arrived at by the best authorities on the subject is that it was brought about by—1st, better feeding, owing to rise in wages and fall in price of food; 2nd, better housing, owing to increased prosperity; 3rd, better conditions of factory life after Factory Acts imposed shorter time, more space, better ventilation, and removal of injurious products; 4th, better drainage, lessening dampness of dwellings and work places, ample hospital accommodation, and most efficient public health service. In my opinion, no sanatorium or other treatment will ever supersede those measures which tend to check the spread of infection and other diseases, encourage thrift and temperance, and raise the physical and moral condition of the people. Whilst fully recognising this, we now know that phthisis cannot exist without the tubercle bacillus, and with that knowledge few will have the hardihood to say that we would be warranted in withholding what may be termed the direct means to aid us in the extermination of this pest and which have proved so successful in other countries. They are as follows:—1st, sanatorium treatment in convalescent institutions, where the patients are treated in the most modern methods of arresting the disease. 2nd, homes for isolating the advanced cases, which are the most infectious. 3rd, notification of the disease and disinfection. 4th, regaining of spitting. 5th, suppression of infected food. I will quote just now for you a few statements as to what has been done in Prussia and New York by what are called these direct means. The figures published in Prussia show that the tuberculosis death-rate in the country dropped from 31 per 1,000 in 1896, the year after Koch's discovery was made, to 21 per 10,000 in 1900. That has been attributed in a large measure to direct measures—that is, compulsory notification, isolation in sanatoria, and, of course, improved sanitation. Under similar conditions, the death-rate in New York diminished by 30 per 10,000 in twenty years. The death-rate in Scotland is only half what it was forty years ago. Although it cannot be claimed for the open-air treatment that it is a sure and certain remedy for every case of this disease, it can be stated, without fear of contradiction, that no other form of treatment in the history of medicine has ever been so successful, and that, provided the patient be taken in the very early stage of the disease, the percentage of arrest or recovery is very high. In short, a sanatorium would be educational, curative, and remove for the time being a focus of infection from the family of the person attacked. Of equal importance is the erection of homes for advanced cases of consumption, for these are the most infectious, and hence the most powerful agents in spreading the disease in small, confined, over-crowded, and ill-ventilated houses. Although the infectivity of phthisis is very low, as compared with other diseases, in a country like Cork, where the mortality is increasing by leaps and bounds, very active measures should be taken if it is hoped to achieve success. Hospital accommodation for the humble middle class is entirely inadequate; they are loth to enter the workhouse; the general hospitals won't have them; hence they remain in their own homes, a constant source of danger to their families. There is no special hospital in the county or city for the treatment of consumption, which causes more deaths than all the infectious diseases put together, while, strange to say, we have special hospitals for nearly every other class of disease. Looking at sanatoria from the financial side, we have no precedent in this country to go by, so must go farther afield, and see what has been done in other parts. A few years ago a law was passed in Germany making it compulsory for everyone over sixteen years of age, and earning under £200 a year, to insure against sickness. The insurance companies were heavily hit by consumption, and found that nearly one-half of all their sick pay was devoted to consumptives.

Acting on medical advice, and purely on business grounds, they decided to erect numerous sanatoria all over Germany on the most approved and up-to-date principles. The German insurance societies have found by experience that as a matter of business, and apart altogether from philanthropy, it is cheaper to place their patients in sanatoria and cure them, or add a few more working years to their lives, than to continue to pay sick-pay for an indefinite number of years; for we know what a slow and insidious disease it sometimes is. This, to my mind, is the most eloquent testimony as to the great value of sanatoria.

27521. The insurance companies, I gather from you, themselves, out of their own funds, erected the sanatoria?—Yes; they are State insurance companies.

27522. Not joint stock?—Not joint stock. They are connected with the State; and I might mention that the State subsidises them in this way—that the Commissioners of Woods and Forests in Germany make them a present of a site, as far as practicable, whenever they have it, suitable for a sanatorium.

27523. Have you any figures to show the receipts and expenditure of any of these institutions, and how far they are financed out of the receipts from the patients themselves?—No, I have not any particulars on that point, sir; but I think a very large number of them are free.

27524. They would be intended for people with incomes under £200 a year?—For the workers. Everyone over sixteen years of age, and earning under £200 a year, is obliged to insure, and pay so much yearly to the insurance companies; and then, one of these insurance companies have a fund, by which they meet these sanatoria, and treat workers that go there free; and then, in addition to that, they help to support their families outside; give them a kind of outdoor relief whilst the workers are in these sanatoria; but I don't think that is the State Insurance Sanatoria they pay anything; I think they go in free.

27525. The institution is entirely maintained out of Imperial, not local, funds?—Out of the State Insurance funds, which is Imperial revenue. The patients themselves contribute to the funds by their weekly or annual payments, and the Government then, where possible, present them with a site through the Commissioners of Woods and Forests in Germany. But of the paying sanatoria in Germany, I have not any record.

27526. Will you tell us now something about the prevalence of phthisis in the city of Cork?—In the city of Cork the mortality from phthisis in 1881 was 30 per 10,000, and it has increased from that to 45 per 10,000 in 1904. Three years since, when we started the Association for the Prevention of Consumption, it stood at 38, and then fell to 37 last year; it has increased this year to 46. That is, in one year the mortality from phthisis in the city of Cork has increased 9 per 10,000.

27527. That might be from some registration arrangement?—I cannot say that; I don't think so.

27528. Dr. Brooker.—It was 39 one year and 35 the next, I see?—That 45 per 10,000 is a record. It is far and away the highest of any in the United Kingdom, and it is the record for Cork. Cork never reached 45 per 10,000 before. The only possible explanation I could think of is, it might be the very large number of deaths that we have had from phthisis in the Lonsdale Asylum, and that might have added something to the mortality of the city; but later on I will show you what I think is the reason of it. The deaths in the Lonsdale Asylum might have accounted for some, because I heard there were a great many deaths in the Lonsdale Asylum from phthisis last year. That might account for it. You will have the evidence, very probably, of the doctors of the asylum, who will be able to inform you on that matter.

27529. You have no idea how many deaths there were in the asylum?—No, I have not.

27530. CHAIRMAN.—Or whether they were country or city cases?—No, I could not tell you anything about the asylum, but I am sure Dr. Woods will give you all the information. We had 352 deaths from phthisis in Cork last year.

27531. Dr. Brooker.—The increase of 9 per 10,000 would account for 72½. Yes, that would be about it exactly.

27533. That includes every kind of fever?—Yes, that is from all kinds of epidemic diseases—measles, scarlatina, typhoid, and enteric. The number of deaths in Cork Union alone increased in the same period from 880 to 703. I have not been able to get a separate return of cases of phthisis for Cork county. I estimate the number of consumptives in Cork city at about 1,000; it is more difficult to estimate the number in Cork county, as no separate return is given, but I should think that 2,000 would be rather under than over the mark. This makes 3,000 for the county and city; two-thirds of this number would represent the workers. The next point we have to consider is the whereabouts of the afflicted ones. In Table No. 3 you will perceive that at the present date the workhouse hospitals in the county account for only 53, Cork Workhouse Hospital for 85; this makes a total of 138 patients in the workhouses of the county and city of Cork. General hospitals give the following return:—South Infirmary, none; Mercy Hospital, none; North Infirmary, 4; St. Patrick's Infirmary, 35; Protestant Infirmary, 12. This shows the fact that at this present moment there are only 175 patients in hospital in the county and city of Cork out of a total of 3,000, and that you have 2,825 in their own homes spreading the disease, without any efficient system of notification or disinfection. The reason is not difficult to ascertain. The general hospitals will not have them, they will not enter the workhouse hospitals, and the infirmaries are utterly inadequate for the requirements of this large county and city. As to its spread in the county, it may be worth while quoting a few remarks of the Registrar of the county in the last quarterly return:—“The Registrar of diphtheria—There has been a marked increase in consumptive cases during past six months. The Registrar of Cholera—Phthisis pulmonary and tuberculous diseases of all kinds are spreading owing to careless disinfection, isolation, and sanitation in general. The Registrar of Schell—There were seven deaths registered from pulmonary tuberculosis during the past quarter, out of a total of twenty-three. This disease is becoming a perfect terror in the district. A country doctor, to whom our Secretary wrote for a return of the number of cases in his district, replied as follows:—“I don't think I had more than ten in hospital at any one time, but I always have from six to twelve on hands; this includes dispensary and private patients. A great many emigrate to America from this part of the county, and several return with phthisis.” I know several doctors in the county, and consult them occasionally, and they all agree as to consumption being spread in this way by returned emigrants from America, coming home among their friends, and consumption breaks out in these districts, and it can be traced to that cause.

27534. In the first place, to the home of the returned emigrant?—Yes, and then it spreads to the entire county. I suppose that, too, requires some legislation. These people would not be taken in America if they went over in bad health, and yet they return in bad health here.

27535. We are obliged to take them?—I recognise the importance of what this doctor said of the great spread of disease by those returning emigrants in the county, not so much in the city. He considers the homes that children under ten years of age are compelled to attend school are entirely too long.

Sept. 25, 1905.

Dr. P. J. Crockett.

Sept. 25, 1906.

Dr. P. J.
Crimm.

27535. Is it five hours a day?—In the infant schools only four or five; but I made inquiries and I think I was told that although the hours laid down are only four or five, very often these children are kept in by the teachers beyond the prescribed hours. Nobody could take exception to the hours prescribed by the Commissioners, but I have been informed that these children very often are kept beyond the prescribed hours. That, of course, is a matter for inquiry; I don't state it authoritatively. And another matter connected with schools. In the last Report of the Education Commissioners it is stated that there are practically a thousand schools in Ireland without any sanitary accommodation whatever, and that for the remaining number of schools there is no organised system of cleaning the sanitary annexes.

27537. Do you think, with the open air there is about these places, that might be serious?—I do. I think there ought to be sanitary accommodation in every school.

27538. But I mean the habitual cleaning carried out by the Public Health authority?—Either by the Public Health authority or the person that has control over the school. I think that is a very serious factor in the health of the school; that there is no systematic rule laid down for the cleaning of the sanitary annexes. "These schools are often very badly ventilated, and I believe it not infrequently happens that children, teachers, and assistants are suffering from phthisis. If you want to prevent its spread far more strict supervision should be given to the schools." These are the remarks of this doctor from the country; they are not my remarks; but I give them to you for what they are worth. I think that the schools require a great deal of supervision. Of course, they are well-managed schools and cleanly-kept schools.

27539. Ventilation would be one of the chief things?—Yes. And then not keeping the children beyond the prescribed hours, and proper sanitary accommodation, and looking after the cleaning of the sanitary annexes. Some regular, systematic way of doing so.

27540. Can you give us any information as to the prevalence of phthisis among children as distinguished from adults?—I don't think the Registrar-General's Return gives that, but the highest mortality is between 15 and 25 years of age. I heard it has lately become prevalent amongst children in Cork Workhouse.

27541. Pulmonary?—Yes; and I think that sanatorium treatment by itself in this county and county borough can do very little. The great difficulty that confronts one is where the funds are to come from to complete the scheme. The increased hospital accommodation that would be required is a sanatorium for early cases of about forty beds, three homes for advanced cases in the county, and one in the city.

27542. Only forty beds?—I think forty beds would be enough to start the sanatorium, because it is only the very early cases that would be taken into it; and forty beds would represent that from 120 to 160 patients in the year could be treated there. And the reason I suggest forty beds is because I think it would be well to limit this sanatorium entirely to cases in the early stage; not to take in advanced cases whatever; because in the early stage of the disease is your only hope of arresting the disease. If the disease gets hold of the patient to any extent, cure is very problematical.

27543. It may be arrested if the disease had been with a person for some time?—It might be; but I say it is problematical. If you can get a case in the very early stage, and put that case under proper sanatorium treatment, you can very readily, you cannot say to a certainty that a patient will recover, but you can say a very large percentage of them would recover.

27544. You spoke of 3,000 cases, roughly, as being the probable number of phthisis patients in the county and city; suppose 3,000 of these would be people who really could not pay for getting proper treatment themselves, how many of the 3,000 would be at the present moment, do you think, cases that you might treat in a sanatorium with forty beds?—A large proportion of those 3,000 would be advanced cases, coming under these headings—humble middle class in towns, small farmers in county districts, and the very poor in county and city. I would suggest that the two first classes be treated in the homes for advanced cases, or auxiliary sanatoria, and the latter, if possible, should be induced to go into the isolation wards in the workhouse hospitals. It would certainly be better if all classes could be treated outside the workhouse, but financial reasons may not permit of this. All incipient cases of phthisis of every class should be sent to the sanatorium for early cases as far as accommodation would permit.

27545. Are you speaking now of acute and hopeful cases?—Yes, and advanced cases.

27546. You would not leave any of those in the workhouses?—I would not leave any cases in the workhouses. Any hopeful cases I would send to the sanatorium, but ones that were not hopeful I would cater for in the homes for advanced consumptives and isolation wards of workhouses.

27547. If you were starting straight off, do you think forty beds would be at all adequate for the number you have to deal with; it might be if it was a going concern for a number of years?—Well, I think it would be fairly adequate at the start; the county could not do any more; they could not be expected to contribute more than £6, in the £8.

27548. And that would not see you further?—That would not see us much further, especially when we have now to think about the purchasing of the site; for when we first started the project we were offered a site free. Now we have to contemplate the purchase of the site, and I think that catering for 160 out of 2,000 workers would be very fair. It would be as much as we could do. Of course, it would be desirable if we could cater for double the number.

27549. Dr. Brogan?—You would not be catering for 160 out of the 2,000, you would be only catering for 40?—That is of the early cases. You would be able to treat 160 in the year.

27550. Yes, but you have more than 2,000 in the year; I think your estimate is very low?—I think it is low myself.

27551. In Cork city alone there were 360 deaths, and the average duration of consumption is five years?—I thought it was three.

27552. If you multiply 360 by five?—By three. It is laid down by most authorities that three years is the average.

27553. But, even so, forty beds seem to me to be totally inadequate?—It is very low.

27554. You would have a great difficulty in discriminating who should get in?—Yes.

27555. CHAIRMAN.—You are limited by your funds?—Principally by the funds. I quite agree if we could do more it would be very desirable to do that.

27556. Dr. Brogan.—If you get £3,500 a year, surely you ought to be able to keep from 80 to 100 for that?—The present idea is that the purchase of the site alone will cost something about £1,500 or £2,000; and then, with the erection of buildings and everything else like that—I saw some remarks from gentlemen at the Oireachtas Hospital Board—it would bring the whole scheme up to £20,000.

27557. Of course, you would borrow £20,000?—Yes, at 5 per cent, paying off capital and interest, that would be £1,500; and then you would calculate 20s. a week for supporting each consumptive, at the lowest.

27558. £20,000 is a large amount to spend on an establishment with forty beds?—Our original plan was this: we were offered a site free for a consumptive hospital; we went into a calculation of how many beds we could support; we found it would cost us £7,500 to erect the hospital, say £8,000, in round numbers; that would be 2000 interest, and then we had the whole £20,000, or very near it, for starting; but the turn affairs have taken here altered the position entirely.

27559. How much do you calculate a consumptive in a sanatorium costs?—From 25s. to 30s. altogether.

27561. An intelligence department?—Exactly; and I should say a recognition of the public health service, not alone in the county, but in all Ireland, and assimilating it to England. This will doubtless be considered a large order, but even more will be necessary to check the spread of this disease; and, as I previously mentioned, notification and disinfection are absolutely indispensable. With reference to the County Medical Officers of Health, I think it would be a great advantage to this country generally, outside of the sanatorium question, if there was a County Medical Officer of Health for each county, for in a great many instances in the country there is no doubt in the world that the sanitary law is more or less a dead letter, for many reasons, which it is unnecessary to go into; the principal, I think, from want of County Medical Officers of Health to supervise and organise the units that exist at present; and I think that the great success that has been attained in England of late years has been due to their efficient Public Health service, including these County Medical Officers of Health. At the present time the Local Government Inspector has to do that duty, and I am sure that he has much more than he can do outside that altogether.

27562. You did not think of a site for these three institutions of fifty beds each? I think it would be well to have one in the centre, and one in the east, and one in the west; because if you place these in inconvenient positions, I don't think you will get innumerable cases to go into them. They must be somewhere about Miltown on one side and Donmoy on the other—Quee so; or Mallow and Bally, or a place that be thoroughly over-run with phthisis, like Millstreet. It is about the worst part of the County Cork, and one of these auxiliary sanatoria, if it was erected at Millstreet, would do a great deal of good for that part of the county and the surrounding districts.

27563. Do you know that district?—I know it well.

27564. And if the Millstreet Guardians wish to close their workhouse and turn it into a sanatorium, do you think it would be a good site?—I don't know the inside of the workhouse.

27565. It is high on the hillside, with a good gravitation water supply?—I know the outside of it, but I was never in it. I think it would be all right. Of course, if you look to get the best house for advanced consumptives in the county I should say Miltown. The air of the surrounding districts is better than most other places.

27566. It would be fairly accessible for the different parts?—Yes. Notification and disinfection, I think, are absolutely indispensable. It would enable you to trace the source of the infection, which is a very important thing. A rate of 12. in the £ would be sufficient for the erection of a sanatorium and maintenance, as far as the forty beds go; but I quite agree with Dr. Bigger that the estimate is an extremely low one.

27567. The estimate of the number of beds?—Yes. I think it should be a county-at-large charge, or a union charge, in proportion to the number sent there from each of the respective unions, and the length of time spent by those persons in the sanatorium. The governing body, I think, ought to be the County Council, or a committee appointed by them.

27568. That would be hardly a satisfactory financial way to work it. You would want something from each district to pay establishment expenses; and besides, you would suggest, I suppose, that each patient should pay so much per head for the week?—Yes.

27569. But each district should contribute to the general working expenses—salaries and so forth first. For instance, a place like Miltown, that had very few patients, would you propose it should get off altogether or contribute a certain proportion to the salaries and general expenses, with a right to get patients in at so much a head afterwards?—It would be very hard to ask Miltown to do that, where there is so little consumption in the district.

27570. You could not finance the institution if you did not do something like that?—If you erected a consumption hospital in Tughril or Miltown or Millstreet, where the place is over-run with phthisis, then you could fairly ask the district to finance it, but I think erecting the hospital in Miltown, where there is little or no consumption, you could scarcely ask the Miltown people to do it.

27571. It would be virtually a county charge—each district contributing its share to the expense of the doctor and nurse, and so forth, and then for each patient that went in at so much a head besides?—Do you speak of the curative sanatoria?

27572. Any institution?—My idea is that for the curative sanatorium you could not have a better place than the county-at-large charge; and the reason I suggest the County Council as the governing body is with a view that this sanatorium system would extend in Ireland, and it is very difficult to organise an entire county; that is, to get all the District Councils of the county to be unanimous in levying a rate, as we did have in the County Cork. It was a very difficult thing to do, and I think the same difficulty would be experienced elsewhere. If it was entirely under the care of the County Council, all that would be necessary for anybody to do would be to approach the County Council instead of going to twenty-one or twenty-two District Councils, as we had to do in this case.

27573. Why would the stage of the disease be a reason for having a different system of charging for the patients? If you have the first stage people supported by the county-at-large, why should you not have those in the second, or later, stages also financed in the same way?—I think the county would object to pay.

27574. It is not the county in any sense. Parts of the county would have to make it up, no matter whether it is a county-at-large rate or charged proportionately on the districts?—I think the county thinks they have enough to pay in the id. in the £, and if they had to support these auxiliary sanatoria I think they would desert.

27575. You think they would not like to have the whole thing under one committee, in the same way as they have their lunacy work done?—I think if the Government contributed in the same way as they do for lunatics, a certain amount, by a capitation grant, for the support of these advanced consumptives, then, perhaps, the county might be asked to do something; but I don't think the county volunteering to be responsible for id. in the £, that you could go to them again, and ask them to provide for three auxiliary sanatoria.

27576. Here is the way it presents itself to us. Suppose a workhouse is closed, any workhouse you like, Miltown or Millstreet, and it is decided to have one of those houses for more advanced cases there, these would be admitted from outside the union in which the building is situated, how would you propose the people should pay; suppose the Miltown people with the workhouse there as one of these houses for chronic cases?—Are you speaking of paupers?

27577. Well, I don't like the words?—Are you speaking of the poorer class—poor people or workers?

27578. I am speaking of the poor people?—Of course, it would be just as cheap, if you speak of the poor people that go in and use the workhouse hospitals. It would be just as cheap for the different unions to pay for them in the Miltown Workhouse as in Mallow or Millstreet.

27579. You see, Miltown will first have to set the concern going—appoint doctors and nurses. You propose that that expense should come out of the Miltown pocket, and they should recoup themselves by the patients coming in from outside, at so much a head per week?—I think that scheme would be rather difficult to work.

27580. Dr. Bigger.—Would it not be much better to have it administered from one centre? For instance, if one institution was full and another nearly empty, would it not facilitate matters to send patients in the county to any of those, if it was a county charge?—I say it should be a county-at-large charge.

27581. For all?—Not for all; for the curative sanatorium. I think if it was a county-at-large charge for supporting 150 additional people, that it would be an enormous burden on the rates.

27582. Won't it come off the outpatients, in any case?—There are a great number of people outside—the humble middle class that are not in hospital at present, that would avail of hospital treatment, if it were there. These workers don't go into the hospitals at present, therefore the rates are not burdened.

27583. If they are able to pay you would be able to charge them?—Certainly, but they may not be able to pay.

Sept. 25, 1915.

Dr. F. J.
Crewes

27584. Would not that go to help to support the institution?—It would.

27585. Would it not tend to better management and all that sort of thing, the same as county infirmaries are at present; they are largely supported by people going in and paying?—Yes, I would propose that a certain amount be contributed in that way by paying patients.

27586. How could you have three centres in the county for sending a certain class of consumptives, unless you had it under one management?—It would be rather difficult.

27587. CHAIRMAN.—It is hardly fair, perhaps, to carry you to figures. You have given us very valuable evidence about the disease and the methods of coping with it, but with regard to the financing?—I have an idea on that matter, that the Government, who have expended large sums of money in exterminating the plague and other kindred diseases in India, should, here in Ireland, where we have this country over-run with tuberculosis, not impose such a task on the ratepayers as to carry out the large scheme I propose. There is only one thing for it. If you want to make an impression on tuberculosis in this country it will have to be carried out on a large and effective system, or it is no good; the same as in Prussia, as I told you, at New York, where the mortality diminished by 30 per 10,000 in twenty years. All that could be done in rich countries, but it cannot be done here by the people of this country, because they are too poor; and unless the State steps in, and does something in the way of a grant for these auxiliary institutions that I refer to they can never be carried out. That has been my impression. That is what I stated from the commencement—without State aid of some kind you will make no impression on it. Of course you will go on, and one year things may be getting a little better and another year a little worse; but to treat the thing effectively, the Government will have to come to the rescue and give help.

27588. But you do think that a very strong case has been established for Government aid?—Look at the tables you have here; look at the mortality increasing from 30 per 10,000 in 1811 to 45 in 1904 of a preventable disease. There is an idea in the country among the people that this disease is a hereditary disease, but that now is proved to be a complete mistake. We all know that it is a preventable disease, and with mortality increasing from 30 per 10,000 to 45 in the limited space of twenty-three years, where is it going to stop? There won't be a man, woman, or child left in the country unless the Government step in and do something. I think the County Cork did a great deal in coming forward and volunteering to pay 12 in the £; and it has this credit, that it is the first county in Ireland or the first county in Great Britain that has made that start, and said: "Although we are a poor county, we will do something." I think it is the part of the Government to come forward, and say: "We recognise what you have done; we are ready to come and give you a helping hand."

27589. What do you think would be a good governing body for these institutions?—I think the County Council for all, and a committee of the County Council.

27590. The same way that you work the infirmary and lunatic Asylum?—Yes.

27591. Would it be a select committee of the County Council or with members added?—With members added. I should say the chairman of each of these unions.

27592. But altogether a body locally elected?—Locally elected. The reason I mention the County Council is because I recognise what a great difficulty it was to organize the County Cork to get the twenty-two District Councils to agree, one after the other. It is a thing that could not be readily done in other counties.

27593. Were you the ambassador in many cases?—Well, I had something to do with it. There is one point just I would wish to refer to, that is, about the form of notification you would adopt to be a success. I think in the city of Cork nothing short of compulsory notification would do. I think in the county you might very well try voluntary notification.

27594. Voluntary on the part of the doctors?—Voluntary on the part of the doctors and patients themselves, because the country people are not yet educated up to the idea that consumption is not a hereditary disease. They think there is a stigma attached to every family that suffers from consumption. That is the popular idea in the country, although long known to be erroneous; and they are not educated up to the mark as yet. It is more dangerous to have consumption than it is to have typhus fever; but it will take a long time, and the path of the reformer is always a thorny one. I think you would meet with considerable opposition in the country in introducing a system of compulsory notification, but I think that if a system of compulsory notification were introduced into Cork, the same as it is in Sheffield, where it has worked very well.

27595. Is it compulsory in Sheffield?—It is compulsory in Sheffield. The Corporation get a small Act. It is compulsory in New York and in Prussia. In Sheffield it is working very well. I had a letter from a Medical Officer of Health there saying there has been no friction or anything of the kind; and from what I see of the people of Cork, I think they are most anxious to carry out disinfection, and all the rest of it, if it could be done legally.

Dr. J. C. SMITH examined

Dr. J. C.
Smith

27596. CHAIRMAN.—You are the medical owner of a sanatorium yourself in the County Wicklow?—I am.

27597. And you have had a good deal of experience in the treatment of the disease?—I have.

27598. You have gone through the County Cork, I believe, recently?—Yes.

27599. With the object of reporting on a site for the consumptive sanatorium?—Yes.

27600. Have you seen many good sites?—No, I have not.

27601. Did you happen to see any of the work-houses?—I saw two in particular that you mentioned just now, but I did not take much notice of any but the Mitchelstown one; I may have seen the others, but they don't remain in my mind.

27602. There is a monastery of architecture which makes it difficult to identify each union. Mitchelstown you saw?—I did.

27603. Did you think it, as far as a general bird's-eye view, a fairly good site?—From the medical point of view it is very exposed to wind and weather. If it is intended for the isolation of advanced cases only it might do; but for a curative sanatorium I would not recommend it, on account of its being so exposed.

27604. It is sheltered from the south-west?—It is sheltered a little from the south-west, but it is open to the north and east, and somewhat from the west, I think, as well.

27605. And shelter is most important?—Yes, not only for the cure, but for the mitigation of the unpleasant symptoms of the disease, shelter is most important. It struck me that the County Cork was an extremely difficult county, from its very formation, in which to find a really good central site.

27606. You have heard Dr. Crewes's evidence of the very large number of cases of phthisis in the county and city; would you agree that it is prudent to have a good sanatorium for the acute in the early stages, and another institution, or institutions, that might be necessary, for the less hopeful cases?—Certainly. I think medical opinion everywhere would support me that the two classes are best kept apart.

27607. You would have a male and female wing at each site?—Probably that would be the best plan of construction; I should think so.

27608. You heard the estimate of about $25,000; could you give us any help about the amount of money?—I am afraid that is outside my previous money. I could give a rough idea of what a temporary wood and lath structure would cost, from small buildings I have put up at my own place of a very simple nature.

Sept. 25, 1908.
Dr. J. G.
Seyth.

27609. Do you mean isolated blocks, containing forty beds?—I am speaking merely of the sort of section simply. I think the cost Dr. Croft was speaking of was for the construction of the whole building.

27610. £50,000?—That means staff, buildings, furnishing, beds, electric light, heating, and everything.

27611. £28,000 was for the site; what about these temporary blocks?—They are of the very simplest description. I have brought a drawing of one of them here, one of my own; it is a very simple thing, indeed, a sort of outdoor hut for patients; a kind of bungalow, with a verandah in front (explains plan.)

27612. What would that block cost?—That block cost me about £150 to build. There are four beds and the nurse's bed, and with the furnishing it came to about £250 a bed, that is £280.

27613. How long would this building last if properly painted?—I am sure they ought to last a long time if the foundations are good; mine are only built on timber piles; on good concrete they should last fifty years.

27614. What is your opinion about these shelters, in contradistinction to hospitals?—I like them better, and I think most of patients seem to take a pride in their treatment when they are under such different conditions to what they have been in before. The only difficulty is the question of heating and attendance.

27615. You have a bed in every room?—One bed in each room.

27616. These rooms are separate private rooms?—Yes, with a common verandah in front. I think a corridor at the back would be an advantage.

27617. Dr. Broome.—They are all private paying patients, and, therefore, you put them into private rooms?—Yes.

27618. CHAIRMAN.—Could you put two in each room?—Not very well; they are only 12 feet square.

27619. Would these be used for patients all in the early stages?—Not necessarily.

27621. Have you had a hard winter yet?—Not a very hard one. Patients come to me in the middle of winter and go to this, and as long as their vitality is sufficiently good they seem to do well there. They have extra warm clothing. I think in this country, where the weather is so relaxing, and the winter is so much more bracing than the summer, that patients do better in winter than in summer—that is, in the earlier cases.

27622. Dr. Broome.—Could you give me an estimate of an institution where the patients would be from four to half-a-dozen in a room?—No, I have not gone into the figures that way.

27623. It would be cheaper than this?—It would; it would require much less space.

27624. CHAIRMAN.—If you put a partition up, could you not have three patients where you have now only one?—I think it is stated a thousand cubic feet is the smallest space you could give a patient. That would give over a thousand feet; but I object to two patients in a room, because they keep each other awake, and talk. I am speaking of a curative sanatorium, and I firmly believe, if you want to have good results, you will have to have the patients one in a room, no matter what class they are. I have heard that where there are a number of consumptive patients in a common ward, they keep one another awake at night by coughing. When one hears another cough he then wants to cough himself.

27625. Some doctors seem to think that in forty or fifty years consumption will be largely stamped out. From what we have heard to-day there is not much evidence of that in this country.

27626. I mean as soon as strong sanatoria are taken?—Well, it is diminishing to such an extent that if you prolong the present line in the charity in some places in England the disease should disappear in the course of fifty years, that is if it goes on diminishing exactly in that straight line.

27627. At all events, the experience in Germany shows that by boldly and firmly grappling with it you can reduce the disease?—Yes. I read somewhere lately that there is accommodation for about 20,000 patients in Germany; many more than there are in the whole of this kingdom.

27628. And there consumption is decreasing very much?—I think it is decreasing very much more rapidly than in England.

27629. You think the results of sanatorium treatment are hopeful?—I do; the results are most encouraging in my experience.

27630. Do you find a considerable number of complete cures?—It is very difficult to say what a case is cured. The only way you can say a case is cured is by watching him for a number of years afterwards. I think it is generally accepted that when a man remains at his work, and able to live an ordinary life, without relapse, for five or six years after his treatment, he has practically been cured. Of course, when they leave the sanatorium you can only guess whether they are cured or not. You see, the disease is arrested; it may be temporary or permanent.

27631. A good deal would depend on his after life?—Exactly.

27632. Would he be more susceptible than others to fresh infection?—Not necessarily.

27633. He would not be immune?—Oh, no, certainly not. We have cases on record of re-infection after cure; we have also cases of relapse, without doubt, through getting into a bad state of health again. It depends entirely as how he keeps up his physical resistance to the disease.

27634. Dr. Broome.—What would be the maximum number that should be in a public institution?—I would not limit the number if you have ground enough and a sufficient number of medical officers.

27635. CHAIRMAN.—You would not like to limit them by one bed a room?—I would like a number of small rooms, with one patient only in each room, but I was thinking of what one doctor could manage. I think an outside number for one man to attempt properly is forty. According to my principles I think a patient ought to be seen three times a day, and practically fed under medical supervision. I always do that with my cases; everything should be regulated individually.

27636. Dr. Broome.—You think an institution might be any size provided you had sufficient staff?—I should think so.

27637. What would be the number you would allow per acre?—I cannot answer that question.

27638. In the selection of a site, speaking generally, what would be the most desirable points?—Do you mean aspect, now?

27639. Yes?—The first thing of all that is requisite is shelter; and, second to shelter, comes place and climate. Shelter from prevailing strong, or wet wind; in fact, if you could get shelter from all but the south so much the better; and then I think a certain amount of elevation in this country is almost necessary for breeziness; where you get breeziness near the sea you get wet.

27640. Your idea is it should not be near the sea?—Never at the sea. I could not give the exact limits, but I would not like to go within a mile of the sea. I am five miles from the sea myself.

27641. You would not like to be near a lake?—It would depend on the site and elevation; if large they are nearly always windy, and liable to storms.

27642. You would like natural rather than artificial shelter?—Well, artificial, too. If the surrounding lands are planted there is more shelter than if they were bare. Pine trees are the best; they are thicker, and branch down lower, and I think they offer less encouragement to flies and insects generally, which may be a great source of disturbance in summer.

27643. Now, you considered the question of having any other kind of sanatorium for tuberculous cases—surgical cases?—No, I have not. I should think only that there is such a disparity in the number of cases, and the accommodation that seems to be available, the surgical cases might very well be treated with the early stage cases, as the treatment would be so very similar, as far as hygiene, rest, and exercise are concerned—in short, the building-up treatment.

27644. But you would have them in different wards—yes, you would not expose the surgical cases to any possibility of infection?—I think in a properly

Apr. 25, 1906.

Dr. J. C.
Sayce

managed sanatorium there should be no risk of infection whatever. I would not have wards at all, only single bedded rooms.

27545. You believe in the educational advantages of sanatorium treatment?—I do, very strongly; it does more probably even than the pamphlet distribution.

27546. They learn by experience?—Yes; and then they go home, and impart their knowledge by example; if they are any good at all, and if they mean to get better, their daily life is a splendid object lesson to their neighbours.

27547. Do you see any objection to having one sanatorium for paying patients and also for those that are not able to pay in the one institution?—Do you mean the two classes will be in the same institution?

27548. The same institution?—Well, I don't know; I can hardly answer on the subject.

27549. CHAIRMAN.—You would be guided in your opinion by the experience in county institutions and other institutions?—Yes, but I have not very much experience of that. I have only one class of patients. I know they take both classes at some institutions, and I believe, from the patients' point of view, there is often a certain amount of disinclination; but, of course, they are only paying just their bare upkeep, so they have no right to complain; but they do, all the same. In one place the difference is 30s. and 7s.; the 30s. is just their maintenance expenses.

27550. Dr. BROWN.—You don't know how the 30s. is made up?—I do not.

27551. CHAIRMAN.—In the matter of food they treat them very liberally?—I think so; I think I have heard them say it costs nearly half. They have a large nursing staff.

27552. Dr. BROWN.—To be of any use, how long should treatment in a sanatorium continue?—You mean for early cases? That is a very difficult point. There is no rule except that a patient should stay until he is well. I think it averages about three or four months in the very early cases in the working classes, to enable those people to work again, with a reasonable amount of safety; but I think to look for a cure would take considerably longer—perhaps five or six months.

27553. Do you think it is wise thing to allow them to go back to work so soon as three or four months?—It depends on their work and the home conditions—and whether they can be looked after when they go home. I think that is a very important point, and when it is duly considered, many can resume work at the end of that time.

27554. CHAIRMAN.—There is a risk of these men going back to low diet after very high feeding?—Of course there is a risk with the working classes, which one does and find so much with the other classes.

27555. Dr. BROWN.—And confined companions?—Yes. A great many have to alter their occupations altogether.

27556. Have you any experience of dispensaries for looking after the cases when they come out?—No.

27557. Do you keep in touch with any of your cases after they leave the sanatorium?—Yes; frequently I hear from them.

27558. From your own personal experience, what would you say the proportion of the cure was to the cases of the disease?—My place has been running for such a short time that the figures would be rather misleading, and I think I could hardly give you much help. I think it generally requires five or ten years, and my place has not been running five. I could not give you any details that would lead to a definite conclusion.

27559. There is a great deal of discussion in medical circles regarding it; have you formed any opinion on that?—If you separate the early cases, and take them only, a very general proportion is from 75 to 85 per cent. of decidedly improved cases, and out of those about half, perhaps scarcely half, are arrested, and a proportion of those in the course of five years, half will have disappeared from the scene; so that probably, at the end of five years, we find 25 or 30 out of the 100 patients still living. Of course, that is a considerable number to save, and you lengthen the lives of others considerably. I think that is a very fair computation. I cannot speak from personal experience.

27560. In your institution, where you have no fires, have you any trouble with patients getting cold?—They complain very often, but they get accustomed to it in time. They are notoriously free from cold in the head and chest.

27561. CHAIRMAN.—You don't think they run any risk to health; you think them improved?—In the majority of cases. Sometimes a case requires more warmth, but in the majority of early cases, if you can keep them at the one temperature, it matters comparatively little what the temperature is as long as you are able to give them exercise. That is my own experience.

27562. Dr. BROWN.—Comparing sanatorium treatment with home treatment, what would you say?—My opinion is that home treatment is very poor, indeed. You cannot get the proper discipline, or get them to do the thing in the proper way; but when they come to a place under a rule, and have to do what they are bid, it is a very different thing.

27563. After being two or three months in a sanatorium, do they then carry it out?—A considerable number of cases will carry it out, more or less well, and I always aim to get my patient to such a state of health that he will be able, with comparatively little trouble, to carry it out himself. It depends on himself entirely; if he does not carry it out he will relapse; it depends entirely on the patient's character and amount of will power.

27564. How many nurses would be required for a sanatorium with forty beds?

CHAIRMAN.—It would altogether depend upon whether you had them in bungalows or large wards?—Yes.

27565. As regards construction, you could provide good accommodation for four patients for less than £200?—I have done so.

27566. And on the same scale you could provide for forty for £2,000, a continuation of these bungalows?—Just so. That does not include an administrative block or lighting, heating or cooking, or servants' rooms; merely the wards.

27567. Dr. BROWN.—There are quite a number of institutions kept up in this way?—I believe so; a good many in England. This year at Newcastle they were very much pressed for space; they are building a new wing, and they had from twenty to thirty patients in tents for some months; I believe they did very well with them.

27568. For how long in the year did they erect the tents?—It would not do for all the year?—Probably not.

27569. CHAIRMAN.—They were emergency tents, and very good ones?—They would do all right in summer time, but in winter the hardship, I think, would be too great, and the wet coming through the tents in heavy rain, and so on.

27570. Dr. BROWN.—You would not approve of them for all the year?—Hardly, I think; it is very difficult to get a course building properly ventilated, unless the front was all open.

27571. Do you give the patients any work?—No, they have regular exercise walking. The only recreation I allow is croquet; I don't allow tennis or golf, and the walking is at a slow pace.

27572. For a class of patients depending on their own support, would you approve of their doing something in the sanatorium?—I think it is a thing that might be experimented on. I tried it in two cases of the working class, that I took in out of charity. One man I gave some gardening, very gentle work, weeding walks; neither of them did well. One developed neurasthenia, and the other man also developed in the end; I found it did not work at all. Temporary buildings can be erected at a low cost, but the trouble is the heating.

27573. Did you look through the workhouse in the county?—I did not.

27575. CHAIRMAN.—You would require both sleeping rooms and day rooms for the patients?—I think it a curative sanatorium the less day rooms they have the better, because then they go out all the time; I would keep them out as much as possible; in fact only give them the diningroom, and not let them stay there too long after dinner; and have shelters and outside for them to sit in. I don't believe in recover-tion halls, but perhaps for the more chronic cases some sanatorium life might be desirable; I really don't know, because they are not the cases I have to think about so much.

27676. Dr. BRIGGS.—Cases that are able to be out of bed at all should not be sitting in the wards!—No, they should be out of doors, I think.

Sept. 25, 1905.

Dr. J. C. Smyth.

Dr. W. A. CUMMINS, Medical Officer, Cork Workhouse, examined.

27677. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to bring before our notice the question of disinfection?—It was with regard to advanced cases of consumption, which are admitted in very large numbers to the Cork District Hospital.

27678. You have eighty odd?—Oh, we have. I should think they number 180.

Dr. CUMMINS.—215 this year, and 221 last year.

Witness.—I am speaking of the number actually at one time in the hospital. With regard to the female cases, we have been able to put them into separate wards.

27679. How many beds in each ward?—From twelve to twenty beds in the female division. In the male division, where we have these very large wards, containing from sixty to eighty beds, other cases have to be put with them. What I wish to say to-day is that I consider it an extremely undesirable thing to have these cases of advanced consumption associated with other cases.

27680. Could you not restrict these wards altogether to pulmonary cases?—We are unable to do it. In the female wards we can, because they are smaller wards. The union hospitals were originally for the sick in the house, not for outsiders. But now the idea of utilising them as district hospitals has been gradually increasing, and the Guardians of the Cork Union have, I think very rightly, called it now the Cork District Hospital. I would go a step further, and say that that hospital ought to be separated off from the workhouse proper, and should be utilised as a district hospital. With regard to these consumptive patients, I find it an absolute impossibility to get them to stop the horrible habit of expectorating all about the place. It is very well known that a single advanced case of consumption will expectorate 20,000,000 tubercular bacilli in the twenty-four hours. I have seen again and again cases of workmen attending these patients develop consumption, men who came in well. I have had notices put up in the wards, with all sorts of penalties, to try and get patients to give up this habit, but they will not do it; so I have come to the conclusion that the proper thing is to isolate all these advanced cases of consumption by themselves. They cannot do any harm to themselves.

27681. I should think that that was quite possible?—It is very difficult when you have other patients coming in.

27682. I would never dream of putting a man in a place where he would be exposed to the risk of infection?—It is very difficult to prevent that.

27683. I would not take the risk of marking an incoming patient for that ward?—But our wards are limited, because they are so big.

27684. I would much rather say I had no room?—But you must take them in. I consider there should be an absolute rule that no patient except a consumptive should be admitted to the consumptive ward.

27685. If I were a doctor I would not admit a man there unless he had consumption?—You must take him into the house.

27686. Dr. BRIGGS.—You have had a good deal of difficulty with this subject for some years past?—I have had a great deal of difficulty about it.

27687. It has been very often before the Guardians?—On many occasions.

27688. And it was arranged that they would put up a block for chronic cases?—I understood they were to build, but, like many of the other schemes, it did not come off. As you know, in connection with the fever hospital, there is the same thing. I wish to mention that point now.

27689. CHAIRMAN.—Do you ever put any people into the fever hospital that have not fever?—So you put a person who comes in with a broken leg in with the typhoid cases?—Certainly not.

27690. Mr. MURKIN.—Is there no way of partitioning off a portion of the ward, so as to keep the consumptives absolutely by themselves?—There are a certain number of these consumptives who are able to get up and get out in the passages, and go downstairs, and that is where the mischief comes in. When these patients are in bed they have their spitting cups, which are carefully disinfected; but I am speaking of these patients when they go out into the passage, and go down to the yard, and the entrance to the hospital—when the fire is out in the summer—the patients are sitting by the fire place on stools expectorating into the fireplace. You cannot stop it. I have tried putting penalties on these people, and putting up notices everywhere I can, but you cannot prevent these people from misdoing in this filthy habit. That I believe is the cause of a great deal of the mortality among consumptives. I never would admit an early case if I had my way into the union hospital. I think that a case which is curable, or which might become stationary under treatment, should be sent to the sanatorium that is proposed, which I think is extremely necessary for such cases.

27691. But while waiting for a sanatorium, is there not some way that you could keep these people apart altogether to themselves, and prevent them mingling among the others?—The workhouse was constructed for a totally different purpose, not for the masses of patients that come in. We are crowded up in these hospitals; we have every bed possible occupied. During the winter time we have sometimes more than one patient sleeping in a bed, when the cough comes. We have not room to isolate these patients. If the suggestion I hope to make about the moving of the children is adopted it will give us more room, and then we may be able to isolate patients.

27692. There are several hundred children in the house, I believe?—Yes; including sick and healthy we have a very large number, but the numbers are not quite as great as they were. I do not think these children should be allowed to remain in the house; I think it is a very great mistake.

27693. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of boarding them out or putting them in some other institution?—Two suggestions have been made. I think one is that they should be boarded out. There is a difficulty about that as regards the parents, because some of these children have a mother or somebody living in the workhouse, and there is a difficulty about getting foster parents for such children. The other proposal is putting them into an industrial school, where they would be taught trades. Now these children boarded out are taught a certain amount of farming, and a certain amount of labouring work, but they never rise practically beyond that condition.

27694. It is not that now a fairly good position for a little child that has been supported in the workhouse—is it not a fairly good position to make them agricultural labourers?—I think it is very good. I merely mention the two proposals. I think there are reasons for and against both. It is better if you can not to have children brought up in a large school—industrial or other school. When they are brought up in the workhouse, the workhouse is their home; and if these children were fed on bread and water, I believe they would come back to the workhouse. I don't think it is a question of the food, it is the association. The most pernicious ideas that we have through life are those we acquire when children, and these children acquire workhouse ideas before they are ten years of age which last them the rest of their lives; and on any slight reverse in life, back they come to the workhouse. I don't think it has anything to do with the feeding. If these children are to be retained in the workhouse, I think their dietary should be put into the sick dietary; that the medical officers should have control over them. Many of these children are the children of consumptives and others, that require extra feeding. They are put on the same diet day after day, and I do not think they do so well; they require special care. The medical officers now have no control over them unless they are sent into the hospital sick, and then they have them under their care; but once they get into the school again they are on the healthy dietary. I prefer to get them out of the house. I have seen generations of paupers during the twenty years that

Dr. W. A. Cummins.

Cassidy.

I have been there. I have seen two that had been children in the school marry, and their children come again into the house; the children of parents who were in the house marry, and have children that are brought into the house; that is three generations. Another point that I would be very anxious to have remedied is the care of the sick infants. Now the sick infants are nursed by their mothers. I am not speaking of the ones actually wet-nursed by them, but the ones bottle-fed and the deserted children. These children, I believe, should be treated in the children's hospital, under the charge of the nurse of that hospital.

27065. Or a person specially trained for that work?—In fact, they should be taken from their mothers. Some years ago all the sick children were looked after by their mothers. I suggested to the late Colonel Spaight that he should move them up to the hospital, and these children he looked after by nuns and nurses; that was adopted, with the very best results, and we have a splendid children's hospital.

27066. Do you think it a good thing to separate mothers and children?—I am speaking of sick infants and deserted children; I have nothing to say to the healthy; of course they are cared by their mothers.

27067. You could not have the mothers in the hospital, of course, with the children?—You could not. It was done for some years, but at my suggestion Colonel Spaight got that altered, and we have now one of the best children's hospitals in Ireland.

27068. Mr. MURKIN.—Then, if children are taken out of the house it would give room for the isolation of consumptives?—It would give room for a great many things we want. I wish to refer also to the fever hospital. Under the Poor Law system patients who suffer from infectious diseases, unless they are admitted on the relieving officer's note, or as urgent cases by the master, cannot be taken into the fever hospital. I hold that it is to the interests of the ratepayers that infectious cases should be taken into the fever hospital without this routine.

27069. CHAIRMAN.—You approve of getting as much from each patient who comes into the district hospital as they could contribute?—That I am quite in agreement with.

27700. Would you approve of Boards of Guardians having powers to make inquiries as to the means of the sick persons, or their responsible relatives, and fixing a charge, say from 6d. a week to £2 a week, according to the means of the patient, and giving these powers to recover that?—Yes, according to the amount of care the patients get. If a person goes in and is anxious to get extra services, a private ward and extra nursing, I would make him pay for that up to the full cost; but I think in the interests of public health, any fever patient with infectious disease ought to be admitted without the note from the relieving officer in the ordinary Poor Law way that a patient is admitted into the workhouse. Unfortunately—you know very well, Dr. Biggs, you were in the district hospital—in consequence of the size of the wards, we have to put patients suffering from various infectious diseases into the same ward, with the result that they may take other infectious diseases and die through it. This I have brought before the Board, and plans were adopted for an additional building, which would enable us to separate the different infectious diseases in the fever hospital. That was not carried out. I think you saw the plans. I think that the fever hospital and general hospital wards ought to be separated from the body of the house. Another point I would like to mention with regard to classification before I go on further, and that is, that I do not think it a right thing that what you might call the honest poor people should be put into wards with jail birds—that is to say, that women or men who are honest labourers and workers should be put in with women or men who are in and out of jail, and are bad characters, in plain terms. I think there ought to be some classification, by which this thing could be remedied, and that there should be special wards for these cases.

27701. If you get the children out you think you would be able to carry out most of these changes?—I should be able to carry out a good deal of these changes.

27702. It would hardly help you as regards the fever hospital?—It won't help us as regards the fever hospital.

27703. There is another fever hospital in the city?—There is another fever hospital, situated in a very crowded part of the town.

27704. You could not by any arrangement have a classification of diseases—you taking some and it taking others?—That would be impossible. Many of our cases come in undiagnosed. I think there is a certain allowance of fever beds, according to population; and this district hospital is the hospital for at least 100,000. Now, with regard to district hospitals generally, I think that they should be equipped, of course in the best way possible, to treat all kind of cases. We treat surgical cases of all kinds, and, of course, modern equipment is very necessary. I don't see how that could be applied to district hospitals situated in different parts of the country. You cannot keep up an equipment for all sorts of cases in a hospital where you have twenty or thirty sick patients. What are you to do when a patient comes in for an operation? I look upon it that you should have Cork District Hospital as a central hospital, where such patients should be sent. Very great expense would be saved in the equipment of country hospitals if the Guardians were empowered to send up certain patients for operation or otherwise at a fixed charge.

27705. They send them only to the infirmaries at present?—Yes, you have 100 beds in each infirmary. A large county like Cork has a large population, and there is no reason why the district hospital should not be made the centre.

27706. It would mean a great deal of building?—I don't think so; you would not have more than ten or twenty or thirty of these patients at a time sent up from the different unions to the district hospital, that would be thoroughly equipped, and up-to-date. Another thing I suggest would be that a training school for nurses should be established in connection with the central hospital, which would provide nurses for these other hospitals.

27707. You do train nurses at present?—We train nurses, and examine them, and lecture to them, and we also have nurses from the North Infirmary trained in fever nursing. Dr. Browne tried to make it a training school for nurses, both surgical and medical, and was unable to succeed.

27708. Was that in connection with the North and South Infirmaries?—No, in the district hospital.

27709. Are you aware of the arrangement they have in Worcester, where the infirmary and the workhouse work hand in hand?—Yes, there is no reason why we should not do so. I think the district hospital here is under-staffed; we have only two visiting medical officers and two resident medical officers; it would be very much cheapened, and you could have two additional assistant medical officers at a small salary, with a right to ascend to the higher post, and two regular house surgeons. At present the house surgeons have charge of large hospital divisions. I think that the resident surgeon should be only house surgeon, and I also think in such a hospital that a great deal could be done in the way of cheapening the expenditure if resident students were admitted. A great deal of dressing and otherwise could be done by them which are now done by wardmasters, at no expense to the Guardians.

Dr. Smyth.—I think I made an error in speaking of the workhouse I saw. I meant Mitchelstown all the time, not Millstreet.

Mr. JOHN O'CONNOR, B.A., Kanturk, examined.

I wish to give evidence as to the proposed sanatorium, looking at the financial aspect from the amount of money at our disposal. I believe anything less than 100 beds would be of no distinct advantage to the county; there would be no compensating advantage for the money. We would not reach the evil in the first place, and the basis on which you should make your contributions would be totally inadequate. In this way, the whole scheme would have to be re-set; that is my impression. An estimate has been furnished to us by Dr. Smyth and Mr. Beane, the engineer to the sanatorium, and he has made an estimate for a 44-bed scheme and a 100-bed scheme, and he has taken the Missy site, the one selected on the voting of the Sanatorium Board. He has estimated that at $18,500 for 100 beds for the erection of buildings alone. I put down the estimate of the cost of acquiring the land, the furnishing of the sanatorium, and the equipment as a going concern on the 100 beds scheme, and I put it at $265,000, at least, payable in thirty years, at 5 per cent.; that would make an annual payment of $1,375; I put down 100 beds at $200 each bed, establishment charges, and under every head, that would be $40,000. In a sanatorium, the best of everything will have to be got; and on the evidence given by Dr. Smyth, he states we must at least have two doctors on the 100-bed scheme; and I thoroughly agree with him that to feeding patients they require medical supervision two or three times at least; that would be my impression. That would make a total expenditure of $7,375 annually for this county sanatorium; our income is only $2,500; that would leave a deficit of $4,875. The general prevailing idea amongst the contributory Guardians was this: That they should get accommodation in the sanatorium according to the amount that they annually subscribed; in other words, in the 100-bed scheme, according to the amount contributed annually, a contribution of $53 10s. would entitle the rural district to a bed. Of course, in a 50-bed scheme, it would require exactly double that, I should say. The general prevailing idea amongst the contributory areas is this—that they should get accommodation according to their contribution. In anything less than a 100-bed scheme the urban district would have no bed at all. I think Queensdown would be entitled on its large valuation; but I believe Queensdown would be the only urban district entitled to a bed under anything less than a 100-bed scheme.

O'Connor.

O'Connor.

27710. CHAIRMAN.—Have you got that scheme in print. I don't understand it—No; this is only merely an estimate of my own.

27711. I mean about each district getting, according to the contribution, a bed or two beds?—That is the general idea prevailing in the county; that is the opinion of my Council.

27712. That is not the way in the lunatic asylum, or any of those institutions to which you contribute; you are not limited to a certain number?—In the lunatic asylum the amount of our contribution is not fixed. Our valuation is very large, and on our contribution we think we would be entitled to a very large portion of the space. In the lunatic asylum the institution is first run, and then the rate levied; it is vice versa in this case.

27713. Would you wish it to be the same?—I think the scheme is impracticable otherwise.

27714. You would rather have the institution, and distribute the cost—I believe any other scheme is impracticable. Any scheme that would have any sort of compensating advantage for the money spent would not work on any other principle. I am opposed thoroughly to the scheme, as formulated by the Hospital Board. If you have a 100-bed scheme, which you cannot, unless you increase the contribution by 5d. in the £— 27715. Dr. BROOKER.—Do you mean you would apportion so many beds to each of the contributory areas?—Yes.

27716. That is, two stated beds to this district and one to another, and so on; and if those beds did not happen to be occupied at that time, would they not be available for any other district?—Well, no; that was the impression prevalent in the contributory areas.

27717. CHAIRMAN.—Are you sure there is such a scheme on paper?—I don't believe there is such a scheme on paper, but I know it is the intention of the Hospital Board to carry that into practical effect. They believe that, as in the case of a great many institutions, people from other districts would be filling the beds, from districts the people of which would not be contributing anything like the same proportion. We will say a district with only $25,000 or £20,000 valuation; if they had an overplus of consumptive patients in their district the people of Kinnick, Midleton, and Mallow would, naturally, object that they should go and take part of their space.

27718. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Could you not get over that by making the expense a county-at-large charge, per capita, on each district?—That would get over the difficulty, but the Provisional Order does not entitle you to do that; you cannot exceed 1d. in the £ under any condition.

27719. CHAIRMAN.—Your idea is to spend less, and lay it over the whole county?—Yes, unquestionably. I think the estimate for the building is large.

27720. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—There is something in the point of a union taking more than its share of the proportion of a sanatorium and closing it to other unions, just as well entitled to it as this particular union?—They say it is on the basis of our contribution. Undoubtedly, the gentlemen who waited on the several rural districts gave the contributory areas to understand that they would be entitled to a number of beds equivalent to their contribution; and the people whom I represent are under the distinct impression when they contribute £200 per annum, that for every £55 they contribute to the 100-bed scheme they will be entitled to a bed. The Provisional Order is in force now.

27721. CHAIRMAN.—It hardly comes into my province to inquire into that. Our province is to inquire what could be done in aid of a sanatorium by setting aside a district workhouse as an auxiliary hospital or sanatorium?—My impression is that the whole scheme will have to be reset and reconsidered. On its present basis it is impracticable, and will be no distinct advantage to this county. As to an auxiliary sanatorium that you speak of, I am not altogether in favour of that. I believe that every union in this county should be compelled, under the Public Health Act, to establish distinct and separate departments for these consumptives and others, and a separate dispensary under the Local Government Board issued for them.

27722. It is very difficult to get complete and satisfactory isolation in the workhouse wards, and a great many of the doctors, therefore, recommend that these patients should be taken to a different and distinct building, and absolutely isolated—I believe they can be isolated perfectly well in the unions if a little expenditure is gone to. I believe the expenditure in isolated institutions is not much thought of. There is a good deal of bigger-manner about spending any money on a union, and establishing different departments for any particular class of disease.

27723. You have got a very large workhouse at Kanturk?—Yes; and I am sure we could have one of the wards there very well isolated for consumption.

27724. I think you will find it difficult to have any ward perfectly isolated when you come to consider the sanitary buildings and all these things that would have to be provided, and food brought to them?—You have this advantage—you would have the doctor attached to the union and nurses there, who would attend to the consumptives.

27725. How many consumptives are there in your district hospital?—There are only four at present. If you have a ward neatly done up, with good beds and every accommodation there for consumptives, you would find the people would come in there, when they won't come in now.

27726. You know the way most of your wards are approached, from another ward with a common staircase—I know that; but, at the same time, $1,000, repayable in thirty years, would be only £56 of an annual payment, and that would make a splendid ward.

27727. Dr. BROOKER.—Would that not be a large expenditure for four patients?—I am only taking it as an example. If there were good conditions present in the union, you would find a good many people very glad to come in for treatment.

27728. CHAIRMAN.—Would you think they would not prefer to go to a separate institution?—I don't think they would. People suffering from consumption are more inclined to remain near home.

27729. Yet you will find in every part of Ireland the greatest rush to get into the sanatorium at New-castle. There are a great many applications ahead of the people who apply?—There are a great many applications from wealthy people.

27730. No, from poor people?—I believe the poor people would rather cling to their homes. I say, unfortunately, that their case can be met by wards isolated in each union. I would have a consumptive ward, a miniature sanatorium ward, in every workhouse.

27731. Dr. BROOKER.—There are some other things to think of—the approach to this ward, air space, and sanitary ground. Consumptives are not like fever patients; they are there for weeks, perhaps for months; they have got all their families; the same

Sept. 25, 1866.
Mr. John
O'Connor.

vestals that they too may be used by others. If you want isolation, it does not simply mean putting them into a ward?—I believe there could be ground attached to every union sufficient to give them exercise.

27732. CHAIRMAN.—That is exactly on the revenue line to that on which we are proceeding. We are proceeding on the line of endeavouring to reduce the number of institutions, not to increase them!—My opinion is that there should be attached to every union a convalescent ward. The general idea is this, that there should be a number of beds allowed every district and contributing area in the sanatorium. They say that wherever a sanatorium is situated there may be infectious at work which would prevent a certain class of people from a certain district getting beds; and when they would be vacant, other people would be popped into them. The only way to discriminate is this: my District Council have contributed the second or third largest amount in the county, and believe they should get space according to their contribution.

27733. That is, according to the rateable value?—Yes.

27734. Then, when the rateable value changes?—Let it go on a sliding scale—up or down, as the case may be.

Mr. RICHARD E. LONGFIELD, D.L., examined.

Mr. Richard E.
Longfield, D.L.

I was rather under a misapprehension as to the scope of your inquiry to-day, because the notice I got from the office at Mallow was that you would sit for the purpose of hearing any evidence that might be given in reference to the proposed establishment of a convalescent sanatorium for the County Cork, and I thought it would be with reference to what the Joint Hospital Board had done.

27735. CHAIRMAN.—No, it is rather supplementary to that. They don't propose to deal with any except acute and curable cases. If anything was done on our Report in the nature of diminishing the number of workhouses for Poor Law purposes, there might be workhouses available for auxiliary hospitals!—With reference to what Mr. O'Connor has just said, I think that at Mallow, for instance, we rather rushed into the scheme. I don't think we had any very clearly defined idea as to how many patients we should be able to send to the proposed sanatorium. I think we had rather a hazy notion we might be relieved of all our consumptive patients, but I think that was fallacious. It is a very good idea to start with; it might be possible either by utilising workhouses or cheap sanatoria; I should be sorry to see patients obliged to stay in rural workhouses. There is rather a feeling now with the ratepayers that the District Council will not get value for what they are going to pay. They are going to pay £400 a year at Mallow; I think there is rather a feeling that they will not get very good value for that. They may be, perhaps, obliged to go to further expense about consumption wards in the workhouse. I don't think at first we considered the expense sufficiently.

27736. You heard what Dr. Smyth said about these isolated blocks?—Oh, they would be very good things.

27737. Is there anything you wish to say about putting all the consumptives in Mallow in a diseased workhouse, if one was available?—I think it would be a very good thing; the amount of consumption in the country is simply appalling. I have lost a great many from the families of my own neighbours; there are some now who are suffering from consumption; children living with their consumptive mothers that would be much better away. I am quite sure education is a great thing.

27738. You would be in favour if the estimates were satisfactory of having a diseased workhouse set apart as an auxiliary to the sanatorium?—I suppose it would be a very good thing.

27739. I mean apart from the expense?—I suppose it would be a good thing. One great danger is that people are not inclined to go into these hospitals until the disease is so far advanced that very little can be done for them.

27740. That is mending every day; people are beginning to know more about consumption?—Yes; that is one of the great difficulties.

Mr. DENIS O'CALLAGHAN, P.L.C., examined.

Mr. Denis
O'Callaghan.

27741. CHAIRMAN.—You are from Kanturk?—Yes. I would like to draw your attention to the fact that these figures of increased consumption may be explained by the fact that all the emigrants that have been leaving our country every year are the strong and robust members of the family, leaving the weak. That has not had such an effect up to the present, but the chances are it will show more effect in future. With regard to the suggestion that the Government ought to subsidise the funds and assist the country, I think they are responsible in a great measure for this emigration, and they ought to give a little assistance, if not a great deal. I would be in favour of these auxiliary sanatoria, but they should be subsidised by the Government.

27742. You think there ought to be a mitigation grant for these?—Quite so. And with regard to the amalgamation of unions, the Guardians of the central Board will have to come very long distances, and we will only have a certain number of men working the whole Board through the year. At the present moment it has been felt, on account of the distances the Guardians are living from the unions you have not as regular a Board as you might have. Therefore, if you increase the distances, you make the Board worse. I also think with Mr. O'Connor, that there ought to be no question about the number of patients that every district ought to be entitled to.

27743. You would rather go on the principle that the expense should be first ascertained, the same way as you do with the workhouses and their expenses?—Yes. The reason I say that we in Kanturk ought to be entitled to our full number is, we will always have plenty of patients to spare; we don't expect to be short. Of course, if our beds were more, we should not object to have them filled. There will be a bit of wire-pulling to keep patients out; too much of that thing has gone on already; every contributing area ought to have no question at all about their own right and share. I think there is too much money to be expended on the site and the buildings.

27744. You would like to have it done cheaply?—A cheaper site and cheaper buildings and more money to work it afterwards.

Mr. THOMAS LINDEN, J.P., M.C.C., examined.

Mr. Thomas
Linden.

I was asked to attend the Inquiry on behalf of the Cork Board of Guardians; I am not a member at present, but I was a member when their invitation was received. One of the points the Cork Board of Guardians desired me to bring before you was with reference to the sanatorium for incurable consumptives.

27745. What is your view on that question?—I am giving the views of the Board that sent me here, and I agree with them, that it would be desirable in the event of workhouses being amalgamated in the county that a diseased workhouse should be used as an auxiliary, especially for these incurable cases of consumption, and I have also to put before you the fact that in the Cork Union a very fine fever hospital, containing 100 beds, is, in the opinion of the Board, available for the isolation of advanced cases of consumption in the fever hospital; for this reason, that the number of cases of fever, I might say throughout the year, has so greatly diminished, that the few cases of fever in the Cork Union district could very easily be treated in the Cork City Fever Hospital by the Guardians paying the expenses of the patients, and in that way the entire union fever hospital would be available for the isolation of advanced cases of consumption. The arguments that were used against adopting such a course was that in the case of an outbreak there would be no provision for fever patients; but it has been pointed out that, if necessary, consumptive patients could be removed on very short notice back to the house, and it would make no matter worse than they are at present. As regards the contemplated hospital that is about to be erected by the Joint Hospital Board, the idea is that that hospital should take in only curable cases, hopeful cases.

Sept. 26, 1905
Mr. Thomas
Lambert, M.C.

Mr. John O'Connor further examined.

27744. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you would like to say from the general point of view?—I believe that there is at least one section of the Poor Law Act that ought to be at once repealed—that is, excluding people who have more than a quarter of an acre of land from outdoor relief. I believe the Act should be amended, and it should be extended to one acre.

27745. That would be in order to let in the holders of leasehold cottages?—Yes.

27746. Mr. MURKIN.—The Local Government Board have power now to allow that to be done?—We have been encouraged in our union for having done so; and we have been warned distinctly that if we do it again it won't be permitted to us.

27747. I think you will find there was an Act of Parliament, in 1890 or 1891, enabling the Local Government Board to remove the cottages?—We have not got that information in our Board at present.

27748. CHAIRMAN.—And, what is more important, the Auditor has not got it?—Well, he seems to have forgotten all about it; but it is a great hardship.

27749. Is there any other class that you would extend outdoor relief to?—That is the only point.

27750. You would not propose to extend it to a widow with one child, as has been proposed?—Of course, there is a restriction in that way. I think if it was extended to a widow with one child it would not materially increase outdoor relief.

27751. Is outdoor relief heavy in your union?—It is.

27752. What is the rate?—I don't know exactly; but we have been decreasing our outdoor relief for the past twelve months. It was £680, and we have reduced it down to £550 for the corresponding half-year of 1905. Of course, when the Local Government Act was passed fresh men got into the Boards of Guardians, and, more or less, outdoor relief got a little bit increased; but when they got settled down and ascertained down to know more about the conditions of the people in their district, the outdoor relief decreased, with the result that it is in our union about what it was six years ago. As to nursing out the children, I think it is one of the best things in existence; but I think there are too many restrictions put on the people that are supposed to take care of them.

27753. What are the conditions you would put on?—You would like them to keep a cow?—Yes. But the Local Government Board prevents us boarding out in villages and towns; I believe that restriction ought to be withdrawn.

27754. You are not likely to get as good milk and feeding there?—There is good milk in every town now, for there are creameries near them all.

27755. That might be a reason why they would get separated milk?—Not at all; there is good milk to be had in towns and villages. With the Food and Drugs Act and the Inspector so close at hand, people in our district are very careful. I think the exclusion of towns and villages ought to be withdrawn. I never saw cleaner or better children brought up than in some of our towns. Very neat, and a credit to the people who brought them up.

27756. You can understand the meaning of the restriction, that they would get better food and be more likely to become good agricultural labourers if they are brought up in the country?—A good many of the boarded out children have got employment in the towns, and have made very good men; I have known some myself personally. They have been smart young fellows, attending in stores and places, and have turned out very good men. They can compare very favourably with the children put out in rural districts.

Mr. John
O'Connor.

27757. How far would you extend the boarding out?—What would you think of the idea of boarding out all children?—There are children we cannot board out.

27758. Supposing the law enabled you to board out all?—I believe it is a very good system, excellent.

27759. You would be in favour of it if the Guardians' discretion were increased—to enable them to board out all?—I would; I believe it is a splendid thing. There are a good many people who have small, nice clean houses; of course, the apartments are not what you would call exactly what is required by the conditions of the Local Government Board.

27760. The Local Government Board have not prescribed any conditions?—The Inspectors are very sharp, however; of course, they will select down, too, after a bit; they are fresh. It is only very poor, middle-class people who take these children, and if you adopt the system generally the restrictions will have to be very much altered.

27761. You would not be afraid of enlarging the power?—Not at all; it would be a very good thing; but when you increase the number of children you restrict the area for putting them out, because the area becomes less.

27762. I suppose when the Guardians see a child not properly cared for they insist on amendment, or remove the child?—Always; we bring in the child; that is the general system. I really believe that attached to each union hospital, there should be a trained cook. There is nothing like food, well cooked, for the sick.

27763. Whenever there are men the cooking and serving of the food is done in a very different way to when they are not?—The men have only just come into my hospital, and I have not had a chance of seeing the comparison; but apart from men or lay, I believe there should be a trained cook attached to each union, and the money of the retrospective would be very well spent in getting out the food in a nice way. It is at present a very great disadvantage, and it is one of the things that requires reformation at once.

27764. That is really in your own hands as Guardians?—I believe if there were recommendations made to the unions, I believe myself in a great many of the unions, if a proposition was made that there should be a trained cook, you would meet with a great deal of opposition. I believe it should be a universal system amongst all the unions. Of course, the strong opinion is very severe about Kanturk; it is a very knotty question to deal with.

27765. Have you any change of practice to recommend?—Well, really, except to get land attached to every union, and make them work at remunerative employment.

27766. The suggestion has been made that you should have one workhouse for each province, and any men who were habitual tramps should be obliged to work in these workhouses for a stated period, and not allowed to go rambling over the country?—I am not allowed to say anything about the consumptive, as I said awhile ago about the consumptive, that attached to each union, if you had a little bit of land, and made these people work, you would soon get rid of them.

27767. It is very easily supervising the work?—We have a labour master, who might as well be supervising the tramps. I believe that would be a very good way of getting rid of the tramp nuisance.

The Sittings were adjourned.

FIFTY-SIXTH PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26TH, 1905.

At the Courthouse, Cork.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COREY BIGGER.

Sept. 26, 1905.

Mr. William
McDonald.

Mr. WILLIAM McDONALD, M.C.B., P.L.C., examined.

25770. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the District Councilors of Kinsale?—Yes.

25771.—About a couple of hundred inmates is just highest total?—About that; they vary.

25772. We find that on the largest day last year they only got to 121?—Yes, it depends on the fishing season a good deal; if the fishing is successful the inmates are not so numerous.

25773. Have many of your fishermen to go into the workhouse?—Yes, in a bad season they come in frequently in large numbers in a bad season.

25774. They don't lay by anything to maintain themselves?—They don't lay by anything.

25775. Would they be married men with their families who would come in?—Yes, but very often it is unmarried men. In the winter season these people when the fishing has closed have to get outdoor relief.

25776. What is the opinion of your Board of Guardians on the question of amalgamation of unions?—I only speak for Kinsale, but as far as Kinsale is concerned, amalgamation would not serve us in any way either the ratepayers or our sick poor—owing to the distance we would be from any place that we could be amalgamated with.

25777. For instance, Cork?—Cork is over twenty miles considerably, and the nearest place in the Kinsale Union to Cork is Carrigrohane, over eight miles.

25778. Is Ballinhassig in your union?—The village itself is in Cork.

25779. Have you ever considered the question from another point of view, that would be keeping a local hospital?—I think our union is turned very much into a hospital; people are appreciating the hospital treatment more than they used on account of the improvement we have made in the hospital. We spent £1,700 or £1,800 in improving our hospital, both male and female, and if there were some more reforms in connection with that matter we would have people going there, if patients were allowed to wear their own clothes in hospital.

25780. Their own clothes or a different kind of clothes?—Clothes that would not have a peepser brand.

25781. You have quite power to provide such clothing?—It is not used.

25782. You could have a suit of dark serge or something that did not look like the workhouse uniform?—That would be very desirable.

25783. The point of view I was coming to was not exactly that. Your staff, of course, costs a great deal—the staff of every workhouse?—Oh, yes.

25784. If you looked at it from the point of view of keeping the acutely sick people and dealing with them in your hospital still, but seeing how far the other classes could in the interests of economy without hardship be treated in a different way. Now, for instance, have you got many children in your workhouse?—Very few; we have boarded them out recently.

25785. What is your opinion of boarding out?—I am altogether in favour of boarding out children.

25786. Would you be in favour of extending the powers of the Guardians so that they might board out all children?—Certainly.

25787. And have no child in the workhouse at all?—No child in the workhouse at all; of course, in some instances, the children might be too young.

25788. But as soon as the doctor would say they would be fit to be fed outside and take the ordinary treatment?—I would be altogether in favour of having children boarded out and even pay more liberally for them, so as to induce people to take them out and bring them up so as to be more use to society generally. It is my belief that a large majority of the children reared in the workhouse divert to the workhouse; they are absolutely no use—they don't even make an effort to be self-supporting.

25789. If that class were taken out of the workhouse, the next class you would come to think of naturally would be the mothers of these children. Now at present when a girl has fallen and is about to have a child, she goes a few months before to the workhouse, and she stays in a ward with women who have had illegitimate children before, and naturally her character is not improved by the association with these women. We received evidence in a great many places in favour of the project that no girl under such circumstances should be admitted into a workhouse, but that she should instead be sent according to her religion to some penitentiary—we will say the Good Shipsheds, or whatever community had established, as they have in Cork, a place where such girls could be taken—and that then they would go to the nearest maternity hospital to be confined of the baby, and as soon as the baby was fit to be boarded out it would be boarded out, and the managers of this penitentiary would use all their efforts to try and fit this woman for service against I think that would be very desirable. I notice myself in Kinsale frequently young girls who have fallen come in there and are ill-befitted women that could provide for themselves. I have brought it under the notice of the officials that it was wrong to have them in.

25790. Have you noticed that they have had more than one child?—I have.

25791. Do you think the suggestion we received was a good one?—Yes.

25792. That would take away from the workhouse the mothers of illegitimate children and the children?—That would be very desirable; those mothers are not to be relied on, and the clergy and others oppose their being sent out for the reason that they would fall again.

25793. Then another class would be the lunatics, imbeciles and idiots—do you think these people are properly dealt with in a workhouse, or would they be better off in a lunatic asylum or an auxiliary asylum, as at Fonghall?—I think they are much better treated in Fonghall than they are in the workhouse because they are splendidly looked after; they were not specially looked after in the workhouse; they were very often mixed about with people who were not affected in the same way as themselves; they were not neglected, but had not the same treatment as in Fonghall.

25794. Would you be in favour of excluding in future all insane or mental cases from the workhouse?—Not all, as long as there was accommodation.

25795. You would take all the insane and hopeless idiots?—It is a mistake to send young idiots to an asylum.

25796. They would go to an institution where they could be taught something?—Yes or properly attended to, because they require special treatment.

25797. Such as they cannot get in a workhouse?—They cannot get in an asylum, but you have some spare persons in the workhouse to look after an idiot child. There is one in Fonghall that is well looked after, and there was another sent out to the asylum the other day from the Cork Workhouse, and it was a great mistake to send that child to the asylum, for there was no means of dealing with it; I would not send it to an asylum amongst insane people, where sent it to an asylum would have several people to look after.

25798. That would take away three classes out of the workhouse—the children, mothers of illegitimate children, and the lunatics; then the large class you would have remaining would be the healthy aged and infirm.

Would you see any objection to having central institutions, according to the number of them, in the county, or part of a county, a county institution for the aged and infirm in the county?—Well, from the people's own point of view I think they would not avail of it; they would not go long distances away from their friends, or the probability of when they died being taken from the workhouse—that is the great objection of old people when they are going out. I know one particular old man who was going about the country begging, and he would go in readily if he thought he had anyone belonging to him who would take him out when he died; he mentioned the matter frequently to me, and that is the feeling among the old people. If you removed them from their friends and the district they lived in they would have a strong objection to go there.

27979. That would be chiefly on the point of being buried away from their friends?—Yes, and also not having an opportunity of seeing their friends occasionally; a good many of them have their friends in the district. People are made believe now that workhouses are so comfortable that they would go in there when they would not before.

27980. That objection you have raised naturally occurred to a good many people, and is induced as to make inquiries as to the number of visits the aged and infirm get in the workhouse; we find that nearly all the visits that are paid to inmates in workhouses are to the sick, but not to the aged and infirm, or hardly any?—I find they always inquire about them; they are not particular about them until they find they are in the hospital or are likely to die; they are always particular to get notification of their death, and if they are able to bury them themselves they do it at their own expense.

27981. What is your experience of the number of people whose bodies are taken out for burial?—As far as my side of the district is concerned they are nearly all taken out.

27982. How far do you live from Kinsale?—Ten miles.

27983. And from that district they do take out the poor people?—Yes; I have seen funerals leaving the workhouse, and even in Kinsale, when I am attending meetings, I often see the bodies being taken away by their friends.

27984. That, of course, is a very strong objection, but take the question of people dying in a lunatic asylum, county infirmary, or any other place of that sort—the same objection applies there?—But they invariably take them away from the asylum from distant ends of the county.

27985. Then if they are able to do that, would the objection be as strong to having a central aged and infirm refuge or house?—As a rule the class that go into the asylum who are able to pay are better off, and are able to go longer distances for the burials than in the workhouse.

27986. If a very large saving could be effected by having central institutions for the aged and infirm in central positions as far as possible, do you think the objections about visits from their friends, as they are so few, and the question of removing their remains for burial, do you think that would be a fatal objection to having these institutions?—I think as far as my district is concerned it would be.

27987. You think that even if it would save a very large sum of money, save the expense of a very large number of officials on the healthy side of the house, do you think if you could save that, and reduce the expenditure considerably, that the objection would be really strong enough to hinder one from trying the change?—I don't know about trying the change, but it would affect the people all the same.

27988. Do you think it would be a sufficiently strong objection to make you, as far as your own information goes, decide against trying the experiment?—I am afraid it is a fatal objection from the people's point of view, and it would be useless; I would not be in favour of it.

27989. Such an objection as that, of course, would put an end to any possibility of savings?—Well, I desist.

27990. As far as our Commission goes, if such an objection as that is raised, it would practically prevent the largest saving that could be made—you would have to keep up every workhouse as it is in order that the people would be within visiting distance of their friends, even if they did not go to visit them, and that they could, when they reached their last illness, be taken out for burial?—There might be a saving, but there would be a large expense in conveying these people to a central place.

27991. They hardly all arrive at the central place without much expenditure on them?—I don't think they would go there if not taken.

27992. We are speaking of the healthy. If a relieving officer, say at Mallow, in your union, instead of giving an admission to the Kinsale Union—they reach Kinsale at present without any cost?—Some of the people are carried to Kinsale by their friends.

27993. Supposing they get a ticket at Kinsale to bring them to the central institution wherever it may be, say Bandon or Cork or Mallow, a railway ticket, I mean?—I think they would in all probability go if they got a conveyance, and if they got over the substantial objection, which is a strong objection with our people.

27994. You think the objection from their feelings and opinions is so strong that it would be counterproductive in your mind against the scheme?—I think so; if the unions at present were fully equipped as hospitals—in our case our doctor has a dual appointment, he is a dispensary doctor and union doctor, and if he had only the union he could attend to the union, and if the idea prevailed amongst the people that they would be properly attended they would avail more of the hospital.

27995. Of course you know a doctor is bound to give all necessary attention to the workhouse?—I know he does, but if the number of inmates increased it would be very hard for him to attend to his private patients outside. He has the dispensary and the union, and got those appointments when the hospital was not so much availed of as it is at present. The county hospitals here are overcrowded. I am on the county sanitary committee, and I get frequent applications for entrance to the north and south infirmaries. I think if the district hospitals were properly equipped and if the people got to believe they would be equally well treated, they would go to the district hospital first and not overcrowd the county hospitals.

27996. Don't you think it is an objection to the district hospital its being mixed up and associated with all the miscellaneous classes that have to go to the workhouse?—I don't know that that objection prevails very much.

27997. You don't think they object to go in where there are people with illegitimate children attending them and looking after them?—I don't think so; we have nuns there now and nurses. I think they are getting over their objection to it. I sent a man there the other day, and was surprised that he made no objection.

27998. Their feeling about the hospital has changed?—Yes.

27999. You would be against those suggestions that I have mentioned to you which we received in other places, but do you see any other way in which you could point out any possible saving in Poor Law administration?—I would improve the hospitals.

28000. That would not be anything in the nature of a saving—that would be rather increasing at a little extra cost; but do you see any way in which a saving of the rates could be effected?—If the people would avail more of the union it would lessen outdoor relief, because it is being abused in many instances.

28001. How would you say it is abused?—There are people getting outdoor relief that would not look for it some time ago; they are living with their families and getting an instalment per week from the union. If they went to the union they would be just as well cared, and it would not be a sort of pension to the family.

28002. Mr. MURPHY.—The amount of outdoor relief given in Kinsale is not relatively very large. About £300 a year?—It is a good deal larger than it used to be.

28003. If properly given, is it not a very economical way of relieving destitution—that is to say, if nobody gets it except those who are absolutely destitute and would otherwise have to come into the house, don't you think it is the cheapest way that those people could be relieved?—It is; but outdoor relief is very often continued when it is not wanted.

28004. The Guardians can revise the lists whenever they like?—They can, but I am afraid that is not

Sept. 20, 1905.

Mr. William M'Donald.

Sept. 26, 1896.

Mr. WILLIAM
McDONALD.

done. The local Guardian very often does not do that; it is very often done by a Guardian who is not a local Guardian.

27825. Then the objection to outdoor relief is more in the management of it than the principle of giving it?—Yes. I had myself to bring under the notice of the Board some time ago outdoor relief in the neighbourhood of Ballinacraig, where a man was getting outdoor relief, and his two sons, or three, and a daughter were getting wages and could support their aged parent. It was not brought before the Board by any of the local men, whether they know of it or not. I did it with impunity, because I was not in the district; the local Guardian might have brought it on himself.

27826. That was apparently the fault of the relieving officer and of the Guardian of the locality?—I don't know whose fault it was, but I heard of it and thought it was a good thing to relieve the rates.

27827. If there was some provision made that the relieving officer would be responsible for the giving of outdoor relief in undeserving cases, would not that be a useful check?—Yes, but it is very hard for the relieving officer to ascertain whether a man is living there or not; they know when he is coming and get out of the way, and he finds it hard to get information.

27828. For the extent of the area the amount is not very large comparatively?—No, it is not, but I think it is double what it used to be under the old system.

27829. If it could be given only to deserving cases, would it not be the cheapest way of assisting the destitute?—I quite agree with you.

27830. In regard to the infirm class, the Chairman put to you a question that goes to the root of a reform of the Poor Law system, that is, he has asked you if you think it would be possible to arrange that the aged and infirm class could be placed in an institution by themselves. You are aware that at present there are six or seven different classes in workhouses; the sick are fairly well looked after because they are kept apart, but the other five or six classes are mixed up so that they are not, and cannot, owing to the want of accommodation, be as well provided for as they might be. These five or six classes require different treatment. Some require care like children, others, work, like the able-bodied idlers and tramps. In a motley community, such as the present workhouse, it is almost impossible to conduct things as they ought to be conducted, and one way of getting over that would be to segregate the classes in separate institutions. A hospital, as a rule, is indispensable in every union. But if the aged and infirm could be put by themselves in convenient places through the county, say three county homes for the aged in the County Cork, and if the children could be boarded out and provided for elsewhere, those that could not be boarded out being sent to some refuge or industrial school, then the able-bodied people could be put into a place where they could be compelled to work. In that way reform could be brought about that would be beneficial to the ratepayers and beneficial to the different classes. What I would like to know from you is, do you think it would be any great hardship to the aged and infirm to be removed to central homes where they could be taken care of by themselves and treated in accordance with what humanity would suggest?—With regard to the aged and infirm, I think you won't be able to induce them to leave their own locality. I said that in reply to the Chairman, that is my honest opinion. But I think tramps and casuals should be kept separately, and should be made work or made do something.

27831. What is the hardship in asking a person who has to look for support from the public to go ten or twelve miles further than at present to get it. The change would lengthen the distance only to those near to present unions, so the hardship is not much?—They think it is, and would object to it. They move like leaving their own locality and their friends, and there is a great objection to being left there in a pauper's grave.

27832. I quite recognise that in what you say there is considerable force, but I have some experience of a workhouse that was amalgamated fifteen or twenty years ago, and I haven't heard any complaints or any unwillingness on the part of the old to come from the dissolved workhouse neighbourhood to the new one?—I have no doubt in some cases amalgamation would be a benefit to the ratepayers and the sick poor. In Kinsale, where one-fourth of our population belongs to the urban district and suffering from depression in the local industry there, there are a great many people who during that period are amongst the poor, and in consequence their families want relief. In that way, I think, we are peculiarly circumstanced in Kinsale. The population is between 16,000 and 17,000, and the urban population is over 4,000.

27833. By a system such as has been outlined, considerable saving might be effected, and a benefit done to the deserving classes?—But I don't think you would get that very class of people.

27834. In a small house I may point out to you that the cost of officering is much greater than in a large house. The cost of an officer in the City of Cork, where the number of inmates is almost 8,000, amounts to £2 10s. per head per year. In some small workhouses in the county it amounts to over 2s. You see, there is great room there for saving?—But our rates are considerably less in Kinsale than in Cork.

27835. That is due to other causes. The number treated in the infirmary in Cork is very large, and of course the cost relatively much higher?—There are a lot of extravagances in Cork that don't occur in Kinsale.

27836. CHAIRMAN.—You would be afraid of being rated as part of the Cork Union?—I would object to it strongly, and every man in my locality.

27837. The scheme that has been suggested to us and which we are mentioning does not contemplate any such arrangement. You would still remain your own case, you ask would stay with you, and you would administer your outdoor relief as at present, but the other class, the aged and infirm, would go to the central institution, you would pay so much a head for these or whatever the arrangement would be, and you would, owing to the change, be rated as part of the Cork or Brandon or any other union?—But what about the staff—how would you get rid of the staff?

27838. You would have the same relieving officers, and they would give a ticket to the central home or for a penitentiary, as the case might be, or bring the child before you to be boarded out; you still would be the managing body?—But would we get rid of any of the officials?

27839. You would get rid of all the workhouse officials on the healthy side; the only officials you would have left would be the doctor and the nurses and the chaplains of the hospital?—That would be only saving the master and matron.

27840. And any other officials there are?—There are no other officials except some assistants in the hospital.

27841. You generally have someone looking after the lunatics?—We have no lunatics.

27842. If you have any very feeble aged and infirm you would want a wardmaid to look after them?—There is a wardmaid paid small wages.

27843. They would come to £30 a year apiece?—We generally have to feed them; they are inmates; they get their diet.

27844. Mr. MURPHY.—You would also get rid of firing and light, and the upkeep of the main institution, which is a very heavy item?—Of course, I did not go into all these details, but I am afraid that, as far as we are concerned, we have managed our place economically for a long time. We inherited an economical management from those who went before us.

27845. CHAIRMAN.—If you found that your rates, which you are satisfied are low under the present system, could be still further materially reduced by such a scheme as has been suggested here, would you then be rather disposed to look more favourably on it?—I, as a ratepayer, would welcome any change that would reduce the rates, but if I found it was going to work any inconvenience affecting the poor, I would be sorry to advocate it.

27846. If it were shown you, and you were satisfied that it would be an economy, and if no hardship would result, or not much hardship would result, would you then approve of it?—Yes.

27847. We have had four or five cases in which unions have been broken up and the people had to go

Sept. 25, 1905.

Mr. William
McDonald.

long distances, but we have not heard of any migration from these places that the Poor Law was practically imperative, or that the aged and infirm would not go near the workhouse?—Our union is on the seaboard.

27643. One of the unions dissolved was altogether along the sea—Newport?—It is a long distance from Carl, and a long distance from Bandon.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—We don't suggest any particular places; we are simply pointing out the lines of a change that some think might be beneficial.

27644. CHAIRMAN.—And in these suggestions there is nothing of amalgamation. It is not proposed that the men should be amalgamated, but that the different classes, aged and infirm, children, mothers of illegitimate children, and lunatics, these several classes should be taken out of the present common pathway workhouse and put into separate institutions, which could be maintained according to all reasonable calculations at a lower cost per head than when you have all the same class of people collected into one institution. Fewer officers could manage these than the number that heretofore managed them in isolated workhouses?—But I don't see that we are going to get rid of any of the officers except the master and matron.

27645. That is a great deal; you seem to have very few officers. In most workhouses there is a male and female attendant for inmates?—We have not any lunatics; we were not able even to give our full allowance to Youghal; we had only two.

27646. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But the main object is to better the condition of the deserving by removing from their neighbourhood the other classes that are objectionable, in the hope that the change will lessen the number of paupers in the future, because some people say if the children were separated from the workhouse in time the feeling that is at present amongst certain classes of children that have been reared there would die out, and in that way the number would become less?—I am altogether in favour of the boarding out of children. I have advocated it and supported it and made every effort I could to induce the authorities and those representing the districts to adopt it. I have some of these children living near myself, and they are going on remarkably well—going to school.

27647. The number you have at present boarded out is about eight?—We have a very small number of children altogether. It is only recently we boarded out any, and it was under considerable difficulties we boarded them out, but the results are most satisfactory.

Mr. J. P. MEHEW, F.R.C., Kinsale, examined.

I heard your questions to Mr. McDonald about getting rid of the master and matron, but where would the able-bodied go then? You said the aged and infirm were to go to an institution away from the union in which they are at present; then there are able-bodied people coming, especially from the town of Kinsale.

27648. CHAIRMAN.—What class are they?—They are fishermen and men out of employment; these men have no other way of earning their living, and they come in for a week, waiting for a season until they can go fishing again.

27649. These fishermen do come into the workhouse periodically?—Yes.

27650. Is that owing to want of thrift?—It may be. If these fishermen come into the union there should be a person in authority over them; their families also may come into the union.

27651. I think I will have to get from your clerk or master some further particulars about these cases, showing the actual numbers?—The numbers may be few.

27652. And how often they come in?—And then there is another class also that come in there, that is the tramp class, for a night, and go away in the morning.

Mr. R. BRYCE JONES, J.P., D.L., examined.

27653. CHAIRMAN.—You are a ratepayer of the County Union?—Yes.

27654. What evidence do you wish to give?—Simply that I was deputed as one of the Board of Guardians to come; I have no special point to make.

27655. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a member of the Committee of the Sanatorium?—No.

27656. Have you formed any opinion on the subject?—I have not paid any attention to it, but I know it would be very desirable there should be provision made for such cases. I advocated it myself, and supported it in every way at Kinsale when we made a contribution. I have known cases of consumption, where parents and children became affected, and they were on the rate. There was one family in particular where the father and mother died early of consumption; the children were left there, they were in my division, and I had to look after them and see that they went to school, but owing to the parents having died young, the children were healthy enough and have escaped the contagion.

27657. Dr. BRIGGS. You say you have no lunatics at all in Kinsale?—Only two; there were only two or three cases taken from Kinsale to Youghal.

27658. You mentioned something about an imbecile child?—I don't know where it came from; it was at Youghal I saw it.

27659. You would approve of having an institution for imbecile children?—We send some to Dublin. I knew there was an application at the last Board to have some child sent off to some institution.

27660. Have many of your lunatics been taken to the Auxiliary Asylum at Youghal from the workhouse?—Two or three—that is all we had. We were entitled to have more sent on account of our valuation.

27661. You did not object to more going from any other union?—No, as long as the house was able to accommodate all it was intended for.

27662. Is the Youghal Asylum for the whole of the county or only half?—The whole of the county.

27663. CHAIRMAN.—Are you on the Committee?—I am.

27664. Is there anything else you would like to say about the Auxiliary to-day?—Dr. Kelly will come tomorrow and will give all the statistics. The Auxiliary Asylum is getting on remarkably well, the place is well cared for, and the institution will keep, and there is great economy practised in regard to it; they are costing less there than anywhere else.

27665. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What is the average cost?—About £14 or £15. We haven't it long enough established yet to come at the exact cost.

27666. It has been suggested to me that a very good thing for these people would be if they won't work to get them into a labour institution when they would have to work for their upkeep?—These are tramps going from fair to fair, or workhouse to workhouse, and they earn some sort of a livelihood travelling along; work one day and idle the next.

27667. Would you be in favour of putting these people into some regular workhouse where they would have to work hard—go in under a magistrate's warrant. If they were on the road without being able to explain why they were loafing around that they should be put into one of these institutions?—But I am afraid it would have very little effect in restraining them.

27668. If they showed on the road again they would be looked up again?—Of course it would have some effect. If this class was abolished out of a town like Kinsale you would increase the outdoor relief.

27669. I am speaking of the tramps—you are speaking of the casuals—people who now and then get out of funds. That is a class as to which I would like to get some further information from your officials?—People come in owing to the uncertainty of the season.

present?—I was listening to the evidence just now; it seems to me a splendid idea, except from the sentimental point of view. The poor people who come in through no fault of their own would consider it a great hardship.

27876. As far as you are aware, are many of them buried in the workhouse?—Wherever it is possible their relations take them out; they have a very strong feeling on the matter. The idea is an excellent one from most points of view except that.

27877. We find that the visits paid to these people are very, very few; they are not visited by their relatives, and a great many of these people are old unmarried men and women who have nobody to look after them, but even these people would like to be buried in their own locality?—They like to feel they are in their own district.

27878. If these people received a definite right—if they chose to claim it—of burial back in their own district, from the central institution, supposing it was found that even after allowing for that it would be a great economy?—It would mitigate the hardship considerably.

27879. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—At present that question is largely one of degree, because the poor on the outskirts of the union have to go a great deal longer distance than the people that are near the houses?—That is so, of course, but take our union, Clonsilla; they all more or less think of it as the centre of their district, but on the question of economy, would you not have to keep up very nearly the same staff; how would you get over the casuals?

27880. CHAIRMAN.—The casual is the difficulty, that is a class which you have not in most of the workhouses. You may have it in a fishing centre?—You would have to provide for them, would you not though?

27881. You would have to provide for the casuals, but we are getting statistics which will show the extent of the casuals. It is the only class about which there would be any difficulty. The tramps would be easily dealt with in a labour institution, and lunatics, and women with illegitimate children, but the casual class is the difficulty, and the question is how far such a class could be, if they are bona fide hardworking people temporarily out of work, benefited by a relaxation in the giving of outdoor relief?—Anything that would lessen the tramp evil would be an excellent idea.

27882. The tramp has not much sympathy anywhere?—No; no one has sympathy for him.

27883. You heard the suggestion about taking children and their mothers out of the workhouses—I think that would be a very good thing.

27884. Putting the mothers in a penitentiary under religious influences, according to the religion of the girls—would you be in favour of that?—I should certainly.

27885. That would tend to guard against a second slip?—Yes, and it would also tend to bring up the children better.

27886. Have you had much experience of the boarding out of children?—We have only been doing it comparatively lately in Clonsilla, but it seems to have worked very well; with proper supervision it is very good.

27887. Have you a Ladies' Committee?—No.

27888. That is a good means of supervising it?—Very, I should think.

27889. The Clonsilla Board of Guardians would be against amalgamation in the ordinary sense of the word?—Distinctly.

27890. They would be against their union being broken up and put into Ebbeween partly or partly into Bandon and Duncannon?—They would not like it?—No; they would strongly dislike it.

27891. But does such a suggestion as we have received elsewhere, and has been mentioned to-day, seem to your mind open to the same objection?—Oh, no; I suppose if it was done for one it would be done for all.

27892. And you would still have a local body as the authority under the law—would you be in favour of that?—Subject to the financial results and the point of sentiment, I think it is a very excellent suggestion, but I am not absolutely convinced as to where the economy would come.

27893. The aged and infirm in the chief class—you would have one institution for a very large number, and a much fewer number of officials to take charge of those in a central institution than in all the others put together?—If you take such workhouses you would still have someone to look after the casuals.

27894. The way in which it would work would be that you would have nobody at all there except in the hospital, eliminating all the classes except the sick?—You would still want a master for the casuals.

27895. If once you had to keep up a workhouse for casuals the system would break down?—Quite the hospital the staff is very small; we would still have to keep the clerk of the Guardians.

27896. Yes, but of course he would be a very different officer with different duties to what he has at present—he would be a hospital clerk then and for outdoor relief?—Yes.

27897. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—He is now clerk of the District Council?—Yes, his duties there would remain the same.

27898. Such an officer would always be needed?—Yes.

27899. You say you don't see where any economy would come in under the score of boarding out children—a saving of £5 per head could be made because children can be boarded out for £8 or £10 a year. They cannot be kept in an institution under £15?—But we have very few children, and we board out a certain number as it is.

27900. CHAIRMAN.—And you don't pay your schoolmaster or mistress—they get rationed?—Yes, I think so.

27901. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You don't board very many in Clonsilla?—About thirteen?—Very few; it is only lately started.

27902. Then there is the cost of fuel for the main portion of the house—that and the cost of keeping it in repair would be saved?—Yes.

27903. That is a considerable amount; in Clonsilla it must cost £300 a year?—Yes, it is a big item.

27904. If that were cut down half, would not that be something?—They would want fuel at the central institution, but, being larger, of course there would be a certain amount of economy.

27905. But you would get more value out of the officers; they would have sufficient work to do. You would get from a man the value of his salary, whereas if you have not work for a man you have to keep him there, and the pay is the same?—That is true.

27906. CHAIRMAN.—Your Guardians are strongly opposed to closing up the hospital?—I think so.

27907. We have never received suggestions anywhere in favour of that. Everywhere it is taken for granted that the facilities for treating the sick would not be diminished, although they might be increased in some cases?—We are increasing them.

27908. Your Guardians point out the desirability of maintaining the fever wards?—Very much. We have outbreaks from time to time, especially in the season.

27909. Have you heard your Guardians discuss at all the boarding out of adults?—No, not when I have been present.

27910. They say here: "Boarding out of infirm inmates and children in the workhouse might be practised more extensively"—I don't remember the point being discussed.

27911. It would be rather open to possible abuse, the boarding out of adults?—Oh, yes.

27912. People with relatives would be anxious to get them boarded out?—Yes.

27913. Is there any question about the chargeability of relief it occurs to you to mention?—I certainly think it should be made a district charge instead of a whole union charge, the outdoor relief—electoral division I mean. The Guardians of the division would be much more careful as to who got relief and who did not. I think that would be the most important thing to do.

27914. And if the electoral division was considered rather small, as it is from a rational point of view, you would think it better to have, say a dispensary district than the union?—Certainly.

27915. You would have as small an area as possible?—Yes; I think perhaps the dispensary district would be the most workable plan; have each dispensary district rated separately for outdoor relief.

27915. As regards the people who get relief in your union, who come in casually, have you any personal knowledge of any of these families?—I don't want names?—I am not very near the sea myself; I am rather inland.

27917. You don't know any families who at slack times of fishing come into the workhouse?—No, I do not. I am four or five miles from the coast.

27918. I suppose they would be very largely about the towns of Clonsilla and Rosscarbery?—Yes, towards the Galley Head, along that district.

27919. Courtmacsherry is in your union?—Yes.

27920. It is one of the poorest parts of your union?—It is certainly very largely populated. Mr. O'Brien is here, and will be able to tell you all about that.

27921. Is there anything else you would like to mention?—I think not. What I wanted to say more than anything else was putting the charge for outdoor relief on a smaller scale.

Aug. 26, 1902.

Mr. R. Bence
Jones.

Mr. JOHN O'BRIEN, P.L.C., Clonsilla, examined.

CHAIRMAN.—I see by this resolution of the Clonsilla Board of Guardians that Mr. P. W. O'Donovan is to appear as their solicitor; I don't know whether he is here.

Mr. P. W. O'Donovan.—Yes, I am here; but I think my duties are practically nil. From the comprehensive questions you put, it is hardly necessary for me to say anything.

CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the lines we are taking?

Mr. O'Donovan.—I think you are taking the very lines I would have taken myself.

CHAIRMAN.—Would you wish to examine this witness?

Mr. O'Donovan.—I think not, sir. If you follow the course you have adopted already it would be better. If necessary, I can put questions.

27922. CHAIRMAN.—You live in the Courtmacsherry district?—Very close to it.

27923. Are there many fishermen there?—There are people who live by fishing and seafaring business. It is a congested district.

27924. Do many of these men in slack times get very badly off?—They do. In the winter if any of their families get sick they apply for outdoor relief, but they never go into the house.

27925. You don't know of any fishermen yourself who go into the house?—I have great experience, but know of none going in.

27926. Did you happen to be here this morning when Mr. McDonald, of Kinsale, was giving evidence?—He mentioned that he heard of cases of fishermen going into the house?—They might in Kinsale, but not in Clonsilla.

27927. Do you know of many people who go off and on for a week or two in slack times into the workhouse and out again?—No, I do not; none of the inhabitants.

27928. If, without breaking up the Clonsilla Union, we could develop some scheme by which the inmates could be grouped together, and by which your Guardians would pay so much a head for them in the central institution, would you be in favour of such a scheme?—I would not; I would be opposed to it.

27929. Why would you object to it?—In the first place I consider there would be no benefit derived from it, because the present officials should be compensated.

27930. That would be a life pension?—Yes. In the second place, the officials appointed should be paid; and I don't think during the lifetime of the present officials there would be anything gained by it. Besides, additional buildings may be required where the inmates would be sent to.

27931. Suppose you were to take as many of the officials as were of a working age and bring them from the institutions where they at present are, and put them into a central institution, and only pension those who are really past their work, or near it?—I think that could not be done for all unions; it may be done for one.

27932. Suppose six or eight unions joined together, and had a central home for the aged and infirm, you would then have six masters and six mistresses that you could use, if you wanted so many, but you would not want so many?—There should be some left out.

27933. The ones you would leave out would be the elderly people, who would be very glad to get their pensions, and retire, as they would in the ordinary course?—You would not have many of them. The great number are mostly young in Donemurry, Clonsilla, and Skibbereen.

27934. We have visited every workhouse in Ireland, and found very many old people among the officials?—In Donemurry, Clonsilla, and Skibbereen they are young people.

27935. You may take it for granted that there are old and young all the way round. What other objection would you have to this plan?—That the poor people themselves would have a very strong objection; they would not like to go; and then it would increase outdoor relief to a great extent.

27936. What class would it increase the outdoor in—the aged and infirm?—They should get outdoor relief when they are aged, and won't go to the workhouse. Of course, humanity requires that they should get it, and it is often liable to abuse.

27937. Would not all the people who are in the workhouse at Clonsilla at present—aged and infirm, everyone of those people—prefer outdoor relief, if they could get it?—They would not, in general; some of them would. But the question is this—they might not get lodgings outside, or proper accommodation; and I think the house would be better for them—they would be kept cleaner.

27938. I agree with you; but I am talking about what they would wish themselves?—Some may.

27939. A great many at present in the Clonsilla aged and infirm wards, if asked, would be very glad to go out on outdoor relief?—I don't think they would.

27940. Why would not those who would be outside in the future be just as willing to go to the central institution?—They get from their relatives and friends some assistance, and by the little assistance they get from the Guardians, they live outside, at their own liberty, and would not wish to be confined in a workhouse.

27941. That equally applies to the present class as well as to the future?—I think so.

27942. You did a number of people now in the workhouse—is not the reason why they are in the workhouse because they would not get outdoor relief?—I think not. They have not proper accommodation; they have not lodgings outside.

27943. Then, have you nobody in the workhouse except people who wish to come in?—No, of course.

27944. You have not obliged anybody to come in by saying, "We will give you the workhouse instead of outdoor relief"?—It may have been said to people who are not proper recipients of outdoor relief.

27945. Mr. MUNSTERMAN.—You think it would be a very great hardship if these people were asked to go a little further than they have to go at present?—I think it would be a hardship on them; because, the reason why—they wish to see their relatives, and would not wish to go there. I am certain they would have a great objection to go.

27946. As a rule, the aged have no visitors at all, only the sick; they almost are visited frequently; but the old people that are in the house for years have few visitors; that is the general experience. These changes would work this way—it would bring these people into the house, where they could be treated according to their needs and condition. They could be kept more comfortably, and could be separated from undesirable companions, and better accommodation provided without increased cost. Now, on the score of the benefit of that class, would not it be an advantage?—I am entirely of a different opinion.

27947. You don't think it would be better for these people to be by themselves, and treated in accordance with their wants, than have them, as they are, mixed up with other classes, and taking pot luck with the crowd?—If such a change should be made, it is the other classes should get a place of their own, and not the infirm poor. They should be left with their relatives, while if there is a bad class there, there should be a separate place made for them, into which they should be put.

Mr. John
O'Brien

Sept. 26, 1905.

Mr. John
O'Brien.

27948. CHAIRMAN.—Among the aged and infirm there are a great many people of inferior character—I would not say that of the Clonakilty Union. There may be some whose character was bad some years ago, but since the nurse came in they have been entirely reformed.

27949. In every workhouse there are some people that are troublesome and objectionable, and others that are not, and if you had a central institution you could put the troublesome people in one ward and the quiet, peaceable people in another ward—That may be; but it would be rather to increase the cost on the ratepayers than to decrease it.

27950. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Their position, in point of respectability, would be much improved, because they would be away from the workhouse, the name of which they dislike. As regards that, I think it would be very suitable that the hospital should be divided; and in case of any person of respectability coming in there, he should have a different ward from the others.

27951. You could not bring about a change of that kind without adding to the cost. What we are desirous of doing is to improve matters without adding to the cost—I fail to see where the improvement would come in.

27952. These people, kept in bulk, could be kept much cheaper than they are now, in small numbers, just as everything in life can be done much cheaper on a large scale than on a small scale. They could be kept, perhaps, for £2 a head cheaper in an institution, where they would be by themselves; not only that, but they could be treated much better, in accordance with their interests. The cost of provisions is the same in every place.

27953. The cost of provisions in a single house is, proportionately, much more than in a big place, where things are bought wholesale. They could be kept £2 a head cheaper on the score of economy, but on the score of improvement to themselves it would be a great advantage to these poor people to be by themselves, where they would not be liable to association with undesirable acquaintances. Cork is a very large institution, and I don't see the price of provisions cheaper there than in Clonakilty, Kinsale, or Brandon.

27954. I don't separate one place from another, but an article can be bought cheaper on a large scale than in districts—I don't see that.

27955. CHAIRMAN.—It would cost you more to give ten men their dinner at so much per head than to give twenty men their dinner at so much a head?—You may get a hotel to give 150 people their dinner cheaper per head than they would give it to one man.

27956. Mr. O'Donnell.—Do you know the average cost of the keep of an inmate in Clonakilty Union as compared with Cork Union? Clonakilty is only 3s. 4d. and Cork 3s. 10d.—That bears out what I say.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—There may be an explanation for that. I would like to point out that in the Cork Workhouse half the inmates are in the infirmary.

Mr. O'Donnell.—The same applies to the Clonakilty Union—the same proportion.

CHAIRMAN.—These figures about the average cost of maintenance are not very valuable from this point of view—that they only take in food and clothing; they don't take in all the expenses, as in the lunatic asylum figures. The lunatic asylum cost of an inmate is the correct basis. There you take every penny spent, and divide that by the number of inmates. That cost of clothing and maintenance is open to any amount of juggling, and changes without juggling.

27957. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—We don't make any charge against the Clonakilty Union, that it is not managed economically, because it is. The rate per £ shows it is managed fairly economically, but what we are trying to do is to get at some method of reforming the system in such a way as that the classes would be benefited, and the ratepayers would have a gain; and, of course, our remarks apply generally and not particularly at all—I understand that perfectly.

27958. Are you still of opinion that it would not be a proper thing to put these classes by themselves?—I don't say that; but I say there would be no economy in the rates by doing it.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—In the cost of firing alone, you would save £200 or £150 a year, and in the saving that would come about in the master's and matron's salary there would be a considerable reduction.

27959. CHAIRMAN.—Take the lighting and firing. You have six or eight stoves, costing so much a year for lighting and firing; a great deal less than the cost of the six or eight would warm and light the inmates, when they were all in the one house?—There may be a little saving there, but they should have additional fire for additional people.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—There would not be so much space to be heated in one institution as in six or eight, so that you would be bound to save.

Mr. O'Donnell.—I assume, gentlemen, the present institutions would all be kept going still.

CHAIRMAN.—No; portion of them would be closed.

Mr. O'Donnell.—I assume when they are closed there would be a saving.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—They might be utilized for other useful purposes.

CHAIRMAN.—The suggestions we have received in different places are that it would be possible to close the able-bodied side of the house, keep the hospital for the sick, and put the other inmates into separate institutions.

Mr. O'Donnell.—If the able-bodied portion of the Clonakilty Union were removed, then they require additional accommodation for the aged and infirm.

27960. CHAIRMAN.—The healthy and the sick are the two classes—There are hardly any able-bodied in the Clonakilty Union.

27961. They are classed healthy if they are not on the doctor's books. What is your opinion about the expediency of outdoor relief?—At times it runs up high.

27962. Would you make it a union charge or have it on a smaller division?—I would make it a electoral division rating. I have long experience of the union, over thirty years; the Guardians would be by far more careful.

27963. Do you think they are not as careful when they have the union-at-large area as they used to be when they had the electoral division?—I really think they are not so careful, although they scrutinize the accounts very often. They have not the thorough knowledge of the whole union, as they have of their own electoral division.

27964. And without that knowledge you think they cannot make as good decisions?—I am certain.

27965. You think people get on sometimes owing to want of knowledge on the part of the Guardians?—I think they do get on.

27966. That would not get on if it were an electoral charge?—Yes.

27967. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have you tried boarding out in your union?—Yes, we have some boarded out.

27968. Is it of late you have been adopting it?—Yes.

27969. Do you find any difficulty in getting houses for the children?—No, not at present.

27970. Do you find it works satisfactorily?—I think it will, after a bit. When you bring the children out into the country they get more into the habits of the people. When they have relatives, they generally take the children, and bring them up in their own homes.

27971. Would you like to see as many children boarded out as possible?—I would; though, from my experience of Clonakilty Union, I have not known many of the children reared in the homes previously to return; very few. There is one thing I would wish to bring under your notice. We have in the union a great many of the labourers' cottages. At present, if the cottager falls sick, he cannot get any relief, though he is the bread-winner of the family. While the rest of the family would get relief, he cannot. I think the quarter-acre classes should be repealed.

27972. CHAIRMAN.—Would you substitute any limit for the quarter-acre?—I would say one acre at least; and receiving relief in sickness should not be a bar to the exercise of the franchise.

27973. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have you many hermits in the house?—No, only one hermit; a girl of twelve years.

27974. You would like them all removed from the workhouse?—I would, of course; it would be a proper thing to do, if there was accommodation for them.

27975. Don't you think the epileptic should be in a place where they could be better cared for?—They should be looked after.

27976. What special looking after does that girl get?—There is generally one of the attendants looking after her.

27977. CHAIRMAN.—Is she in the lunatic ward or the healthy ward?—She is in the lunatic ward, I think. Sept. 25, 1905.
Mr. John O'Brien.

27978. Dr. BIGGER.—Do you mean an inmate is looking after her?—Yes, one of the inmates.

Mr. JAMES O'BRIEN, c.p., Chairman, Clonakilty Union, examined.

27979. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Board of Guardians?—Yes.

27980. You have heard the evidence of your two colleagues—Is there anything you wish to say in addition to what they have said?—Not a great deal. I fully endorse the opinions of Mr. Bennet Jones and Mr. O'Brien with regard to the chargeability of outdoor relief.

27981. You would rather have it divisional rating than union-at-large?—Quite so. Union-at-large rating is very much abused by Guardians; when the cost is distributed over the whole area, some Guardians, naturally, are more liberal than if it was a divisional rating.

27982. Mr. MURKIN.—Would not the Guardians representing the towns object to that change?—Certainly.

Mr. O'Donnell.—Mr. O'Brien is a Glen Guardian himself.

Witness.—Occasionally householders, I think, should be a charge to the union-at-large. There should be some term of habitation; four or five years' residence, to entitle them to be a charge to the town of Clonakilty. These poorer people, who take a house for a week or three weeks or a month, to get outdoor relief, I don't think they should be charged to the town of Clonakilty.

27983. CHAIRMAN.—Such people as that would be best eligible for any relief at all?—They occasionally get it.

27984. Do you think there would be much hardship in having a central institution for the aged and infirm—not breaking up the union, but simply housing out your aged and infirm inmates?—I don't think that would work at all; I think it would lead to abuse.

27985. Where do you think the abuse would come in?—The money that might be given for their maintenance would be spent in other ways.

27986. I am not speaking of housing them out in the country, but in a central institution. Suppose, for instance, the able-bodied part of the Clonakilty house were to be devoted to receiving the aged and infirm from the surrounding unions, you would have them all there, and would charge so much a head for every person who came from another union, so that five or six workhouses could be closed and only one remain open, as regards the healthy, but the sick would remain open?—I think that would inflict great hardship on the friends and relatives of these poor people, sent a long distance from their homes.

27987. Are you under the impression that these people often receive visits when they are in the aged and infirm ward?—I am.

27988. Have you ever asked for particulars in your workhouse on that point, because we were rather under that impression when we started; but as we went along we made inquiries, and we found that, relatively, a very small number of visits were paid to the aged and infirm, and that only when they came in first; most of the visits are paid to the sick?—I have personal knowledge that there are often visits to the sick.

27989. The aged and infirm?—I cannot say that.

27990. We supposed they would have received visits, but in a great many places they hardly receive any visits. The aged and infirm are so often unaccompanied people, without anyone belonging to them.

27991. Mr. MURKIN.—If these different classes could be kept apart, better treatment could be given to them?—I think it would be very desirable.

27992. CHAIRMAN.—In another workhouse?—No, in the same workhouse.

27993. Mr. MURKIN.—You could not keep the six or seven classes apart in the one workhouse, because there is not room, and you would require additional officers, and that would increase the rates?—We are adding to Clonakilty Workhouse from time to time to give accommodation.

27994. If some method of selection could be adopted, so as to put the classes by themselves, retaining only the hospital for the sick, don't you think it would be an improvement?—I do; but I would not approve of removing the hospital at all.

27995. Dr. BIGGER.—Are you a member of the Sanatorium Committee?—No.

27996. Have you taken any interest in it?—I occasionally read the reports of the committee. With regard to the sanatoria, we have very few in Clonakilty at all.

27997. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. O'Brien, who preceded you, stated that he really knew of no casual poor, only the tramps?—That is all; for the reason that, to my mind, there is ample employment for any man in Clonakilty who is able and willing to work. We sometimes find there are some of these able, but not willing.

27998. What do these men do—they don't go to the workhouse?—No.

27999. I think in comparatively few rural unions do you meet that class?—With regard to the professional tramps, there should be some legislation to deal with them.

28000. Would you approve of putting these men into the workhouse and detaining them there under a magistrate's warrant, and trying to get them into habits of industry?—Quite so.

28001. The country has to support them at present, and it has been suggested to us that the best method would be—if they insist on the country supporting them—the best thing would be to make them work for their living?—I think they should contribute something to the State for their living. In some districts they are a menace and threat to farmers; they make them give them food under threats. I have been asked by some of my constituents to give evidence about the system of administering outdoor relief. I don't wish to mention names, but I think the practice is objectionable where the relieving officer gives money for relief in his own house, if he is a shop-keeper.

28002. That would be against the law?—The practice is very objectionable.

28003. He would render himself liable to dismissal if he did so?—That would be an extreme course to adopt.

28004. Mr. MURKIN.—There is a middle course for him—quit doing it, and quit it at once?—Some people say they think if they don't take the goods sold in the shop they believe the relief will be stopped.

CHAIRMAN.—If people submit to be bullied, of course, they will be; but it is in the power of the Guardians, who know what is going on, to stop it very easily. One word is enough to the man who does it—to tell him he must stop it or go. You have full power.

Mr. O'Donnell.—There is one other witness—Mr. Hurley, Master of the Union.

Mr. DANIEL HURLEY, Master, Clonakilty Workhouse, examined.

CHAIRMAN.—We don't, as a rule, ask the Master to give evidence, so you had better examine him yourself.

Mr. O'Donnell.—It is something on the same lines as the questions you put to the other witnesses. He would be in a better position to reply about the question of the going to the district by transferring the inmates to a central institution. Would you put the question, Sir?

28005. CHAIRMAN.—I would be inclined to put the question this way: If you were offered a big workhouse, with double the salary for looking after six times the number of inmates, do you think it would be a good plan?—I would naturally take it.

Murphy.

Mr. O'Donovan.—Would you put the question in the way you did to the others?

CHAIRMAN.—I think not; I would rather anticipate the answer.

28002. Mr. O'Donovan.—Would you give a general idea, for instance, on the vagrancy question—would you make any suggestion?—I am of opinion that if the police enforced the Vagrancy Act that a good many of these tramps would disappear.

28003. CHAIRMAN.—What do you think would happen if the police enforced the law, and brought them up before the Bench; you would find a difficulty, would you not, under the existing law, of proving that they were vagrants within the meaning of the Act, that they had received relief from other workhouses?—It is not necessary to prove that they had received relief from other workhouses; they could convict them for begging under the Vagrancy Act.

28008. It is difficult to get evidence of begging very often?—I have seen them several times begging through the town. After getting the relieving officer's ticket they would beg round until the closing hour at the workhouse, drinking the proceeds.

28009. Would they people they beg from come forward and give evidence?—I am afraid they would not.

Mr. O'Donovan.—If they were summoned as witnesses I think they would. It is a crying shame in the country districts.

28010. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it would be any hardship to any respectable person if the class of men who are going round were taken up by the police, if they had no satisfactory explanation to give of their position, where they came from, or what they did; do you think it would be any harm to put them into a workhouse, set apart for the purpose, and there obliged to work, not for a day or two, but, say, on a few years' committal, and allow them out if they were working satisfactorily—do you see any objection to that?—None.

28011. Do you think it would hit any respectable people?—It would not; those who were anxious to work; but the tramp class will not work, even if they get it.

28012. Mr. O'Donovan.—Take, for instance, the Clonakilty Union. If the aged and infirm and sick were kept in the union at the present time, and send away the able-bodied and children it would give you more room; you could make improvements, and classify the infirm. Some are very respectable poor, who sometimes feel having to mix up with undesirables; if you had more accommodation you could provide for that class?

CHAIRMAN.—You mean you could do that in the workhouse as it is at present?—If we got rid of the able-bodied class.

28013. I suppose you have no able-bodied men?—Very few.

28014. Have you any at all?—They would not amount to half a dozen at present.

28015. That would not relieve you much?—But they occupy a great portion of room—there are a certain number of wards appropriated to them.

28016. Mr. O'Donovan.—Is there a good portion of the building set apart for them?—Yes; for both men and women, and could be utilised for the infirm class.

28017. Mr. MURKIN.—While your suggestion might give a little more room, it would, in other ways, do little good, and instead of lessening the cost is likely to add to the rates without remedying the things we all wish improved?—At present our Board of Guardians are taking into consideration the question of enlarging the fever hospital. Supposing one of these buildings was vacated by removing the children you could turn that into a fever hospital, and possibly £1,000 might be spent in enlarging the fever hospital.

28018. That would not be necessary if the charges continued were carried out?—The fever hospital at present is too small; it is a small detached building in the workhouse grounds.

28019. CHAIRMAN.—What about the one on the hill? There is no water supply, and the town supply does not go up so high.

28020. Mr. O'Donovan.—It has practically gone in to ruin?—Yes, the inside has.

28021. Mr. MURKIN.—But you, as master, must know that under present conditions it is impossible to carry on the workhouse management as it ought to be done with so many classes together?—Yes.

28022. Have you any change that you would suggest that would not mean additional cost to the rates?—I think it could not be done without additional cost.

28023. But in the way that has been suggested here it can be done, because the calculation is that there will be a considerable saving.

Mr. O'Donovan.—How would the saving come in? Mr. MURKIN.—By the reduction in the cost of the staff. The expenses in connection with the general body of the workhouse which is very large, will cease. Then it is estimated that when a number of people are put together they can be kept per capita at a low rate than where there are only a few.

Mr. O'Donovan.—What officials could be dispensed with?

Mr. MURKIN.—Most of the officials doing duty in the main building of the workhouse.

Witness.—There is only the master, the matron, the porter and two teachers in the extreme portion of the house.

28024. CHAIRMAN.—No wardens?—There are in the hospital wards, not in the healthy wards.

28025. Mr. O'Donovan.—Should there not be some official to take charge of the clothes in lieu of the present matron?—If the matron is dispensed with you must have a scamp or storekeeper over the stores, then you would want a porter always at the gate.

28026. You can dispense with officers under one name, but you will have to re-employ them under another name and in just as costly a manner?—I think some persons will have to be employed in their stead.

28027. Mr. MURKIN.—You would only require persons in connection with the hospital—a clerk of course, would be necessary as clerk of the District Council?—There are stores coming in for use.

28028. All you would want is the staff of an ordinary hospital?—The hospital at present is not sufficient in size for the one district. If you take away the workhouse with the stores in it you must appropriate some other building for the purpose of clothing stores and provision stores.

28029. It would not be hard to take over plenty of space if the house proper was vacated, but you would not need any staff more than the staff of an ordinary hospital?—You would want someone to keep the accounts—your names will not keep the accounts under the present Poor Law system.

Mr. O'Donovan.—See after the repairs of the building and the upkeep.

CHAIRMAN.—These difficulties are not met with in the case of ordinary county hospitals or infirmaries.

Witness.—They don't keep the dirt in such a way as they do in workhouses.

CHAIRMAN.—I don't see the use of keeping it.

Mr. R. CLEGG, J.P., Bandon, examined.

Mr. R. Clegg,

28032. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Bandon Union?—I am not now, but I was a Guardian for more than twenty-five years.

28033. You are familiar with the questions discussed here?—Very familiar.

28032. Have you considered the question of amalgamation in the last instance?—I have.

28033. Is your opinion hostile to amalgamation in the strict sense of the term?—I am in favour of amalgamation as a principle, but I think it may be carried too far; I have gone into the circumstances of the workhouses in the county pretty closely.

28034. You have Clonakilty, Dunsmore, Mallow and Kinsale bounding you?—Quite so, and I don't think out of the seven or eight it would be prudent to suppress more than about five.

28035. That would be amalgamating pure and simple, breaking up unions and dividing them among adjoining unions—what is your view as regards the five unions that might be dispensed with?—That is rather a delicate question, but Bandon is not one of

Sept. 26, 1906.
Mr. R. C. Clegg.

them. I may say that I have gone into the matter pretty closely, and on the basis of area I find that the proportion of workhouses in the County Cork is much in excess of what it is in all Ireland.

28036. Did you take statute acres?—Statute acres; I find for example that in Armagh there are but two Poor Law Unions with an area of 313,000 acres, or an average of 156,500 to each. I find that in Fermanagh there are three Poor Law Unions with an average of 417,000, or an average of 139,000 to each. I find that in Carlow there is only one Poor Law Union.

28037. Of course you know a good deal of these counties are situated in other unions?—Quite so. In Queen's County there are two with 424,000 acres, 212,000 in each. In Kerry, to come nearer home, there are six Poor Law Unions, with an average of 1,139,000, or, in other words, an average of 190,200. In Limerick there are five with a total acreage of 682,000, an average of 136,400. In Galway the acreage is 1,502,000, the average is 130,200, whereas in Cork, where there are seventeen Poor Law Unions, the acreage is 1,820,000, an average of 107,000. So that, as I say, the proportion in Cork is considerably in excess of what it is in Ireland as a whole; the average in Ireland would be 123,700. That would mean for Cork about fifteen workhouses, or, on the other hand, that the number is in excess of the average all over Ireland, and, therefore, I consider the number for Cork might be reduced to about twelve or thirteen.

28038. You did not enter into the question of waste land or profitable land?—No.

28039. That would make a considerable difference, but you think about five would be the utmost that should be closed?—I do; of course I should be totally against the closing of the hospital in connection with any workhouse, or, rather, I should be in favour as far as possible of converting the workhouse hospital into a district hospital.

28040. Then you don't recommend in any instance amalgamation pure and simple, because amalgamation pure and simple, as it has been carried out up to the present means closing up the entire building?—No, sir; I think it would be a most indigestible thing to close any hospital.

28041. In Donaghmore, in the Queen's County, which was closed, nothing was left open there?—I think it would be exceedingly injudicious and very inconvenient to the sick poor, who should be considered first, I think, in the case.

28042. Then you are not in favour of amalgamation as it is strictly understood of all?—Not if it includes the closing of the hospital.

28043. If you did then amalgamate those five unions, would you break up the governing body, or, if not, what would be the governing body of the hospital you would have behind?—Of course if converted into a district hospital it would be the committee appointed for the purpose.

28044. But that committee contemplates the existence of the Board of Guardians, because part of the provision is that the Guardians may at any time, on giving certain notice, reduce the district hospital?—The idea I had in my mind was that in case the workhouse, as a workhouse, were abolished, and the hospital remained, that there should be a meeting of the duties of the workhouse medical officer and of the local dispensary medical officer. In other words, I think if the dispensary in which the workhouse hospital were situated were too large, it should be reduced considerably and have an officer appointed for the dual work of the hospital and the reduced dispensary area.

28045. In other words you would put the local hospital under the dispensary doctor?—Practically, and the outlying portions of the old dispensary district would be, of course, apportioned among the medical men surrounding. I think myself there is rather a fallacy underlying the argument for large amalgamation, because I don't think the ultimate saving would be so much as is supposed by some.

28046. You know what the average rate all over Ireland is?—I do. I have made a little calculation which I would like to submit. I find that the total expenditure in connection with the Bandon Poor Law Union for the year ended 31st March, 1903, was £5,387 14s. 9d.; of that amount there was expenditure on outdoor relief, which, I take, would not be affected by an amalgamation of unions, and the breaking up of workhouses, £1,491 14s. 3d.; medical charities and dispensaries, £206 2s. 3d.; that would remain unaffected; miscellaneous expenses, as certain institutions, registration, repayment of loans, superannuation, all these would continue, £226, the cost of the hospital that I think should be retained, £335.

28047. Only that?—That was the amount for the year I speak of; I am speaking of the salaries; the maintenance of patients in the hospital about £750, so that in other words you have a total of £5,759 17s. 6d. that should remain, even if the unions were amalgamated and the workhouse abolished; that from £5,387 14s. 9d. would leave £1,327 17s. 3d.

28048. As a basis for economy?—As a basis for economy. Now this includes the maintenance of inmates, not in the hospital, say, £975 7s. 10d.; the salaries of all the officers, except in the hospital, with retires, say £262, and miscellaneous expenses, say, £250 9s. 5d., making altogether, £1,327 17s. 3d.

28049. Those are all strictly union charges?—Yes. Now the others not needed if a workhouse were closed would be, as I take it, the master, who in the Bandon Workhouse receives £60 a year, the matron £35 a year, the porter £20 a year; there is one schoolmistress now—there were two—and her salary £25, and possibly the two chaplains.

28050. I think you would want the chaplains to look after the sick?—If they were not needed, £75, in all £225. Taylor and shoemaker £20 and the ratons of the indoor officers, say, £20; that would be £225 in round numbers.

28051. Mr. MEAGHAM.—You put the ratons very low?—The officers concerned, of course, are the master, the matron, and the porter.

28052. CHAIRMAN.—I think you are too low for the ratons?—Still we say £100.

28053. It does not affect the principle?—A portion of what I mentioned is recouped. The whole of the schoolmistress's salary is recouped, and under the Statutes Act the grant is calculated according to the number of officers and their salaries.

28054. It was calculated on a certain year?—It is about half, so that I take it there would not be a saving, a net saving, by the reduction of the establishment of more than about £200 or £250 a year.

28055. Did you take in the firing and light?—No, I did not; that is a material difference of course; but even £400 a year is not much more than a penny in the £ on the valuation of the Bandon Union, so that there is not such a very large question involved, I think, in amalgamation, as to reduction of the expenditure.

CHAIRMAN.—I wish the calculations were as simple as those you have read out, unfortunately they are more complicated than that; it would hardly do for us to take them on that basis.

28056. Mr. MEAGHAM.—Still with all, I think your calculation is a very fair sample of the ordinary workhouse?—I take it that Bandon is about a fair average union.

28057. I quite recognise that you have gone into the thing closely, but there cannot be a very big saving because the poor law system as worked fairly economically—it is in the District Council administration that the expense is high?—Out of the total expenditure there might be a saving of about £200.

28058. CHAIRMAN.—I must say I think your estimate is not correct as regards the £200, but, taking it on a rough basis, the calculations are on the right lines; there are, however, a great many things to be considered that have not been touched on here?—You refer to classification probably.

28059. I am not going into our calculations at present, but I am very glad to receive yours?—Perhaps I may mention at this stage that our union is a fairly average one and economically worked.

28060. I think it is very economically worked; all I want merely to say is that I should not assent to the calculations you have read as being such a calculation as we would produce?—I find the number of inmates in the body of the house is 103, in the hospital 51; that the average cost in the house is 2s. 5d., and in the hospital 6s. 6d., and that the clothing is about 5s. or 6s. In the Bandon Union I find—I may say that I have not assent to the annual report of the Local Government Board for last year—but I find in 1903, the percentage, the amount expended on the relief of the poor in the Bandon Union was 1s. 2d., which I think, is moderate out of the total expenditure of 1s. 6d. I find that for the same year the expenditure on relief of the poor for Munster was an average of 1s. 8d., and the total expenditure 2s. 1d., and that for all Ireland the

Sept. 26, 1905.
Mr. R. CHASE.

expenditure on the relief of the poor for that year was 1s. 3d., and the total expenditure is 6s. 4d., so you will see Brandon is below the average.

CHAIRMAN.—That is incontestable.

28061. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Your valuation is fairly high, and the number of inmates not very large?—The valuation is fairly high.

28062. £75,000, and the number of inmates 150?—154 at present.

28063. Chairman.—The largest number would be 172?—About that.

28064. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—That, of course, affects the poundage considerably?—In reference to the classification I may say that I am strongly, and have been for a long time strongly, in favour of a re-classification of the workhouse, and I think it might be effected in this way. At present there is only one class, practically one class in the body of the house; the result is to my mind a very great injustice to the deserving poor. Those that have lived honourably and respectably are compelled frequently to seek the shelter of the workhouse through no fault of their own in their declining age, and they are obliged to consort in the workhouse with people whose character may be indifferent, if not worse. Therefore, I think it is a crying evil and calls very loudly for amendment. I think it might be accomplished in this way, because personally I am rather opposed to the suggestion that has been made by Mr. Murtaghan, to remove the infirm, including the respectable infirm, to a central institution. I think there is a very strong sentimental objection to that, the people of the locality in their declining years like to live in that place, to die there and to be buried there, and I think anything that would interfere with that very proper feeling is to be avoided. But I think the class might be re-divided into three sections. In the first place I would place the respectable and industrious poor over a certain age, say sixty for men and women who, as I say, have been compelled through force of circumstances to seek the refuge of the workhouse. In that class I would also place widows who have been left without provision, wives who have been deserted by their husbands, through no fault to be ascribed of the wife's own, and those who were incapable of work; in all cases the character should be excellent; it should be strictly inquired into.

28065. CHAIRMAN.—On what basis would you inquire on what lines?—To be inquired into by, of course, a local committee, and there should be in each case a certificate of character from a clergyman.

28066. What would be the symptoms or facts on which you would include a person to be a person of bad character?—I think in a case of that kind the clergyman of the church to which the person belonged could form a very excellent idea.

28067. They might not be what you would call very good parishioners?—Well, I think the police possibly might have some information to give on the subject.

28068. That is what I want to come at—whether you are going on notoriety as regards character?—Very frequently notoriety judges character correctly.

28069. What would you consider bad-charactered people—of course any person of immoral habits, that is obvious; what other reason?—I would take drunkenness as immorality, and I certainly would take it that anyone who in the prime of life drifted into the workhouse whom work could be had outside was a man of questionable character.

28070. Would you say that a person of quarrelsome habits and abusive tongue was a person of bad character?—Not exactly, but I certainly think they ought to be excluded from the first class I speak of.

28071. They would be the greatest nuisance in the house—a person of immoral antecedents and drunken habits would be comparatively harmless in a house compared to a tirage or quarrelsome?—That is very often the case.

28072. Really what you would want would be to get a person of chubbable habits, a pleasant person to live with?—That is the idea. I would appropriate the best part of the house—what is at present used in the Brandon Workhouse as a hospital—for the reception of those people. I should be disposed to divide the wards into cubicles, and allow two, say, to live together at the men's side of the house, two decent men, and at the women's side two decent women.

28073. And old married couples?—Quite so, and I should give those special privileges, give them better food, allow them to wear their own clothes, or at all events comfortable clothes, not stamped with the workhouse mark. I would give those belonging to the class considerable privileges; in other words make their life more like what it would be in an almshouse; in fact they would be pensioners, as it were, on the public and not paupers, and in that way very greatly improve the condition of the best class of inmates in the house. Then the second class would, of course, consist of those who were neither very good nor very bad, the average inmates of the workhouse. I should allow their condition to remain pretty much as it is at present. The third class should be for those who were vicious loafers, and altogether the undesirable in the workhouse. I would make the discipline in their case very much more severe than it is at present, and I would make their food less attractive.

28074. Are you speaking of the aged and infirm?—No, I am speaking of the inmates as a class.

28075. That is mainly the aged and infirm—they are nearly 40 per cent. of the whole number?—The best of those would form the first class.

28076. You may take it that the sick would be about as large a body?—I don't call them sick; the hospital would be removed altogether. The second class would include practically the bulk of the inmates, and the third class would include those of inferior character, the undesirable, as I say; I would make their condition less pleasant than it is, because I think some drift into the workhouse because they can get better food than outside without working for it. In fact I would make life undesirable for them in the workhouse; I would make them the brewers of wood and drawers of water for the establishment, and what would be saved in the cost of their maintenance would go very considerably to meet the increase in the cost of maintenance of Class No. 1.

28077. Then the people of these several classes would be liable to be shifted from one to another according to conduct?—On promotion or otherwise. If it were found that someone in Class 1 was disposed to be quarrelsome, giving trouble to the superintendent or their fellows, I should send that person down to Class 2. On the other hand I think it ought to be possible for one in Class 2 to be promoted, as it were, to Class 1, and get the superior advantages. But now I think it would be better for me to take a concrete case, and I find it in the Brandon Workhouse. I may tell you that the house was built to accommodate 908. The fever hospital, which is a separate building, a very excellent building, was built to accommodate 105, and there is an old hospital in the town, now used as a dispensary, which would hold about sixty. My idea is if there were, say, five of the workhouses of the county suppressed as workhouses, to convert one of these into an auxiliary lunatic asylum, or for the reception of imbeciles and epileptics. Some time ago Schull was suggested.

28078. It is a long way off?—Schull would be suitable for that purpose; it is at the extreme end of the West Riding. Another I should appropriate to the reception of women of a separate class with their children under a certain age; it would be a reformatory or penitentiary under religious influences. One or two of the others I should convert into a district school or schools, and to that I should transfer all the children at present in the workhouse schools, remove them altogether from the workhouse and from workhouse influences, and the fifth, if there were five suppressed, I should convert into a reformatory, or rather an asylum for tramps; that is to say, when a man was shown to be a confirmed tramp on clear evidence it would be in the power of the magistracy to commit that man to the asylum I speak of; there should be a considerable amount of land attached to that on which a man could work, and, if possible, he should be encouraged to work out his own salvation and return after a time to the world a reformed character. By removing the children and by removing women of a certain class from the Brandon Workhouse, there would be a considerable amount of space, that is now appropriated to those two classes at command. I should also remove the hospital, which is at present under the same roof as the workhouse, and convert the present fever hospital into a district hospital.

28079. That idea did occur to us when we were going round?—It would accommodate about 100. The present number is about sixty-four. So that, even if some of the adjoining unions were suppressed, and that portions of these unions were amalgamated with the Brandon Union we should still have ample space for a possible increase.

There are very few cases of fever in Brandon; it is singularly free from fever of all kinds, and as we have an old fever hospital, at a comparatively small outlay that might be converted to its original purpose of a fever hospital.

28060. Or at a small expense you could put up a cottage hospital in the grounds of the Brandon Union?—Yes.

28061. The fever hospital is an old building?—Seventy or eighty years old.

28062. Was it an old hospital?—No, got up by public contribution; it is not very far from the Roman Catholic National School.

28063. Are there any houses in the immediate neighbourhood?—Not very near.

28064. Is there a populous neighbourhood immediately round it—would you have an outlay at once if it was proposed to open an infectious hospital there?—I don't know that you would; it is not in as populous a centre as the Cook Fever Hospital.

28065. That is to be expected—it is a different matter when opening a place new?—If the hospital were removed from under the roof of the workhouse, if the separate class of women and children were removed to different institutions, we should have the whole workhouse practically for the purpose I speak of. The present hospital wards I should convert into cubicles for class No. 1. Class No. 2 would practically remain where they are now, and the two schoolrooms I think would be easily fitted up for the reception and discipline of the third class.

28066. Mr. MURKINMAN.—Would you not find it rather expensive to go into all that detail in a small workhouse?—I don't think it would.

28067. CHAIRMAN.—You contemplate others coming in from adjoining unions—I won't ask you to say what unions?—I do.

28068. Mr. MURKINMAN.—Why do you favour putting the children into one of the district workhouses instead of sending them out amongst the farmers of the country?—As a matter of fact we have adopted the boarding-out system very largely in Brandon; we were the first who introduced the practice.

28069. Do you find it satisfactory?—Very satisfactory.

28070. Would you not extend that a little more?—Of course there are only certain classes we can send out.

28071. But if the law was altered so as to allow you to send out any child that is a permanent burden on the rates?—I think for some reasons the central institutions might be better; I think it might be possible to send the children to learn useful trades.

28072. CHAIRMAN.—To keep tradespeople there to instruct them?—Quite so.

28073. Do you think it a wise thing to instruct the waifs and strays in trades that small employers could not hope to teach their children—do you not think it a putting them a little unduly up; would it not be better to make agricultural labourers of them in a country where labourers are specially needed?—Some have special aptitudes for trades.

28074. Then they would break into it when they get out. Do you think it is wise to spend money on teaching them trades?—There is the possibility of over-manufacturing the article. I understood the experiment had been very successful in other places, the system of a district school for a county. I think the present vice-president of the Local Government Board, Sir Henry Robinson, devised a scheme of the kind when he was Inspector.

28075. Yes; we have seen two of his schools, Glen and Trillick.—That was the reason I suggested it because I thought it successful in other places.

28076. Mr. MURKINMAN.—The evidence has not been altogether favourable to institutional life for children. The great bulk of evidence has been in favour of outdoor life.

28077. CHAIRMAN.—It is a great improvement on the workhouse?—Oh, yes; I am most strongly in favour of the boarding-out system, because I find very few of those who have been brought up in the country have drifted back to the workhouse.

28078. Mr. MURKINMAN.—Whereas with children reared in the workhouse?—It is almost inevitable that they come back.

28079. CHAIRMAN.—I would not go as far as that, but we do find too many cases coming back?—Too many cases.

28080. You speak of the justifiable feeling of old people wishing to live and die in places where they were reared—that would be your chief objection to any large centralising scheme?—That was my principal objection.

28101. Any scheme of amalgamation brings them further from home than they used to be?—Not very much, because in no case would the two unions amalgamate and form one.

28102. That has been done?—My idea is that if a union surrounded by three or four others were suppressed, certain divisions of it should go to each of the adjoining unions.

28103. But that, at all events, would increase the distance people would have to go, and would also take them out of the area with which they had been familiar?—It would to a limited extent.

28104. Even as it is, take a large union like Brandon. Some part of your union borders along Courtenessbury for Salway folk or cottiers living along the sea coast—do you think it would matter much to them whether they were taken to the Brandon Workhouse or, say, to Cook Workhouse; would they not be equally out of their district and surroundings and neighbourhood?—Of course they would to a certain limited extent, but the difference in the case of the unions I speak of surrounding Brandon is hardly more than four or five miles.

28105. I mean taking it apart from amalgamation—even as your own union under the existing system have not the people to be taken out of their own surroundings and neighbourhood and brought to a central institution, the workhouse, and are they not virtually cut off from their friends; how far would it be from the most extreme populous part of your union?—Of course that is the case.

28106. They are practically out of range for visits except in extreme cases of sickness?—I understand their friends do come to see them.

28107. From these remote places?—Of course from the towns—you can understand townspeople coming to see the sick. Have you ever ascertained the number of visits paid to those who are not sick?—No.

28108. We have made inquiries and find the number of visits to the aged and infirm, as distinguished from the sick, is very few; they are a very much neglected class as far as their own relatives go; a great many of them have practically no relatives; they are the last surviving members of their expiring generation?—That might be got over by a classification scheme; perhaps some people don't like going to the workhouse to see their proper friends, whereas if class No. 1 bore the name of pensioners—

28109. You think it would be rather a feather in their cap to go to see them?—They might go to see them. I may say that as to tramps it would be very desirable to make admission to the ward one by ticket issued by the police; either that or that the application in the first place be made at the police station, and after inquiry let the Constabulary authorities give an order to the relieving officer to admit.

28110. Put him under police supervision in the first instance?—Quite so, and I think if the police at the station formed the idea that the applicant was probably a confirmed tramp it should be within their power then to telegraph to the police station of the town where the tramp had passed the last night to ascertain whether the statements made by the man were correct or not.

28111. And to advise these ahead of him, perhaps, the way he was going?—Well, at all events they could tell where the tramp came from, and if his statement was incorrect, then it would be the duty of the policeman to bring that convicted tramp before the bench, or, rather, before a magistrate, not waiting for petty sessions day, and have him sent to jail, and then if a man were a confirmed tramp it would be in the power of the bench to commit him to a house of reformation.

28112. Do you not think it would be easier to make a final suggestion—you have made a primary one—if it could be proved straight off he was an incorrigible tramp and vagrant he should forthwith be sent off for his own good?—The mere fact that he had once passed from workhouse to workhouse would be hardly sufficient.

28113. It is not the fact of his applying for relief, but the fact that he is unable to show how he made his living?—Many people wander about the country who are compelled to do so.

28114. Quite so, and they could have a testimonial with them that could show if they were decent people in search of work, and the people who are tramp-round as habitual vagrants are very soon identified.

By establishing a system of inter-communication between the police.

28115. Would you be in favour of bringing these men before the bench and committing them to a place for a long term?—I should ultimately, but until a place is provided that cannot be done. It ought to be in the power of the police to prevent a conviction in a case of the kind. A good deal of my evidence is personal; I should not care to commit my former colleagues to everything I have said.

Mr. Daniel
Murphy.

28116. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Bandon
Board of Guardians?—Yes, a District Commissioner.

28117. We have had the advantage of hearing a very long statement from Mr. Clear?—Yes, he has gone so extensively into the statistics that I won't trouble you much.

28118. Was there anything else you would like to say—for instance the area of charge for outdoor relief?—I think that is very satisfactory.

28119. You like the union at large as it is?—Yes, very satisfactory.

28120. As regards amalgamation?—I am for amalgamation, and so is the whole board.

28121. Would you be in favour of the Bandon
Union being broken up or others outside broken up?—
Bandon is more central than any, because there are facilities for rail communication from the distant unions.

28122. What union would you like to bring into Bandon?—I would not like to mention them, but there are four.

28123. There is no doubt of the four unions you want to swallow Cork?—Bandon was built to accommodate 1,000, and the average for the year up to August last has been only 108; that makes only one-sixth of the union full, the remaining five-sixths being empty, and it is just as hard to keep up an empty establishment as a full one. Then the fever hospital is in a very healthy situation on a hill; I have heard the expressions of Mr. Clear about the houses; those are no houses; it is rather isolated.

28124. But the fever hospital where the dispensary is?—That is in the centre of the town; it would not do for an infectious hospital. Of course the up-loop of the establishment is very expensive when so much of it is idle.

28125. Mr. MURKIN.—The Guardians of other unions might object to throw in their lot with yours?
Certainly; they have a right to.

28126. CHAIRMAN.—You would not be afraid of raising your rates by getting expensive people in like the Clonakilty people?—The Clonakilty people are fairly careful.

28127. Mr. MURKIN.—Amalgamation puts and simple on a large scale would raise a good deal of opo-sition—it would mean a partnership of the unions amalgamated?—Nobody can say but we have too many unions.

28128. It would mix up the expenditure, and the money and the management of several unions together, and that is a very thorny topic which, I fear, would not meet with a very general assent?—It would not be hard to mark out the proper divisions and have it fairly divided.

28129. Then it would raise the other trouble—guardians would complain having to come fifty or sixty miles to look after the interest of their area, and then they would say the union of Bandon was getting every thing—their own way in the contracts and the money being spent in the locality, and they were getting nothing?—There is no doubt there are difficulties in the matter, but the law should be made so as to meet them.

28130. CHAIRMAN.—At all events what is in your mind is that unions have been amalgamated before now, and if any union should be amalgamated in your neighbourhood, you would have plenty of room for the inmates in the Bandon Workhouse?—We have.

28131. And a welcome?—I won't say that.

28132. You would be glad to have amalgamation—it would give you a larger area of charge and relation?—Certainly, but that would raise the rates.

28133. You would be afraid you might not see on it?—I am sure we would not in the Bandon Union, but the other unions may.

28134. Then you are against it?—I am not against it.

28135. Then why are you in favour of it?—Because of the expense of keeping up an empty house.

28136. You would have to pay more for keeping up a full house?—On account of the fire alone.

28137. Mr. MURKIN.—Another difficulty is it would lessen supervision. If you have a very wide area it is hard to look after the different parts, whereas if you have a small field it is easily ploughed?—The present representatives would hold their places.

28138. The whole spirit of the times is for decentralization and giving the people an opportunity of local control?—Not as regards Parliamentary affairs;
it is centralization.

28139. Mr. O'DONNAN.—Would it not be an advantage to bring portions of the Bandon Union down by the seaboard to Clonakilty?—I have no objection.

28140. And away from the factious spirit that exists in Bandon?—I don't see that there is any faction now,
I am not pointing at Clonakilty.

28141. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you approve of a system that would bring the different classes together and establish a better method of classification than at present?—It would be well to have a better classification.

28142. You would like to see the children boarded out?—No, I would prefer to see them in an industrial school; taken out of the workhouse and put into some industrial school where they could learn trades, or an agricultural institution with some land attached, which would be better.

28143. Do you not think they would do well enough if put among the farmers of the country learning the ways of life and natural existence instead of in harmful institutions?—It would be better for their health.

28144. And would it not be better for their morals and better for Ireland in the future?—It would be much better, but the agriculture they would learn would not be much. Some of the unions could be utilized for farming stations.

28145. CHAIRMAN.—Practical farming work Mr.
MURKIN means?—I agree with that, for their morals would be improved, removed from the corrupting surroundings of the union.

Mr. J. E.
Farrell.

28146. CHAIRMAN.—What is the opinion of the Youghal Board?—The opinion of the committee meeting was that they would be against amalgamation.

28147. They would not wish to break up the workhouse or union at Youghal?—They would not, or if it was broken up they would wish to have it turned into a large hospital or sanatorium for that portion of the county.

28148. You have one large institution there at present?—Yes, the auxiliary asylum.

28149. That is not nearly sufficient for all the inmates of the county?—Oh, I think not; it is full at present.

28150. And it is not nearly sufficient—would the Youghal people object to giving their workhouse, except a part for a sick hospital, to take in the rest of the inmates?—That I am not prepared to say.

Mr. J. E. FARRELL, P.R.G., Youghal, examined.

28151. What would be your own personal view?—They were willing to give it for some good purpose?—I dare-say they would; as far as I am concerned I would be.

28152. Have the males in one block and the females in another, and have all the inmates put under the auxiliary care?—Personally I would be for that; children and infants should be maintained outside the house, boarded out, that is the principle we go on—we have very few in the house.

28153. Would you wish to have your discretion enlarged so that you could board out every child of a suitable age?—Yes, that is the opinion of the Guardians; they seem to think that the children who are boarded out have not the tendency for coming back to the house.

28154. It has been stated to us that they are more useful and handy when trained in house work from their infancy?—Yes.

28155. And that the aged and infirm, especially old married people, should be allowed to live together in the workhouse or boarded out. Have you considered the question of boarding out elderly people?—They have; the only thing against it was that they had not leaving accommodation.

28156. Did it ever occur to you that a great many children would be trying to get their fathers and mothers boarded out with them, and you might fear an undue increase in the rates owing to the attempts to board out relatives?—Of course there is a tendency in that way at present for the outdoor relief class.

28157. The cost of boarding out would be more than that of outdoor relief?—Of course it would.

28158. And, therefore, you would expect a tendency on the part of the outdoor relief people to be boarded out?—It might have that tendency; there should be an amount of care taken about it.

28159. It may be cheaper to continue the present system?—Possibly. As for the general rating the Guardians are of opinion that they would wish to have a general union charge as at present. Their idea was, because the tendency is, generally speaking, for country people who attain the age of fifty or fifty-five to come to the town with their families. These old people become chargeable to the Youghal Union who only spend a few years in the town.

28160. You think the present system works very fairly?—Decidedly.

28161. There was a suggestion made to me some time ago that some regard should be had for that natural feeling on the part of the towns, say that the present state of things should be ascertained and a standard sum might be fixed for outdoor relief for each electoral division or district, and that anything in excess of that, be it in the town or be it in the country, should go on the electoral division; that is, let the present state of things be taken as the standard, and if you have any increase over and above that in the future, if there is any undue tendency towards outdoor relief; for instance, if it is found that the proper amount paid per week in Youghal would be £5 any fresh cases above the £5 would have to be paid for by the town of Youghal or the electoral division itself, whereas anything under £5 would be on the union at large?—That would work very well for the rural districts, but not for the town.

28162. You know how many people ought to be on outdoor relief now—you have got the list pretty well settled?—Undoubtedly.

28163. If anything in addition to that were put on the locality?—It should be charged as an extra on that division—I did not go into that.

28164. Do you apprehend any increase in outdoor relief?—The tendency is that way.

28165. Do you think it would be wise to adopt a safeguard to curb that tendency?—We use every safeguard possible, and there is not to my knowledge one single unscrupulous case of outdoor relief. We have excellent men as relieving officers who exercise very great care, and the guardians themselves from the district come in as a rule to be able to give us an idea of whether they are deserving or not.

28166. And the guardians as a rule are guided by the relieving officers. They don't put on cases without reference to the relieving officers?—They do now; they satisfy themselves as to the necessity. We find it is far easier to give these people outdoor relief than relief in the house at a considerable cost. With regard to the tramp question the Guardians are of opinion that that should be taken totally out of the hands of the relieving officer and put with the police. A deserving man really looking for work should have a passport, and that should take him from one town to another until work was found.

28167. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—To guard against respectable men being harassed?—Quite so, and to have these men sent to registered lodgings.

28168. You don't think there would be any hardship in taking stern measures with professional tramps?—Not at all; it is not alone the men themselves but their families are growing up in the same groove and with no education.

Mr. THOMAS FARRELL, P.R.O., Youghal, examined.

In the HAIR I have got to endorse what the previous witness has stated, and to say that I happen to be one of the minority of five who do not at all agree with this recommendation. Still I come up here to represent the Guardians, and whatever I state not in concurrence with this will be my individual opinion.

28169. CHAIRMAN.—That is the opinion of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, by eight to five.

28170. Was the chief point of difference the outdoor relief charge?—The chief point would be the amalgamation, I think. If the thing would be an improvement from the national standpoint we should not oppose amalgamation.

28171. If your buildings were turned to good use and filled in some desirable way, you, personally, would approve of it, but the majority of your colleagues preferred the present state of things to something they did not know what?—There you are; they don't like to grasp at the shadow; they want to keep the substance. My own view would be that we should go in for cottage hospitals and do away with workhouses, and that the aged and infirm should be allowed to live in these little cottage hospitals, overseen by, say, a religious community.

28172. The numbers of them would be very large for a small institution—there are 14,000 of them to be thought of in Ireland?—Aged and infirm married couples I referred to.

28173. They are very few?—They are very few, and I think that some plan could be formulated to enable them to end their lives at home.

28174. Would you propose giving destitute married couples outdoor relief?—Making them eligible in that way I would lodge them.

28175. Supposing you did not wish to go to the expense of that, but do it in a more cheap way, and make them eligible for outdoor relief?—I imagine it would be more economical to do as I say.

28176. To keep up a house?—No, but to lodge them with a person who had a house.

28177. Then the only people you would board out would be old married couples?—And children, none of whom I would allow enter the workhouse gates.

28178. As regards boarding out elderly people there would be an objection to that?—I think so—elderly single people. If you exclude the sick and infirm and the married people I think the remainder would be very small.

28179. Oh, it is large. Would you see any objection to putting the aged and infirm into a central institution under good management?—If it were economical.

28180. It is very desirably economical?—Yes, otherwise I would have them distributed in healthy situations and overseen by suitable people.

28181. You don't mean boarded out?—Oh, no; I would not go in for a very large institution because I think it demoralising.

28182. Take a large institution like your auxiliary asylum at Youghal?—Of course they require to be kept in large numbers in order to reduce expense.

28183. Would not the same principle apply as regards the aged and infirm—they are as large a class?—I have not considered that.

28184. That is the reason this Commission has been started, to try and save money, and one of the best chances of saving money would be in the aged and infirm?—As regards general rating, I imagine the present scheme of union at large is as good as any.

28185. You heard my question to your colleague as to whether he would think well of any safeguard so that future cases beyond a certain amount a week should become an electoral charge?—I think that would lead to divisional charges eventually.

28186. Supposing an electoral division was assessed at £1 or £5 a week, anything above that would fall on the division?—I imagine that would lead eventually to divisional rating—the other guardians would be availing of every opportunity to make the chargeability of the extra patients fall on this or that locality.

28187. They could only do that on the ground that this standard was exceeded?—I quite see that.

28189. Either they would qualify for the whole sum or insist upon reimbursement?—Yes.

28190. CHAIRMAN.—They are doing that at present—you take the amount for which they qualify at present as the normal amount, and everything above the normal would be made expenditure?—Certainly. Then on the tramp question, I am at one with the previous witnesses, that it should be put down by every means, especially for the sake of the rising generation, who go round the country demoralised and become useless to the community.

Sept. 26, 1895.

Mr. William
Madgett.

Mr. Bonayne, Clerk to No. 1 Rural District Council, is here, and if anything in the nature of official information would be desired he can give it.

CHAIRMAN.—We are going to ask the clerk of all the unions for statistics almost immediately. If there is anything Mr. Bonayne would like to say.

Mr. Bonayne.—No, there is not.

Mr. Madgett.—I represent the Urban Council, and they, with the Board of Guardians and the Rural District Council, have agreed upon the following answers:—

ANSWERS GIVEN BY THE JOINT COMMITTEE OF THE YOUNGAL BOARD OF GUARDIANS, YOUNGAL No. 1 RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, AND YOUNGAL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL:—

No. I. The joint meeting are of opinion that Youngal Union should not be amalgamated, but express no opinion on the general question of amalgamation.

No. II. That should the Commission recommend that this union be amalgamated, a course which the Committee strongly deprecate, the workhouse ought to be retained as a hospital.

No. III. (a.) That Guardians be empowered to arrange for maintenance of certain classes in workhouses of other unions, especially for lunatics, idiots, or imbeciles; (b.) The Committee are against combining unions for poor law purposes; (c.) All children and infants should be maintained outside of the workhouse. That arrangements ought to be made to allow of aged respectable married couples living together.

No. IV. General rating is recommended to be continued in preference to divisional rating. This was carried by a majority of eight to five, two not voting.

No. V. The Committee are satisfied with the present union, infirmary and hospital.

No. VI. Capitation grant for idiots and imbeciles maintained in workhouses should be continued.

No. VII. The Committee are unanimously in favour of private wards in infirmaries for paying patients.

No. VIII. Tramps should be compelled to apply in the first instance at the Constabulary Barracks, and it should be on the requisition of a constable that the relieving officer give an admission ticket to the workhouse. Known vagrants should be kept in houses of detention where they should be compelled to work. Children of tramps should be taken from them, especially the very young, and the Guardians should stand in loco parentis. A system of identification should be put in force, and it should rest with the tramp to show and prove he or she was not a known vagrant.

Sanctioned,
M. CUNNINGHAM, Chairman.

Countersigned,
Y. BONAYNE, Clerk of Union.

Mr. JAMES CURTIN, P.L.C., Middleton, examined.

Mr. James
Curtin.

22191. CHAIRMAN.—What are the views of your Board of Guardians?—Their views are for amalgamation, except for the sick poor; the hospital should stand and the fever hospital.

22192. But the able-bodied poor should be treated elsewhere?—Yes. The tramps are between forty-five and fifty a week, and they are increasing.

22193. You are on the main road?—On the main road to Fermanagh, Youghal, and Waterford, and then when they come out they go begging from house to house, with their children badly starved and trained.

22194. What would you do with the tramps?—They should be taken and put into some reformatory.

22195. To try and get them industrial habits?—Yes. I am in a position to know; I have retired from work and do nothing but go round the town. Give a clean sweep to the house and drive the officers out of it; they are related to the Guardians, and that is why we are so few here to-day; there are only two of us here, and we have got no relations inside the gates. The officials rule the house. The porter, the master, and the wardmaster are relations.

22196. The Guardians have not a look in at all?—No; those that have not friends have not. Do something; make a clean sweep to do away with the tramps and idlers.

22197. Do you mean the tramps and officers?—Yes, to a certain extent; give them a clean sweep if it can be done; I will be happy and others.

22198. Who are the others?—All round the town.

22199. The contractors?—Yes, and the people would be glad. Why should not every parish take care of its own poor; they come from all parts of the country.

22200. That was the old law?—Yes; I remember fifty years ago when the people were dying of the hunger in this country, and when I came into the union three years ago I found fault with so much waste of bread and food that was going on. Big chunks of fire-brick meat—and the poor people hungry—went into the swill barrel with the offal; little lean meat, beautiful milk and cream meal porridge. Our guardians, a cousin to the party, says, "We are getting 18s. a week for this." That passed on, and it came down to 14s. a week, and now it has come down to 8s. a week for the last six months. But the contractors say, "If that Curtin gets into this house, there is as luck in it." I remember the people dying of the hunger in 1848 and 1849, and I say it is a mortal sin to see good food going off to feed pigs. I am in the black books with the credence and drunkards all round the country, but I don't care; I tell you what I think. I am for amalgamation; I have got a lady here, too; she is a new guardian, but she is well ported. We would be very happy that you would do something, sir!

Miss MINA ROSEMAN, P.L.C., Middleton, examined.

Miss Mina Roseman.

22201. Dr. BROWNE.—First kindly tell the Commission what you think about amalgamation?—Amalgamation would be very good except for the sick poor. I think I would keep the hospital.

22202. Would you approve of sending the other classes to a central institution?—Yes, I think it would be a very good idea; I think there ought to be a classification of the poor, and the deserving poor ought not to be put with the tramps and the idle.

22203. You mean with objectionable people?—Yes.

22204. What alterations would you suggest?—I think children ought not to be allowed into the workhouse; there ought to be some central institution where they could be brought up to good habits. I think they generally develop into the tramp class when they get out.

22205. Would you propose to board them all out even in preference to an institution?—Certainly I would, if it could be done.

22206. Are there many boarded out in your union?—Yes, there are a good many.

22207. You have a Ladies' Committee, I presume?—No, I don't think there is.

22208. You are a guardian?—Yes, I represent Cloyne, a very large district.

22209. In most of the unions where there are children boarded out there is now a Ladies' Committee, which is found very useful in looking after children, in visiting them, and seeing the houses they are boarded out in?—When I got elected I tried to bring that on, and went to the houses myself to try to get good foster-parents for the children, and succeeded in getting some out.

22210. Are the houses all suitable?—All that I have got out are in suitable homes.

22211. Perhaps you might think of getting a Ladies' Committee appointed—are there a number of ladies in the district willing to act?—I think so; I don't think there is any committee in the Middleton Union, but there ought to be.

22212. For the aged and infirm—you would wish to see a better system of classification?—Certainly.

22213. Of course that would be possible in a central institution—it is hardly possible in unions as they exist at present?—I don't think they could have it as the unions are at present. Another thing, too, that could be done. If the unions are left as they are, all the stores ought to be under the control of the masters, if she is a man, and the master ought to be there merely to enforce her orders. Anything the men have to do they do thoroughly well, and there is no complaint whatever.

28214. Would they be quite willing to undertake that duty?—Well, I think they would. I think it would be just as easy as anything else. Then I think all charges ought to be union charges.

28215. You mean for outdoor relief?—For outdoor relief and everything else, and most other things in connection with the poor, because I know in my own town there are very few of the natives really getting outdoor relief; they are all people from the outlying districts that come in and live there.

28216. That have been, perhaps, living a short time in the town?—Yes; a very short time, too.

28217. You would not consider it advisable to establish such a system as was mentioned here this morning—that is to have the present rate a sort of fund, and any increase on that for outdoor relief to be apportioned on the divisions?—No, I think it ought to be all union rating.

28218. What about the lunatics?—I think it is a great hardship to have lunatics in workhouses, especially in the Middlesex Union—there is an epileptic patient there—and then we have to pay for the auxiliary asylum, and it is a risk to the other lunatics to have them in the workhouse.

28219. Is he a lunatic?—He is in the idiot ward.

28220. He is not a sane epileptic?—No, but he works about at intervals; he is perfectly well for a certain time, but he may get dangerous.

28221. As a rule they are amiable at first—it is only in the later stages they become mean?—This is a young man; I don't think he is in all right at any time.

28222. I suppose they won't take that class into the Youghal asylum?—They won't take them into the asylum, and unfortunately, he is always nearly over the fit when the magistrates see him, and they won't commit him to the district asylum.

28223. Would you propose to have a society for epileptics—to give them occupation and plenty of farm work to do—epileptics do better when they are given occupation?—All classes of insane, I think, do better.

28224. Quite right, but particularly epileptics. They seem to improve very much if occupied outside at farm work. In the early stages quite a number of them have been cured in that way. Do you think it would be desirable to have an epileptic colony for a province, say, or one for all Ireland?—One for Ireland, I think; I don't think you have so very many epileptics.

28225. There are not so many insane epileptics—there are a great many epileptics but some have passed the border line where it is possible to cure them, and the sick, you say, you would keep in the institution as they are at present?—I think so; they are very well cared.

28226. If the workhouse was closed the hospital would be practically a district hospital?—I think that would be a very good idea.

28227. In cases where the workhouse is not closed do you think it would be a good idea to separate the hospital from the workhouse?—I don't know whether that would be a good idea; I cannot say.

28228. It has been stated that the hospital to some extent helps to recruit the workhouse—that is, cases discharged from the hospital go into the workhouse; they are under the same management and in the same grounds; it is so easy to go from one to another that very often when they go into the workhouse they stay there, whereas if it was entirely separated—of course that applies more to large towns?—I think if there was a better system of outdoor relief a great many people would not go into the workhouse.

28229. Would you approve of that?—Yes.

28230. In what way would you suggest it could be improved?—The relieving officer could have power to bring certain people some outdoor relief to keep them out—I think it would keep down the rates, because they would be satisfied with much less out than inside the house.

28231. What safeguards would you propose?—A committee like the present Board of Guardians to inquire into these cases.

28232. There are so many people in Ireland of very small means that if they saw their neighbour getting outdoor relief they might want outdoor relief too, and in that way it might spread considerably?—If you had a committee that would inquire into it, appointed in the district I don't think abuses could occur. A committee elected by the ratepayers.

28233. And have it a union charge?—Have everything a union charge.

28234. A committee might not be able to visit one part of the county, and would have to take statements as they received them?—Well, like a Board of Guardians elected for a union I think they would know all about the poor.

28235. If a case comes up before the Board of Guardians for outdoor relief the guardians of the District mostly speak about it, and is asked about it—would it be the same in this case?—Yes, that would be my idea.

28236. If you proposed an extension of outdoor relief don't you think it would be better that there should be some means of putting it on a small area where it would be more likely to be looked after?—Yes, but in a town or village the poor from every district would crowd into it, and it would be a hardship on the ratepayers if we had to pay for people living thirty miles away, who had been only a short time in the town. Another thing, I think it is very hard that people living in labourers' cottages should not be eligible for outdoor relief.

28237. You propose there should be an extension of the amount of ground they hold—are they not excluded on account of holding the 1 acre?—I think it is a very bad system, for the cottages are built for the poorest class, and I know cases of great hardship, where they cannot get outdoor relief, where a father of a family is ill and cannot get outdoor relief, simply because he is in a labourer's cottage.

28238. Because he has more than a quarter acre?—They have one acre now.

28239. What extension would you propose?—That they should get outdoor relief like any other poor people.

28240. Irrespective of the size of the holding?—Yes, if they are bona fide labourers.

28241. Would you make the labourer a test?—I think so, because you build these cottages for labourers.

28242. There are plenty of other poor—there might be a widow?—There might be a widow living in a labourer's cottage; she ought to be perfectly entitled without any test.

28243. Have you many consumptives in the union?—Yes, there are some there.

28244. Have you made provision for them?—They contemplate building a shed for the patients to spend the day in.

28245. To keep them apart from the rest of the patients?—That is for the outdoor treatment.

28246. Are they living there day and night?—No, just during the day time to go out and live there.

28247. One shed?—Two sheds—one for males and one for females.

28248. Have you separate wards in the workhouse for them at present?—Oh, yes.

28249. That is only modified isolation—not complete isolation?—No; I think it would be very good if we could get a little sanatorium of our own.

28250. Do you think that would be economical?—It would be very much better than giving £400 for possibly getting one or two patients into a sanatorium.

28251. Is that all you want to get?—If we get that we will be very lucky. I think the ratepayers are rather put out about it, giving so much without any guarantee.

28252. Is there much feeling about it?—There was in my district.

28253. Has it been definitely stated that they would only receive two or three?—We have just to take our chance.

28254. What were you wishing to get—a definite number?—Yes, value for the money expended.

28255. You will always have applicants, I presume?—Oh, yes.

28256. Of course it would be only for the very early cases?—Yes, cases with some hope of recovery, but I think if a labourer on the open air system went about in different districts, because I find people have a horror of the open air. They don't sleep with the windows open, they are afraid of the open air, especially at night.

28257. Do you think lectures would do much good?—Do people really learn anything by lectures?—I think so.

28258. They would learn more by being in a sanatorium?—From what I have seen phthisis has taken root before the patient consults a doctor, and it is so Riordan.

Miss Miss
Riordan.

lets for a cure, but a sanatorium would do good by isolating the patient, thereby preventing infection.

28250. A person who has been in a sanatorium is more likely to carry out the treatment after they have been undergoing it for some months than a person who has not seen any benefit from it, but has only been told about it?—Yes, but I think prevention is better than cure. There are so many cases of consumption in the South of Ireland that we ought to take steps to stop it, and the only way we can do that is by educating the people up to the open air system and proper food which they can get, such as milk and eggs, which are within the reach of all. I think it is a great hardship that the ratepayers should give a night's lodging and food to tramps—able-bodied tramps—able to work.

28251. What would you propose you should do with them?—I think there ought to be some central institution where they ought to be made work, or sent to jail, for the ratepayers are very poor some of them, and these people look well fed and healthy.

28252. You think they should be committed to an institution for a certain time?—I do.

28253. And if that did not prove beneficial and they are found wandering about again they should be committed for a long period?—A long term of imprisonment.

28254. What would you do with their children?—Send them to an industrial school.

28255. Not board them out?—Or board them out, one or the other. I am afraid if they were boarded out, directly these tramps got out they would take them away again; people would not like to take them. That is the difficulty you have with boarding out children; foster-parents don't like to take any but orphans.

28256. CHAIRMAN.—That might be got over if they were boarded out at a distance?—Yes.

28257. There is nothing to prevent the Guardians at Middleton boarding children out in the County Waterford or anywhere else?—That would be a good idea.

28258. Dr. BROWN.—An interchange from one district to another?—Yes, very good.

28259. Have you any difficulty in getting foster-parents for the children?—No.

28260. How much do you give them?—2s. 6d. a week each child, and about from 41 to 55s. every half year for clothes.

28261. That comes to about 60 a year?—Yes.

28262. Are there many applicants for children at that rate?—Yes, a lot more than we can give, because the houses are not suitable.

28263. Can you get them into suitable homes?—Yes.

28264. What do you consider suitable homes?—Where the people are of very good character and clean.

28265. CHAIRMAN.—And have good milk?—Good milk and good water supply, near schools.

28266. Would you require the people to have a cow?—Oh, no; the foster-parents that I get children for had no cows, because they were of the humblest class.

28267. Dr. BROWN.—Small farmers would not take them?—No, they take them as servants, but I don't know whether they would bring them up with their own children.

28268. It is at the younger ages you want them to be taken out?—Exactly.

28269. Anything from a year old?—Yes.

28270. CHAIRMAN.—You seem to be rather strongly in favour of outdoor relief as opposed to indoor relief?—Yes, I go about among the poor people, and I find they object very much to go into the house; it would please them, and then do away with a lot of officials in the workhouse if we could keep those poor people in their own homes.

28271. Of course you know the legal requirements of outdoor relief, that people have to be destitute?—Yes.

28272. That has come very much to mean being poor—outdoor relief is given now to a great many people who are not destitute, but merely in poor circumstances?—As far as I know I think the relieving officers are very cautious, and only grant it to destitute men. Both relieving officers do their duty well.

28273. How much a week would they get on an average?—A woman or man who is alone is only entitled to 1s. 6d. by law.

28274. That is not so?—Is it not? They seem to think so.

28275. It is in the discretion of the Guardians?—Sometimes the Guardians raise it to 2s., never any more, for a single person.

28276. How far would that 2s. or 1s. 6d. go towards keeping a person?—They generally do some little thing.

28277. Have they a room or shelter?—They have a room.

28278. Does this pay for their room?—This pays for the room, and then they work around.

28279. Is it working or begging?—A great many beg and a great many of the poor are able to do some little thing, and get, perhaps, 3s. a week. They live on very little and they get things from the neighbours.

28280. So it really keeps the roof over them?—That is all.

28281. That is really the idea of most of the outdoor relief—it is not a complete support, just a help?—Yes.

28282. Dr. BROWN.—Have you found that many of them receive assistance from children in America?—I am afraid they don't; I think they go off to America and forget all about them.

28283. Mr. MURPHY.—Compensatively speaking, there is very little outdoor relief in your union?—Very little.

28284. Only about 2500 a year?—It is very little for such a large district.

28285. But there is a danger in making the granting of outdoor relief too easy—you might have too many applicants?—Yes, but I don't think it is done very easily; it is very hard to get outdoor relief.

28286. It is in your union, but it might, if the rules were relaxed too much, become a great danger. That happened in England and they had to reverse matters.

CHAIRMAN.—Almost restrict it to the workhouse.

28287. Mr. MURPHY.—Have you many children in the workhouse?—Something over fifty per cent.

28288. Are any of these eligible for boarding out?—Yes, I have tried to get some out; about twenty are boarded out; there may be more; I am not exactly sure.

28289. Could you not try and find homes for the others?—I am afraid they don't care to let them out except they are orphans or deserted children; I don't think they leave the others out.

28290. Dr. BROWN.—Have you all the deserted and orphans out?—Nearly all, except children that are not very strong, and people would not care to take them, or, of course, children who are perhaps twelve years of age; they don't care to take them too old.

28291. CHAIRMAN.—The last witness seemed to object you to support him in some of his strong statements?—I am afraid I was not able to catch all he said. Besides, I prefer to speak from my own experience.

Mr. JOHN FITZGERALD, F.R.C.S., Macroom, examined.

28300. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Macroom Union?—Yes.

28301. Have you considered the question whether you are in favour of amalgamation or not?—We have, generally speaking; they are all in favour of amalgamation.

28302. What unions would you suggest in your neighbourhood should be amalgamated with each other?—We think Macroom ought to be central between Dunmurry and Millstreet.

28303. Kanturk?—Kanturk is rather remote; it didn't matter whether we go or stay.

28304. How would you work out amalgamation?—would you close up your workhouse, or close up MILL-street?—We discussed that among ourselves also, and we thought we should leave the aged and infirm in the hospital in each union.

28305. And only close the house so far as the healthy are concerned?—Yes, sir.

28306. And get rid of all the administrative expenses?—Of course; that is the great struggle.

28307. You have a good many officers there?—A great many officers.

28308. Active men?—Active men; well paid, rather overpaid. For the same reason as Mr. Curran mentioned a while ago, salaries are well fixed the first day and increased soon after by their own friends. Like Mr. Curran, I happen to have very few friends. There were four other gentlemen asked to come here and these gentlemen are more or less mixed up with certain classes and friends and relations of the officers. My great anxiety for amalgamation would be to try and get rid of all the expenses.

Mr. John
Fitzgerald.

28310. To get rid of all the avoidable expenses without hardship, and keep the sick there, because it would be a hardship for them to go far—Yes.

28311. Dr. BROWN.—You mentioned about keeping the aged and infirm in the hospital—that would not be a desirable arrangement—I would wish to dispose of them in some way.

28312. CHAIRMAN.—If they went to a central place, say into Cork, they would be all people who could travel by railway—would you have any objection to that?—Not at all.

28313. If you keep more than the sick in the hospital it runs up the expense, and it is not a satisfactory way to class sick people among people who are healthy?—No, indeed.

28314. So that you would be satisfied yourself with having the sick taken care of at Macroom, and let all the other classes of inmates be dealt with elsewhere?—Yes, sir.

28315. Would you board out the children?—Yes.

28316. And the aged and infirm—you say you have no objection to their going to Cork?—Yes.

28317. And girls who are mothers of children—would you approve of the suggestions we have received that they should be sent according to their religion to some religious institution, a Good Shepherd Convent for Catholics, and some other institution, if they are Protestants—would you approve of that?—I would.

28318. Then the tramps—if a workhouse were set apart for the whole of Munster, for the whole South of Ireland, would you approve of giving magistrates the power of committing men who were straggling about the country without any occupation?—I would indeed.

28319. And teach them habits of industry there if possible?—I would, indeed; they are a great nuisance, no doubt about it; not only expense when they are in the workhouse, but a danger and expense also when tramping about the country. They lead a vicious life and commit incendiarism and threaten housebreakers if they don't give them money. They beg, borrow or steal from one Union to another, and then are afterwards entertained at the workhouse at the expense of the ratepayers. They are an awful nuisance, staying in highways and raising dirt.

28320. Of course, sometimes decent men, bricklayers' assistants, shoemakers, and journeyman tradesmen have to move from town to town to get employment?—Yes.

28321. Do you think there would be any hardship on those men if provided with a testimonial or recommendation of character?—It would be very necessary.

28322. There would be no chance of their being interfered with?—Not if they were genuine.

28323. There would not be much difficulty in recognizing a decent man from a tramp?—Sometimes you will be able to ascertain whether they are genuine or not.

28324. Among the ratepayers generally the feeling is very much in favour of reducing substantially the expenditure on poor law?—Oh, yes.

28325. And you think they would not object to any closing of workhouses if it could be done without hardship to the sick or poor?—Yes, they are all in favour of it.

28326. But you seem to think, and I can understand it, of course, that there is a very large number of interested people whose interests are bound up directly or indirectly with the continuance of the present system?—That is so.

28327. Mr. MURKIN.—Your charge for officering is 69 per inmate, per annum. That is high.—Very high, say the reason I told you a while ago—that those officers have too many friends and relations, perhaps on the board, and, unfortunately, I may go further and say that sometimes the officers have managed to rig the elections triennially. Actually very often when there is a contest it is caused by officers who want to put off certain members of the board and put on their own friends. We had that experience last June.

28328. You think the closing of certain workhouses would lessen that?—Oh, yes.

28329. Would you see any difficulty in moving the infirm class to a central home—some of the witnesses have complained that it would be a hardship—do you see the hardship?—We have the railway from Macroom into Cork, and it may help to some extent.

28331. Have you any opinion as regards rating for outdoor relief—do you think there is unfairness to country districts by the present system of union rating?—I personally would prefer divisional rating, because it would give us all more or less an interest in keeping down the rates in this way; we would not be trying to get outdoor relief for persons who were not really, perhaps, entitled to it, but because we have not to pay in our own divisions for it we must other divisions all over the union.

28332. The amount spent in your union is very large for the size of the union—£1,800 a year?—Yes, indeed, very large; I think it is the worst case in the whole country.

28333. You think there would be more supervision and care if the area was reduced to what it formerly was—divisional?—Yes; it also applies to us as a District Council, because it is there the great trouble and expense comes in, where certain works are required, perhaps a public pump, or even a private pump, which they could carry out if they would try and make their own division pay for it. They are getting up waterworks in places where it is not at all necessary. That in our union has grown very big. At the very commencement, four or five years ago, when the very first pump was applied for, a few of us tried very hard to prevent it, because it was a bad precedent, and we failed; it was carried by a majority. And on that day certain persons said out of a threat that they would apply for a pump in their own neighbourhood, and in due time they applied and got them, and they are going on since, waterworks and pumps.

28334. CHAIRMAN.—The area of charge is the area immediately benefited?—Yes. The very first pump asked for was one at the top of the hill at the school house, and that is a complete failure; it cost £40 or £50; it is dry almost ever since, and has been repaired at a big expense, and is a failure still. If we could remedy that we would like divisional rating also.

28335. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you board out many children?—Yes, sir. The chairman of last year's Board of Guardians and Rural District Council—they are not the chairman at present—and the chairman of the present year were asked to come here, and not one of them has turned up.

28336. Is there any evidence except yours from Macroom?—No, sir. There has been as much wire-pulling for the person with whom an orphan child should be boarded out as if it was an election for a clerk. Three or four women apply, and their friends at the board fight very hard for them to get the child, and very often the wrong person perhaps gets the child.

28337. Have you a Ladies' Committee to visit the houses where these children are boarded out to see that they are kept comfortably and clean?—Yes, we adopted that some time ago, but I don't think it is carried out.

28338. Do the ladies not report frequently?—No.

28339. CHAIRMAN.—And they don't recommend who should be selected for the care of the child?—They do not.

28340. Dr. BROWN.—You should get these applications to come through the Ladies' Committee?—If that could be done it would be all right.

28341. Mr. MURKIN.—You could get a resolution passed to the effect, that in future all applications for a boarded-out child should be accompanied by a recommendation of the Ladies' Committee. My friends at the board have a holy horror of ladies; they would not stand them at all. At the last election I was trying to get three ladies co-opted and I got beaten into a cocked hat; I was left in a very small minority.

28342. CHAIRMAN.—Did you get a second?—I did, but I think I got no more. I thought it would be really a very good idea to put three ladies on the board to just look after the poor, and go occasionally through the house, and they would be inclined to keep us in check.

28343. Would you prefer that the ladies should all go to the lunatic asylum or Youghal?—Indeed, sir, when it was first mooted about the Youghal Asylum we thought that all our lunatics would be taken away, but they were not able to take them all.

Sept 26, 1906.

Mr. John
Flanagan.

Sept. 26, 1895.

Mr. John
Fitzgerald.

28334. Did they leave you any troublesome cases?

We had a few, but they are gone since.

28335. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Is there much land around your workhouse?—There is not; I should say five or six acres. If we had more ground and could give more work to the able-bodied inmates it would be a good idea, and if we got some of these tramps to till the ground and do some work, in place of going out as they like themselves. There is an amount of abuse of outdoor relief; there is too much outdoor relief given in cash instead of in kind.

28336. CHAIRMAN.—You saw a resolution proposed here in Cork that all outdoor relief should be in kind—would you be in favour of that?—I would, indeed, for the simple reason that the kind may reach them, and the cash scarcely ever does.

28337. Of course you mean in towns?—It would be very difficult in remote country places—I don't think so at all.

28338. I have experience myself where the relieving officer gives an order to the local shopkeeper to supply the goods to a certain amount to a certain poor person; that works all right. He does not name the trader, but gives an order and the person entitled to the outdoor relief can get it on presenting the order at any shop he pleases?—Exactly.

28339. Do you think there is any abuse there?—Well, I am afraid there is abuse there also.

28340. You think the applicants would get tobacco and porter instead of tea and meal?—Yes, but it is not on the part of the relieving officer.

28341. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Could you not get out of that by sending the order to people who have no houses?—Yes.

28342. CHAIRMAN.—But they all have houses in remote country places?—As a rule they have.

28343. In Dublin outdoor relief is distributed in kind, including coal in winter?—Yes.

28344. There is no check that could be put on outdoor relief as long as the dispensing is in the hands of a public body?—I suppose not.

28345. Is your opinion that relief now is more given to people who are not quite deserving of it than used to be the case?—That is my opinion, because it is union rating. I have known Guardians ask for relief for persons who did not deserve it, because the division had not to pay for it.

28346. Have you any Guardians in your union who are not ratepayers?—We have some and they are not the worst; the ratepayers are more inclined to spend.

Dr. D. J. MURPHY, Workhouse Medical Officer, Youghal, examined.

Dr. D. J.
Murphy.

28337. CHAIRMAN.—The Rural District Council passed a resolution in favour of amalgamation?—No, sir; they passed a general resolution for amalgamation—their opinion was that their own union ought not to be dissolved.

28338. Have you any position under the poor law?—I am medical officer to the workhouse.

28339. You are not medical officer to the auxiliary?—No.

28340. All the suggestions that have been made to us always provide for the retention of the hospital—we have never received any suggestions, or in very few places, that a hospital should be closed?—That is practically a necessity.

28341. People don't suggest that facilities for treating the sick should be diminished—on the contrary we have received a great many suggestions that further facilities should be given for starting new hospitals. As regards the body of the house, do you know what the general opinion is. If the hospital were allowed to remain do you think there would be very much objection in Youghal to closing the rest of the workhouse if it were applied to some useful purpose?—I don't think so.

28342. If the auxiliary, for instance, were inadequate to maintain the harmless inmates—if the workhouse were given up for that purpose would there be much objection?—I think on the contrary they would be rather in favour of that, or as a sanction, for our altitude is fairly high.

28343. There is no shelter?—Very poor shelter generally. I find the great want in the workhouse is the want of paying wards. From time to time I have a great many people in my own district, especially as regards the fever hospital, who would come into the hospital if we had a paying ward distinct from the general body of the house.

28344. You find that chiefly as regards the infectious cases?—Yes.

28345. There is some question of building a fever hospital now?—Yes, it is very badly needed.

28346. Is there much consumption in the workhouse?—I have eight patients at present.

28347. Do you happen to know whether that is a fair indication of its extent?—I know it is very, very general, unfortunately.

28348. So that having so few in the workhouse is no indication of the general condition?—No, they are a class of patients that won't come into the workhouse hospital, and I don't force them to come in most cases, because I don't think it is a very good thing for them.

28349. At what stage are the eight patients?—Two in the acute stage, and the rest practically beyond that, and then I have two that a sanatorium would be useful for.

28350. Dr. BROWN.—Can you isolate them?—Yes, I have consumptive wards for isolation.

28351. Are they out much?—Yes, I try to keep them out all the time.

28352. Have you good shelter for them outside?—Our shelter is very poor; we are on the top of a hill.

28353. But any shade shelter for the consumptive themselves?—No, not specially. The only suggestion I was asked to make by the people of the district was as regards paying wards, and that chiefly for infectious cases.

28354. CHAIRMAN.—If you have a proper classification of diseases, and then paying wards on each side, male and female, it means a great many wards—has any plan been got up for the fever hospital?—A plan has been sent in.

28355. Would it be adequate for classification of diseases and classification of sexes, and two additional wards for paying patients?—Yes, it would meet all those.

28356. Dr. BROWN.—How many wards would be in it?—We have two general wards—one for male and female, and then an isolation bed on either side and two beds, one at the male and one at the female, for paying patients.

28357. That is not classification?—Oh, no; we have no classification between typhus and typhoid.

28358. CHAIRMAN.—It would not be up to date, doctor?—I don't think so; I don't care for the plan myself.

28359. Dr. BROWN.—Have you said so?—I have stated so. We had a consultation on the matter with Dr. Smyth and Mr. O'Brien Smyth; they know my views exactly. We find our diseases classify themselves as typhoid and scarlatina; we rarely have typhus; we have diphtheria sometimes. I don't think we get many cases of measles; they get it over at home.

28360. CHAIRMAN.—Any whooping cough cases?—They are rarely sent.

The sitting was adjourned.

FIFTY-SEVENTH PUBLIC SITTING—WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27TH, 1905.

At the Court-house, Cork.

Present:—Mr. MILLS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COREY BIGGER.

Professor COREY, M.D., Cork, examined.

23321. Dr. BIGGER.—I understood you are going to give us some evidence regarding the question of providing a sanatorium for consumptives?—Well, I may mention that I am a member of the Joint Board for the erection of a sanatorium for the Co. Cork. Twenty-eight public bodies joined together for the purpose of having this sanatorium, and the Board consists of fifty-six members.

23322. CHAIRMAN.—How many of these are medical men?—There are only two members of the Board medical men; myself and Dr. Murphy, of Youghal. You should be a member of one of the contributing bodies, and at that time I was a member of the Cork Corporation.

23323. Dr. BIGGER.—Is Dr. Cronin a member?—No. At the first meeting we came to the conclusion that it would be very important to have a suitable site selected, as one of the members expressed it. We considered that everything depended on the selection of a proper site. What was decided on at that meeting was, a medical committee was appointed, consisting of Dr. Donovan, the Medical Officer of Health in Cork, Dr. Cronin, and myself, and we got power to investigate the whole subject, and were authorized to assist the Board in every way in the selection of a site. Advertisements were put into the newspapers inviting tenders for sites, and we also recalled that we had compulsory powers for acquiring sites, if necessary.

23324. CHAIRMAN.—This was subsequent to the issue of the Provisional Order?—Yes, when we were formed into a Board, at our very first meeting. Then all the replies were put before the Medical Committee and we considered them, having regard to the climate as far as we knew about it, the height, and other requisites. We also had power to call in an engineer and get him to inspect the sites that were named, with a view to learning what the quality of the soil was, whether it was retentive or otherwise; also to learn whether there was a sufficient supply of water, whether there were facilities for drainage, and, of course, from the Ordnance maps we learned the heights of the various sites. Furthermore, at that first meeting of the Board they authorized the Medical Committee to call in a specialist if we thought it desirable, and they left to ourselves the selection of the specialist, so that there was great anxiety shown to have the thing done in the most efficient manner. Dr. Smyth, as a matter of fact, was called in, and he visited several places in the Co. Cork.

23325. About how many?—There were twenty-five sites offered, and out of the twenty-five I could not tell you exactly the number he visited.

23326. Five or six?—Oh, he did more; he probably visited about a dozen sites. As a matter of fact, I myself visited two of the sites afterwards selected as being among the three best, and I also spent two days with him on a sort of roving expedition, to see could we get anything better. We went out one day to Millstreet, and the following day seven miles beyond Fermoy, and searched the country in every direction for a suitable site. Then Dr. Smyth and the Medical Committee had two or three meetings, and we discussed the whole matter, and the upshot of the whole thing was, Dr. Smyth selected three sites; one was Coolcure, the other Mount Maury, and the other Rahen.

23327. What part of the country are they in?—Mount Maury is within a mile of Macroom, Coolcure is near Danneway, and Rahen is to the north of Mallow. One of the objections to Rahen was the engineering difficulty.

23328. Water?—No; but the side of the hill was almost vertical, and it would be necessary either to excavate or run up pillars for the purpose of supporting the building. It was considered the expense, apart from any other consideration, would be too great, and it had nothing to recommend it above Mount Maury. In Coolcure we found there was a heavy rainfall; as a matter of fact, it was twice as heavy as the rainfall in Cork, and the rainfall in Cork is once and a half as heavy as in Dublin. Then, again, there was a feeling among the members of the Board that, as Lady Randon, who is the landlady, had an objection to part with the site she ought not to be pressed if we could get as good elsewhere, for I may mention that Lord and Lady Randon have always taken a great interest in philanthropic works in connection with the city and county. The upshot of the investigation was that we selected by a large majority Mount Maury as the site. At that same meeting the engineer stated it would cost £12,500 to erect buildings, irrespective of what it would cost to procure the site, and that had rather a dampening effect on some of the members present, and one of them went into figures, and he said the whole thing could hardly be done at all, considering the income we would have. I pointed out at the time that the estimate seemed to me to be entirely too high. It meant a lot of bricks and mortar when other structures would do quite as well—chalets. I mentioned, also, that chalets are what are generally approved of by medical men for sanatoria at present.

23329. Had you Dr. Smyth in consultation at that period?—He was not present at that meeting. I also pointed out that a distinguished engineer had mentioned to me that chalets which would suit for two patients could be run up for £25, or about £40 a patient. Since then, seeing the feeling of some members there that they were disposed to throw cold water on the whole project, I thought we would go into the matter more fully, and I made inquiries as to what the cost of acquiring a site would be and the cost of maintenance. But before going into that, perhaps I may point out the advantage of sanatoria just in a few words.

23330. Dr. BIGGER.—We have had a good deal of evidence as to the feasibility; I think it is admitted by everybody. Could you give us anything more particularly as to how cheaply they could be erected?—Very well. I was anxious to procure the most recent information, and I found that at the last meeting of the British Medical Association, held last month in Leicester, there was a special discussion on sanatoria for Poor Law consumptives. Dr. Weatherly, of Bath, introduced the discussion, and you will remember that he took part in establishing a sanatorium in connection with these counties in England, so that he has practical knowledge on the subject. Before mentioning what he states with regard to maintenance I had better first take up the cost of erecting a sanatorium.

23331. Just give us a few points, more particularly anything that has come within your own knowledge, because anything written on the subject we have probably read?—Here is what it comes to. One of these writers says he has proved it himself by actual experience that "a site, administrative buildings, chalets and furniture in chalets" could all be provided at a cost of £100 per bed, and he states that could be done within fifty miles of London.

23332. The estimate here was nearer £1,000?—That is referred to by him. "Those responsible in the matter had been discouraged and misled by those who had caused the erection of costly, substantial if not palatial, edifices, involving an expenditure from £200 to £1,500 a bed, whereas the best treatment in every respect can be provided on the chalet system at a total cost per bed of £100, including the administrative buildings, chalet, and furniture, and even the freehold of the site, as he had proved by experience."

28393. CHAIRMAN.—You could have 100 beds for £15,000, and the repayment of the instalments for £500 or £550—I have worked that out on sixty beds.

28394. You would rather have 100—I would, if our income would go to it.

28395. If your repayment of the instalment would only come to £500 a year then you would have £4,800 for your maintenance?—Yes; the maintenance would be the biggest item. Sixty beds would be £5,000 for site, administrative buildings, &c. £5,000, repayable in thirty years at 2½ per cent., would represent the first year £200 principal and £165 interest; that would mean £365 expenditure during the first year. Of course, the interest would be diminishing each year, and eventually the whole thing would be extinguished.

28396. Dr. BROOKS.—How do you propose to get the money at 2½ per cent?—I understood the Board of Works would lend it.

28397. I don't think so; they cannot borrow at that themselves?—I was speaking to the solicitor to the Board yesterday, and he was under the impression it could be got at 2½ per cent.

28398. CHAIRMAN.—At any rate the instalment would not be anything like what frightened us yesterday?—No; then the maintenance?—A sanatorium for sixty patients can be quite easily run at a charge of 25s. a week per bed. When we started the sanatorium in three counties we were often met with the query, "Are you certain you can maintain the sanatorium at 25s. a week per bed?" We said we were. We have now been long enough in existence to know what our expenses are, and we are able to say definitely that a sanatorium for sixty patients can well be run and leave a margin, at 28s. per bed per patient. That is giving them a splendid sanatorium, electric light over the grounds, thoroughly good and well cooked food, and constant medical supervision." If you had sixty beds, 25s. a week would be £75 a week, and sixty beds at £75 a week would represent £3,900 a year. The expenditure per annum, as interest on capital, for site, buildings, &c., £205 the first year, would be getting less.

28399. Mr. MURPHY.—But your calculation is at 2½ per cent; you can't borrow at that?—You can work that out afterwards.

Dr. BROOKS.—Five and a half per cent. would be payable during the thirty years. In other words, you would be reducing your principal.

28400. CHAIRMAN.—Maintenance is very important indeed?—It is. I don't think that would make much difference. I will show we would have money over and above which would easily cover that sort of thing. Maintenance per annum, £3,000; that would mean a total annual expenditure of £4,265; then the total income at 1d. in the £, which we have authority to levy would be £5,347, and the balance would more than cover the excessive interest. One thing I want to point out is, I saw that a member of the Commission remarked that for forty patients it was a very large sum. In this case it would be a question of sixty beds, and the general routine is that a patient is kept in for sixteen weeks—call that four months. That would mean that you would have three patients in a bed every year; that would mean 180 patients in a year.

28401. If you start with sixty, and find there is a rush for further beds, it is easy to put up more chalets?—Very easy.

28402. It is more prudent to begin with sixty beds?—It would. That is one of the advantages of Mount Mary, that it is studded with chalets of trees, so you have plenty of shelter.

28403. Have you calculated anything for making roads and paths?—You see, that gentleman who has had practical experience, states his practical experience, and that would include the whole thing, I presume. He says "site and buildings." That would include paths and things of the kind. All medical men meet a certain number of patients suffering from consumption, who are not in a position to pay for an ordinary sanatorium, and yet are not poor enough to go into what you may call a charity sanatorium, and I was thinking that if, out of the sixty beds, twenty were appropriated for patients that could pay 10s. a week, that would increase the income.

28404. Dr. BROOKS.—I take it you would charge patients whatever they were able to pay?—Yes; that would reduce the expenditure. That is what I was particularly anxious to bring before you, because certain members of the Board were rather frightened by the statements put before them, and came to the conclusion that the game was hardly worth the candle; but I think it would be very well done, and much more moderate. There has not been a meeting of the Commission since I was able to work these figures out.

28405. But you will bring them before the Commission?—Oh, to be sure. One of my objects is coming before you was to ventilate the thing, that they might read the figures and digest them before the next meeting.

Mr. RAYNE FREWER, D.L., QUEENSTOWN, examined.

Mr. Savage
Poole.

28406. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Committee of the Queenstown Hospital?—I am Chairman of the Committee, and have been Chairman for several years.

28407. We visited the hospital last week, and will be glad to hear any statement from you. Your origin, I believe, is in Secoury?—Yes; but about twenty years ago Dean Kellier and I worked out new rules, the basis of which was that Protestants and Catholics should be exactly on an equality in everything in the hospital, and we made a general committee of forty, twenty Protestants and twenty Catholics, and an executive committee of sixteen divided in the same way.

28408. Was it at that period you entered into an agreement with the Cork Board of Guardians?—The agreement with the Cork Board of Guardians is much older than I am.

28409. Has that ever been revised in your time?—Yes, it has; it used to be 1s. 6d. a head for all patients; they now pay 2s. 6d. a head per day for fever patients. Even that does not pay us. We have no funds; we live from hand to mouth.

28410. Voluntary contributions?—Entirely. It is a very popular little institution in Queenstown: the people of the place get up entertainments, and have a street collection, and so on, and we make, on an average, from £350 to £400 voluntarily, and the payments from the workhouse come to about the same.

28411. Do you think your Committee would be in favour of making that a public institution, depending on the rates?—I cannot see the use of it myself. I think the ratepayers would lose £350 a year, and the people who now take an interest in it would take an interest no longer.

28412. But your nursing system is rather defective?—It is, because we cannot afford any more; we have only one qualified.

28413. That is the reason it occurred to me that you might think it for the good of the institution and the patients?—I complained about it myself, and made a fuss, but we cannot afford very much. The trained nurse lives close by the hospital, and the woman that is in charge at night has had thirteen years' experience.

28414. As a midwife?—Yes; and nursing and other things. She had thirteen years' experience in the hospital, but no qualified training. When we have many patients in the hospital we get in extra nurses. Our average number of patients is about twelve, and sometimes less than that, and it runs up to as much as thirty-six. We can make up thirty-eight beds on a pinch, and then, of course, we get in an extra staff for the time being.

28415. Do the Guardians pay you as much as a patient would cost in their own place? I believe they do. It costs us £50 a bed all round for the year, including the whole maintenance, the maintenance of the house, and of everything about the hospital, and we divide that by the number of patients. Of course, in the workhouse hospital they only charge the cost of feeding. What they pay us from the workhouse does not cover our cost.

28416. Have you ever approached them for a

Sept. 27, 1906.

Mr. Savage
Presb.

further grant?—We approached them about the fever patients and got more. Their answer is that they could do it cheaper in the workhouse hospital.

28417. That would not be so if they arrived at the average cost in the proper way by taking all the salaries?—I don't think it would. If this was made a public institution it would simply mean putting £850 a year on the rates at least.

28418. But if you get the cost increased that they pay you that would also come out of the rates?—Yes.

28419. And you cannot improve your nursing staff unless you get an increase from them?—No; we have two members of the Board of Guardians on our Committee.

28420. Every person who goes into your hospital is either paid for by the Board of Guardians or himself?—Quite so.

28421. Dr. Broom.—The only thing is that a patient pays less very often than the Guardians pay?—Our regular charge for that is a guinea a week. We cannot always get it.

28422. I thought you admitted some at less than that?—No; for paying patients our charge is one guinea a week.

28423. CHAIRMAN.—And any that cannot pay?—We take on a note from the relieving officer.

28424. I suppose if a man could not pay as much as the Guardians pay you are inclined to put him on the Guardians' list?—We cannot do that; they are set in by the relieving officer or the dispensary doctor.

28425. Dr. Broom.—Could you not try an intermediate charge? If a patient could pay 5s. a week?—That would help; but how would he be admitted; he would not be sent in by the doctor then. They generally go in as private patients of the doctor. At Queensdown, we get in men with all sorts of queer diseases, heart-ache, from ships, and we get poor fellows who have met with accidents by falling from aloft. They are paying patients, paid for by the companies that they belong to. We charge a guinea a week, and it is hard to get it sometimes.

28426. CHAIRMAN.—Are you aware of a provision in the Local Government Act by which workhouse hospitals can be turned into district hospitals. If your hospital could in the same way be made a district hospital, afflicting the local committee as the managing body, with further representation on the part of the Guardians, there would be still a possibility that the Committee would look closely after the hospital as they do at present, and perhaps raise funds for a little extras and comforts, would you at first sight think that an objectionable arrangement, the management practically remaining very much as it is?—That would be the danger; if you destroy the interest the people take in it locally you will check off that source of supply.

28427. I see that, but if the local people are still on the committee of management they would still be able to raise money for a great many things that are not exactly proper charges against the rates?—What representation would the Guardians get?

28428. They would get a very much larger representation than they have at present—you might turn that over in your mind?—Yes.

28429. At present the hospital does need a great many things that the funders don't seem to be equal to. The question is are you going to let the hospital continue as it is or put it in a proper condition?—Of course one would like to arrange one's own committee on that. I will say plainly they are rather jealous of the interference of the Board of Guardians, because we think we have built that up by degrees.

28430. But you realize that it has not reached the highest standard?—We realize that more money would enable us to improve the hospital.

28431. Mr. MURKIN.—If a grant in the way of an annual contribution from the Guardians could be got as an aid to the maintenance of the house that trouble might be got over?—It might.

28432. I agree with you that it would not be a desirable thing to remove the local interest and take away the opportunity for individual benevolence that attends these charitable hospitals, but if there was something in the way of an annual contribution?—Quite so; it is a very popular institution at present, and the poor are our principal subscribers. Every church in Queensdown of every denomination has a service for it, and the street collection is very good. The Guardians supply half our income.

28433. CHAIRMAN.—A good deal more?—I don't think so; of course we make extra whips now and again. Our income in 1905 was £619, and of that the Guardians paid £312; our income in 1904 was £556, and of that the Guardians paid £384. In 1903 they paid in five quarters almost in one year; there was some little friction about representation on the Board, and they kept back one quarter from the previous year.

28434. Mr. MURKIN.—Things are working smoothly now?—Oh, yes, they used to pay us by the quarter; now they pay monthly.

28435. CHAIRMAN.—The question is whether the local interest could not be kept up as in county institutions, where the local people take the greatest interest and provide extras?—That would be a very good thing if we could get the Board of Guardians more representation and preserve our own organization.

28436. You would like, of course, that your local present committee should be predominant in the future committee?—Yes.

28437. You have got an ambulance?—Yes.

28438. And the Guardians have that?—Yes, and they build a stable on our ground; the ambulance, I think, belongs to the Guardians.

28439. There are no operations done in the hospital?—Oh, I think there are.

28440. I mean there are no proper facilities?—No, no proper facilities; no proper operating room; of course any heavy cases are sent to Cork.

Most Rev. Dr. KELLY, Bishop of Ross, examined.

28441. CHAIRMAN.—We have had your Lordship's memorandum giving under five heads the nature of the evidence you are going to give?—You have been down to see the auxiliary asylum, I think. The view that my committee took was that that institution should be of a new type altogether. We understood that the 76th sec. of the Local Government Act intended to establish quite a distinct type of institution, and our view was that the institution should be concerned much more with the physical wants and physical comforts of the patients than with any mental disorder or disease. The existing lunatic asylums were intended for curable patients and for dangerous patients and consequently it was necessary to have a very strong staff of medical officers and a large number of attendants to help to care those who were curable and to prevent those who were dangerous from doing harm to themselves or others. But as we understood the 76th section of the Act auxiliary asylums were to be established for persons who were born idiots, and consequently incapable of cure, for persons who had brain disease and for those who, though they had been once acute and dangerous lunatics had worn themselves out, as it were, and become chronic—and, therefore, what we wanted was an institution in which they would be well fed and well clothed and looked after carefully and all their physical wants properly attended to. In other words, we intended to establish not a lunatic asylum but a home for idiots and imbeciles. The official authorities took rather a different view. The inspectors of Lunatics published a letter on the 22nd November, 1905, and in that letter they quote a letter of the Resident Medical Superintendent of the Sligo Asylum, written to the Leitrim County Council. The Leitrim County Council were moving at that time in 1905, as were several other County Councils; for instance the Kildare County Council made a very considerable advance in this matter under their very active chairman, and other County Councils, and their idea was to establish auxiliary asylums, particularly where the asylum district included two or three counties, the counties in which the lunatic asylum did not exist were anxious to establish an auxiliary asylum in one of the other counties, and thus, as it were, to equalize the expenditure. For instance, the chairman of the Kildare County Council made a very great effort, as the asylum is at Carlow, to convert the prison at Naas into an auxiliary asylum, and then have the auxiliary asylum in Kildare. In the same way the asylum district being Sligo and Leitrim, and the asylum being at Sligo, the Leitrim County Council wanted an auxiliary asylum in Leitrim and so on. The resident medical superintendent of Sligo wrote to the Leitrim County Council pointing out to them that, owing to the requirements of the inspectors, it would be more expensive to fit up a workhouse than to build an addition to their own asylum, and the inspectors quote at length that passage, and then continue to say: "After ten years' experience, the inspectors fully concur in all that is herein stated, and they believe that when the cost of converting a workhouse into accommodation for insane cases, of the district staff, which is enjoined by the Act, and the fact that a capitation grant of only 2s. a week can be obtained, are taken into consideration, it will almost always be found more economical, where possible, to build annexes of an inexpensive type in connection with the existing asylums, as such buildings could be administered as part of the asylum and thus save the cost of a separate staff of higher officials. Further, the capitation grant would be 4s. in the latter as against 2s. in the former case." That was the idea of the inspectors to increase the existing asylums, and they have pressed that idea on several of the counties. For instance, in the County Clare they passed that idea, and at one time the Clare Asylum Committee had actually passed a resolution to build an addition. I don't think they have gone on with it. The same occurred at Clonmel, where they are actually building at present. You see the view of the inspectors was diametrically opposed to ours, because they speak of the higher staff of officials, a distinct staff, and consequently you would have two separate staffs of officials, evidently equal in both cases. We did not think it was necessary to have that higher staff of officials to cater for the physical wants of the people we considered. And hence you see we had the materials there for a very pretty struggle and that struggle has gone on, rather sharply part of the time. The whole official bodies of the asylums, not only the medical staff but all the rest of the staff through the country, took up the views of the inspectors, and the Medical-Psychological Journal and the other medical journals joined in and very great pressure was brought to bear on the Government to restrain us from all quarters, England, Ireland and Scotland. However, our committee, with short intervals of doubt and cowardice, persevered, and we have established the institutions. In the institution we aim at giving physical comfort, and we provide as good food and good clothing, and as careful and kindly attendance for the patients as is provided in any other asylum. We have not made provision for the mental cure of the patients, because we regard them as incurable, and we have not made extraordinary provision for dangerous lunatics; if a patient becomes dangerous we send him to Cork.

29448. Have you had many of those cases?—There have been a few; there has been no transfer to Cork for the last four months. The objection was made that these chronic lunatics were liable to get an acute attack at any moment, and when they did harm might be done. Our answer to that was there is no family in the County Cork in which a member may not suddenly get an acute attack, and the members of the family have to run the risk, and the members of that family are far less able to protect themselves from a person that has become insane than the official staff in Youghal are able to protect themselves. I argued myself as a reductio ad absurdum, if that view were to be taken the whole county should be shut up in a lunatic asylum. We established the auxiliary; it was opened last February twelve months; it is about eighteen months in existence. The patients were drafted gradually as first, so that it was not fully stocked with patients for the first five or six months; it is now pretty fully stocked. The accommodation was intended for 417 patients, and there have been 400 there for several months past. We had 350 there for a considerable time.

29449. Now you have 400 odd?—I think the actual number at present is 399. In Youghal there is accommodation for 250 men and only 150 women, and consequently in transferring patients from the workhouses we had to take that fact into account. We had also to take into account distributive justice as between the different unions, because while these patients were in the union they were a union charge, and when we transferred them to Youghal they became a county at large charge, or a county borough charge, and consequently if you transferred all the females out of the workhouse at Fermoy you relieve the union of Fermoy of the cost of thirty patients and put that on the county-at-large.

29444. But you would not let that seriously stop you taking in a patient?—Oh, not at all, but I merely point out that the question is there, and in making the transfers we tried to keep that before our minds as much as we could. I myself drew up a list, and, according to that list, we were to transfer from the workhouses 180 males and 102 females, making 282, and then we proposed to transfer from the Cork Asylum the other 120, making 402 altogether; that worked out in leaving nearly 300 females in the workhouses.

29445. How many have you at present, males and females?—250 males and 180 females, because the house is built in that way; those 300 were not all transferred. When the medical superintendent went round to the workhouses he found some were epileptic patients, and all those on that list were not transferred; I think 250 were taken from the workhouses.

29446. And he did not remove any of the bedridden, filthy cases?—At first he did not remove filthy cases, but latterly they have been sending filthy cases to Youghal.

29447. Because we saw some in the Cork Workhouse, and they rather made it a ground of complaint that their inebriate patients would not be taken from them?—That was so. Then Youghal has relieved the Cork Asylum to a considerable extent. Our numbers at the Cork Asylum had gone up during 1903-1904, the average daily number was over 1,500, and the numbers had reached 1,700. At our last meeting the number in the house was 1,637, so that we have relieved the Cork Asylum to the number of 200. Then the mortality had been much greater in the Cork Asylum; there was an outbreak of typhoid.

29448. At present your institution, my lord, is practically full?—It is full.

29449. Then you cannot relieve the workhouses of the patients that are there at present?—No. Our original idea in 1899 was that we would erect two auxiliary asylums; at that time we felt that between the patients in the workhouses and the excessive number in the Cork Asylum that we had to make provision for 800 patients, and that in order to do so we should erect two auxiliary asylums of 400 each, and the idea at the time was that one of them would be at Youghal, and the other would be at Schull. We had actually entered into negotiations with the Schull Board of Guardians, and they had passed a resolution to give up their workhouse, but we met with so much opposition in Youghal that we thought we would work out Youghal first.

29450. You intended to have an auxiliary for the east and one for the west?—Yes.

29451. You did not intend to put males in the one and females in the other?—I was working out a new idea like this our minds were not perfectly clear at first and we were clearing up as things went on, but there was a sort of idea that there would be one asylum for males and another for females, but it was pointed out that it would work better to have males and females in one institution for the labour of the men in the farm, and of the women in the laundry would be useful. However, that is a matter of detail, but our committee has never withdrawn the view that they intend to establish a second auxiliary asylum.

29452. You are still personally in favour of extending the auxiliary system to enable you to take the patients from the workhouses?—Undoubtedly, we are still overcrowded in the central asylum, 800 more than the accommodation was intended for. You know the number of inmates in the workhouses.

29453. Mr. MURPHY.—There are fifty-nine males and 106 females at present?—That corresponds pretty well with the figures I have here.

29454. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of keeping your auxiliary within a close distance of the parent house, as at Youghal?—The further away the better, because to carry out my idea, you never can work up the auxiliary properly except you establish in these institutions quite a new idea from within, a new ideal, and you must start a new tradition altogether, and if you allow the ideas and traditions of the existing lunatic asylums to get into the auxiliary asylums you never can work them as they ought to be worked, because once the ideas and traditions of the present lunatic asylums get into the auxiliary asylums you will have the staff there demanding exactly the same salaries, and everything must be done in precisely the same way; you must have all the equipment and outfit in the auxiliary that you have in the central asylum. That equipment and outfit is absolutely worthless, it is a waste of money, and consequently if you are to work the auxiliary, as in my opinion the Act of Parliament intended, it should be worked, you must set up a new tradition, and consequently the farther away the better.

28455. Mr. MURKIN.—Your idea, my lord, is that domestic care is the main factor?—It must be a home; it is not a lunatic asylum at all; it is a home.

28456. CHAIRMAN.—A better home than the workhouse?—Of course, and a better home than the lunatic asylum.

28457. Dr. BUCKER.—In what way, my lord?—In the way that people are really more comfortable and happy; they have more domestic happiness.

28458. How do you utilise their labour?—You must remember that the labour energy of the two classes is quite different. Among the acute insane many are full of vigour and full of life—insanity is, in fact, an excess of vigour both mental and physical, and hence you must utilise that energy, and from the curative point of view it is a most useful thing to employ that energy. But take an imbecile, imbecility is the absence of all vitality, the imbecile lives an animal life or perhaps a vegetable life; you take a person born an idiot, it is the same thing; you have not the same opportunity of utilising labour or the same amount of labour to utilise, but of course you will have a certain amount of labour energy and that labour energy has been utilised chiefly on the land.

28459. How much land have you?—Around the asylum first there were about twenty acres, and since then we have paid £550 for a farm; I cannot tell you the amount of land in that farm.

28460. CHAIRMAN.—But you look forward to having the male and female inmates as far as possible exercised in labour on this land?—Yes; then of course about the yard and premises they have to do a good deal, cutting coal, cleaning up walks, a sort of house labour life; I don't think we can go very far in the way of getting up workshops. The inspectors think we ought to have tailors' shops and carpenters' shops and all sorts of shops. We have not got the class of people for those shops, and amongst the acute insane, people that never learned a trade, can be utilised owing to their mental activity, but the class of people we have to deal with, chronic lunatics and imbeciles, it would be a hopeless task to attempt to teach them trades.

28461. Dr. BUCKER.—Don't the classes of acute and chronic run into each other?—Of course they do.

28462. Is there anything distinct except the mere name?—Of course they teach.

28463. After the acute stage is over, don't they become much the same as the chronic class?—I quite agree with you that the two classes touch each other exactly the same as sane and insane touch each other. It is impossible to draw a strict line of demarcation between the sane population of Cork and the insane in the asylum; they touch at the borderland and overlap each other to some extent. But taking the two as a body, the sane population and the insane population, the general characteristics are very different. Now I regard it in precisely the same way as between the acute and dangerous insane and these imbeciles and idiots and chronic cases. A certain number of those in the parent asylum will touch on the fringe of those in Youghal, and even the two fringes will overlap each other, but if you take the body of those in Youghal and the body of those in Eglington they are perfectly distinct and require a distinct treatment, and from the labour point of view there is an enormous difference between them, and hence we look after principally what concerns their physical comforts and feeding.

28464. Mr. MURKIN.—Before you leave that labour question, don't you think it would be advisable to keep those people occupied in some way?—Decidedly, and we are keeping them occupied, utilising their labour, but you will remember we are not in full working order there yet.

28465. CHAIRMAN.—Three half years?—The first half year hardly commenced at all; we have only had it, properly speaking, two half-years working; then the roads down there about the place, the recreation ground and all that, are not fully laid down yet.

28466. You are not quite a going concern yet?—Not in a full sense.

28467. Dr. BUCKER.—Do you say that it would cost you more to utilise their labour?—In one sense it will; it will cost us more to utilise the labour, but on the other hand the labour will be in itself profitable, and I quite think one will counterbalance the other.

28468. Having an enclosed yard with railing all round you can keep 100 under the supervision of one or two officers, whereas if that 100 men were out on a farm they might need eight or ten officers?—I don't believe that at all; I quite admit that you might require two or three instead of one. The chronic patients are not at all liable to get any sudden attack.

28469. Are they all admitted under a medical certificate—that is, are they classified going to Youghal?—Yes.

28470. The 400 you have in Youghal, are they all taken in Youghal as cases that are not amenable to treatment?—Decidedly.

28471. Have they been under observation by the medical superintendent for some time prior to the permit inscription?—Certainly; it is the resident medical superintendent must admit them all, and no one can go to Youghal except through the resident medical superintendent.

28472. CHAIRMAN.—Even the workhouse cases?—Yes.

28473. Dr. BUCKER.—Did he visit them in the workhouse and transfer them direct to the Youghal Asylum?—In the first instance when we had large numbers in the workhouse, and when we removed them to Youghal, for the sake of convenience and to save expense, and particularly on account of our Cork asylum being overcrowded, we could not have brought them into the Cork Asylum, so the superintendent went round to the workhouse; he examined them there, and he got from the workhouse medical officer and from the master and matron of the workhouse and people in charge of them, the history of each individual case fortified by his own observations, and he sent them down to Youghal on the strength of that opinion, or left them behind in the workhouse. But after the transfer of the first body, since then all pass through the Cork Asylum and nobody goes to Youghal except people that have been under observation in Cork Asylum for some time.

28474. Would it not be a better thing to make it a condition that they should not get in in any other way?—That was the condition, but when we started first that condition was an impossibility; you could not do it.

28475. CHAIRMAN.—They were all admitted to the asylum nominally on transfer?—Yes, but at present they all pass through the asylum. Of the 430 in Youghal at present I should say 350 have passed through the Cork Asylum; at least over 200 of them, and then according as they die out all the fresh cases will pass through the Cork Asylum.

28476. What does the staff consist of at present at Youghal?—In the first place there are ten men there.

28477. One of those men is manager?—One of the men is manager, another is clerk, another is a store-keeper, and the others act as general helpers and assistants, and do the work of attendants, servants, cooks, landresses, and everybody else. And the manager and clerk do actually the work of attendants. The clerk generally makes up her books at night, so you may regard at least eight out of the ten as added to the attendants. Of the secular attendants there is one head attendant, or sort of general manager; he works both outside and inside, works out on the farm and about the yard.

28478. How many male attendants are there and female?—There are three charge male attendants. The ten men are paid in salaries £155 a year. There was a question as to whether they would take rations or get money in lieu of rations, so it was finally agreed to give them £20 a head in lieu of rations. The salary of the general manager is £45 a year and rations of course. There are three charge attendants, males at £30 each, that makes £90. There are five male under-attendants at £18 each, that is £90 more. There are two night male attendants at £26, and that makes £52. Therefore on the male side attending to the patients you have ten attendants and this general manager; then, of course, you will remember that the men go about amongst the men as well as amongst the women. On the female side you have one charge attendant at £30, you have six under-attendants at £18 making £78, one housemaid at £15, one night air-wind at £18.

28479. Only one?—Only one; there are only 150 women in the place. One cook at £20, that gives you as special attendants on the women eight attendants, ten women altogether. You will remark that the number of attendants for the 150 women seems to be greater than the number for the men; you will remark that we have eight attendants for 150 women, whereas we have only eleven for 250 men. The reason for that is that some of the female attendants help to do other work about the place, sewing and that. The remainder of our staff consists of an engineer at a salary of £70 a year without rations, a fireman at £22 a year without rations, a gardener at £22 a year without rations, but he has a house to live in, and he gets fire and light; he lives in a porter's lodge. Then our medical officer gets £100 a year without any other emoluments, and the chaplain lives on the premises and attends the meetings of the asylum, and helps to manage the business generally; he gets a salary of £100 a year, and has a house, so the total salaries we pay is £265, and then there is £200 a year in lieu of rations for the men there.

28480. Thirty-six paid officials?—Yes.

28481. What are the duties of the visiting medical officer?—He goes there every morning, spends two hours a day there, and he has to go round and see all the patients, the same as the resident medical superintendent has to do in Cork; he has to see the entire inmates of the place every morning, and, of course, he has to pay particular attention to any of those that are sick.

28482. He would have some sick from time to time?—Of course he is hardly ever without having some people physically sick. Then, if there are 150 people physically ill that will require to be visited more than once in the day, just like any other medical man in charge of a patient he is bound to visit that person; if he sees a patient in the morning and considers him dangerously ill and it is necessary to visit him a second time in the day, he is bound to come just as if it was his own paying patient outside. He lives in the town a short distance off, and he must spend two hours a day there; we are going to get telephonic communication between the institution and his house so that he can be summoned at any hour.

28483. In sick cases have any of the men or female attendants special nursing knowledge?—Some of the men have been in institutions over in England; they have special nursing knowledge, of course; and some have formal certificates of nursing.

28484. None of the secular attendants have?—No, the Inspectors complain that none of them have got the Medical-Psychological certificate, and they seem very distressed over that; I am not in the least distressed, I confess, because we are not going to treat psychological patients at all; if we were I would feel distressed over it.

28485. I think you were about to go on to the cost of working?—I am sure you quite understand what is meant by the cost of maintenance of the asylum.

28486. It means the entire expenses divided by the number of patients?—Yes, omitting from the calculation money spent on buildings or the repayment of loans for building purposes, and also having taken into account any money received from paying patients, so that the net average cost means the cost per head to the public purse; it does not mean the total cost of the patients and of the establishment, because supposing you had ten paying patients you would have repayment.

28487. You don't take those into consideration?—No, not in calculating that item.

28488. Before you go on, how much money was borrowed for the building?—We were in a bad way there; we borrowed a great deal of money, and there is one of the points in which, if any other auxiliary asylums are established, things will have to be greatly improved. The establishment of this Youghal Asylum was initiated by the County Borough of Cork and the County Council, and they consulted the engineer of the borough and one of the county surveyors. These two gentlemen drew up plans, and these plans had practically been adopted by both bodies when it was discovered that the asylum committee was the proper authority to deal with this question, and when the matter came before the asylum committee it came with the plans already drawn up and accepted, and, therefore, I wish to say that I am in no way responsible for the money spent on the buildings, and if we have to establish a second auxiliary asylum, which I think we shall have to do, I think we will have a very different capital expenditure. The amount of money spent by us is fully £25,000.

28489. If you have formed any opinion as the subject, will it be possible to indicate what portions of the items you would have struck out if you were doing it de novo?—I don't know that I would have struck out any of the items. The auxiliary asylum is three-fourths a new building altogether, and so in reality we have erected a new auxiliary asylum. If we were doing the thing again we would not have touched Youghal, but would have taken up one of the workhouses in the county, and instead of spending £25,000 in erecting a new building, I am quite certain we could repair and repopulate and furnish another workhouse in the county for 400 patients for £4,000 or £5,000.

28490. Structures £25,000, and furniture and fittings about £2,000?—I don't think I would spend more than £1,000 on structural alterations, I mean stone and mortar alterations; then, of course, there would be heating and closets and furniture. If you take in heating and ventilation and closets I think £3,000 would cover it, and you could furnish it for £2,000. The new building cost £17,000, and then we got up electric light which I don't think we should have got up; that cost £1,500, heating and ventilation, £1,500, that is £3,000. Of course that accommodates two engineers, one at £78 and a fitter at £23, and it also runs up our coal bill enormously every year; that is an exceedingly expensive item; I know I have no electric light in my own house.

28491. I take it your personal view would be against taking the Youghal Workhouse if it were available?—On the contrary, my personal view would be to take up a workhouse, and by preference I would take up the Youghal Workhouse.

28492. To complete your buildings there?—Yes. Having started Youghal, my personal view would be to take up the Youghal Workhouse and work them together; that would be a far better way. I am opposed to new buildings, and as we have already established one branch of the asylum at Youghal, by preference I would take up the Youghal Workhouse, although they think in Cork that as I live in the West I should defend the West, but I don't take that view of the public service.

28493. Dr. Reuben.—You said something about a higher staff when you spoke of the asylum; I take it that that letter of the Inspectors means that the higher staff referred only to the administrative officers, the medical officers, not a higher paid staff?—I quite agree with you there; they did not intend a higher paid staff, but they intend, in my view, that we should have a similar staff in a place like Youghal to what you would have in the main asylum, and that is a thing we could not afford.

28494. CHAIRMAN.—They wanted to run it on the same lines as the parent institution, and the committee wanted to run it on different lines?—Quite so; we have established a new type of institution; there is nothing like it as far as I know in existence, and I don't see how anybody could read the Local Government Act and not see that a new type of institution is intended.

28495. There is no separate committee for Youghal?—No, we have only one asylum district, made up of the county and city; we have only one committee.

28496. The same committee manages the parent house and the auxiliary?—Certainly, and if we get a second auxiliary the same committee will manage it. But we have established a house committee for Youghal.

28497. That has an advantage in ensuring acquaintance with the rules and management of asylums of the higher type and the lower?—Yes, the patients are under our charge in Cork, and then they are transferred and still remain under our charge in Youghal, and occasionally, if one becomes dangerous, that patient comes back from our house in Youghal to our house in Cork. We have a separate house committee for Youghal, and a separate house committee for Cork.

28498. Are you, my Lord, on each?—I am on each, but I rarely attend the house committee meetings, because I live so very far away; things are very inconvenient; for instance, I had to come up to Cork last night to be here this morning. I attend the monthly meetings rather regularly. Then there is a house committee that assembles in Cork a week before the monthly meeting to look after the internal house business, and that committee reports to the general monthly meeting. The house committee also meets at Youghal a few days before the monthly meeting, and also reports to the monthly meeting. The business is done for Cork and Youghal at the monthly meetings.

28499. I think it is the view of your committee that the only medical attendance at Youghal should be the visiting medical officer?—That is our opinion, and we fought a hard battle over that. And we fought against their sending a medical officer from Cork to Youghal because he would carry down with him the traditions of the lunatic service, and in spite of all our committee could do he would run the auxiliary asylum on those lines, and we would not have it. It is a class of knowledge that is mischievous and injurious to us.

28500. You have the advantage of the Inspectors' visits?—We have.

28501. Mr. MURKIN.—When the Inspectors recommended a higher staff inferentially they meant a higher paid staff?—They meant a staff exactly the same as in the main asylum. Our medical officers in Cork in salaries alone cost us £1,610 a year. Then the superintendent inhabits a large mansion that was built for him at an expense of several thousand pounds; the rent would be £200 a year and washing and garden, and so on. The assistant medical officers have all furnished apartments, so that at least these emoluments would be £600 or £700 more. The medical staff costs at least £2,200 a year in Cork. There are only 1,617 patients there—there have been over 1,600, so for the purpose of comparison we will call it 1,600, and compare 1,600 with 400; we pay £2,800 for medical attendance on 1,600 at Cork, and we pay £150 for medical attendance on 400 at Youghal; that makes a very serious difference; it comes to something like Mr. a patient in Cork, it comes to only £s. a patient per year in Youghal, and hence you see what a serious thing it would be for us to admit the Inspectors' view that we should have a distinct staff of higher officials.

28502. Your idea mainly was to give the patients domestic comfort at a low figure?—Exactly, and we proposed all along to give them a higher style of domestic and physical comfort than they had in any asylum in Ireland, and we feel them better than any asylum in Ireland.

28503. Is your dietary scale better than the parent house?—Yes, and we are able to give them food in a better and more comfortable condition. In the half-year to 30th March the total cost of maintenance was £3,172; in that there was on building £200.

28504. Roughly speaking, £3,000?—Now, unfortunately, I am not able to give you the exact average number of inmates there during that time.

28505. What was the latest calculation made as to the average cost per inmate?—We have not had it this year.

28506. Because I have heard a figure mentioned in a general way?—My theoretical figure from the start was that we would keep them at £15 a head. Now the staff is a little more expensive than I calculated on; I calculated we would keep a staff there for £300 a year, but the staff is now £900. In the £200 a year I meant only salaries; however, the ration will work out at less than I calculated, so that I will believe we will work it at £15 a head per annum.

28507. Could you have prepared for us a calculation to a recent date giving us details from the books?—I can, of course; all in the world I want is to find out the average number in residence, for I have all the other information.

28508. What you have now is the figure for the half-year from September to March last?—That figure would work out on 370 patients at £15 a head. These figures include payment for a number of articles that were really furnishing. In the strictest sense of the word we have not the figures except from March last.

28509. Dr. BROWN.—You said this worked out to about £15?—On 370 patients.

28510. Had you 370 all the time?—I cannot say that distinctly. At one monthly meeting it was announced there were 368 patients, and at another 365, so that I cannot pin myself to those figures. But I have one point that will be a little more reliable. Starting with the present half-year five months have run and we have paid the bills for the last five months, and here are our accounts (produced). That first month includes the payment of loans, though that is headed May, it is really the accounts for April paid at our May meeting. The last payment was made in September; of course it is for the August month. That first month includes a half-year of the repayment of loans, which is £769, so that you exclude that figure it is £498. The next month you will see is £410. The next month is £338, and the reason is a large cargo of coal came in in that month. The next month is £264, and the next £381; that gives exactly an average of £441 per month; that would work out at £14 per head per year; twelve months would be £5,292.

28511. CHAIRMAN.—What number of patients do you take?—360, and I am pretty sure of that figure.

28512. Then the more patients you get in the lower the rate will be?—I don't think that calculation is quite fair, because in the first months the average amount of clothing and other things did not come in, and I would not pin myself to the £14. My distinct opinion is that we will work it out at my original figure, £15, but I am quite satisfied to stick my reputation on the fact that we will work for £15 a head.

28513. What does the parent house cost?—The usual asylum cost is £24 a head.

28514. You have not taken credit for the £s. with you or the 4s. with them?—No, I calculated on exactly the same lines; our last year was £24.

28515. Dr. BROWN.—Some of them are down as low as £21?—Yes, but you will remember some of them are up to £30; Mullingar and Belfast are pretty bad, and Richmond is not satisfactory.

28516. I thought Belfast was down to £21 or £22?—It is very recently they have come down. The report for 1903 is the last I had.

28517. You mentioned about maintenance—I am not very clear how you said the asylum made up their maintenance—did you say all their income from paying patients is deducted?—Yes, is deducted first before they strike their average.

28518. That is rather misleading, because one place might have a large number of paying patients?—It is rather misleading; here in their system (explains tables). The Inspectors are always advising the committees that by enlarging their asylums they would have the benefit of a higher staff, and therefore that they would save the expense of the resident medical superintendent, and they would have the advantage of the cheaper staff that would come from larger numbers; that argument is, to say the least of it, unsound, and so my mind misleading, for if that were a sound argument the larger asylums in Ireland should be worked more cheaply than the smaller asylums, and the extraordinary fact is that the larger asylums are the most expensive; Richmond is the biggest of all, and it works out at £37 a head.

28519. CHAIRMAN.—They don't think anything of expanding large sums there?—That is for buildings.

28520. Mr. MURKIN.—They would be cheaper if worked on the same lines?—No, they could not be. The number of officials will run up in the exact proportion of the number of patients, for instance, our resident medical superintendent in Cork is paid every month £70 odd.

CHAIRMAN.—Then coal and light for instance. The same coal and the same light will serve for a very much larger number of patients. You reduce the cost per head under that item.

28521. Mr. MURKIN.—Take your own house—could you not keep your 360 patients at a lower rate per head than you could keep 150 patients?—Under a re-arrangement, yes; but if you start with an asylum of 400 and if you run that number up to 600 or 800 you cannot keep 800 at one penny per head less than the 400, because the salaries of all your officials must run up in proportion to the number of patients. In the smaller asylums the resident medical superintendent has only £350 or £400; in the larger asylums he has from £1,500 or £1,800 a year.

28522. There is no must in it; it is all the work of the committee?—But we take what exists; if you make me Chair of Ireland I will undertake to settle the matter for you, but take the committees as they exist, and take officials as officials exist, there is the extraordinary fact that the bigger the asylum the more expensive it is. It is not a metaphysical or physical necessity, but in the state of things, unfortunately, it amounts to a material necessity.

28523. CHAIRMAN.—Whereas it ought to be the other way?—That is it; I am entirely with Mr. Murnaghan, and if he and I got express command I think we would make it alright. Now the salaries in Cork come to £280 per month for our staff—that is £3,360 a year; with salaries I add pensions, that is over £5 a year on a patient.

28524. Dr. BROGAN.—In the course of time will you have pensions in Youghal?—Practically, no; the position of medical officer is non-pensionable, and the chaplain is non-pensionable; no doubt if an attendant served there for a long time that attendant will have a pension, but we will never be exposed to any serious pensions.

28525. CHAIRMAN.—Are the attendants on the same footing as regards pensions as the attendants in the parent house?—Yes; if they continue in the service they will be treated in the same way with regard to pensions, but of course their salaries are smaller than in the main asylum.

28526. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—And the fact that some of them live outside the house makes the pension much less?—Yes, the more serious trouble about having a large staff is this that an enormous amount of the provisions is consumed by the staff of the asylums. This is the last report of the Cork Asylum; it is not merely the money you pay them in salaries, but the expense of feeding them is a most serious thing.

28527. CHAIRMAN.—Is there an allowance scale for them?—It is not published if there be. There is the quantity of food stuff that came into the Cork Asylum in 1905, and you will find that the most that came in was 304,000 lbs. of beef, mutton and pork; taking the dietary scale the patients are allowed 2½ lb. of meat per week, and taking fifty-two weeks in the year, that amounts to 136½ lbs. of meat for each patient during the year.

28528. Dr. BROGAN.—That is in the Cork Asylum?—Yes, working on dietary scale, which you have. Taking the 1,550 patients, that would work out at 225,225 lbs. of meat that went to the patients, and it will leave 80,000 lbs. of meat going to the officials—well there would be, I should say, about 100 of them fed up there.

28529. CHAIRMAN.—Do you get the whole carcass?—Yes. Substantially more than one-third of all the meat coming to the institution goes to the officials. Then again you will notice we paid for 32,000 lbs. of butter in the course of that year; that cost us at least £1,400; the dietary scale makes provision only for ½ oz. of butter to patients on Friday, given to those who don't take fish, but, assuming that they all get ½ oz. of butter, that comes to 2,400 lbs.; that will leave 30,000 lbs. of butter to be accounted for.

28530. Dr. BROGAN.—Don't the medical officers often allow butter and eggs additional?—I daresay they do, but you have got a very large margin still. We get 14,000 dozen of eggs into the asylum in twelve months at a cost of £525, and except the extras given to patients there is no room for eggs in the dietary scale. If you look to Youghal you will find that the butter in Youghal costs 25 a month for 400 patients, or 475 a year, whereas in Cork it came to over £100 a month. Therefore, in the existing asylum the maintenance of the staff is an exceedingly serious question—more serious from my point of view than their salaries.

28531. CHAIRMAN.—That is assuming all these provisions outside the scale are consumed by the staff?—Well, they must go somewhere.

28532. That is the point, but where?—If you maintain 400 patients in Youghal getting the same amount of butter as in Cork, for £5 in the month, it becomes a serious question to inquire what becomes of £112 worth of butter in the Cork Asylum for four times the number of patients; you have from 160 to 180 officials to be fed in Cork, whereas in Youghal you have only twenty officials to be fed. All this is the reason why I am so exceedingly emphatic on the necessity of keeping an auxiliary asylum quite distinct from the tradition of the other, or you cannot prevent the waste that goes on.

28533. Has the committee ever looked into this question of butter and other things at the parent asylum?—Well, they have, but you must remember the committee is practically useless; it is the person who manages the institution; you may as well think a man with an extravagant wife can have his family go on well; it is the people who work the place, it is the tradition amongst those. You know you have got a certain tradition in the asylums of Ireland, and the bigger the asylum the more extravagant the tradition, and if you let that tradition into your auxiliary asylums the committee is quite powerless. Now, according to my view, I will commit myself to the £16 per head per year. I quite take the risk of committing myself to that figure. That works out that we get five guineas from the local taxation account, and that will leave £10 15s. 6d. to be paid by the local rates. In the main asylum the cost is £24, and of that we get ten guineas from the local taxation account and that leaves £15 10s. 6d. to be paid by the local rates.

28534. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—My Lord, it must be borne in mind that when you do get the ten guineas you are not getting it from the Treasury—it makes a hole in an Irish fund?—That is the very point I am going to develop for you. By our operations in Youghal we are saving the local taxation account £2,000 a year, and we save the local rates of the county about £1,800 a year. Now there were over 4,000 of these patients in the workhouses at the time the Local Government Act was passed, and if those 4,000 patients were all transferred to the main asylum they would be a charge of £40,000 a year to the local taxation account. This local taxation account is pretty well bankrupt. The income of the account in 1899-00 was £203,000; next year was £208,000; then £209,000; and then £211,000, so that it increased only at the rate of £2,000 a year, and since the passing of the Act that no new public-house licences can be granted, I don't think it can increase any more at all. The expenditure in 1899-00 was £225,000; next year, £270,000; next year, £282,000; and next year, £293,000, so that the expenditure increased at the rate of £14,000 a year. So that while in 1899 there was a balance of £23,000 in the account in 1905 there was a deficit of £63,000, and things have gone on since then; I have not the figures for the last two years, they are not published anywhere, and in order to get these figures I had to apply directly to Dublin Castle. I am quite sure in 1906 the payment out of the account will be £20,000 more than the income. If these 4,000 patients in the workhouses had been saddled on that account where would we be. The question will arise how it is that the account has been able to pay more than its income. There was a balance the first year of £23,000, the next year of £17,000, and the third year of £5,000, and, furthermore, there was a windfall for which the Cork Asylum is to be thanked. We raised at the Cork Asylum a question that we were unfairly treated by the Treasury in the transfer from the old system to the new in regard to asylums; we made a tremendous amount of noise over this, made speeches, published pamphlets, and wrote letters to the newspapers. I went over to London and had a battle with the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Financial Secretary of the Treasury, with the result that we made them pass for us a supplementary estimate and give us £37,300; that went into the Irish local taxation account, and that is the surplus on which the county is working at the present moment, and when they exhaust this you will have to apply that section of the Local Government Act.

28535. Another visit to London?—I don't propose it. Then you will have to fall back on the reduction of the grants of 4s. a head. Therefore, by the pelf we are following we are benefiting not only ourselves in the County Cork, but the people all over Ireland, and if this auxiliary system policy is extended to the whole country it will be to the benefit of the country at large. I said to you a few minutes ago that we had 1,718 patients in Cork a few years ago; now we have only 1,500 odd; there are 200 below in Youghal now. When these patients were in Cork they were costing the local taxation account £1,600; they are now below in Youghal and are costing the local taxation account only £1,500, so that the transfer of these patients has saved the local taxation account £1,000 a year, and hence if you establish that principle pretty generally throughout the country it will have the effect of keeping the local taxation account solvent, and the Guardians will be able to get fees for their medical officers and their apothecaries, and various other people will be able to get paid, whereas they cannot get paid if the system is adopted of transferring the harmless patients from the workhouses into the main asylum.

23535. We have been asked all over the country to recommend that the managers of auxiliary asylums should be paid £s. a week instead of 2s. 6d.—I think the men who recommend that don't know what they are talking about; I would be strongly against it. Of course the Inspectors have told me, "Oh, the grant has been increased in Scotland, and you will get an increased grant in Ireland." There is no possibility of our getting an increased grant under the present conditions, since the establishment of the Irish Development Grant there is no possibility of our getting additional money out of the Treasury, and we simply have to be as economical as we can at home. Of course I quite understand that the people who make that recommendation simply look to their own immediate interests.

23536. They don't see it coming out of an exhaustible fund?—In Cork we kept writing and speaking and lecturing the country, and still we could not get the asylum committees out of the view that it was not from the Treasury the capital grant was coming. They said the Treasury grant ought to be increased; we kept writing back that it was not the Treasury grant; it was an Irish grant, and still that point could not be got into their heads. These men think it is the Treasury they are milking; in reality they are robbing an exclusively Irish fund.

23537. That £37,000 came from vested money?—Oh, yes, we made out our case against the Treasury.

23538. As managers of the local taxation account?—The Cork Asylum started this agitation, and we got the other asylums to pass resolutions, and we got various questions asked by members of Parliament; we had taken the principal part in it in Cork, so to give effect to our agitation when the Irish estimates were on in May I crossed over to London and interviewed several people there, and finally I saw there was nothing for it only to go straight to the Chancellor, Sir Michael Hicks Beach. I went to Sir Michael and gave him a half quarter of an hour of it; I could not get him to agree to our view, but I saw the late Mr. Hanbury, the Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Hanbury did agree with me, but in any case a couple of weeks afterwards they put on a supplemental vote.

23539. Do you know on what principle (that was put on?)—I do, but it is a long long story; it would more than double my evidence; if you wish I will send you a little pamphlet published about it. You see then that I am exceedingly vigorous on extending the principle of these auxiliary asylums to the country as a whole, but I wish to say this, except you extend them on the principle of being a perfectly distinct type of institution and keep them from under the wing of the existing lunatic asylum system it is far better to increase the main asylum than set up other asylums of exactly the same type; but if they are set up as we have set up the Youghal Asylum I believe they will be exceedingly useful to the country from every point of view.

23540. You appear to acquiesce in the high expenditure of the parent institution?—A great deal of it is necessary; for instance, I have mentioned to you that our medical staff in Cork costs us 35s. a head, but that medical staff, I believe, is necessary; possibly we might get on with one medical officer less, but you cannot in the main asylum get on without a large medical staff; then, again, in the main asylum you must sometimes have two attendants looking after a single patient; you cannot therefore get on without a large staff of attendants, but my view is this, that in the main asylum you should keep only the curable and dangerous cases, and those that are quiet and chronic ought to be transferred to auxiliary asylums.

23541. What about the filthy and bed-ridden cases?—I think those ought to be transferred also to the auxiliary asylums. That may happen to run up the charge a little in the auxiliary asylums, but still you could keep them cheaper and better in the auxiliary than in the main asylum—the filthy cases.

MR. THOMAS LINCHER, J.P., M.C.C., examined.

23542. CHAIRMAN.—You are a witness on behalf of the Cork Board of Guardians?—Yes.

23543. You are also one of the managing body of the Youghal Asylum?—Yes.

23544. Is there anything you would wish to say in the first place about the Youghal Asylum?—I think after his Lordship's evidence there is very little left for me to say except that in the main I agree with his remarks.

23545. Is there any point on which you differ with him?—No, the Board of Guardians, for whom I appear here, are of opinion that until sufficient accommodation is provided by auxiliary asylums the section of the Local Government Act, which prevents the asylum committee from sending patients to our workhouses, should still be left in force. As you are aware by the Local Government Act, when an auxiliary workhouse is established in a county, the power then to send patients to a workhouse ceases; in my opinion that is a mistake to this extent—it should have said until an auxiliary asylum that could accommodate all the lunatics was established. We have at least 400 imbeciles and harmless lunatics to be provided for in the county. I should remark that in my opinion when an auxiliary asylum is established it should be kept as clear as possible from interference by the main asylum, because I think the two institutions are radically different.

23546. You have the same managing body—do you approve of that?—I think the management would be good enough.

23547. What you mean is interference by the officials?—Yes. If it could possibly be called a home for imbeciles and idiots instead of an auxiliary asylum it would be more appropriate. The rules which apply to the main asylum are not at all suitable for an auxiliary asylum.

23548. Now, then, as regards the Cork Board of Guardians?—As I mentioned on being examined on Monday, I am not at present a member of the Cork Board of Guardians, but I was at the time your invitation to attend the Commission was received, and they appointed me a witness, and I have a letter from the clerk asking me to appear. The Board of Guardians have sent to your Commission answers to the queries addressed to them, and I am here generally to support those answers. As far as the Cork Union is concerned, the Guardians are opposed to amalgamation with any other; it is quite large enough, if not too much at present, and it would not be prudent to increase it, or add any portion of any other union to it.

23549. MR. MEYERSON.—But do you think it is outside the question of segregation of classes and their removal from the workhouses?—Oh, certainly not; in fact the Board of Guardians have approved of the idea of having children brought up in a disused workhouse, and the application of it to an institution for training children would be very useful.

23550. CHAIRMAN.—This was one of the first unions in the country to start the boarding-out of children?—Yes; I believe they have done on 200 boarded out.

23551. Have you had personal experience of that system?—Yes, for about twenty-three years.

23552. What is your own opinion of the success of the system after the long trial it has received in Cork—I think it is a very successful system if properly carried out.

28554. By carrying out your reform is sufficient inspection?—Yes.

28555. Is there any other safeguard?—There is also a safeguard as regards the class of children to be sent out. I have noticed one of your questions as to the children of habitual criminals, and in my opinion very great care should be exercised before those children would be boarded out, for this reason, that when they are boarded out they have to attend the same school and become the companions of children outside, and they are very likely to have an injurious effect on the morals of those children.

28556. You are now thinking of children fairly grown well up, five or six years old, who have been associated with the home of bad parents?—Yes, of course, if they are taken out at such an age that the connection with the parents did not have an influence on them, then my objection would not apply.

28557. You would have all the children born in the workhouse boarded out as soon as they reached an age at which the doctor considered they might safely be boarded out?—Yes. Every child in the Cork Workhouse which could legally be boarded out was always boarded out at once.

28558. Would you extend the power of the Guardians and enable them to board out every child that had to be supported out of the rates?—I would, with the reservation I have already made.

28559. Are not those children that would, even under the existing law, go to an industrial or reformatory school?—In my opinion that would be the proper place for them; I have had experience of what I am speaking about; I have one case especially before my mind where a child sent out in that way finished up in a reformatory; thieving was the vice to which he was addicted, it would be a mistake to send out a child of that sort.

28560. Then the Guardians should have a discretion either to board them out or send them to an industrial or reformatory institution?—Certainly.

28561. But as far as you had fairly innocent children you would board them out?—Yes.

28562. Have you thought at all of any step that might be taken with regard to the mothers of illegitimate children?—I think the suggestions that have been already made to the Commission would be very good; send them to a home for a period.

28563. Not admit them into the workhouse?—No.

28564. They should go to an institution or refuge under religious management?—I think that would be a very good idea.

28565. And as soon as the time arrived for the child being born they should go to the nearest public maternity hospital, and then back again to the institution?—Yes.

28566. With a view of having them reclaimed and put up again in a position to earn their livelihood as soon as possible?—I think they would have a better chance of becoming reclaimed than in a workhouse.

28567. There is no machinery or arrangement in the workhouse for reclaiming them?—Not as far as I know.

28568. The very vicious and newly-fallen have practically to live together?—Yes, in the same ward.

28569. If you had a sufficient space for lunatics and all kinds of mental diseases in the auxiliary, would you be in favour of keeping any mental cases in the workhouse, or are you of opinion that all such cases should be dealt with by the committee of the asylum or auxiliary?—I would not be in favour of keeping any mental cases in the workhouse.

28570. So you would take out of the workhouse the children, the mothers of illegitimate children, and all mental cases?—Yes, and I would also, in some deserving cases, take out some of the respectable aged poor who had not been long in the workhouse.

28571. I was just coming to that class—they are the largest class that you would have remaining, excluding the sick, that would be the aged and infirm?—Yes.

28572. We received in a great many places suggestions that the aged and infirm would be better in an institution, a county institution, or a district, according to the number of unions united, where they could all be segregated according to character and other considerations?—It occurs to me it would be a very good thing if the respectable aged poor who had to go to the workhouse through no fault of their own, if they were sent to some place such as you mention, but there was another idea that occurred to me having reference to a home of that kind in Cork, which is kept by the Little Sisters of the Poor; I don't know whether the Commission have visited the place or not.

28573. Not in Cork, but I am aware of the system on which the Little Sisters of the Poor in Limerick and elsewhere conduct their establishments?—I think it would be a very good thing if the Guardians sent old people to such an institution and paid for them as they do for the blind.

28574. Do the Little Sisters keep out of that all objectionable characters?—Oh, certainly; it must be a recommended case before they would take it.

28575. You would give the Guardians power to board out all suitable cases in such an institution?—Yes, of course; I am not aware whether the managers of that institution would take them in, but I say to give the Guardians power in case they came to an agreement.

28576. Then as regards cases that would not be suitable for that, and there are many remote parts of the country where it would be difficult to get such an institution as the Little Sisters, what would you think of having a district workhouse set apart altogether for the aged and infirm of a county or portion of a county or for a couple of small counties grouped?—I believe there is a good deal in the suggestion, but at the same time if that central institution was too far away from the former home.

28577. It should be accessible by railway, but it would be out of the parish and surroundings with which the people were familiar—it would necessarily be away in most cases?—If these poor people thought they would be more comfortable in a place like that they would not have such an objection to go a distance.

28578. It was put very forcibly before us yesterday by one of the witnesses that one of the great objections that these people have to go into a place like that is that they would be buried in a workhouse away from home; at all events that objection could be met if there were an obligation that these people be buried in their own burial place?—I think that would remove all the objections.

28579. We said that these poor people once they enter the aged and infirm ward are very seldom indeed visited; the majority never visited; comparatively few are visited; it is quite different as regards the sick who are visited, but the aged and infirm are very often the last surviving single members of an expiring generation, with no one to visit them?—Of course you have the returns; if that is so, I think the objection against a central institution would not be so great.

28580. That would get out of the workhouse all the inmates except the sick and the casual poor—that is the class that you are very familiar with in Cork—people who are out of work for a few weeks come into the workhouse and go out again, and out, you have a good many of those?—We have in Cork, and people who travel from one workhouse to another.

28581. There are the tramps, a different class to people who are usually destitute, perhaps very often owing to intemperate habits or dissipation, they have not anything laid by—for instance, men working on the quays, carrying large sums for a short time, don't keep anything over for a time when there is no work?—There is a considerable number of that class.

28582. What do you think would be the best plan to adopt as regards that class, if you had the workhouse practically cleared of all classes except the sick?—The best plan would be if you could provide them with work. The workhouse, if you carry out your idea, would be comparatively empty, and there would be more room for carrying out some industrial work.

28583. You would put them in there. This question really only arises in the cities?—If the outdoor relief could be extended.

28584. Now, don't you think the outdoor relief would be dangerous?—I rather thought you were going to recommend that they should be put into a place and work?—If that could be done, but in the workhouse where there was not sufficient land attached it would be difficult.

Sept. 27, 1904
Mr. Thomas
Lynch.

23593. You see it is dealing with a city population, and they have no experience of land as a rule?—If you could establish some industry in the workhouse that would keep them at work.

23594. And make it distasteful for them?—As a test of destitution.

23595. You think it would be possible to have to a limited extent such labour works in a city like Cork?—I think it would be possible, but it is very difficult to select what branch of industry to take up.

23596. Do you think that would be the best way of dealing with the comparatively small number of casual destitute in the city?—Either that or give them outdoor relief under very stringent conditions.

23597. You have the power at present of giving them outdoor relief under certain conditions—do you think it would be at all safe to enlarge that?—I am entirely in favour of outdoor relief, provided there are proper safeguards, and one of the safeguards recommended by the Board is the appointment of an inspector of outdoor relief, a man who would go around and pay surprise visits to the different people who are receiving relief—one man might do for the whole of Munster or Cork County.

23598. I expect a man would be quite handsomely employed in the city of Cork—it does not do to make an inspection for the purpose of entering certain representations made, a man is not a good inspector until he becomes familiar with the place and the people, and then he can put his finger on the sore spot?—I thought an inspector for the whole county would be sufficient; they would not know when he would turn up.

23599. But when he turned up he might not be effective?—Well, it would be better than the present system.

23600. You have to get a very close knowledge to test the bona fides of applicants for relief?—If such an officer was known to be in existence several ratepayers, who don't like to come forward, might put him on the right track, and if there were no deserving cases would mention them to him.

23601. Is Dublin the outdoor relief is given in kind?—I have heard that, but have no experience of it.

23602. What would your opinion be as regards able-bodied females and able-bodied men out of work—such a man as in the present condition of affairs would go into the workhouse for a week or two weeks?—Are you excluding the sick from your question?

23603. Oh, quite; this is altogether able-bodied, for the sick will get relief, of course, but the able-bodied man, who is casually destitute, would you give him relief in kind or in money?—I think it would be much better give it to him in kind.

23604. Do you bake your own bread in the house?—Yes.

23605. So you would be able to distribute, as the Dublin Guardians do, send round your own bread cart?—Yes, there is space to bake all the bread required.

23606. You would not have many?—No; I think many would refuse it.

23607. Then they could go without it. That would leave you in Cork Workhouse with nobody in the workhouse except the sick, and this would for a casual workhouse if it were carried out instead of the relief in kind. Would there be then a large amount of building space which could be used as a home for the aged and infirm of all the surrounding unions. The hospital could be very largely increased, of course. You are very short of hospital buildings, but you would have remaining a very large amount of building space if all the children were gone; if all the able-bodied women and mothers of children were gone you would have the whole workhouse cleared out except the sick; then you would not have room for a very large number of the aged and infirm, who could be classified according to their respectability and other circumstances?—Certainly, there would be a good share of room, but at the same time I consider the Cork Workhouse entirely congested.

23608. I am speaking of it when it is empty?—

But it should come down a good deal before I would consider there was sufficient space.

23609. The only class you would leave in it would be the sick—1,500 you may take as the extreme in the worst part of winter?—Then you have to add the casuals and tramps.

23610. We will come to them later on; the aged and infirm say, 500?—Are you providing for the able-bodied women?

23611. They go too. All these able-bodied would have been cases if the system had been in operation for years?—I don't think all the women in the Cork Workhouse are of that class.

23612. Are not most of the women of that class?—I don't think so.

Mr. MURKIN.—234.

23613. CHAIRMAN.—Assuming there to be room?—Assuming there were room, Cork would be an excellent place for it.

23614. If Cork were too full you would have Mallow or Midleton, or some other workhouse?—I agree with you.

23615. You would be in favour of a central institution?—I would.

23616. Now as regards the tramps and casuals. You know the suggestions, I dare say, that have been made to us in a great many other places that after taking all precautions to prevent any bona fide labouring man who is on the road looking for work really being interfered with; that all the professional vagrants or tramps should be prevented in future from tramping round the country; that it should be made an offence to do so, and if a man could not explain why he was doing so he should be sent to a labour house, or a workhouse properly so-called, and there detained under a magistrate's warrant with a view of teaching him habits of industry, and making him give some return for the support he is getting from the people at large in the country?—I do agree with that suggestion.

23617. You don't think it would be an undue interference with liberty if every possible means is taken to protect people who are really looking for work?—If that were done then, I think, the cases of the real tramps should be dealt with in that way.

23618. Supposing a Cork man hears there is a job in Waterford, he can easily get from his parish priest or some person who knows him some documentary evidence to show what he is on the road for?—The danger is that that would be worked as a hardship; perhaps a policeman who might have a grudge against a man might bring that Act into force.

23619. He would be over at Kilmacshane or Fermoy or some place that way, and having what would be equivalent to a passport to pass through he would not be interfered with?—At present I would not commit myself to go as far as that. The Cork Board have recommended that the system at present in force in England be adopted, where they can keep a habitual tramp for a week.

23620. That is not operating in a very satisfactory way at the other side of the Channel?

23621. Mr. MURKIN.—Our people being of a roving disposition it may work more satisfactorily here?—I have a strong objection to a man having to prove his innocence in any court; if there is a charge against him it should be proved.

23622. CHAIRMAN.—It is very difficult to get legal proof of a man being a wanderer?—Then you would be convicting him on suspicion.

23623. Of course that should not be, but in other countries men are not allowed to rove about?—I suppose they make their own laws in those countries. If we had the making of our own laws I would have no objection to that.

Mr. MURKIN.—Is a country that boasts of its freedom the idler and vagabond is brought before a magistrate and gets from one to six months' imprisonment.

23624. CHAIRMAN.—In America and Germany they certainly don't tolerate it?—You are rather afraid that cases might be twisted?—Yes.

23625. Well, that would be abominable, of course?—It is better to put up with the nuisance for a little while longer unless it could be safeguarded.

23626. Is there anything you would like to say about outdoor relief generally?—With regard to the quarter-acre clause, the Cork Board of Guardians would be anxious that that should be extended.

28518. So as to include one acre?—Yes.
28519. Or perhaps something a little over one acre to make it clear of the house and land?—Yes, and the Board are very strong on the appointment of an inspector of outdoor relief.

28521. Why don't they appoint one for their own union?—I am not aware that they have the power, or have asked the Local Government Board; they have appointed a number of relieving officers.

28522. They never proposed that?—I don't think they did; I rather fancy it would be better to have an inspector who was not locally connected at all. I don't know whether the Local Government Board could get their inspectors to do the work or not, the ordinary inspector, not the medical inspector.

28523. When I was a Local Government Board inspector myself I occasionally did not particular cases that I had my suspicions about, but never more than that, and really one's times would not be equal to more than that?—Unless the Local Government Board would appoint one man specially for a province.

28524. My own idea is that in a city if there is much outdoor relief given, a man would be fully occupied, indeed?—This would be merely checking what the relieving officers had done.

28525. He would be very fully occupied, I think?—If he checked the cases once he need not come back on that list for a considerable period.

28526. I differ with you; I think he would have to keep his knowledge up-to-date, week by week, because that is the way the case comes in; the relieving officer might miss it; it is regarded too much in some places in the light of a pension?—Of course the Board are altogether in the hands of the relieving officer; he knows about the case, and the Guardians as individuals know nothing about it. This is my own idea; I would have the surcharge in the case of inspector relief put on the relieving officer unless he placed on his book a note stating he disapproved of such relief.

28527. Is there not such a provision now in the union accounts order, where money is lost owing to the negligence of any person, that person should be surcharged?—The auditor would have to decide who was responsible, and this promise would help him. The relieving officer would say the Guardians put it on without his consent, and the auditor might not come on for twelve months. On my suggestion no case is put on in the Cork Workhouse unless the relieving officer certified it was a fit case; then the auditor will only surcharge the Guardian who initials.

28528. If a Guardian came in and pointed out that he had not the fact before him on which the surcharge was made?—Yes, but don't you think it would make it clearer for the auditor.

28529. I think your suggestion would?—The relieving officer is the man who is supposed to have visited the place.

28530. I don't think any chairman would initial such an order for relief with that note on it?—No, I think he would not. Then a widow with one child is excluded at present.

28531. You would include her?—Yes. Then orphan children, take the case where the father and mother die; we have found some difficulty sometimes at the Cork Board of Guardians in relieving children of that class; we could not give them outdoor relief, and in order to relieve them at all they should be brought into the workhouse and registered before being boarded out; I think power ought to be given to the Board of Guardians to give relief to these people if they have somebody to care them, such as some relative living with them, perhaps an older sister or aunt or grandmother; I think it would be much cheaper for the Guardians to give them relief than to bring them all into the house and board them out.

28532. Your suggestion would be that in the case of orphan children who had some responsible relative of good character to take charge of them, it should be competent for the Guardians to give outdoor relief to them?—If they wished; it would not break up the family; it would keep the family together, brothers and sisters.

28533. On the whole are you satisfied with the distribution of outdoor relief?—The only way I can judge that is to take the amount of relief at the passing of the Local Government Act in the Cork Union; it was £135 a week; now it is between £150 and £160; that increase has altogether taken place in the urban districts attached to the union; there is none, or very little, increase in the rural districts, but in the urban districts of the city, and some other urban districts which form part of the union, an increase has taken place of £50 or £55 a week.

28534. Do you attribute that largely to the area of charge changed?—I do; I would be in favour of divisional charges as far as outdoor relief is concerned unless this system of inspection is carried out if that is not done I would make the outdoor relief a divisional charge. I think divisional charges would check to a considerable extent any improper outdoor relief.

28535. Taking away from the towns the privilege given them under the Act of 1898?—Well, to make a divisional charge.

28536. It was hard on the towns before 1898, so many people coming from the country into the towns; the Act of 1898 gave a benefit to the people in towns and urban districts by making it a union-wide charge?—Yes; the rates in the towns were much higher than in the rural districts, but if they go on increasing the amount of outdoor relief that they were entitled with before the Act was passed—28537. That is where a person had got 2s. they now get 2s. 6d.—do you mean that?—I take the bulk.

28538. That might represent more cases—do you think they have increased the payment per head?—I don't allege that.

28539. It was suggested to us that it would not be quite fair to take away from the towns this benefit but that a sort of standard payment on outdoor relief might be taken for each electoral division, say the existing scale, and then say that anything additional would become an electoral charge?—I take it that would be the scale in existence at the passing of the Local Government Act.

28540. Or even since that?—A good deal of injury has been done to the rural districts since.

28541. Well, that some standard should be fixed after due inquiry, and then anything above that standard would become divisional?—Yes.

28542. Do you think that would be fair?—I think that would be fair, and it would be a check against any extravagance. Militiamen and army reserve men who resort to the workhouse from time to time should be compelled to pay for their maintenance.

28543. I suppose some of these are among the tramps?—Yes; in some cases they leave the workhouse, undergo their training and spend their money, and come back to the workhouse; I think there ought to be a claim on their pay.

28544. Have you made a claim over?—I am not aware that we have.

28545. Do you get a good deal of pension?—Yes.

28546. Have you been advised you have no claim against the payments made to militiamen?—That is my present impression. There is another point that affects Cork Union very much; it is that power ought to be given to the Guardians to pay for the removal of an inmate who does not belong to that union.

28547. That is the Law of Settlement?—We are here in Cork where the shipping companies land all their undesirable and returned emigrants, a great many of whom are lunatics.

28548. That would not be the Law of Settlement—that is where people land out of ships at your port; that you should have the power to send those people to their destination and charge the unions where they come from?—Yes.

28549. You restrict that suggestion to the people who are put off Transatlantic ships?—Yes. Of course there are other people who come to Cork from other countries, but if we get rid of the Transatlantic liners it would meet the greater portion of our claim; in that connection I may mention that the County Council some time ago passed a resolution on that subject. Councillor James O'Neill is in accordance with notice moved:—

Resolved: That we, the Cork County Council, beg to draw the attention of the Executive and of the Irish Members of Parliament to the very unsatisfactory state of the law, which enables lunatic patients and paupers belonging to other counties to be committed to Cork and to remain chargeable to the rates, particularly those who become insane when embarking, or who are found insane when disembarking at Queenstown; also to the injustice of bringing lunatic patients and paupers from England and Scotland without a reciprocal power being granted to Ireland. That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Lord Lieutenant, the Chief Secretary, and the Members of Parliament for the City and County of Cork, and all the public boards in the county.

Councillor Broderick seconded the motion, which was passed unanimously.

28593. Your present suggestion is about those people who disembark?—Yes, I think power ought to be given to pay their expenses; in some cases I think power ought to be given to medical officers to give temporary relief in urgent cases where the relieving officer would live too far away, especially in rural districts; a medical officer might be called in a case where some relief would be necessary, and he would have to go in a very roundabout way to get the nourishment for the patient, sending to the relieving officer; I think it would not be absurd.

28591. We have found it grossly abused in some parts of the country?—I am astonished at that.

28592. The amount of milk and whiskey that was ordered was terrific?—I was not in favour of whiskey as a medicine. The County Council had not sent anybody to attend your inquiry, but I have here a copy of a resolution passed by them on the subject of amalgamation.

On the proposition of Councillor O'Gorman, seconded by Councillor O'Neill, the following resolution was passed:—

"That we, the Council of Cork County, are of opinion that some of the existing eighteen workhouses in the county are not necessary, and should be abolished."

28593. They don't indicate the workhouses, but express the principle?—Yes, they leave it to you.

SEP. 27, 1905
MR. THOMAS
LINDEN.

Dr. CUMMINS further examined.

28594. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to add something to your evidence already given?—About the terrible cases of consumption; I would be anxious for some general rule as in the case of fever patients. Fever patients are not sent to the general body of the house. As regards consumptives I should say the same; they should be treated exactly as fever or other infectious patients; there should be a rule as regards the classification of consumptives as there is with regard to fever patients.

28595. Is not that in the hands of the medical officer?—You get a rush of patients in in the winter time, an enormous number of consumptives and other patients and you simply have not room. I would make it obligatory that there should be room provided for consumptives. Also as regards the fever hospital, I don't think it would be large enough to contain the cases of consumption. Take the cases of consumption—you cannot put them into the fever hospital, because you would have women as well as men, and you have not room. Another thing that I wanted to make an addition to is the question of idiots and imbeciles in the workhouse; there are two classes, one likely to be benefited by treatment—28596. Have you any in the workhouse likely to be benefited by treatment?—These cases generally are sent to some asylum for the treatment of idiots, but there are a number of others who are unable to be treated, not curable in plain terms. I am speaking of these cases; for these cases I think there ought to be some provision; they come in as children; I have some of them in the children's hospital; they grow up then in that hospital sitting in a chair or something of the kind.

28597. Would not Youghal receive these cases?—They are mental diseases—would not Youghal receive all mental disease cases as far as their limits allow?—But these cases require a certain amount of special treatment; most of them are children.

28598. They are hopeless cases?—They are hopeless; you cannot cure them in the sense of putting them to work; they are inoperable and harmless.

28599. Are not these a class that could be suitably dealt with at Youghal?—I think they might be sent to some institution; there are only a few in each workhouse through the country; collect all those and put them into one place, where there would be some proper persons to look after these children; they are all of the same class; hopeless cases.

28600. You prefer to have one institution for all Ireland for hopeless idiots to sending them into an auxiliary?—I would rather have that; I think it would be more humane; these children become the best of other patients, and it is very difficult to avoid that. Whereas, if all of one class were collected from the different unions it would prevent that. Would I be permitted to go into the question of the advisability of removing the fever patients from the fever hospital to the north or south fever hospital.

28601. Dr. REAGAN.—That could be dealt with between the authorities here. It is one of the things you can do—you don't want the law to do that?—I think it would be objectionable, therefore I am against it. A patient comes in from the end of the district suffering from influenza; he comes in eight or ten miles with a high temperature; that patient is put into the ordinary ward; he is found to be suffering from typhoid; we consider that patient is not fit to be sent off again on another journey to the fever hospital.

28602. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing you had them by ones. You have at present two hospitals receiving the both sexes and various kinds of disease; you can have much better classification of disease if you have not to mix the classification of sex, if you have only one sex in each hospital?—What would you do if the union hospital was for female patients and male patients came in—what would you do with them?

28603. Send them to the other hospital?—But many of these cases come into the observation ward.

28604. Do they not come in with a doctor's certificate?—Yes, but the doctor may have examined them in a dark room. A child comes in suffering from a little bronchitis or laryngitis, and it turns out to be measles.

28605. It is a case for local arrangements?—That hospital would not be suitable for consumptives.

The LORD MAYOR OF CORK (ALF. BARNETT), examined.

28606. CHAIRMAN.—Your Lordship wished to give some evidence as regards the poor law system?—I have some questions that were desired for me by the Council. No. 1 refers to the amalgamation of unions in the county. The Council express an opinion thereon. No. 2, as to disposal of workhouses no longer required. Like answer. No. 3, whether with or without a dissolution of any union it would be possible to make better provision for the classification and treatment of the inmates? That the Corporation consider no further provision required beyond that now made for harmless lunatics in the auxiliary asylum at Youghal. No. 4, as to whether any changes in the law and procedure as to administration and in the chargeability of relief would be desirable? No change recommended. No. 5, whether additional accommodation is required for the proper treatment of the sick poor, and, if so, how it should be provided?

None recommended. No. 6, whether any financial or administrative changes are desirable in order to secure a more economical system of relief generally of the sick, the insane, and all other classes of the poor or destitute? None recommended. No. 7, how far in the case of persons not destitute a system of payments or contributions for the treatment of sick or insane in hospitals or other such institutions would be desirable? That such would be desirable as far as the ability of the persons concerned may extend. No. 8, what change may be desirable as to the treatment of tramps or casuals? None recommended. This was confirmed by the Council on the 24th of April, 1904. Those are the answers of the Corporation. But I have heard Dr. Cummins's evidence. Perhaps I did not catch him properly about the patients in the Cork Union. Now there is a very large institution there, a fever hospital; it is generally occupied by advent or sight; on one occasion there were four; I don't know how many there may be in that to-day, and when larger institutions in other cities in Ireland can do without a fever hospital inside their walls, I don't see the necessity of having a very heavy institution like that maintained with a constant staff.

Mayor of Cork

Mayor of Cork.

22667. That is in the union?—Yes; I believe, sir, in the South Dublin Union all the cases are sent to hospitals outside.

22668. Of course they have very large hospitals in the city—Cork-street and the Hardwicke?—And we have a very large and idle one in Cork—the Cork Fever Hospital.

22669. Would they make terms with you to receive all your cases?—I am sure they would if approached.

22670. Has the matter been broached?—Yes, but I don't know what stage it is in now. Mr. Lane may know more about it, but I certainly think there ought to be a change made in that way.

22671. To close the union fever hospital and come to an arrangement with the Cork Fever Hospital for the maintenance of patients?—Yes.

22672. And it would leave you a very fine building for the treatment of other cases?—It would, a very fine building for consumptive cases; there are 150 beds in it.

22673. Do you know the extent of the accommodation at the outside fever hospital?—I think they have over 100 beds. And then about the charges for the rural districts—the rating for the different districts; I certainly differ with anyone who proposes an alteration in that way, because the city of Cork suffered before the Act came into force. For the next month until after Christmas all those idle men flock into the city.

22674. You think it only a fair relief to the city of Cork?—I think it was only common justice. We are constantly burdened in winter with men from the country who have no work there; and again, sir, I want to say I am entirely opposed to rearing children inside the walls of the union. I think it is not the place in which you can expect to make good members of society. It was only yesterday I advocated the admission of children to industrial schools; that other people perhaps would allow into the union; some of those will be six years in the industrial school, and when they come out they will be useful members of society. I hope—but I never expect to get that among the inmates of the union—that they turn out a different class of children altogether, and when they come out they have the brand of the union on them.

22675. You have had a good deal of experience of the boarding-out system in your union—how has that worked?—It is working remarkably well.

22676. Would you be in favour of having the power of the Guardians for boarding out enlarged—there are a great many children in workhouses that they cannot board out—would you be in favour of a law being passed to enable Guardians to exercise their discretion of boarding-out in cases that had to be supported out of the rates?—Certainly. We may not reap the benefit of that, but those who come after us will reap the benefit of it. You bring children into a different life outside; what can you expect a child to be that is kept inside in that union for his lifetime and reared until he is fifteen or sixteen; you cannot expect him to know anything about life outside; when he gets outside the walls he is like a little wild bird. It is only a couple of nights ago—I happen to live just convenient to the Cork Union on the Douglas-road—I saw a woman there; she had two boys, one was about ten and the other about twelve, and they were standing like two little dogs alongside her for a long time; I was over the wall in my place watching them with great anxiety; at last I went out and went over to the gate-keeper and asked what about these two boys and this woman.

"She left this morning," he said, "and she got drunk; she has come back now and wants to get in and she won't be allowed in; she acts sometimes as a deputy." I asked, "Were those boys reared here?" "They were," he said. "Then they were afraid to stir." "Well," said I, "what will be done with the boys to-night?" While this was going on she stood up and walked away with the boys down the road. I asked, "Where is she taking them?" "Oh, she will go down to some public-house; you will find them there later on." That is a cruel case; if those were reared outside would that woman have that control? If they were reared outside their foster-mother would be fond of them, and they would become acquainted with little boys and girls outside.

22677. Were they illegitimate children?—I did not ask him that question. I am opposed altogether to having a school inside the union; you can prepare a child for life if you have him outside; in that way I would be very anxious that some law should be made that would improve that. That is a thing that occupied my attention when I was much younger than I am at present. I know a case now of a girl being brought before us; it is an unfortunate result of boarding out; she was born in the union; she was an illegitimate child; she was put out for fourteen years, and she came back again to the union, which is not always the case.

22678. When was she put out?—I think she was about four years old; she was boarded out in the country. She was brought before us for refusing to work; she was then in the laundry, and there was an illegitimate child of her in the house at the same time. Here were three generations—her mother, herself and her child; it was a very exceptional case.

22679. Was she weak-minded?—The sergeant of the district where she was placed said she was very bad in their locality. She did not appear to be of weak intellect, but that is only one case.

22680. I believe you have a Ladies' Committee?—A very good one, too.

22681. Do you happen to know whether they are aware of that case you have mentioned?—Oh, certainly; there was another case of a foster-parent that had a child out, and when she found she would not get paid any longer she came and dumped the child down at the union. I recollect going before the Ladies' Committee and appealing to them not to allow this child to be left in the house for an hour, and they told me they had power to put her out for twelve months more, and they would attend to it; she was taken out next day again, so much afraid was I that she would get into bad habits.

MR. JEREMIAH LANE, &c., examined.

22682. CHAIRMAN.—You are appearing in conjunction with the Lord Mayor for the Corporation?—I am, sir, but in addition to that I, as well as the Lord Mayor, am a member of the Board of Guardians, who have answered the questions, and we were consulting parties to those replies. The Board of Guardians seemed to take a more general interest in the questions and answers than the Corporation, consequently my views are more embodied in the answers the Board of Guardians have given to a much larger extent than in those of the Corporation.

22683. We have the answers here—if you will add anything yourself that occurs to you?—Thinking over the question of pauperism in its entirety, I believe that the system of keeping fathers and mothers and children in the workhouse is the principal means of breeding and continuing pauperism in Ireland, and until such time as the children are in a separate institution away from the influence of their parents you can never stop pauperism in this country. We have instances in the Cork Workhouse where there are as many as three generations in the house at the same time; they are reared there; they meet their mothers regularly; there is a day set apart in the week when parents can visit their children; it is known as the fair day in the union, where there are all kinds of things carried on, and as a rule the mothers of these children are deputies in the house, and it is only a natural thing to suppose that these deputies in the execution of their duty are very often inclined to take what is given the sick, if possible, for the purpose of conveying it to their children.

22684. I suppose the nurse keeps a good look out so that?—It is almost impossible for the nurse to watch the deputies. We made an effort to do away with the system of deputies altogether from the hospitals, as we felt it was a great incentive to the deserving poor man or woman who was there to be probably in their dying moments watched over by one of these deputies, who are in many cases known as belonging to the criminal classes.

22685. What was the result of that effort?—To increase the number of deputies, because we increased the number of attendants, and as a natural consequence we increased the number of deputies.

28665. I thought your proposal was to have paid officers?—Yes, sir; I think we increased the number of nurses by ten or twelve, and some of these nurses had to get deputies appointed as servants, so what we were trying to decrease we only increased, and I held that there are the same number of deputies, if not more in the hospital to-day than there were before. I would suggest, in the event of the hospital being separated from the workhouse, that paid assistants be employed in the hospital instead of pauper-deputies, as at present.

28667. Do you think they have as much opportunity as before for loving contributions on the sick?—I believe it is going on to a large extent; the nurses are very good and watchful and careful, but it is not possible for them to keep these deputies under observation at all times. The nurses withdraw at a certain hour in the evening; they live in community, and leave at eight o'clock in the evening, and don't come on duty until eight o'clock next morning. Then the night nurses are few in number, and the deputies have charge of the hospital completely.

28668. Dr. BARNES.—Are the night nurses rather few?—I would like to see them increased. If the children were removed altogether away from the influence of their parents you would not have the same amount of inducements to people to remain in the union.

28669. CHAIRMAN.—You know these women deputies remain in the house because their children are there?—Yes, and in many cases their husbands are there.

28670. You don't think it would be a sound thing to take the charge of the children away from their (removal) parents and let them go off with a free leg?—I should be very careful of relieving them of that responsibility, but at the same time it would be very desirable in the interests of society to take the children away from parents who are intemperate or of vicious habits.

28671. Would it be your opinion that where a parent was unfit to be treated with his child he was also unfit to be at large himself, and if you support the child owing to the bad character of the parent would you be of opinion that the parent should be deprived of his liberty?—I thoroughly agree with you. Then the children of the workhouse get no industrial training, and if there was such an institution provided as I have in my mind, where they would get an industrial training and get situations from it, they never would return to the union.

28672. You know the great difficulty of getting employment in trades now?—There is certainly.

28673. And there is rather a shortage of agricultural labourers in the country?—Yes, and I think it is the greatest misfortune that there was not some land attached to the present Cork Union.

28674. If the children are boarded out won't they be taught to be agricultural labourers?—Yes; I am entirely in accord with the system of boarding out children.

28675. But if you put them into a place and teach them a trade at a high cost—a cost small repayments could not incur—you may give them a trade that they cannot follow?—Well, they do it in the industrial schools.

28676. If you go and do it as well you will still further increase the number of people who won't get employment?—What industrial training does a boy or girl get in the union now?

28677. If you heard them out they will be taught household management and farming the same as any labourer's child?—They can only be boarded out until fifteen; I would be rather inclined to increase that than decrease it.

28678. At discretion, especially in the case of the girls, perhaps?—Yes, I am fully of opinion that as long as parents are allowed to be with the children in the union you never can get rid of pauperism, so it struck me that a separate institution for children altogether outside the union would be desirable.

28679. Why would you say an institution when you have boarding out at your hands?—If you can do it to the full extent in boarding out.

28680. And for cases not suitable for boarding out have you not got the existing industrial school?—I don't think they are sent there from the union.

28681. Under the existing law they are not, but if the law were changed to enable cases that were not eligible for boarding out to be sent to an industrial school or a school such as the Lord Mayor mentioned just now where children who had associated with vicious parents might be sent, a reformatory, you have not in view a separate institution, have you?—I think if the boarding out system was considerably enlarged it would remove any difficulty. I agree with the suggestion that where children have associated with vicious parents they should be sent to an industrial school, or reformatory, at the Guardians' discretion.

28682. You would be in favour of enlarging the power?—Certainly. There is another grievance that I, as representing the Corporation, have to mention. We were entirely led to understand that when the auxiliary asylum was built in Youghal all the inmates would be removed from Cork Union, and it was on that clear understanding being given that the Corporation co-operated with the County Council for the purpose of getting this great burden removed from the union. Well, now, sir, what do we find? There were only 122 removed up to the present from the Cork Union; a number of those patients have died since, and we have the greatest difficulty in getting others removed since.

28683. I don't know whether you were here when the Bishop of Ross gave evidence; he explained that they are now full, and he would wish to have an enlargement of the place so that all the inmates that are in every workhouse could be taken in—that would meet your view?—Yes, and it is remarkable; it appears it is against the law to keep inmates in any union, and still they are kept there.

28684. Oh, no; a lunatic cannot go into a workhouse because he is a lunatic, but if he is a lunatic and delirious at the same time he can be removed into the workhouse?—If this burden was taken off the shoulders of the Cork Guardians it would mean the removal of the sixty patients that we have to maintain out of a union charge; when they were transferred to the insane asylum or an auxiliary asylum it would become a county-at-large charge, and they would be getting a portion of that capitation grant which the Guardians never get; it is a general county and borough charge. There is another class of inmates I would like to be removed altogether out of the union, that is the blind; I hold that we are not competent to deal with these cases, and it is far better to keep the blind people in charge of those who are better versed in looking after their best interests than we are in the union, and if all the blind were removed and paid for in some institution not only would the comfort of the poor blind people be improved, but the cost would not be any greater.

28685. We had evidence to that effect from some members of the Association for the Blind in Dublin?—We are very much annoyed by tramps and casuals coming in and we hear great complaints all over the entire country of this class of thing. I believe a great lot of it is owing to the fact that there is not a regular dietary in all the unions.

28686. You may take it for granted that these people have the roving instinct, and no matter how uncomfortable you make a workhouse for them they will rove on unless their course is stopped?—There is another point; it frequently happens in Cork that husband, wife and children enter; they reside in the house for, say, three months; during that time the children are sent to school; they are commencing to learn something, and some special occasion comes, such, for instance, as the races, and the father and mother take it into their head to look for their discharge; they can get it on three hours' notice, and the little children, who are just beginning to settle down at school and being taught cleanliness, are withdrawn from the school, and the whole family make their appearance in the street, and after two or three days they come back again to the workhouse and obtain admission. That is a great flaw in the Poor Law system; if there was a law in existence empowering the Guardians to take possession of these children of vicious parents.

28687. You have a law enabling you to pass a resolution putting yourselves in loco parentis in the case of children of vicious parents?—There is an amount of that going on lately in the Cork Workhouse; I saw a fine healthy young woman and she refused to work because she was displeased with some of her clothing. I asked how long she was in the house, and I was informed that not only was she born in the house but her mother was born in the house, and the probabilities are that her children will be born in the house too. They form each other's acquaintance inside, go out to get married, return to the house and bring up a family.

28703. It is an utter breach of the rules and regulations—what you describe as fair day would be a gross irregularity!—That is a certain day in the week when the parents are allowed to see the children, in fact, I might say, it occurred this present week, and the master only yesterday informed me that when he entered the gate where the women are allowed to see their children he found a number of things, bread and other things, in their possession, with the result that he sent the whole of them back, and refused to allow them to see the children for that day.

28704. Are they allowed to see the children in a body?—I am not sure.

28705. If they only saw them singly, there would not be anything except what is proper!—As a member of the board for a period of six years, it is my opinion that the board is too large to do good practical work; we have done on 550 members; I have not found in my experience that such a large board is able to do the business quite as well as a smaller number of people.

28711. I suppose your average attendance is twenty to thirty?—We have a very good attendance, on certain occasions; if there was an election, for instance, we would have the entire board. There are only thirty-two members from the city, and the valuation of the city is £178,000, as against the rural districts of £185,500, with Queenstown's £23,000 thrown in, so the city valuation is as great as the rural districts. Queenstown has four members, and the whole lot forms a board of 100 members; I believe the city has a grievance in not being represented according to valuation and population; I would not suggest increasing the city representation, but I imagine the country would be very well served by reducing the number of Guardians in the country and making it a smaller board.

28712. Are you a city or a country Guardian?—I am a city Guardian. The Lord Mayor mentioned about the fever hospital, but as I understand the Guardians have power to deal with that question, it will be only wasting your time to refer to it; it is a splendid building, has room for 100 beds, and costs 2650 a year, and we have an average of four or five patients a day. I was not aware of the fact until to-day that the Guardians had power.

CHAIRMAN.—They have power to enter into negotiations; it would not be final, of course.

Dr. BROOK.—The other building would have to be inspected and seen that it is suitable.

28713. CHAIRMAN.—You have power to start the matter?—I have heard you put a question about the outdoor relief; we had a very long discussion on that matter at the Board of Guardians, and we feel that it would be a great hardship if you were to recommend that outdoor relief be given in kind as far as the city is concerned; there are a great number of charitable people to be found in the city, as well as charities for that purpose for giving relief, and they generally give it in kind; the greatest hardship the poor people have to contend with is getting the rest of their little houses.

28714. What we spoke of to-day was not the giving of outdoor relief generally in kind, but giving it to able-bodied people in kind; that is, if a man, owing to his own want of providence or perhaps hardship in some way or other, if he was an able-bodied man, it was proposed that if you give it to a man of that class he should get it not in money but in kind; I did not understand the suggestion to apply to existing cases of relief, but to the new class proposed to be added. If you gave money to any able-bodied man who was improvident, and was not a total abstemious, what would be the probability as regards the money you would give him?—The probability is—

28715. He would liquidate some of it!—Yes, no doubt it occurs in some cases. There is a proposition that we should have an inspector, which is a very proper one in my opinion, to see that the relieving officers did their duty, and that only proper people get outdoor relief. Frank has been found with the increase in outdoor relief, and it is easy to account for that. Previous to the Local Government Act there was a class of people in power who never came in contact with the poor and never knew the needs of the city, and after the Act people were returned such as myself who were always more in touch with the poorer classes, and we know the deserving cases and were interested in them, and it was on that account the relief went up, but I believe it was perfectly justifiable. The great objection I have to the entire system is that it is a costly system; the poor law system is too costly. I have seen recently that a certain authority said that the system in Ireland costs £960,550, and out of this sum there was £178,125 spent on salaries alone; there was £137,564 in the upkeep of workhouses, while there was only a balance of £207,669 devoted to the assistance of the poor in various forms, thus representing that it cost 1s. 4d. to distribute 1s. 4d. in relief.

28716. That is not referring to the poor law alone, it also refers to dispensaries?—All in connection with the poor law system.

28717. That is medical charities' work, that is an expensive service, and it is mainly dispensary doctors' salaries that goes into your 1s. 4d.; that is not the figure we have to work on; we have to work on what is the actual expenditure under the Poor Law Act as distinguished from the Medical Charities, Registration, and other Acts; that would make it appear that the cost of distribution is very much higher than it is!—We were also thinking with regard to the fact that an inmate in the union can claim discharge on three hours' notice that that is too short in some cases, and that there should be a discretionary power given to the master of the union not to give discharge to people who are regular visitors and leave the union for special purposes.

28718. Do you mean specially now is the case of tramps?—Yes and people who want to come out this morning and go to the races and go back in the evening; if they were kept inside they would probably lose a few winners. If the law would empower the master to use his own discretion.

28719. That would be a very strong step to give a man power over another's liberty unless you indicated in what way he was to use that discretion; if you were to say in the case of tramps that the law should be made as in England that would be a limitation, but would you give the master power as regards any inmate to prevent his discharge for a lengthened period?—Well, perhaps—I don't know that the master would abuse it.

28720. If I were master I should not like to have that power!—Our object and desire is to hit at the tramp nuisance, and if he had the power in the case of tramps it might meet the purpose. There is another grievance that the master of a union very often labours under, and it is this, if one of these tramps refuse to perform a certain amount of work, and if he misconducts himself, a tramp or any other inmate, the master has no power.

28721. Why can he not bring him before a magistrate?—He cannot, except that he secures an information against him that he threatened him.

28722. Could he not charge him with refusing to work?—He has to report the matter to the Board, or he must summon in the usual way.

28723. He must charge him!—But when that person knows he is charged the next thing is he applies for his discharge; we are thinking if the master had power to take him before the nearest justice of the peace.

28724. So he has practically that power!—I was not aware of it, and I don't think the master of the Cork Union is aware of it.

28725. I don't like giving legal opinions, but certainly proceedings can be taken by the master in his own name against an inmate for breach of rules and disciplinary conduct, whether he should take him to a magistrate or to the court, I won't say!—There is another disqualification that I would like to draw your attention to; at the present time a person in possession of a quarter-acre of land is prohibited from getting relief.

28726. Yes; we have had that before; you would extend it to an acre or an acre and a quarter?—He might have ten acres and still be destitute.

28727. Would you be in favour of removing the limitation?—Yes, and leaving it in the discretion of the Guardians and relieving officer; I have known people in possession of twenty acres of land practically destitute; I think that restriction ought to be removed altogether. I don't know that I have any more to add, only that I am strongly of opinion that the union is no place for keeping the blind; they ought to be removed to an institution for that par-pose outside the union, and benefits of every class should not be there. It would cease to this, that you would simply have it as a general hospital or infirmary, and those who at present are there would be better catered for outside; the system is damnable—ing as it exists at the present day, and I don't know of any changes except the changes that I hope this Commission will recommend of altering the present system entirely for the purpose of doing away with all the bad points to be found in the Poor Law system.

Mr. JOHN DODGSON, R.N., examined.

With regard to the cause of pauperism, as far as I can see in our own district, the first cause and the principal cause that I see plain evidence of in our own district is emigration; I know of one old couple in our parish who had five sons; they all emigrated; the last of them went last year. While they remained unmarried in America they sent home quite sufficient to keep the old couple here; now they seem all to have got married, and the old couple have had to apply to me for outdoor relief, and if it is refused there is nothing for them to do but go into the workhouse and become a burden on the rates.

28728. CHAIRMAN.—Is it a usual thing for children to forget their parents?—These children were exceptionally good; I have known them to send £15 and £20 in one year; then, of course, when they married and their children grew up about them they failed to supply what they always supplied. That emigration is felt in our district, for although the Corporation have been kind enough to build about 130 houses for the workmen of the city, and although people have gone there from the city owing to the cramped state of the city, the population is about 650, and although that 650 has been imported into the district, the population of the district in the past twenty years has fallen off by 1,700.

28729. What is your clerical division?—Bishopstew. It is only now we are beginning to feel the drain that has been going on for the last twenty years; that must necessitate an increase of pauperism and an increase in outdoor relief.

28730. You think emigration is the indirect cause of a great deal of poverty?—The great amount of it more than people would imagine.

28731. Have you any observations of a practical nature—that is, merely to explain the poverty, not to suggest how the difficulty could be met?—The want of employment causes the emigration in the first instance; how that is to be met might be outside the scope of your inquiry.

28732. I wish it was not, but I am afraid it is!—We would all wish that. Another cause is the spread of education of an unsuitable kind, which gives the sons of the working classes a distaste for labour, and they imagine though they cannot find a field for their education here they may find it in America; I hope they are not disappointed, but I am afraid they are. The want of knowledge of preventive measures to avoid illness, which causes the spread of disease and discomfort, which is one of the causes of emigration, of course, causes suffering with the effect of overcrowded hospitals. The head of the family for want of having someone to nurse him or a proper home has to go to hospital, and he leaves the family in destitution behind him. There was a woman the other day applied to me and got provisional outdoor relief for one week, although they say it is against the law; she has one son earning the enormous sum of 2s. a week; she has five daughters, one of them serving her time, and she is receiving 2s. a week, which serves to put boots on the family; she works in a boot factory. The other children are going to school. I have known her to pawn all she had in the house; I went there and saw no fire or anything to eat; she was refused outdoor relief, why I fail to see. I was looking for a cure for consumption; I think that is one of the causes of it.

28733. How would you deal with that case yourself?—There should be exceptions made to the rule; it appears that there is no exception to the rule for outdoor relief, because it seems we can only give her the miserable sum of 5s. for one week and leave her in hopes of more.

28734. Is there 2s. besides?—That 2s. goes to find boots for the children.

28735. Then there is the 5s. that the son gets?—That is what deprives her of getting outdoor relief.

28736. There is 11s. earned and how is it spent?—They have to pay 2s. a week house-pent.

28737. You thought relief ought to be given—the relieving officer did not?—He said according to the law it could not be given, and although he gave 5s. he said he would have to pay it himself. If a father has to go into hospital through illness that illness might be cured at home if there was a little more outdoor relief given.

28738. He could not well be nursed in a home where there was no fire or food?—He could be nursed far less than it costs in the hospital, and it would prevent the overcrowding in the hospital, and for a person in decent circumstances the very shock of removing him to a hospital in these cases out of four kills the patient.

28739. The Board of Guardians did not agree with you on this representation—you brought it before them?—I did.

28740. They did not adopt your recommendation?—I brought it before the outdoor relief Board, and the chairman said it was against the law on account of the boy earning 2s., but that if the boy went away to-morrow from them they would have to get it. My idea is that if these nursing mothers were engaged to the early symptoms of disease, what they were and how they might be checked, it might have a good effect.

28741. You cannot hope to make little doctors of them, and even doctors themselves, if half-a-dozen of them look at a man they won't be able to agree as to what is wrong with him?—The population has declined in the rural districts, and the dispensary doctors draw a salary for doing very little; I would get them to instruct the boys in schools as to the early symptoms of disease, what they were and how they might be checked, it might have a good effect.

28742. That would be in surgical cases?—Yes, to qualify for first aid. There was another thing with regard to the illegitimate children; it seems almost cruel that a woman who has cruel, perhaps cruel under a promise of marriage, should have to remain a prisoner in the house with her child for fourteen years; if she abandoned that child and shewed ill-will to it the child would be taken up, maintained in the house, and put out to nurse.

28743. You would suggest what a great many were witnesses have suggested—that the Guardians should have power to put illegitimate children out to nurse?—Certainly; in America, I believe, the first illegitimate child is taken and reared at the expense of the State; I would certainly let them maintain the second one themselves, but if they get a fresh start they would not be a burden to the rates by remaining in the house or destitute. With regard to Mr. Lane's remarks about enlarging the number of city Guardians—the Guardians in the city are very near the meetings of the Board of Guardians, and have only to run up in a tram for a penny, whereas the rural Guardians have to come a great distance. There might be a case from that very district coming on that day, and if one of the Guardians was ill the other could come and represent him.

28744. If there was a reduction you would like it made all round?—I would not have them reduced at all; the more the better; I would rather extend it. With regard to outdoor relief in kind, I would be altogether against that; they give these orders for outdoor relief to the shopkeeper they are dealing with and the neighbours know they are getting this outdoor relief, whereas if it is given in money they don't know it.

28745. They are bound to know it if the law is observed, because you must publish in some way the amounts these people are getting and the names?—They want to hide it before the people in their own locality, which is quite natural.

28746. It may be natural, but it is not the law?—Everything in the law should be in accordance with natural feeling; they get much better value when they get the money than when they are getting an order for outdoor relief.

28747. There are a great many opinions to the contrary on that point?—I have seen a man get 4s. in

Mr. John Dodgson.

Sept. 27, 1904. a neighbouring union, and I have seen him get an order to the butcher for 4s. worth of beef; if he sees that beef on the road coming home it is a hungry dog would eat it.

23743. If he lost the money a thirsty man would drink it!—The money might be some use to the man who found it, but the meat would not be much good, even to the dog.

Mr. D. C. Keenan.
Kilishan.

Mr. D. C. KEENAN, Chairman, Maroon Union.

I beg to state that I am in favour of amalgamation of unions. My reason is in order to get rid of staff expenses. I am in favour of retaining the hospitals for the convenience of the sick poor. I am for union rating and the standard system for towns, because if divided I fear we would be too sparing of outdoor relief, which might be unfair to the deserving poor. I would be for re-classification of inmates, at least into three different departments. The tramp class should have a separate place, and be compelled to work. The respectable poor should be separated from the indifferent and get a different dress, etc. I would leave it optional to each union whether they should amalgamate or not. I am for the boarding out of children, as at present, except where the child is over six years, when I think it should be sent to an industrial school. There should be a separate place for immoral women. I am in favour of the suggestion that a passport should be given to a person looking for work in order to distinguish him from the tramp class.

The Sitting terminated.

FIFTY-EIGHTH PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER, 28TH, 1905. Sep. 28, 1905.

At the Courtroom, Bantry.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. CORK BOGGER.

Mr. WILLIAM COTTON, Chairman, Bantry Union, examined.

28749. CHAIRMAN.—You are aware, of course, generally, of the nature of our inquiry here, to inquire whether any unions could be broken up and the workhouses used for different purposes, or whether other reforms could be introduced in the interests of economy and efficiency in the Poor Law administration—you know that generally?—Well, generally; of course I only read things in the papers from time to time.

28750. What view is taken by your Board of Guardians on this question?—We did not discuss anything except about the outdoor; we passed a resolution at one time.

28751. What was your view about that?—That the rating should be divisional in place of union.

28752. Did the Guardians representing the town agree to that?—The few representing the town I think were opposed to it; of course their views are different to ours in the country.

28753. Would you be willing in the country to take things pretty much as they are at present, and to say that on the basis of the existing expenditure you would consent to a union charge, but that any increase should go on the electoral division?—Well, I think the outdoor relief any way should go on the electoral division, and be a divisional charge; I know there is a tendency to increase when it is a union-at-large charge, and Guardians representing their own division would be more careful.

28754. They would be responsible to their constituents immediately?—Responsible and more scrupulous about giving an increase.

28755. Where it is off the whole union they are not so careful?—Not so careful.

28756. Of course you know that the recent legislation in 1886 gave the towns a benefit in consideration of all the poor people that gathered into the towns?—I know that; perhaps it would be only fair, too.

28757. You would be willing to give them some compensation for that still?—I think so.

28758. The suggestion I made just now is one that we received elsewhere that the expenditure should be fixed. The proper expenditure on outdoor relief, as far as it could be ascertained, what might be called the standard expenditure, would be fixed at so much a week, say, for each electoral division, but if the expenditure exceeded that, any additional cost should be made an electoral division charge, if it ever happened?—I believe that would be only fair; I know right well in days gone by the houses of labourers in country districts were thrown down; they had no houses and they came into the towns.

28759. Now as regards the workhouses—are you in favour of keeping all the various classes that are in the workhouse still? The classes you have in the workhouse now are the sick, the aged and infirm, children and their mothers, lunatics and tramps. We have received suggestions in a great many places that it would be desirable, as far as possible, to exclude all classes from the existing buildings except the sick, and we have got the suggestion from a great many witnesses that the aged and infirm should be put into a central institution. Supposing you have, say, five or six unions in this part of the country, with one union in a central position, say Bantry, or whatever union might be selected, and all the aged and infirm of the surrounding unions should be put in there, leaving the sick hospital as it is?—And what about the outdoor relief cases?

28760. The Board of Guardians in each union would still administer their outdoor relief. Say Donnybrook, they would have their sick hospital there still, and would administer the outdoor relief there still, but the aged and infirm would come, say, to here or whatever workhouse was selected—I am of opinion that it would be better for the aged and infirm—they might be better looked after.

28761. And you would have considerable economy, it is thought, by having all that class together—you would have much fewer officers if you brought the six or seven unions in together to one institution?—That is what we want, because we have too many officers for the inmates we have; that would be no harm.

28762. Then, as regards children, some people think it is a mistake to have children and the mothers of illegitimate children in the workhouse at all; they make suggestions to us that the proper course would be that as soon as the girl is about to have that illegitimate child she should be sent to a religious institution—if she is a Catholic to the Good Shepherd, and if a Protestant to some of the Protestant institutions of the sort, and that she should be paid for them by the Guardians at so much a head, that she should nurse her child there for a year, and then afterwards the child should be boarded out, and the managers of this religious institution should endeavour to maintain the girl, and put her back into the world again in a situation or otherwise?—I would fall in with that view too.

28763. At present in workhouses if a girl has one child the tendency is to go out and have another?—Sometimes it happens; we have experience of it here too.

28764. It is hoped that evil may be reduced a good deal—would you approve of that?—I would.

28765. Do you approve of boarding out children?—We have no experience in the Bantry Union.

28766. We get strong evidence in favour of it in Cork the last two or three days, and other places, showing that the children who were boarded out became useful labourers in the country; they got into habits of industry and handiness, and get employment without difficulty, and never know what it is to go to the workhouse, and don't fall back there the way workhouse children are apt to do at present. The Guardians of the Cork Union recommended that the law should enable them to board out all children that have to be supported out of the rates; you can board them out for about 18s a head, and they cost far more than that; double that if you take the full average cost in the workhouse?—I would agree with that; I think in after life they would be more useful.

28767. Then as regards the lunatics and idiots, it was proposed in Cork and elsewhere that all the lunatics should be removed from workhouses and put in an auxiliary asylum that you have in the County Cork and never kept any more in workhouses—would you agree with that?—I would.

28768. The cost in the Youghal Auxiliary is very low for an asylum—it is 215s or 216s according to the evidence we got yesterday. Now carnals and tramps—a suggestion has been made that men who go about the country, not looking for work but mending about the country, putting up at workhouses and living on contributions from farmers and others, it is recommended to us that these men should be liable to be arrested if they could not give a satisfactory account of themselves, and had no documentary evidence such as a man looking for work would have, and that they should be sent to a district workhouse, one, say, for all Munster and another for each of the three provinces, and should be kept there for a number of years, if necessary, to try and bring them into habits of industry, and, at all events, if that could not be done to make them work for their support?—I would fall in with that view; they should be arrested surely, and not allowed to go from union to union.

28769. To your knowledge are they a most objectionable class to the country?—Indeed they are. I see them from time to time on the road; they come to this union, and then go on to Kermore the following night; they are only going round from union to union, and they are dangerous besides in going along the roads.

Mr. William Cotton.

Sept. 28, 1864
Mr. William
Cotton.

28770. Are they troublesome in asking for support?—They are; they steal or do anything they can lay their hands on, and perhaps they may go into a hay-shed at night and burn it. They are smoking and have matches with them, so they are dangerous. We have a very unjust law that allows them to go about

Mr. Benjamin
O'Connor.

28771. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, for the past six or seven years.

28772. You have heard some of the evidence?—Yes, I agree with the portions I heard from Mr. Cotton.

28773. Taking an area of half a dozen unions in West Cork, would you see any objection to putting all the aged and infirm healthy people—not the sick, leaving the sick as they are in your own infirmary—would you see any objection to bringing into a central workhouse, such as Bantley, or whatever workhouse might be selected, the aged and infirm from all these unions?—If it were practicable, I think it would be very desirable, but there is such a large number of aged and infirm and sick poor in the district.

28774. We have the numbers—here in Bantley you have 37; Castletown, 31; Dunmanway, 35; Schibberon, 68; Schull only 37—I rather think there are more; I really regard all the inmates of the Bantley Union at present as practically aged, infirm and sick.

28775. The majority, of course; I can give you the figures for the place—Bantley, 34; Castletown, 32; Dunmanway, 33; Schibberon, 68; Schull, 47.—The inmates, generally known as able-bodied, have practically disappeared from workhouses in the country districts, and instead of being a workhouse I would regard the institution at present as a hospital, and, therefore, for the treatment of the sick inmates I would regard it as a district hospital, and exclude from it all other classes—that is to say what is known as the tramp, he should not get admittance at all; I think children should be boarded out under proper supervision, and before being discharged from that system they should pass through an industrial school for some time.

28776. That is a matter I should like to discuss a little further with you—why would you send them to an industrial school?—I think it would equip them better for the battle of life afterwards.

28777. Do you think putting them into an industrial school and only teaching them the rudiments of trade might not unuse them for their natural work, that of farm labourers?—I don't know; I think anything in the shape of technical education—

28778. Technical knowledge is good, of course, but the class you most need in the country at present is the class of agricultural labourers?—Yes.

28779. Labour is scarce and becoming scarcer?—It is, but I am driven to the conclusion that when children of that age become trained they will not become agricultural labourers; they will have a different ambition.

28780. That is what I think—why should the Guardians spend a large sum of money that might unuse the children and make them more ambitious when a very good, healthy and cheap occupation might be obtained for them by boarding them out and rearing them as agricultural labourers?—That is assuming the country is not going to improve.

28781. Don't we want agricultural labourers badly?—The population has decreased in this country, and that, to my mind, explains the absence of able-bodied labourers in the union. Labour is scarce.

28782. Mr. MURPHY.—I suppose you are aware that what other countries want most is the agricultural labourer?—Yes.

28783. And it being one of the chief wants of our country, should we not try to supply it?—I would be slow in saying we should bring up children with the object of retaining them in ignorance.

28784. CHAIRMAN.—Not in ignorance—the question is whether you would make them shoemakers, smiths, tailors or carpenters?—The education they would receive, examined,

28785. Bantley, examined, derives from an industrial training would make them better labourers.

28786. If it would if they would go back to it?—I think if the Board agreed on the boarding-out system, discharging them without any fixed purpose or better training than they would get from such a system would not be felt to them; it would be better give them some industrial training.

28787. Industrial education at a school like ordinary children is good, but take the ordinary children of very small farmers; they cannot get any of that trained instruction?—Up to the present, but I think the educational system all through the country is in the direction of giving them that.

28788. Do you think it necessary or wise to spend a large sum of money on poor little children that have to be brought up at the public expense in workhouses when you could give them at a cheap rate a good, healthy employment and occupation as agricultural labourers?—I think, having been taken in hands by the public and boarded out, they should not be left to go out into life without giving them something additional in the shape of technical education.

28789. They would go to the very same schools as the small farmers' and labourers' children in the country go to—the question is, should you take the boarded-out and give him an expensive finishing education such as could not be obtained by the self-supporting labourers' and farmers' children in the country?—Yes, it may be going perhaps too far.

28790. Mr. MURPHY.—And there is the other advantage that the children would be raised in a home where they would be accustomed to the ordinary affairs of life, and where the domestic sentiment would be encouraged instead of being stifled, as it usually is in an institution?—The boarding out would be a great improvement on the present arrangements.

28791. CHAIRMAN.—Your idea would have a finishing year or so?—I thought so, yes; merely as a suggestion. However, that class, at all events, I would exclude from the workhouses, and the able-bodied man, as far as Bantley is concerned, has disappeared as an inmate; if a casual case turned up it ought to be provided for by outdoor relief under proper supervision.

28792. As regards the girls who enter the workhouse to have children?—I certainly agree that they should be excluded from it, and trained in domesticities such as you mention. As regards tramps, they should not get admittance at all; they should be very rigidly dealt with. If it could be arranged, not only should they report themselves to the police when they come to a town like this, but, if possible, they should only be accommodated at the police barracks for the night; that would make them very chary about coming there, and if treated that way it would remove a lot of them.

28793. One suggestion we have got goes further than that—it goes to the extent that if a well-known vagrant could not give a satisfactory explanation for himself he should be liable to arrest, be brought before the magistrates and sent to a real workhouse in order that he might be trained for a couple of years, if necessary, to habits of industry, and in order to protect the honest man going from one town to another, the bricklayer's assistant or whatever he might be, in order to protect him, such a man should always bring with him a letter of recommendation from some person of respectability?—Yes, for the protection of the community it is very necessary.

28794. You would agree with that—you would not think that would be going too far in depriving that class of their liberty?—It would be very desirable.

28795. You are aware a great many of these people have children with them, and they are being brought up in the worst possible way?—Yes.

Mr. William
Cotton.

There are beggars going through the country that don't go to any union.

28796. CHAIRMAN.—I would call those next door to tramps, but there are a number of decent old people that have the goodwill of their own parishes, we will say, and are never refused a bit as they go along, or, perhaps, stay in houses—you would not touch those people?—No, but strangers.

Mr. WILLIAM COTTON further examined.

28706. I would call the stronger tramp!—They never come near the union at all you know.
 28707. Even so. It is not a question of coming to the union—if this change were made there would be no union for them to go to, so that anyone wandering from place to place would be liable to this treatment?—Then I would be satisfied; I know that those people go to the public-houses after their day's work is done and drink there.

Sept. 28, 1905.
 Mr. William
 Cotter.

Mr. TIMOTHY MURPHY, R.L.G., Bantry, examined.

I concur with the evidence of the other witnesses. Outdoor relief has increased since the Local Government Act. Probably Mr. Crowley could give you an idea of what it is.

28708. CHAIRMAN.—We were going to ask him to give us a return afterwards?—Here are the cases on outdoor relief last week (list produced).

28709. £17—what used to be the amount before the union-at-large rating?

Mr. Crowley (Clerk).—It has increased largely.

28710. CHAIRMAN.—Not doubled?

Mr. Crowley.—Not nearly that; the expenditure used to be £15 or £13.

28711. CHAIRMAN.—Twenty-five per cent?

Mr. Crowley.—No, I would not say so; during the last twenty years it has increased very much.

CHAIRMAN.—We will ask you to give us some statistics on this point.

Mr. Timothy
 Murphy.

Mr. DANIEL BOWEN, J.P., Chairman, Skibbereen Union, examined.

28712. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Skibbereen Union?—Yes.

28713. It is one of the largest, with most inmates, in West Cork?—Yes.

The Clerk.—It was £15 last year.

28714. CHAIRMAN.—Suggestions have been made to us in a good many unions that as far as possible each workhouse should be strictly turned into a district hospital for the sick, and that the other classes should be dealt with in some other way?—That is the old people?

28715. No, the sick. We will take the classes, beginning with the children. The evidence that we received very generally is that it is not desirable to have children in the workhouse?—No, I agree with that, too, myself.

28716. Are you in favour of boarding out the children?—Board out as many as you can; but, of course, you cannot board them out until they come to a certain age—a couple of years old.

28717. Would you be in favour of boarding out as soon as they can?—Certainly. At present the Guardians can only board out orphan and deserted children.

28718. Would you be in favour of an Act of Parliament giving the Guardians discretion to board out all children who would have to be supported out of the rates?—Certainly.

28719. At present you have a considerable number of women who enter a workhouse to become mothers of illegitimate children; in a great many of these cases these women have more than one child—they keep on having three or four, and even up to eight or nine children we have found with some of these women; it has been suggested to us that girls, as soon as they are about to have a baby, should not be received in the workhouse at all, but should be sent at the expense of the rates to a penitentiary or refuge under religious management in the city of Cork, or wherever else it would be, and they should stay there until immediately before they would have the child; that they then should go to a maternity hospital for that, and then return to the institution with the baby and stay there for a year and nurse the baby; that the union, if it were a Catholic, and Protestant Union, if it were a Protestant, should endeavour to reclaim these girls and put them forward in situations and get them out of the position their unfortunate step had put them in—would you approve of that?—I would, but these people should have power to prosecute the putative father for the support of the child.

28720. The bastardy law in England is very different from that in Ireland; there the girl herself can proceed against the man—have you ever proceeded here?—We have in the Skibbereen Union.

28721. There is a good deal of difficulty about it?—There is; it is very hard to succeed, but in the last case we succeeded.

28722. At all events the law in England makes it much easier to hit the father—is it your idea that the law should be changed so as to make it easier to penalise the father?—I think so. We had a case in the Skibbereen Union where we recovered against the father for the maintenance of the child; still we must keep the mother and child in the workhouse.

28723. When once these girls come into the workhouse it is generally for life, or very often?—Very often; I quite agree that they should not be taken into the workhouse. They are not a very good social element even in the workhouse.

28724. No, they are not; that is where they are very much out of place. Then their children should be boarded out afterwards; as far as possible get either the father or the mother to contribute to the support?—Children should be put into some institution where they would learn trades.

28725. Why should you prefer their learning trades to being made agricultural labourers?—What they would be most inclined for.

28726. You can very cheaply make them agricultural labourers—that supplies a want that is felt in the country?—In the Skibbereen Union we have apprenticed some of them to trades.

28727. That is doing very well for them, but it is costly?—It is not; we board out children at 65 a year and £1 for clothes.

28728. Why do you make tradesmen of them?—Some of them might have a natural turn for trades and others for farming. You must turn them to what you consider the best account—what they are naturally inclined for.

28729. Would you do more for them than an independent labourer could do for his children—even if his child had a taste for becoming an engineer you could not make him out?—There is a good deal in that; the employers should not be called upon to do more than put them in a way of making a livelihood; you might have a few children whom you might put to a trade—I would not approve of it generally.

28730. Lascivious and idiots—do you think they ought to be kept in the workhouse, or would you send them to Fonghal?—They should be put somewhere; of course they are very troublesome in workhouses.

28731. Dr. Bowen.—How many have you in your workhouse?

The Clerk.—There were nine sent to Fonghal; I think there are seven remaining and two children.

28732. CHAIRMAN.—The suggestion about carnals and tramps—is that the well-known vagrant if he could not show a good reason for marching about from place to place should be liable to detention in a vagrant workhouse, and committed there under a magistrate's warrant, if it was thought a suitable place?—Generally the tramps we get here comes from the midland counties, Dublin and Limerick; there are very few people from our union tramping around and, after all, if these people are badly off why should they not be treated in their own unions.

28733. We hear in other parts of Ireland that they come from the south?—Well, the tramps we get are from Limerick and Waterford.

Clerk.—There are no tramps from Skibbereen.

Witness.—And more than that—they are an element of danger; I remember a case where they brought fever into Skibbereen; they carry infection round the country; it is only talking that they go looking for work; the majority of them would run away from work; they go from one workhouse to another.

28734. Do you think that these people who are undoubtedly living by begging, or getting their support

Sept. 28, 1905.

Mr. Daniel
Berke.

In the workhouses at night and their breakfast in the morning—do you think that those people ought to be obliged to work?—I know they ought, and the only way to make them work is not to let them go to the workhouse at all; let the police take them up and deal with them. They come to Skibbereen and then go to Schall, and from Schall to Kancity, and then to Dumanaway, and generally three or four of them keep company on the road.

28825. If you had this class out of the workhouse the only class remaining, besides the sick, would be the aged and infirm; what would you think of having the aged and infirm dealt with in some central institution for a group of unions, and bring all the aged and infirm there under a master and matron?—I would be in favour of it if it is a saving. But suppose you take twenty or thirty people out of a workhouse we must still keep some staff in the workhouse.

28826. No, no; your staff would disappear; all your healthy inmates would be gone; you would only have the doctor and the nurse and the chaplain in the small workhouses remaining!—You must have a matron there and a master.

28827. Oh, no, because all the healthy inmates will be gone, and the children and their mothers, the lunatics, the criminals and the tramps will be gone, and it is really only in cities and towns that there are what you may call the in and out poor; they are nearly all taken down out of work in cities!—Would it not be very hard on our people to be removed long distances?

28828. That is the objection!—Of course it would be very costly.

28829. No, the expense would be very little, because these people when they are admitted into a workhouse practically stay there, and they could be made more comfortable at a less cost, because you could divide the aged and infirm, according to character and other circumstances, in different parts of the institution. And they would be much more comfortable!—I was going to mention about classification.

28830. You may have observed that all these suggestions are really classification ones—you classify and bring all the parties away from the big workhouses where they are herded together, and if you bring the aged and infirm to one central institution you can classify them according to conduct?—You have people in the workhouses who are there through no fault of their own, and others that are there through their own fault, and yet they get the same food. These people who can work and won't work should be put as the lowest class.

28831. Would you agree to put them into a central institution?—I would for that if I thought there would be a saving.

28832. We would not recommend it if it was not a saving!—Whether they would be put into a central institution or not these should be classification.

28833. We would not recommend any change as far as we can see at present unless it was a saving. To try and cut down the very heavy rates is one of our chief points, and if the aged and infirm were brought into one institution we think it would be a great saving—you could reduce the number of officers; it ought to be cheaper to keep people in large numbers than in small numbers?—That stands to commonsense. If they were sent away to a long distance the men and daughters who could support them if they liked might be more anxious to keep them at home.

28834. You don't see any harm in that?—No, that would be an improvement too. We find, and I suppose the same thing applies to other unions, a lot of able-bodied men will come to the workhouse at night, take their discharge in the morning, and they come up the next night with a ticket from the relieving officer to admit them; we have no power to refuse them.

28835. Are those what are called corner-boys?—We have a few of them, and have written to the Local Government Board several times and cannot stop it. The relieving officer told me they come to him at eight o'clock in the evening, and if he does not give them a ticket he will be responsible; they are men who earn nothing, simply use the workhouse as a lodging-house; they go to cage round the town; there should be some control given to the Guardians that if they came in they won't let them out for a certain period; keep them in for a month, and if they take their discharge keep them out for a week.

28836. Would you put them in the same rank as the tramps?—Of the two I think they are the worse; they will stop there for the night, go out in the morning, and come back at night.

28837. Cheap lodgings!—Yes, and causing anxiety to other inmates.

28838. Of course they are put in the casual and tramp ward!—I don't know.

28839. As regards outdoor relief!—It is a general complaint in every union—outdoor relief has increased in our union about 20 per cent.; it is between £1,500 and £2,500 a year to the Skibbereen Union. You will find some cases of people whose sons and daughters could support them who get outdoor relief. The son gets married, and the farm is given over to him, and then the father comes at the self-hearted Guardians to get relief for him. The effect of that is that some people who are getting relief would be entitled to more relief, but they don't get it, because people are getting relief whose sons and daughters should support them. Outdoor relief is a very hard thing to remedy.

28840. One of the Clerk Board of Guardians yesterday recommended very strongly that the Guardians should be empowered to appoint an inspector of outdoor relief cases, just as a trial appointment, to see whether a man would do more than save his salary by being put on to overhaul the relieving officers and look into the cases of relief; if there was such a power given to your Guardians would you be inclined to exercise it?—I don't think it would be any use to us; in a large union like Cork it might do good, but in Skibbereen the relieving officers know all the people, and the Guardians too.

28841. Mr. McENAGHAN.—But perhaps an outside inspector, unbiassed by local circumstances or friendship, might be of service. For instance, a man sent down from Dublin to look over the case of outdoor relief in the union, say once every three months—don't you think that would be a safeguard, and place the responsibility on the relieving officer?—I don't believe so; the relieving officer makes his report on the look, and it is generally left to the Guardians of the division whether the man would get relief or not. All I look to is to see he is legally entitled, and that I would not be annoyed.

28842. Yet you say there are people getting outdoor relief who should not get it?—Yes.

28843. And others not getting relief that is not enough to keep them?—They should get more—something should be done about the relief. Some people would go so far as to say that old people who have no one to look after them should be brought into the workhouse, and relief should only be given to widows and those who keep houses.

28844. Don't you think to revert back to the old system of divisional rating would remedy material?—I don't think so.

28845. It is said Guardians take little or no interest in granting outdoor relief!—They take the same interest as before, but as I said in the commencement, there are little abuses.

28846. My own experience as a Guardian is that they don't take the same interest as they formerly did, because I remember very well fifteen or twenty years ago how closely the ratemakers of a division watched its expenditure, and if there was any extravagance in outdoor relief on the part of their Poor Law Guardian he was promptly called to account, and somebody else put in his place; that is not done now, because no man can be called to order—his responsibility is general!—As a matter of fact before the passing of the Local Government Act the tendency in our union was to make them all union-at-large charges; they tried to get him of the division and put him on the union; we had two-thirds of our union-at-large charges before the passing of the Act.

Clerk.—Not quite two-thirds.

Witness.—About inmates—I know cases where people have a very great habit of bringing home their relatives. In America if a man's wife goes insane she is put into the union, and he must pay for her, and they have fallen into the habit of bringing their relatives home to Ireland to commit them. There was a case where the Cornard Company brought a man down and let him loose in Skibbereen, so that he was committed here; we threatened them with law proceedings and got that money back.

28847. CHAIRMAN.—We had evidence in Cork that a great many returned Americans were thrown on the rates of the Cork Union?—It might be very hard to prevent a man coming back to his own country, but the Emigration Law prevents him going into America. He will go to America and abandon his own country, and stay there for twenty or thirty years, and then when he falls in health he is brought back and left on the roads here.

28848. After losing their health or reason on there you would not care to take them back?—In our part of the country at one time consumption was rare; it was all brought from America; the first case of consumption I saw was a man who came back from America.

28849. Mr. MURKIN.—Does not the American Government send them back?—Yes, but why should not these people stay in the country they went to in their health?

28850. Do you think the Irish in America would care to have a restriction placed against them returning to their own homes?—I quiet forces that. If there was an outbreak of smallpox in any portion of Europe or cholera, there are very stringent measures taken to prevent it coming in, but smallpox is brought over here from America without restriction.

28851. CHAIRMAN.—Your union is contributory to this sanatorium?—Yes.

28852. Are you in favour of it yourself?—I was in favour of it at first, but the way they are getting on lately I don't know what to say about it.

Sept. 28, 1906.

Mr. Daniel Burke.

Miss ELLEN MARY BROWN, P.L.O., examined.

28853. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Sclibbereen Union?—Yes.

28854. Have you a Ladies' Committee there for inspecting the boarded-out children?—We have not, but it is easily wanting.

28855. Do you look after the children much yourself?—I have not long been elected—only since June.

28856. Do you think a Ladies' Committee would be valuable for inspecting boarded-out children?—It would be badly wanted; I should like it very much.

28858. What has struck you generally, so far, in your knowledge of the Poor Law administration?—The classification; it wants reforming wholly; at least our workhouse ought to be divided into three classes.

28859. How would you manage that?—what classes would those be. First, you have the sick—what you sub-classify the sick at all?—I don't think so; I don't think it would be necessary, especially in a union where the nurse have charge.

28860. As regards the aged and infirm people who are healthy, but feeble?—I would divide the body of the house into three classes.

28861. What would those classes be?—I would put people that are well conducted and deserving all through life, but through no fault of their own are in the workhouse, I would divide them into one class and give them the very best part of the house and the best diet.

28862. The women at one side and the men at the other?—Yes.

28863. In the middle grade you would have?—The not very good and the not very bad.

28864. And in the lower grade you would have the objectionable?—Yes.

Dr. JENNINGS, J.P., examined.

28877. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Medical Officer of the Sclibbereen Workhouse?—Yes.

28878. We would be very glad now to hear anything that your long experience would enable you to state to us?—Oh, I don't know, I think the idea of suggesting reforms is just fashionable for the moment; I don't see how the existing system can be improved so very much; the hospital seems to be very good; typhus fever is disappearing, and that is due to the zeal and efficiency and ability of the Local Government Board Inspector, Dr. Brown, with the co-operation of the Guardians.

28879. You are inclined to think that the poor law system that you have known so long is answering the requirements?—Undoubtedly, and cannot be improved upon very much.

28865. What would you consider would justify you in putting inmates into the third or objectionable class?—People that don't conduct themselves, even when they are in the house.

28866. In the first place, of course, people who have been injured naturally would be there. Would you consider drunkenness a reason for putting them into the third class?—I think I ought to; it leads to all other things.

28867. And quarrelsome people and abusive?—Yes, abusive especially, because no officers can get on with them.

28868. That classification would be a classification of the aged and infirm chiefly. On the female side at present you have the aged and infirm women—then you have got the mothers of illegitimate children?—I would make them do all the hard work.

28869. They do the work at present?—They do.

28870. Would you leave them pretty much as they are in the working class?—Yes, if they were not in an institution for themselves altogether.

28871. That is what I was going to come to—do you think it would be better that that class should be excluded from the workhouse, and if they were Catholics put into a Good Shepherd's Convent, or if Protestants put into a Protestant institution—do you think that would be better than putting them into a workhouse?—I think it would really.

28872. Do you think it would be more likely to prevent an increase in the number of children?—Yes.

28873. To try and reclaim them?—Yes.

28874. Was there any other matter you wished to mention?—Well, no, not particularly.

28875. Nothing about outdoor relief?—The outdoor relief system is abused at present.

28876. Can you suggest any way of remedying that?—I cannot. People who are not entitled to it get it, and people who are truly in need of more than they get cannot get it; outdoor relief now is very high.

Miss Ellen Mary Brown.

Dr. Jennings.

Mr. DANIEL MCCARTHY, Sclibbereen, examined.

I am Clerk of the Union.

28883. CHAIRMAN.—We will ask you to be kind enough to let us have a little later on some statistical information?—In yesterday's Examiner Mr. Murkin is reported to have stated that it costs in a country workhouse £7 per head—

CHAIRMAN.—We cannot have that kind of evidence at all.

Mr. Daniel McCarthy.

Witness.—I want to contradict that, because I have the report of the Local Government Board to contradict it.

Sept. 24, 1905.

Mr. William
Cotton.

There is one observation I forgot—in our hospital a lot of people come in there who are not hospital cases, and they are treated there and treated successfully; that entails a good deal of expense on the rates; well, we cannot charge these people any more than the average charge.

28884. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of a change in the law—supposing the Board of Guardians had a discretion to charge such an amount per week or day as they might think could reasonably be paid by the person or by him or her friends?—Certainly.

28885. You think that would be a fair discretion to give—not to hand them, but give them the power to charge such sums as they might think desirable?—Yes, and it is unfair to the medical officer.

Mr. WILLIAM COTTON further examined.

28886. In some county infirmaries they have started the plan you recommend, and they have been able to pay the medical officer's salary out of the receipts. In our hospital we can only charge the average cost.

28887. You have to charge either the full average cost or nothing. If a person came in you could not charge him 6d. per week, or if it cost for fever £3 a week you could not charge that, but you now would be in favour of an amendment of the law that would enable you to charge from 6d. to £3 a week according to the amount they could pay?—According to the actual amount that they could pay.

28888. And according to their ability to pay?—Yes.

Dr. Jennings.

There is another view to take of that question. My experience, of course, must give way to yours, but suppose a farmer breaks his leg or breaks his collar-bone, sustains a serious surgical injury and goes into the hospital and pays the average charge; he has been all his life a ratepayer, and I think he is punished quite enough by having to pay the average charge.

Dr. JENNINGS, J.P., further examined.

CHAIRMAN.—Well, according to the chairman's suggestion that would be in the discretion of the Board of Guardians—in the majority of cases it would be quite enough for a man who was unfortunate enough to meet with an accident.

Mr. Florence
Crowley.

28889. CHAIRMAN.—What is the view of the Dunmurry Guardians on the question of the amalgamation of unions or classification of inmates?—The view of the Dunmurry Board is that the law should remain as it is; they are not for amalgamation, or even asking others to amalgamate with them.

28890. They don't want their own union to be broken up or any other union?—No.

28891. As regards the classification of inmates—have they any views on that subject?—There is one particular matter that has struck me very forcibly, and it is this, the classification of the old people that are in the hospitals. I would be for having some central institution where the undesirable class would be sent to, people that have no sentimental feelings as regards their locality. There are others that are in there without any fault of their own but poverty and Providence. These people would, unfortunately, rather die by the fence side than be transferred from their own particular district, and the undesirable class that has but very little sentiment don't care if they are sent to Juan Fernandez or some other place.

28892. You are arguing against obliging the aged respectable poor to be sent further than they are at present?—Quite so; I am totally against it, because I know their sentiments, and I think the officers of our union can minutely describe to you, or can classify, being under their observation from time to time, those very nicely. Some of these stranger people that were not born in the locality and make themselves undesirable, I would be for removing those to some central institution.

28893. You would keep the respectable aged and infirm poor in their own locality?—Quite so.

28894. And the less desirable or troublesome class you would send to the central institution?—Quite so; that is my view.

28895. That in all you have to say as regards the indoor classification?—Quite so.

28896. As regards outdoor relief is there anything you would wish to say?—No, our power of granting outdoor relief should be increased in this direction—for instance a man is debared from receiving outdoor relief if he holds anything over a certain quantity of land. I am aware from my long experience of thirty years at the Board that you have men holding six or seven or ten acres of land of an inferior class that they are very frequently more fit subjects to receive relief than those that never had land. I would like the law to be changed so that if this question did arise, this outdoor relief could be given to those people if they are sick or in want.

28897. Would you go beyond that?—I would; sickness or inability to work; if Providence visits them with any affliction, loss of cattle or any other little things like that, I would say it would be very necessary that powers should be given.

28898. Would you really recommend that Guardians should have power to give relief to people who might have lost their cattle, and have as much as six or seven acres?—Quite so, and ten acres of inferior land; they are often very poor.

28899. Is there any way in which you would safeguard people's extravagance?—The representatives of the people, I think, are economical enough to look after that; the man that dispenses this is a large ratepayer himself as a general rule, and I don't think they would be anxious to keep up the rates.

28900. Would you have it a union-at-large charge?—No, I am for divisional rating, because there would be more economy practised, but I know the towns will suffer. What I would wish to suggest would be that the rural districts would provide an auxiliary rate or a grant that would relieve the towns.

28901. As they did under the old law?—Quite so; it was a commutation system, and we relieved the towns. Divisional rating is the soundest and most commonsense way of doing it; it comes under my notice every day; a certain man applies for relief, give it to him, it is as little to us as it is to any other division. If it were to fall on one particular division that man probably would never have got relief, and some people are demoralised by getting outdoor relief, and if outdoor relief is not given carefully it demoralises the people who get it. I am twenty-five years a member of the Board. I am a member of the County Council, and I have long experience in these matters.

Mr. Cotton.—I think the Guardians should get discretionary power to give relief to the people who hold more than a quarter of an acre of land.

Mr. JOHN MURPHY, J.L.C., Dunmurry, examined.

28902. CHAIRMAN.—You are a Guardian of the Dunmurry Union?—Yes.

28903. What is your view about amalgamation of unions and classification of inmates?—Since the commencement of this inquiry it is giving me serious consideration, and, totting the whole thing together,

I believe amalgamation would not be to the advantage either of the rates or the relief of the poor.

28904. Would you then rather agree with Dr. Jennings that the system as it is is good enough?—The system as it is is good enough with properly and well-elected Guardians.

Mr. John
Murphy.

28905 Do you think there is any failure in that respect?—I believe not at present; they represent constitutionally the feelings of the local people.

28906 So that the present system meets with your approval?—It does; I believe that any new change would increase the taxation rather than diminish it.

28907 You would not like to have fewer Guardians?—No.

28908 Everything is as it might be?—Yes; I believe if you amalgamate you will have more officials than at present; you will remunerate the present staff and have those a burden on you if you appoint new ones; amalgamation would be against the interest of the poor and of the ratepayers.

28909 As regards outdoor relief?—I do agree with the evidence already given that in exceptional cases of people with large families, and sometimes illness, it ought to be discretionary with the Guardians to consider their cases and grant temporary outdoor relief.

28910 You are aware that at present destitution is the only qualification for outdoor relief?—Yes, I may call that permanent destitution.

28911 You change that into poverty?—Into poverty.

28912 You enable the Guardians to give outdoor relief to poor as distinguished from destitute?—To poor, I believe those holding small holdings are just as badly off, if not worse, than the labourers.

28913 That is enabling the Guardians to act as a charitable body as well as a relieving body—you would be in favour of that?—I would, and, in addition, I would say some maintenance or reward should be given to doctors so as to issue red tickets for relief. At the present time I see many of our people holding these small places, and even larger ones go to death's door before they can afford to bring in a doctor. I believe there is a great need for reforming the laws, so that medical assistance can reach these humble classes; I believe they would die for want of medical aid sometimes.

28914 Dr. BROWN.—What prevents them getting a red ticket?—The amount of land they hold.

28915 CHAIRMAN.—There is no barrier?—I have said so myself. A poor person.

28916 Dr. BROWN.—No distinction whatever?—And the amount of land would not bar them?

28917 CHAIRMAN.—No; if they are poor, that is the qualification?—No matter if they held any amount of land.

28918 Dr. BROWN.—So long as they cannot pay for a doctor they are entitled to a red ticket?—He may have cattle, but they are mortgaged.

28919 CHAIRMAN.—If the doctor thought he was being unfairly dealt with he would have power to apply to the Guardians to have the thing set right?

—As regards the maintenance of children in this institution, I entirely agree with the outdoor system of rearing these little ones as opposed to this institution; I believe they grow up better citizens by mixing in the country with their equal little fellows; if confined to these institutions, reformatories and so on I believe it is a nest for rearing up young fellows either for the army or navy, pocket-picking or jabs; they won't make useful members of society.

28920 You are altogether for continuing the present state of things?—Yes.

28921 Except in the case of tramps?—I don't think we can improve them much; they are not much of a valuable commodity on the people.

28922 They are not a valuable asset?—No, nor they are no great loss either to the ratepayers; I believe if they did not get this lodging for the night there would be more danger outside; they would go to hayricks and sheds and sleep there, and be more cost to the ratepayers in this way than if left in for a night's lodging.

28923 Would you be in favour of putting them into a diomed workhouse, if there was one available, where they would be obliged to work hard, on a magistrate's warrant for a couple of years to get them into industrial habits?—I believe the labour there, even under compulsion, would not pay for the officials over them; I believe they are cheaper as they are.

28924 You would let the present system continue?—I would with police supervision. Then as regards the classification of inmates I know there are some old women especially who are given to harping and are abusive; if these could be detached from the others, and leave the old quiet people who are saying their prayers go their own way by themselves.

28925 And lock up the soldiers?—Yes, if there was some central place for those; if we had two in the County Cork, for East and West Cork.

28926 You would not be able to fill two?—Perhaps not; well, one. My general summary is that amalgamation would not serve the country, neither ratepayers, nor those whom the law is intended to relieve.

Mr. DANIEL D. HARRINGTON, J.P., Chairman.

28927 CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians?—I am Chairman of the District Council. By resolution of the Board last year, they unanimously decided that amalgamation would be detrimental to the interests of the ratepayers and poor of Castletown.

28928 You are cut off very much?—You are at the end of a long promontory?—Yes, about thirty-six miles.

28929 You are in quite a peculiar position like Dingle?—Yes; I think we are worse than Dingle; our communications are worse.

28930 Except that you have daily steamers?—Daily in summer and alternate days in winter, and then by driving Bantry and Keshmarr are the nearest points; on that account I am of opinion that it would not be expedient or economical to amalgamate Castletown with another union at all.

28931 You have a considerable number of inmates there too?—About seventy this past week; sometimes they go to 100, or sometimes to 110.

28932 Ninety-eight the year before last was your maximum, and a great many of those are sick?—They are sick, and aged and infirm.

28933 Fifty-two in the hospital?—I think about that.

28934 In any case it would not be possible to take away the sick from you?—It would not, or the aged and infirm.

28935 Why do you think it would not be possible to take away the aged and infirm?—First and foremost I believe they would prefer to die by the roadside than to leave the workhouse there, and I believe there are a great many in workhouses that if they found they would be buried among their friends would stay in the workhouse in the neighbourhood.

Castletown Rural District Council, examined.

28936 They attach a great deal of importance to being buried with their friends and relatives?—Yes.

28937 Are there many burials inside your workhouse burial ground?—Very few; 90 per cent. are buried by their friends, I am sure.

28938 So that the feeling is very strong?—Very strong on that point, and also they are visited by their friends, which they could not be if they were further away.

28939 You notice that there are a great many visitors to the workhouse?—I do regularly.

28940 Have you observed that most of those visits are to the sick, not to the aged and infirm?—Well, they are to both.

28941 Are you aware a great many of the aged and infirm are people who are just the surviving, unmarried, or widowed remainder of a generation—old people without any friends practically?—There are a great many of the aged and infirm who have got friends and prefer to live there.

28942 Have you noticed that a great many of the aged and infirm are old, single, or widowed people without any near relatives to take an interest in them?—I have not gone into that; I do believe that they would not go into a union further away.

28943 Do you think it is desirable to retain children—there are very few children in the Castletown Workhouse—only three?—Very few.

28944 Do you think it is desirable to retain children in the workhouse?—I do not. I know they are well looked after where they are, but I always say the workhouse is no place for a child. I prefer to see a child sent off at a certain age to an institution where they would have the means of industrial training. I have not much experience of boarding out in Castletown; there are only three in our union, and they are boarded out with their grandmother. The associations when they are boarded out would be better, I am sure, but a great many people take them to Lourd out, not so much for the amount they receive monthly as for the service they may render them afterwards. Our children are very well looked after in the Castle-town Union, but I would strongly say that when a child comes to a certain age he should be sent to a school for industrial training.

28945. Why industrial training?—When a boy is in a union he remains there until sixteen years of age; he leaves it unprovided for, and the first thing he does is to do things that would not be very conducive to his future welfare.

28946. I think we both agree that it is desirable he should not stay in a workhouse—then the question is whether it would be more in the boy's interest in that rank of life to be boarded out among the labouring classes, where he would become one of the labouring class, or whether it would be more in the child's interest, and in the interest of the community that that child should be sent to a school to be taught a trade?—Well, we have no experience of that, but from what I have read the general opinion tends towards that.

28947. Take the country people that you are familiar with who are failures in life and whose children would have to come into the workhouse—I would agree with boarding out under proper supervision.

28948. Rather than go to the expense of giving them a trade education?—Well, I would like them to get a trade education when they are poor.

28949. Do you think that putting them into positions that the smaller ratepayers themselves could not hope to put their children into would be wise?—I think the Industrial School Act should be put in force for them as well as for others—I would not go to increase the rates for that.

28950. What do you think would be the wisest thing to do—whether would you think it wiser to bring up these children to recruit the labouring class, which is deficient just now, or whether it would be better to put them into the trade class, who find it very difficult to get employment?—I always agree it is better a child should be brought up outside the atmosphere of the workhouse.

28951. Then would you make them labourers or tradespeople—do you think the tradespeople are fully employed at present?—Oh, I do.

28952. Are you short of labourers?—Sometimes.

28953. Then it becomes a question whether it would be more prudent to make labourers of them or tradespeople?—According as opportunity would offer among those people.

28954. Would you put them into an institution where they would be brought up as tradespeople, or board them out where they would be brought up as labourers?—I would go in for giving the child the benefits of an industrial training by State aid; they are perfectly entitled to it.

28955. More than they would get at an ordinary school in the country, even when they are boarded out?—The question of being boarded out and industrial training are different things; one is brought up as a pauper, and the other under State aid to make them good members of society afterwards.

28956. They would both be supported by the rates—the only question is whether you would bring them up as paupers as labourers, or more expensively as tradespeople?—I would give a boy his opportunity according as he had a talent.

28957. If sent to an institution he could not be brought up as a labourer?—If they had a farm he could be brought up as a labourer.

28958. Those schools have not farms—do you mean a new kind of school should be started?—I would say yes, whatever would be determined on afterwards to remove them from their present position.

28959. Mr. McBRID—Your rates are very high—the highest in the county?—They are high this year; we have adopted the Local Government Board dietary, which increased our rate considerably; then also there is this year an estimate for elections, and then the new accounts order; there was an estimate for books.

28960. Ordinarily they are very high?—In a small union it fluctuates very much; sometimes it is low and sometimes high.

28961. If this re-arrangement of the system could be made it might reduce the rates?—Yes; I would make a suggestion also on that. I fancy if a Relief Rate Act was adopted by State aid or a county-alteration charge, that a rate in any union over the average rates of other unions should get a help.

28962. CHAIRMAN—What would the other unions say to that?—I don't know what they would say to it.

28963. I think I can imagine?—In coming to the relief of a union whose position is such that it is amalgamated it would be detrimental to the interests of both ratepayers and the poor.

28964. Mr. McBRID—If an arrangement was made which would not interfere with the accommodation of the sick nor injure the classes that can properly claim relief, would you assent to such re-arrangement?—If the sick were properly provided for it would entail an amount of expense; you should have a staff there in the same way.

28965. Not necessarily an expensive staff?—You should have a fair staff, I am sure, in the hospital.

28966. The upkeep of the main body of the house costs a considerable sum—the cost of fuel, light, and repairs, and a good many of those things could be spared?—I don't know; the hospital at present is certainly a hospital well cared and kept, but still if you had a hospital there you would have a lot of the aged and infirm there who would all become hospital patients. I may say all the Castle-town Workhouses as a hospital—the chief part of it—I regard the aged and infirm as hospital patients. Then as for representation, the distance is so very far; the residents of each division know the wants of their division, and if you had a union far away from Borehaven in a short time you would have no residents.

28967. CHAIRMAN—If you retained your local Council, and if you dealt with outdoor relief and managed your district hospital, then the only difference would be that the aged and infirm, or healthy inmates that were supported elsewhere would be paid for by you monthly, quarterly, or half yearly as the case might be, in the central institution?—I think the present arrangement would be better than that.

28968. You understand the arrangement that has been suggested to us—that the Council should continue to be the Poor Law authority still, that they should deal with outdoor relief, and deal with their hospital, and that they should pay the bills for the inmates that are supported elsewhere in a central institution, on the ground of economy?—You would send the patients away and have other institutions?—

28969. Send the healthy away and keep the sick?—We have not an able-bodied inmate in the house. I don't think it would conduce at all to the welfare of the poor to have the union amalgamated; we have gone into that subject very carefully.

28970. That would not break up the union—yet still would have your local institutions and your local Council managing matters, and have your district hospital under your control. The only difference would be that in the same way as you pay for the inmates or patients in the county infirmary you would pay for the aged inmates that might be elsewhere?—I think it would be a hardship on the aged and infirm to remove them from the place in which they are at present.

28971. That is an intelligible objection that we have had from a great many?—I think that is a serious consideration. On a consideration at first of the question a majority held that divisional rating would be preferable, but that was reversed at the last meeting. If there is a union rating it should be a general rating.

28972. Are you referring to special charges under the Public Health and other Acts?—Yes.

MISS BROWN further examined.

Miss Ellen.
Mary Brown.

You questioned the last witness closely what ought to be done with a child after a certain age. Don't you think it ought to be decided by the attitude of the child himself?

28973. CHAIRMAN—Yes?—The poor people have talents as well as the rich.

28974. Certainly; the only question is putting them in such a position early in life that their future is decided on before they have time to voice any taste?—Don't you think if a child is educated that it would be a pity to throw him away on labour?

22673. I think it is a very nice pursuit—I think everybody is anxious to get away from it, and the person that ought to be able to decide that would be the schoolmaster or schoolmistress of the school when the child was boarded out.

CHAIRMAN.—I would rather leave it to the lady Guardians.

Sept. 28, 1903.
Miss Ellen
Mary Brown

MR. EDWARD BLAKE, p.s.o., Castletown, examined.

22676. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Castletown Union?—Yes.

22677. Do you agree with Mr. Harrington?—I agree with him entirely; I don't see the use in amalgamating where we would keep the hospital and out-door relief. It is in these two all the expenses are—it is not twenty or thirty paupers that cause the expense.

22678. If you only kept the sick you could dispense with all the other officers except the officers of the infirmary?—The most of them that we have been are sick.

22679. The master, matron and porter, and any lunatic attendants, if you have them, would all go?—I understand that well enough. Would they not want a master or porter then to look after them?

22680. Oh, no, we never have any such officers in a little hospital?—We may do away with three or four of them.

22681. Would you like to reduce the rates if you could, or rather keep them as they are?—I would like to reduce them.

22682. If we submit a scheme that is likely to reduce the rates considerably, and not inflict any hardship except, of course, the hardship that Mr. Harrington told us about, the removal of the aged—would you be disposed to think that is a scheme that might be considered?—If I thought the expense would be lessened I would like it.

22683. If it did not cause any hardship?—Even if it did. How can it reduce expense if we have to pay for the inmates, old and sick?

22684. They would be kept in a separate institution where the expense ought to be less, where a large number would be supported, and instead of having in the seven or eight rooms all over the place separate staffs of officers you would only have the one staff of the central institution, and nothing like as many officers as all put together in the individual unions?—I don't see that to such a place as Berchamstown would reduce the expense. Suppose we paid for an inmate sent to Clonsilla, or Bandon or Dunsany, would it not cost as much to send him as would support an inmate for three months?

22685. How much had you to pay for your return ticket this morning?—I paid for no ticket.

22686. How much would it be?—I could not tell you, I never came that course; I thought my own horse with me.

Mr. Harrington.—6s. return on dock, and 7s. cabin. It would be 3s. 6d. single.

Witness.—Then sending a horse and car to Dursley or The Mines.

22687. How do the Dursley people come into you at Castletown at present?—They come by water; they would have to change to horses then.

22688. Do they come the whole way by water?—No, only a mile or so across the channel.

Mr. Edward Blake

DR. LYNE EXAMINED.

I am the Medical Officer of Castletown Workhouse.

22689. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you wish to mention as regards the evidence you have heard?—I see a very great difficulty about amalgamating Castletown as it is so isolated. The class of inmates we have are all aged and infirm; there are no able-bodied people, and they never come into the workhouse except when pretty far gone. From Dursley they have to come three miles to the Sound, and then it is eighteen miles to Castletown.

22690. How many inmates have you had from Dursley?—I cannot say, but we have had some; it is from remote places they come.

22691. Have you any from the island at present?—I had one not long ago. I cannot tell about the people in the body of the house, but the difficulty is if they travel eighteen miles by cart after crossing the Sound these old people would be so shaken if you put them in a boat and send them down Bantry Bay; if there was a high sea they might get sick and perhaps die.

22692. You would have to keep them for a night in the district hospital?—If there was room for them.

22693. If they were so feeble that in your opinion it would not be safe to let them go on you could keep them for a week?—There are people in the body of the house that I, as a doctor, would not certify were fit to be sent down Bantry Bay in a boat; people have got seasick and died; I would not take the risk of giving a certificate.

22694. It would be a remote possibility?—I would not think so. I was on one occasion at an inquest in Dublin when an ex-soldier, who was not very strong, came across the Channel and got seasick, and the verdict was that he died of it.

22695. It is a remote possibility?—No, I think it would be very likely to kill a person who was feeble.

22696. Have you met many cases of deaths from seasickness?—No, I have not had to deal with seagoing people; the Castletown people are not likely to die of it.

22697. Is there any other matter you would like to mention to us?—No, I think that is about the only thing.

22698. DR. BROWN.—Have you many convalescents at Castletown?—One male.

22699. Have you an isolation ward?—Yes.

22700. Have you many acute early cases occurring at Castletown?—No, very few; I have a few dispensary cases who are at home on out-door relief who are in consumption, these, I should think; they are rather chronic though.

22701. Of course the district has joined with the other districts of Cork with reference to the sanatorium?—Our union is subscribing.

22702. You think it will be a benefit?—I should think it would be a very great benefit to have a sanatorium.

22703. Have you many lunatics?—I think we have about four; we tried to get them sent up to Cork, and Dr. Woods said there was no room for them; he suggested to send them to Eglinton, but they are scarcely cases for that.

22704. Did you get any removed from Castletown to Trough?—We made an attempt but failed; I think we are entitled to send four, and they applied about a year ago, but did not succeed in getting them sent.

Dr. Lyne

MR. EDWARD ROYCE, p.s.o., Chairman, Schull Union, examined.

22705. CHAIRMAN.—Are you the Chairman of the Schull Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

22706. Have you considered the question of the amalgamation of the unions, or the re-classification of the inmates?—Yes, we have.

22707. What is your view on the question?—We examined a meeting of the Guardians to discuss the matter, and they were almost unanimous that we would have no amalgamation owing to the geographical position of our union being a headland, that it would be very inconvenient if they were sent to any other place. It is thirty-three miles from the furthest off point of our union to Shillbreena, and twenty-nine to Bantry, and we believe the western portion of our union would be practically disfranchised and cut off from representation if they had to go further.

22708. Supposing that instead of amalgamation it

Mr. Edward Royce

Mr. Edward

was only a reclassification—supposing the Council at Schull still remained and still managed their hospital and still administered the outdoor relief, and that the union was not broken up, but only the inmates were classified and sent away, the healthy to a central institution, and treat the sick as before at Schull—what would you say to that?—They may not have as large an objection to that; I don't think they would have so much.

29000. They have not considered that point?—Not fully.

29010. Now, without asking you to pin yourself too much to an opinion at first sight, what would your own opinion be where you would have your Council still remaining, and the work still in your charge, and the outdoor relief still in your hands?—Most of our people are poor old bedridden people, not properly called hospital people, and they have a hatred of going beyond where they are. They say if carried to any other union their friends would not go to visit them, and if they died they would be buried outside their own family burial place, and they won't go any further.

29011. Would your opinion then be against sending away the aged and infirm to another institution?—We are of opinion that we would gain nothing by it; we are fairly satisfied with the rates we are paying, and we consider if we amalgamate with any other union we would, perhaps, have to pay more.

29012. It is not a question of amalgamation—the question that was put was not as to amalgamation—your rates would be still struck on the Schull area; the only thing is that instead of supporting your healthy inmates in the house at Schull, you would pay so much a head for them, or pay according to the arrangement in some outside or central institution with the object of being able to discontinue the services of the officers who look after the healthy?—The inmates themselves and their relatives would have a great disgust against that; they would not like to have them removed too far away from them that they might not see them again.

29013. Do you think that that is altogether a reasonable objection—would that be such an objection as would influence you as a representative of the ratepayers in voting against a change if it were proved that it would be a distinct and material saving in the rates?—If I thought it was, and was a benefit all round, I would be in favour of it.

29014. I don't say a benefit all round, but if you considered it would be a benefit to the rates, do you think the objection you have just put on behalf of the aged and infirm going away from their own homes would be a strong enough objection to make you vote against any change?—Whatever little we gained by that change would not compensate for the loss we sustained.

29015. How much reduction in the rates would compensate you—if we could reduce your rates by something in the £1—We have not gone into figures.

29016. I am not asking you as chairman of the board, but personally as a ratepayer—if we could show you you could get off £2. or £3. in the £1—It would be a great inducement to me; it would change my sentiments; we have a very substantial building, and the upkeep costs very little.

29017. You have to keep up the fire and lights in the healthy part as well as pay the officers who look after the healthy part?—The cases that we have at present, are, except the children, nearly all bedridden or infirm cases.

29018. You put most of them into the sick wards?—Yes, that is the doctor's classification.

29019. I have never seen a workhouse where the classification was so extreme—you have forty-seven in the sick wards and three in the aged and infirm.

If we were dealing with the question we would accept that classification without overhauling it—I think it would be entitled to be overhauled; we have thirteen children; we would have more inmates, but we are fairly liberal in giving outdoor relief; we give a great deal of outdoor relief.

29020. You could continue that if you thought fit under the new system?—We have 125 cases getting outdoor relief at present.

29021. How much do you pay a year for that?—From £500 to £550 a year.

29022. I take it that I might summarise your opinion by saying that the Board of Guardians are strictly against any question of amalgamation—that they did not consider this question of reclassification with the continuance of the Council, which I have just outlined, but that your own personal view of that is that you personally would be inclined to reconsider your view if you found that a substantial saving would be effected by sending the healthy to a central institution?—That is so, but we fear that we might not be able to gain as much as is expected.

29023. We have to get more statistics from the clerks of the unions before we can finish our calculations, but you may be sure that we won't recommend any change unless we can see to the best of our judgment a decided economy. Is there any other point you would like to mention?—We are so isolated from other centres that we are not troubled with a great many tramps; we have a very long seaboard, larger than any other union; I don't think Castletown would be in it; we have from Keating Water Bay, Schull Harbour, Long Island Channel and Croaghmore to Duncannon Bay.

29024. No, Castletown beats you?—We have a large fishing population, and a great many of these poor people, when the weather gets bad and they are out of employment, have to seek outdoor relief from the workhouse, and it would be a great inconvenience to them. We have six curing stations and about sixty fishing boats surrounding our union.

29025. How would the closing of the able-bodied wards affect the fishing population?—If some of their families got ill we could not give a bit of outdoor relief, and they have recourse to the workhouse then.

29026. That is when there is illness?—Yes.

29027. Your hospital would still be there, and you could still give your outdoor relief if the head of the family was inside the hospital—you could give relief to the family outside?—It might be some of the family that was stricken ill.

29028. That would not be a case for relief if the man was earning all the time and could support them?—We have some islands too, five of them, and two of them are three miles south of Schull; there is a population of over 500 on the islands; they have to come out in boats and then come from the shore, where they land, to the workhouse when they want anything, and we would have to be sending our relieving officer if we changed to the other workhouse, and it would be a great distance.

29029. They would not have to go there—they would still come to Schull?—Who would be there to superintend them?

29030. Your Council would be still there—they would be officers of your Council and would come in Council meetings; the only difference is that you would pay the distant institutions for maintaining your healthy?—Would we have a Board of Guardians there still?

29031. Certainly, according to the suggestions made to us?—That would change the aspect somewhat.

29032. Would you then be in favour of it?—Well, more than the others.

29033. You would not have so great an objection?—No, if I could have a substantial saving I would be in favour of it more or less.

Mr. J. H. KELLER, J.P., examined.

Mr. J. H. Kelly. 29034. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Schull District Council?—Yes.

29035. And one of the Guardians of the union?—Yes.

29036. You have heard the evidence of Mr. Rogge?—Yes.

29037. Now, without taking you over the same ground, you heard the last discussion we had—supposing the local body remains, the sick to be still in your charge, the administration of outdoor relief to be still in your hands, and the healthy inmates sent to a central institution, what would you think of that?—I would be in favour of such a classification as that if it could be proved there was an economy; we have at present only very few able-bodied. I would be very much in favour of having the undesirable class removed and the children also.

29038. What do you mean exactly by "undesirable"—Mothers of illegitimate children. I think they ought to be removed and put into some place.

29039. What would you do with the children?—I would prefer boarding them out, let them live in the open air and learn the healthy occupation of labourers and let them go to country schools. Otherwise I would not be in favour of doing away with the place altogether as a hospital. Our hospital is very economically managed. As far as stimulants go there is none of that there.

29040. Now as regards outdoor relief, is there anything you would wish to say about the present system?—I think it is a bit abused in a good many cases; probably people get outdoor relief who don't deserve it, and other cases in which there is not sufficient outdoor relief given.

29041. Do you see any way of remedying that?—I think we ought to get poorer in the case of a small farmer or labourer who would be sick and had more than a quarter acre of land to give relief.

29042. That might increase the outdoor relief?—I think it would reduce it; we might not have to bring these people into hospital to treat them if we gave a little relief outside. Some members of the Board are in favour of divisional rating. My division would benefit by it, but I would be more in favour of centralising all taxation.

29043. Do you think the tendency would be a little bit on the extravagant side?—I think the local people fairly well look after their districts.

29044. Do you think the exercise a very active supervision over outdoor relief now?—I think they do except in a few cases.

29045. Can you think of any way in which these few abuses could be stopped?—There is a practice on the part of the medical officers of giving certificates to parties wanting nourishment, and the relieving officers acting on these give provisions, a little milk and tea; in some cases I think that has been abused.

Mr. DAVID J. GALLAGHER, Vice-Chairman, Schull Union, examined.

29053. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Schull Union?—The Vice-Chairman.

29054. We know from the two preceding witnesses the view of the Schull Guardians?—I dare say you do not. I have not been summoned to consider your letter. My opinion is that amalgamation or redistribution is necessary, because the cost of the establishment exceeds the cost of the maintenance of inmates.

29055. Would you be in favour of the first instance of keeping up a hospital for the acute sick?—Yes.

29056. Then the other people—would you be in favour if there would be a substantial saving—would you be in favour of sending the healthy to a central institution, keeping up the Schull Board of Guardians or District Council, as the case might be, to deal with the hospital and outdoor relief?—Yes, consistently with economy; the acute sick are not many in Schull. Of course I am aware of the length of the district; from Crookhaven to Skibberen is very long and it is too hard to expect a sick patient to be taken there on an ambulance. My idea is to establish a temporary hospital in Schull, but there is the sentimental point.

29057. I think you might start by admitting that it would be necessary to keep a 500-bed hospital in Schull for the acute sick?—Whether little or large, that would depend on the staff employed there; I only considered a temporary hospital there.

29058. Don't you think it would be always necessary to have a hospital there?—A temporary hospital where a person taken in an ambulance from Crookhaven might rest for a night or two nights, and then be taken on to Skibberen.

29059. That would be a kind of a hospital that does not exist anywhere in the world?—I think a temporary hospital should be attached to each dispensary where sick patients could rest.

29060. There are a great many patients you could not remove that way; some of them would be barely able to stand one removal; sending them on might mean death. You have your hospital at Schull, why would you not let the hospital remain there as

I know a good many cases in which parties who get 1s. or 1s. 6d. a week don't convert it to any profitable use; they sometimes drink it.

29046. You think if the area were the electoral division that would be more likely to make the Guardians look more closely?—Those would not be much of an improvement; we go very closely into the list.

29047. When these individual cases of under-earning people come up it is suggested that they should be knocked off?—Very probably, but some local gentleman will say it is a deserving case, and we follow his advice.

29048. Does any gentleman say: "This is an undeserving case" and get it knocked off?—That happens.

29049. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Would that local gentleman advocate it as strongly if his own division had to pay for it?—He may probably.

29050. Do you think his advocacy is not due largely to the fact that other divisions were paying for it?—No, I think not; it is local sympathy with the party concerned. Our outdoor relief bill is considerably lower than when we had divisional rating, one-third lower. I think the sanatorium is a good thing if they established it on a proper basis, but I am against spending too much money on extravagant buildings. I think there are plenty of substantial good workhouses in the district that ought to be utilized.

29051. CHAIRMAN.—At all events if they do make a small sanatorium for acute cases, would you be in favour of assigning a disused or empty workhouse for dealing with such cases?—I would; I am also against the expenditure of money, such as on the Youghal Asylum, when there are plenty of buildings that could be utilized.

29052. You are not opposed to the system in Youghal, but to the expenditure in the first place?—Quite so; I think some substantial workhouse ought to be taken up and then added to it afterwards if required; I think it was a foolish expenditure, and I am afraid they will do the same with the sanatorium.

a going concern for cases of illness that arise in the union?—Perhaps it may be utilized for better purposes after.

29062. And porter?—Well, their superannuation would have to be considered, and possibly there would be very little saving in that.

29063. Their superannuation would be a charge that would drop off?—It would be very hard on young men and women.

29064. There would be situations for them in a central institution possibly?—You are aware the valuation of Schull is only £15,000 or £16,000, and the number in receipt of outdoor relief has gone down considerably.

29065. This is the time of year when it is lowest?—Well, I have statistics; September 1903-1904 there were 137 cases, and again 100 cases. But the real point is that the cost of the establishment exceeds the cost of the maintenance and clothing of inmates. I have it from the audit.

29066. It is dangerous to go into these questions without more care?—In September 1904 the cost of maintenance was £273 12s. 6d., whereas the cost of the establishment was £237 3s. 3d.

29067. What was the cost of establishment—what items were brought into that?

Mr. P. O'BRIEN.—Salaries of medical officers and trained nurses and the salary of the schoolmaster.

29068. CHAIRMAN.—Salaries of all the medical officers. These figures are not arranged as that you can jump them in the way you propose, because the medical charities are included in that?

Witness.—No, they are not included in the cost of establishment.

Dr. BROOKS.—There are other officers and other expenses here, £120 of which no particulars are given.

Mr. P. O'BRIEN.—It is all included.

Sept. 29, 1905

Mr. J. H. Kelly.

Mr. David J. Gallagher.

Sept. 23, 1905.

Mr. David J. Gallagher.

29066. CHAIRMAN.—There is too much included. Dr. Broom.—The salary of the clerk, I expect, is included.

Witness.—Outdoor relief is going down in our district. There has been £40 of a decrease between March, 1903, and March, 1904, and nearly all the inmates in Schull Workhouse are hospital cases, very few children boarded out, and very few healthy people in the body of the house.

29070. CHAIRMAN.—You think it would be better to keep the union intact if you have to keep up a hospital?—Yes.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN, F.R.S., Schull, examined.

Mr. Patrick O'Brien.

I am the senior representative of the largest division of the Schull Union, elected on the amalgamation ticket, and tried to be hunted on that ground, but was elected by the largest majority anybody ever got in the Schull Union. I am in favour of a general scheme of amalgamation of unions, and particularly the Schull Union, as I believe a good many of them are unnecessary, and are a great drag on the slender resources of the country. Exclusive of local selfish ends, the great stumbling block that I see to amalgamation is fixing the area of charge and not giving each union the full credit for its agricultural grant. I am in favour of amalgamation on the following lines—1st, that each union get full credit for its agricultural grant after amalgamation takes place; 2nd, that the area of charge for maintenance and clothing and outdoor relief, &c., be the present areas. If both these items of expenditure were levied off the amalgamated area it would be sure to lead to an abuse of public money, as Guardians would not be likely to exercise half the vigilance when the areas of charge would be too large; besides in one union poor rates may be much higher than in a neighbouring union; therefore, levying rates for all purposes off the amalgamated areas would inflict a great injustice on unions whose rates may be lower than the union amalgamated with, and ratepayers and Guardians would never consent to amalgamation if they could avoid it; 3rd, all expenditure coming under the heading of the establishment charges to be levied off the amalgamated areas; 4th, and for the purpose of reducing establishment charges to a minimum the Poor Law valuation of the amalgamated areas should be at least £100,000. Now in Schull Union the valuation of the area of charge is only £15,500, whilst the average yearly amount of establishment charges calculated on the abstracts of seven half-years is £608 4s. 2d. per year, and to raise that amount off the Schull Union the Guardians should strike a rate of 9/3d. in the £, while a rate of 1-45d. in the £ would be sufficient on a valuation of £100,000. The average yearly cost of maintenance and clothing of inmates in Schull Workhouse calculated on the abstracts of seven half-years is £200 8s. 7½d. per year, so that the amount of establishment charges is actually higher than maintenance and clothing of inmates. The total average cost of maintenance and clothing and outdoor relief is £864 5s. 1½d., and only this small sum reaches the poor of the Schull Union, if we exclude £19 12s. 2d. average cost of medicine and medical and surgical appliances for workhouse, &c., £40 14s. 5d. average yearly cost of medicine and medical and surgical appliances for dispensaries, whilst the total average yearly cost of working the union is £2,206 12s. 4½d.

29073. CHAIRMAN.—Did you mention those figures at all to the Clerk of the Union?—No; I moved amalgamation there two or three years ago. I have the abstracts to prove the figures.

29074. You did not ask the clerk of the union for his opinion on those figures?—No, sir; we got no action at all. I may tell you that I don't agree with anything the chairman has said; we were never summoned at all over amalgamation.

29075. Do you think that there is a strong feeling among a large portion of the ratepayers in favour of it?—The large majority are in favour of it.

29076. Do you think that though they might be against a change they would be in favour of something in the nature of amalgamation, leaving the hospital for the acute sick still remaining, such as the last Guardian disappeared off?—If you keep the hospital you will have to keep the staff, and I am in favour of wiping out the staff.

29071. I am afraid it would be inhuman to send the sick such an enormous distance as from populous parts of your union it would be necessary?—I must say the doctor is adding very much to reduce the cost per head. The transport nuisance is not felt very much in Schull, but still at certain times of the year a few of them come round and should be put under certain restrictions.

29072. You are a little off the beaten route for them?—Yes; there were 230 admitted there for the half-year to September 1904.

29077. What staff would you have to keep for the hospital?—You will have to keep the nurses and the doctor.

29078. And the chaplain?—Yes, I suppose so, that will be a good deal. I would be in favour of keeping a fever hospital there in any case, for a time, until I saw how it worked; perhaps it may not be necessary at all.

29079. Don't you think it would be necessary to keep a hospital where people who get suddenly and seriously sick could be treated?—What I say is this, from my experience of public life for the last six years, that the poor hate the workhouse.

29080. Do the sick hate the hospital?—They hate the workhouse.

29081.—Supposing we abolish that, and break up the workhouse as such, leaving you the district hospital, where only the acute sick are treated, would you have the same objection to that, and do you think it would be equally unpopular with the country people?—It may not after a number of years, but I always find if people have anyone to take care of them they won't go into the workhouse or infirmary at all. Take the newspapers, all the sections close among them go to Cork, and surely they can go to Skibbereen.

29082. Take a man with pneumonia, who could not be moved to Skibbereen or Cork, would you leave that poor man in his own home or keep up a little hospital in Schull where he could be treated and cured?—A man suffering from pneumonia could hardly be removed to the hospital if he has anybody to take care of him.

29083. Is it a very unusual state of things, for nearly all the workhouse hospitals round the country are now becoming popular with the people?—That is what I understand.

29084. Any place where the workhouse hospital is not popular, I am afraid it is easy to be taken for granted that there is some good reason for its not being popular?—I would not go so far as to say that.

29085. Would you think it right to try a small hospital, and send away the other inmates?—I suppose it would not be fair to break up the hospital after all, although I am directly against it. It would be too harsh to wipe it out at once.

29086. That is the point of view I myself would regard it from.

Dr. Broom.—Would you rather see a little hospital separated altogether, or another institution from the workhouse?—I would.

29087. Close up the workhouse entirely?—Oh, yes.

29088. CHAIRMAN.—You could repair those buildings on the other side of the road and close up the other place altogether?—The very thing. We were going to utilise it as an auxiliary asylum at one time instead of Tynagh.

29089. That would be the whole workhouse. You knew a site on the opposite side of the road where there are ruined buildings?—Yes, that is a fever hospital.

29090. If that could be put into repair and serve as a district hospital, with fever wards in the neighbourhood of it, would you think that might do?—I would; that would be sufficient, I am sure.

29091. Dr. Broom.—That would get rid of the idea of a workhouse?—That is true.

29092. CHAIRMAN.—In Mr. Murnaghan's District there was a workhouse like Schull closed up altogether and they sold the house and buildings, and there is a church erected now on the site out of the workhouse stones. (JP. rears.)—I am strongly opposed to divisional relief.

29093. You would rather have union-at-large?—Because it is most unjust to divisions that contain large villages and towns. I never heard any reason ad-voiced why one ratepayer in a union should not contribute as much to the support of the deserving poor, according to his valuation, as another. This would not be the case if it were divisional rating, because the division containing the large village would be rated twice as high as the neighbouring division, which did not contain any village. It would also mean a lot of extra labour, as every division should have its own agricultural grant. In Schull union rating has worked very well. We have actually reduced our outdoor relief. The average amount of our outdoor relief, calculated on the abstracts of seven half years, is £121 13s. 7½d. per half-year, whilst for one of the half-years of the standard year—the half-year ended March, 1869—the amount of outdoor relief was £280 16s., so we can show a substantial reduction since it became union rating.

20094. Mr. McNEIGHAN.—The half-year previous to the standard year was very high; it was much above the average so it is hardly a fair estimate?—That will give an idea; I suppose the Guardians tried to be as economical as they could when it was divisional rating. I would not object to a dispensary district charge.

20095. CHAIRMAN.—It is the small divisions you object to?—Yes. The division I represent was persecuted under the old divisional rating; it was always 4s. in the £, and sometimes reached 5s., while the neighbouring divisions were about 1s. 6d. I don't see a reason why one ratepayer should pay more rates than another; it is very unjust. Since it became union rating in Schull we have reduced all round, although our expenditure has increased very much. We had to get trained and qualified nurses and a nurse trained in midwifery who were not there in the standard year, yet we kept our rate almost to the standard rate. Our standard rate is 2s. 3½d., while our average rate for the seven years ending 31st March, 1906, is 2s. 4½d., and whilst the number in the work-house has gone up nearly 50 per cent.

Sect. 13, 1906.

Mr. Patrick O'Brien.

The Sitting terminated.

Sept. 29, 1905.

FIFTY-NINTH PUBLIC SITTING.—FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29TH, 1905.

At the Courthouse, Mallow.

Present:—Mr. NICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. COEY BIGGER.

Mr. D. L. O'GORMAN, M.C., Fermoy, examined.

Mr. D. L. O'GORMAN.

I first will hand you in a map (produced), which indicates the unions of the entire county. I have also marked on it the asylums, and the auxiliary asylum in Tougal. The North and South Infirmaries are also supported by county funds, and the Cork Fever Hospital also gets a grant out of the county funds. The distances are marked here. You will find that the distance between the various workhouses average from ten to sixteen or nineteen miles in some of the western districts, but in our district you find Fermoy ten miles from Mitchelstown and fifteen miles from Mallow. However, as this explains itself I will hand it in. Here are letters from the county surveyor certifying that the distances are correct. I don't think it will be necessary for me to call the attention of the Commission to the great changes which have taken place in this county since the institution of the Poor Law. The population has diminished by nearly a half, and we have now railway communication in this county, which did not exist before, and there are 3,000 labourers' cottages, none of which were built before 1854, and these have an important bearing on the matter. I am sure you will agree in that. The Poor Law Inquiry in 1835 reported that you had in Ireland 1,131,000 agricultural labourers, whose average earnings did not exceed 2s. or 2s. 6d. a week, and that of those, one-half were destitute during thirty weeks of every year. At the present moment the demand for agricultural labour in this district far exceeds the supply. In 1841 the population of Cork County was 775,388, it is now less than 323,475; labour is now much higher, and food and clothes are cheaper than they were when the Poor Law was established; persons are now sent from every union in the county to Cork to be treated. In the Fermoy Union there is not a Board day on which we do not send people to Cork for treatment. We have an auxiliary asylum established in Tougal for lunatic idiots, and though that is now full, there are 400 patients there, still in every union in the county you will find there are a large number of idiots and imbeciles, and a workhouse is certainly not the place for those persons. The asylum in Cork is overcrowded, as you are aware, and it must be evident to all that another auxiliary asylum is necessary, and it will be a great advantage. Deaf and dumb children are sent to Dublin for treatment. All the unions in this county have signified their willingness to contribute a penny in the £ towards the establishment of the asmatarium, which is badly needed for the treatment of consumption. In the County of Cork there are 3,335 rural district cottages, and 684 are under contract. These figures are taken from your own Report, for 1903. In the Fermoy Union alone we have 490 of these cottages. We had 875; there is now a new scheme for 120 cottages, and practically all these are finished. In 1872 the amount spent on the rations and salaries of officers in all the Cork Workhouses, this is taken from the Report issued by the Local Government Board, was £14,000; in 1892 it was £19,731; that would be an increase of £5,000, although, undoubtedly, distress and destitution has decreased largely in those years. It is my opinion that by proper management we could do in the County Cork with two workhouses—one, I should think, in Mallow, and one in Banader. I would send to these all the undesirable, and they should be detained there for some time. Whenever it would be necessary I would retain hospitals; I would extend in deserving cases the outdoor relief; I would board out all the children, and I would make it within the power of the Guardians to rent in the villages a house—the rent of a small house would be a mere trifle, 6s or 8s—and by giving a room in that house to aged, respectable people, it would be very much more economical than the present system. The rent, probably, would not be more than 4s or 6s; if they got the rent, a little grant of coals, and a few shillings a week, it would go much further than the present system. In Fermoy there is absolutely no distress, except where it is caused by sickness, old age, or drunkenness. There is absolutely no distress; and in the county I know of no place where there is less need for a workhouse. A hospital, of course, we would always want; and I can show you, sir, that by establishing a hospital, we would effect a very large saving. Now, sir, it is pointed out that Fermoy is a model union, and that we have the lowest rate in the county; but in Fermoy we have a valuation of £105,000; we have an average number of 197 inmates to provide for. Now, sir, in Skibbereen they have a valuation of £48,000, and they have over 300 inmates to provide for. In Clonsilla they have a valuation of £52,000, and they have over 300 inmates to provide for. If we take Cork as a standard of comparison, where you have a large number of inmates, where the thing is controlled, they have over 2,000 inmates, and the cost per inmate under the heading of officials' salaries and rations, would work out at 11s. per head per week of the inmates. If you come to Fermoy, you will find the cost of the officials' salaries and rations works out at 2s. 6d. per week; and that Fermoy, with the exception of Dunmoreway, is the most extravagant in the whole county. Dunmoreway works out at 3s. 7d., and the average cost there for maintenance and clothing of an inmate is 4s. 3d., and the cost of administering that 4s. 3d. is 3s. 7d., which I don't think is good enough. Of course, it will be pointed out to you that the relieving officers' salary is included in that, but it is included also in Cork. The same salaries are included in all these. What costs 11d. in Cork costs 2s. 6d. in Fermoy. Again, I would point out that numbers of persons are admitted to workhouses who should not be admitted at all. We frequently have able-bodied women, who should not be admitted for instance. We have, too, a habit, I think it is wrong, of admitting pensioners who are able to pay for themselves. They do pay for themselves in the workhouse, and it is pointed out that it is no loss; but I don't think a workhouse is a hotel, and the mere fact that a man is able to pay for himself is conclusive proof that he is not a fit subject for admission. I have known an instance of a woman admitted two or three times, whose son, son-in-law, and daughter-in-law were all in receipt of large sums of public money.

2095. CHAIRMAN.—That is entirely for the Guardians to admit or not admit—it is; but I point out the fact that a woman whose immediate relatives were in receipt of large salaries was admitted, and pensioners are constantly admitted; and the mere fact that they pay in no way does away with the undesirability of that. I take it from your figures that we have 197 inmates in Fermoy; their cost would be the cost of maintenance, which is £1,672, and salaries, £1,280; that gives a total of £2,952. I now take it that of that 197, twenty should not be admitted at all; I take it then we have about twenty children, who should be boarded out, at an average cost of 2s a head; that would be £120 a year. We have then still, sixteen or seventeen of these idiots; they should be sent to a new auxiliary asylum, where they would cost about £35 each per annum; that would be £287. Then in Fermoy on last Board day, I noted the number of hospital cases. They were twenty in one and twenty-three or twenty-four in the other, that is, about forty, but I really think that the number of cases we would have in hospital would be about thirty cases; and I would say in a county hospital like Fermoy we could run it at about £25 a head. We would not have very serious operations; it would not be like the Mater Misericordie in Dublin, or the North and South Infirmaries; the really serious cases are sent to Cork; that would mean about £100 for thirty cases. That would leave fifty people, to whom I would give outdoor relief—some might do with less than 2s. a week, some might want a little more; most of these are respectable old people from the country villages. If they are placed in houses in a village, their rents paid for them, and they get a grant of coal, and a few shillings a week, it would be much better for them—they would be self-respecting people.

29097. What change would you suggest in outdoor relief?—I would make it illegal for the Guardians to give outdoor relief to anyone who had been convicted of drunkenness three times.

29098. How would you make the class that go into the workhouse eligible for relief?—I would suggest old married couples and old broken-down agricultural labourers.

29099. They would be eligible at the present time?—They are; but I want to account for the 137 we have. I would pick out the fifty most respectable.

29100. What change would you suggest in the law so that some of these who at present are ineligible for outdoor relief should become eligible for it?—Many of these persons that I suggest are quite eligible; they have come in because their horses tumbled down or they could not pay the rent of the house, and if they had the loan: their sons and daughters would help them.

29101. Do you regard all these people as eligible for outdoor relief under the existing law?—They are.

29102. And, therefore, you think no change would be necessary?—Not in that; they are eligible. That would leave me sixty undesirable, and I would send them to a central institution, and have the law altered, so that there would be power to confine them there for some time. That would cost in that central institution about £18 each; that would be £720; that gives me a total of £2,111.

29103. What sort of charge would you have for the support of these inmates in that central institution?—I would like a county-at-large charge?—That would be my private idea; personally, I can see no objection to that. At present you have an inmate of the workhouse; he is a union charge in Fenny; he goes out of his mind, and goes up to the asylum, and he becomes a county-at-large charge at once, and nobody objects. On the other hand, I will admit that it would be more popular if you made the charges at the central institution so much a head, and charge the existing Fenny Union for the number of persons they sent there.

29104. What would you do with regard to apportioning salaries in the central institution?—That would be as in the asylum, part of the cost.

29105. The asylum has no difficulty, because it is a county charge?—I would have no objection to making this a county-at-large charge. I have noticed that before your Commission members have given evidence in favour of returning to divisional setting. I think that is altogether wrong; I don't think it would lead to economy. If a thing comes up at the County Council as a county-at-large charge, you may take it that the whole Council is against it but the men from the district, but if it comes to a divisional charge no one cares.

29106. Do you find that is the case in the granting of outdoor relief?—The outdoor relief, I think, has gone down a little; it was £1,500 odd, and is now only £1,500. I really think that as the Guardians get educated to that the wish to return to divisional setting would disappear. To come back to figures—I have a total of £2,111 as against a cost of £2,052, being a saving of £59.

29107. Did you make out the poundage of that?—No, sir. Then, with regard to the feeling of the district, I can give you very important evidence, and satisfy you that the feeling of the bulk of the people is entirely in favour of abolishing the workhouse. I commenced by telling you the country people detest the workhouse. I have said to poor old people, "Why don't you go into the hospital?" And the answer they give is, "I would die by the ditch sooner than go into the workhouse." Before this Commission was thought of I was so struck by the vote that in 1902, on November 24th, I proposed to abolish the Fenny Workhouse, and I explained, as I have to you, the advantage we would have from establishing a hospital; and on a poll the voting was twenty-one to thirteen—thirteen were in favour of the abolition. I will hand in the report, and you will be able to study the arguments in favour of retaining it; they are even more striking than the arguments against it.

29108. I see there was a plan of campaign recommended to the officials?—Exactly, sir—the vested interests, that is the entire objection. I don't wish to show any bitterness or temper, but I recently read the evidence of a gentleman before this Commission, and to my certain knowledge his son was the clerk, his sister was the matron, and his nephew was the relieving officer. The result of that proposal of mine was that I received this—this is from the Ballynase Land and Labour League:—"The following resolution was passed unanimously. Resolved, that the Ballynase Branch of the Land and Labour League compliment Mr. O'Garra for the noble effort he made to get rid of the workhouse." That is from the labourers. I have taken every means in my power to test the matter, and, except the Poor Law Board itself, the people are entirely in favour of giving up the workhouse. I would point out to you too that if these workhouses are to continue, and we are to have in addition a sanatorium and two auxiliary asylums, the sooner the ratepayers start for America the better. As showing that the low rate does not indicate anything, this is a letter from the county secretary, in which he showed there was no rate in the Schull Union on land for similar purposes in the half-year ended 20th September, 1900, therefore the rate is no indication—it is the expenditure. The general hospital in Fenny, under the Sisters, is excellent; it could not be much better. But you will find here the report of your own doctor as to the maternity ward, and I remember myself a nurse being called before the Board, and admitting that for three days the bed in which a patient had been confined had not been made up, and it was in a state of unspeakable filth, and we will have that nurse in our employment. The poor are aware of all these facts. I hand in a resolution of the County Council, in which they unanimously state that some of the seventeen workhouses in the county are not necessary, and should be abolished.

29109. You did not touch on the question of tramps?—The tramps are very difficult gentlemen to deal with. I would not admit them to any of these institutions; but I would have a tramp who wanted a lodging apply at the police barrack, and let him be provided with shelter there, and in the morning he could get a little coupon from the policeman, which would entitle him to a breakfast, and then he could move on.

29110. You would not look him up, and teach him habits of industry?—No.

29111. Have you thought that these people take young children about with them, and ruin their lives?—When it was proved they were utterly unfit to have charge of a child I would take the child from them, and send it to a distant county.

29112. You would not take the insurance, as they look upon the staff, from them, and give them a free leg to run about the country?—It is a difficulty. Illegitimate births are not very numerous here, but after a second lapse I would confine her in a penitentiary.

29113. Don't you think it would be better to send her after the first lapse, when she would be more easily softened, to a penitentiary; when, after a short time, she could be placed out again?—It is certainly would be better, but the Guardians hesitate to follow up the supposed father, because they generally fail; and I don't blame them; it is hard to prove these cases. If the law itself would follow these things a little further it would be a deterrent.

29114. Under the English law it is more easy to make the father pay?—The law should be altered here so. It is very hard on the women. The woman cannot leave the workhouse without taking the child, and you will find instances where a mother has to remain with her child for three, four, or five years, and I think it is very hard. All these things I went into a long time ago, and when I wrote to the Local Government Board to know how many Poor Law officials we had in the County Clerk, they wrote back to say they could not give me the information, as it was for official purposes. I suppose they were afraid to make it public, there is such an immense number of them. You will see the expense of sending persons to outside hospitals. I find here, Victoria Hospital, £23, £19; Eye, Ear, and Throat Hospital, £10 10s. I don't think the slightest hardship would be entailed on the deserving poor by abolishing the workhouse; on the contrary, they would prefer a cottage home in their own villages. And with regard to the undesirable, no sentimental reason should prevent us from effecting a very large economy.

20115. You say you would spend £20 a year on the house, and give a room in that to a deserving old person, or couple—would you have any one in charge of it?—No one would be in charge; you may have four families living in it.

20116. Would you not be afraid it would get neglected?—The Guardians would exercise a supervision, and the relieving officer would report. Most of the people are clean and tidy. The cottages in Fermanagh are beautifully kept.

20117. You would put that on the relieving officer, and you don't think anything would be necessary beyond his occasional inspection—have no person paid to look after it?—I think it would be quite unnecessary.

20118. You would like to retain a hospital pretty much of the kind you have in Fermanagh?—Yes.

20119. You would not keep it for the more acutely sick?—For aged people, who are scarcely hospital cases, but merely old and broken down.

20120. Yes?—Well, if possible I would keep them out. A great number of agricultural labourers and others are now being trained into letting the public look after their relatives. I know labourers who are pretty well off, and could easily learn to maintain their parents, but as they find it easy to get rid of them, they do so.

20121. Would you be afraid that the cottage home arrangement would increase the number of people looking for relief, hoping to get it in that form?—That would all depend on the administration; if properly administered I don't see how it could.

20122. It would be quite easy if you administered it yourself, but from your experience of things, how they are done, do you think that system might not be freedom?—I know you would be besieged by canvassers, and they would all have letters from parish priests and ministers that they are the most deserving people in the world; but we have some discretion in that matter, and if properly worked it is perfectly safe; and I have not abandoned all hope that things will be properly done. I think the people are waking up, and see through a lot of this humbug.

20123. Dr. Broom.—What kind of a hospital did you refer to when you mentioned that you would keep it for £25 a year?—In going through the Trough Asylum everything is beautifully done; it is practically a hospital, and a great many of the people are bedridden, and if they can do that for £25, put £7 on top of it, and we ought to be able to do it very well.

20124. I must say that it is not a very good way of going into the matter; it is only 8s. 6d. a week, and I don't know any hospital kept for anything like that?—In the North Infirmary, where they treat all serious operations, and have very heavy surgical cases and dressings and treatment, the cost is only £50.

20125. That is a very reasonable cost, or perhaps £25, but when you come down to £25 it goes so much below anything I am aware of?—But, after all, what do we treat there? It is not very expensive to treat a man with a broken arm or leg. We have a fever hospital.

20126. CHAIRMAN.—Were you including everything?—Yes. In the asylum in Cork, which is a most extravagant place, it is run like a palace; the cost there is £24 or £25.

20127. Dr. Broom.—You can't compare an institution where the majority are up and walking about with an institution in which people are sick in bed?—You have an attendant to every fourteen patients in Cork, and still they do it for between £24 and £25.

20128. Comparing one hospital with another I can understand; but when you compare a sick hospital with a healthy institution you are on a wrong basis?—I have asked some doctors, and they told me £25 would run a country hospital. One doctor put it as low as £22 a head.

20129. CHAIRMAN.—Even if it went up to £25?—There would still be a saving, and not only that, but the place would become more popular. Now it has a workhouse taint, and has drunken, bad characters coming there night after night, and they won't associate with them, and I am very glad of it. If we lost that proper pride we would be a ruined country.

20130. Dr. Broom.—You believe in separating the hospital from the workhouse?—Yes.

20131. You mentioned that the County Council looked after a county-at-large charge?—More cheaply than they would after a local charge.

20132. Do you think that is the rule with your County Council?—Yes; they will all breathe against what is a county-at-large charge.

20133. So, if you put one of these institutions on a county rate you think it would be managed more economically?—I think it would.

20134. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Are you not aware that the reason they don't raise any objection to the local charge is that they think the locality and the representatives of the locality, when they have to pay for it, know best what they want?—That is not the reason. I think it is that the representatives of any other division are not going to pay any portion of it and therefore don't interfere at all. In the County Council if a local charge is to be put on Kanturk, or Millstreet, or Bantry, why should I, as a Fermanagh man, interfere? But if it is a county-at-large charge, proposed by a Kanturk man, and I, as a Fermanagh man, will have to pay a share, naturally I will investigate it very closely.

20135. Do you not think the local man, who has to pay for it, investigate the case and am satisfied that they are going to get value for it?—They do.

20136. And does it not stand to reason that a small area can be more closely looked after than a wide area like the Co. Cork?—I am not so sure of that.

20137. Dr. Broom.—Do you charge pensioners the full cost?—Sometimes they are charged full and sometimes only part; sometimes he says he has swept the floor and done a good deal of useful work, and it was quite an advantage to have him, and he gets a remission and is let off light. That is not a very serious matter; I merely bring it forward because the very fact that he is able to pay shows that he ought not to be taken in.

20138. What does he do with the surplus?—He goes out and gets his pension and gets drunk on the remainder.

20139. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing your scheme was carried out at Fermanagh, it is quite possible that the large and good building there might be utilised for a county-at-large purpose?—Yes.

20140. Suppose there was no purpose to which they could be applied, what would you do with the buildings as they are? You would want a hospital; would you propose to keep that hospital among these huge buildings?—I think not, but I certainly would think that Fermanagh would be an excellent place to run the second auxiliary asylum; the asylum in Cork is overcrowded.

20141. I quite see that it might be a very useful place for a pauper sanatorium or an auxiliary asylum, but it is not merely Fermanagh I have in my mind, but other places; take Fermanagh or Mitchelstown, what would you propose should be done with them; would you propose to sell the existing premises?—We only rent them.

20142. Well sell your interest in them and build a small hospital suitable for the place?—I think a small hospital would do.

20143. Would you be afraid of keeping up a large building like that with so many portions not needed?—I think it would be a great mistake; it would be better let it tumble down than waste money on it. The only thing that might minimise the saving that I believe could be effected would be that the officials would have to receive pensions or gratuities. I am prepared for that.

20144. Don't you see that the older officials would be glad to go and their pensions would not last long, and the younger officials could be utilised and put into other institutions?—Yes, where wanted; the fewer we have the better; we would utilise, as far as possible, deserving officers, but to postpone reform on that ground is only putting it off; it is better to meet it to-day than in fifteen years. I would be prepared to deal generously with them.

20145. And it would be, every year, a diminishing charge?—Yes.

Mr. PATRICK O'MAHONY, Chairman, Fermanagh Union, examined.

Sept. 26, 1875.

Mr. Patrick O'Mahony.

29145. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

29147. Do you agree with the evidence that has just been given, or were you one of the Guardians against amalgamation?—I entirely disagree with the evidence given by the previous witness.

29148. What would your view be; do you think any change is necessary at all, or that things are fairly well as they are?—I think the union of Fermanagh is very well managed at present, and it is necessary for the requirements of the whole union to let it stand as it does at present. Before I go into my evidence I wish to draw attention to the fact that the previous witness only represents himself here.

29149. He does that with very good effect?—And Mr. Noonan and myself are appointed by our Board to put the views of the Board before the Commission. At our meeting on Saturday last we had a very large Board present, and the Board were entirely unanimous against amalgamation; they want to retain the union as it is at present.

29150. Would you keep the same design in it, or do you think that some classes might with advantage be moved?—I do.

29151. Do you think it would be desirable to remove the inmates?—Yes.

29152. Do you think a workhouse is a good place for children?—I do not; I would board them out.

29153. Do you think the law ought to be amended so as to give the Guardians power to board out all the children that have to be supported out of the rates?—Yes.

29154. You are aware that a great many of these poor little children are illegitimate; the girls come in and stay, perhaps, all their lives in the house?—Yes, I am aware of that.

29155. Do you think these girls ought to be kept in the house?—No, I do not; there should be some sort of a penitentiary to put them into.

29156. And never admitted to the workhouse at all, but in the first instance sent to the penitentiary with a view to their reformation?—Yes.

29157. As regards tramps; do you think that workhouses ought to remain open to them?—That is a very difficult question to solve. I believe the tramps, in the first instance, should apply to the local Constabulary, and let application be made from the Constabulary to the workhouse authorities for admission.

29158. Do you think it would be a good thing, as has been suggested by a great many witnesses, that these leaguers should, if it was obvious they were vagrants, be committed under a magistrate's warrant to a central institution where they would be obliged to work with the hope of making them industrious people in the future?—I would be very much in favour of that.

29159. Then the two remaining classes in the workhouse would be the sick, the aged and infirm; you would let the sick remain in the hospital, and the aged and infirm would you also keep?—Yes.

29160. Why would you not agree with the proposal that the Fermanagh aged and infirm should for instance be sent to Malloy instead of Fermanagh. We are talking of healthy people who can travel in a train as well as us we can?—I think they are always anxious that their friends should come from time to time to see them; it would be only natural they should, and if they were too great a distance away from their friends the probability is that their friends would never see them; it is a great encouragement to a poor person compelled to retire into a workhouse to have an occasional visit from friends.

29161. Your union goes to Watergrasshill?—Yes.

29162. How far is that from your workhouse at Fermanagh?—About ten miles.

29163. It would be about the same distance from there to Malloy; a little more perhaps?—I don't know the distance.

29164. Do you think it would be any hardship for the healthy people, as far distances from Fermanagh, to have to go to a place like Malloy?—I do indeed.

29165. Although there would not be much difference in actual distance?—Then there would be no hardship at all, good or bad.

29166. Take the country between Fermanagh and Malloy in a straight line along the river, there would not be very much difference?—No, there would not, so far as Castleblawney and Rathfriland are concerned, but if you take the southern portion of the union, Ballymore, that division that bounds Keshel and Middleton, to compel aged and infirm people to go from there to Malloy it would be too much.

29167. How far are you from Yonghall?—Twelve miles.

29168. And Middleton?—Thirteen or fourteen miles.

29169. And Fermanagh?—Nine miles.

29170. Have the aged and infirm there much more practical connection with Fermanagh than with Middleton or Yonghall?—They have; it is their market town.

29171. Have you ever inquired as to the number of visits that the aged and infirm receive from their friends?—Well, I have not inquired, but I have reason to know, because I very often give a letter of admission to friends of inmates.

29172. Sick inmates?—Yes.

29173. I quite admit that there are a great many visits paid to the sick, but can you tell me whether you think there are many visits paid to the infirm?—There are, to my own knowledge.

29174. We made inquiries and it surprised us how very few visits are paid to the aged and infirm as distinguished from the sick?

Mr. MURPHY.—Especially with regard to those with long residences—the older inmates of the institution.

29175. CHAIRMAN.—Once they become settled they practically receive no visits?—Oh, they do; I very often visit neighbours of mine who are inmates of the house.

29176. A very large proportion of those aged and infirm people are single old people—widows or widowers—the last of their generation, with really no next relations or friends to see them. Are you aware of that?—Oh, yes.

29177. So that they, in any case, would not have any visitors?—They would. The good neighbours and friends will always inquire about them.

29178. Is it often done through the Guardians?—It is done through the Guardians.

29179. You, as a Guardian, would be in favour of reducing the rates if it could be done without hardship to the poor?—I would.

29180. Can you tell me any way in which economy could be effected if you do not gather the healthy into one central institution or else board them out in cottage homes, as has been suggested?—I do not agree in boarding them out in cottage homes.

29181. What would be the objection to that?—I hold that infirm people will want to be looked after by doctors and nurses from time to time.

29182. They could of course be looked after by doctors, and if they needed a nurse's attention would not the proper place for them be in a hospital?—It would, certainly.

29183. But as long as they are healthy and able to get about they might stay outside in the cottage houses?—The difficulty would be to get the cottage houses.

29184. What objection do you see to the system?—I think they would not be as well looked after in villages; they would only have to look after themselves.

29185. Do you think elderly people like that would want personal attention?—Yes; they are not able to look after themselves.

29186. Mr. MURPHY.—That would not apply to the whole class, only to a few?—Wherever an infirm person is I hold they are not able to look after themselves. A poor man knocked up with pains in his back is not able to do anything for himself.

29187. I have noticed a number of them fairly well able to look after themselves in various houses?—If you looked closely after them you would find they could not take care of themselves.

29188. CHAIRMAN.—You don't approve of boarding out in cottage homes, and the reason you object to a central institution is it would be taking them away from their neighbours and friends; do you see any other way of effecting a large saving for the rates—the aged and infirm are practically the largest class in the workhouse; do you see any other method for economy, if you don't do it with that class?—The taking away of the children is so economy, and the doing away with the tramps.

29189. That might or might not be an economy, but it would be for the advantage of the community, perhaps. Do you see any other way of effecting a large

Sept. 29, 1902

Mr. Patrick O'Mahony.

economy except dealing with that class—the aged and infirm—I do not; if you centralise them you will have a large staff to look after them.

29190. Much smaller than the total of the staff that looks after them in the various workhouses?—We have almost unnecessary expenditure on the hospitals at present.

29191. Hardly anyone suggests that the hospitals should be closed or that the facilities for treating the sick should be diminished?—Certainly not.

29192. It is not the sick but it is the old people who have become infirm and are too old for work that we have to consider?—It would be very unfair to the old people at the latter end of their lives to banish them from their friends and neighbours.

29193. Don't you think that when once they are in an institution they have nothing but their memory of the old spot?—No, sir, my experience is all the other way, they are always inquiring about their late home and their neighbours and friends.

29194. They don't see it?—No; they don't see it.

29195. And I think you will find that they don't often see people from the old home?—It is my experience they do.

29196. There is no economy you think of as regards outdoor relief?—I think it should be made a divisional charge; I think there would be much more supervision and the Guardians of the several divisions would be more or less responsible to the ratepayers of their division and would be more anxious to keep down the rates.

29197. Has your outdoor relief remained pretty stationary?—It has gone up $100 a year since the coming in of the Local Government Act. We would be glad that more power would be given to the Boards of Guardians in the way of classification of inmates. More responsibility should be thrown on the Guardians.

29198. Don't you think they have full power at present?—They have not.

Mr. John Horner.

Mr. JOHN NOGGIN, M.C.C., Ferryway, examined.

29200. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view about the question of amalgamation or classification?—I am entirely opposed to amalgamation. I think it is one of the courses where all that would be likely to encourage extravagance and expenditure.

29201. You don't like a large area?—No, I would wish to confine it as formerly to the electoral division.

29202. For what kind of relief?—Indoor and outdoor; go back altogether to the former system.

29203. You think it was more economical?—I have no doubt about it.

29204. What do you think about the Iowa ratepayers; would they not have a great hardship put on them if you went back to the old system?—We discussed that on Saturday last, and in consequence of the valuation in Ferryway I do not think they would suffer much; they would be opposed to it but they did not object.

29205. Did your Board of Guardians, after notice to all the members of the Board, pass a resolution in favour of going back to district charges for all persons?—No; there was no resolution; it was a conversation, and generally accepted by the members that happened to be present.

29206. Is there anything you would wish to add to what your chairman has said?—Very little. I think there ought to be a little more powers extended to the Guardians, especially in reference to officers; I think it is a very bad thing to have a hard and fast rule made as regards officers. If an officer requires leave of absence as a rule the next officer will ask for compensation for the discharge of that officer's duty. I would entirely agree for the rest with what the chairman has said.

Mr. J. D. O'SULLIVAN, Chairman, Millstreet Union, examined.

Mr. Linehan, one of the gentlemen appointed, could not attend, and asked me to hand in the notes of his evidence. (Produced.)

29217. CHAIRMAN.—What is your personal view, and the view of your Board of Guardians on the question of amalgamation?—Utterly opposed to it.

29208. Where do you see any deficiency of power?—Not very long ago there was an application from a girl for admission to our union. She was not of the best character, still, at the same time, we were not able to show to the medical officer, who has the power of classifying, that the girl was of the character that she really was, therefore the doctor could not put her into the separate apartment, and the other inmates had an objection to being compelled to associate with her.

29209. The Guardians practically have the power, but you would not suggest that on occasions they should put the girl into the immoral ward?—We could not exactly put forward evidence to satisfy the medical officer; and I think one of the reasons why people have an objection to going into hospital is being compelled to wear the uniform.

29210. Are you aware that Guardians can select any pattern of clothes they like, for instance, blue serge?—I am aware of that, but still there is the very make of the suit; it must be uniform; if they were allowed to wear their own clothes.

29211. You know very well that a great many of the poor people that come in have very uncleanly clothes, and perhaps not very clean?—A great many who were respectable people have to have recourse to the workhouse; it is a great hardship to compel them to wear the uniform.

29212. But there is power to provide a costume that has no brand on it; nothing indicative of pauperism?—I would be in favour of extending the power to the Guardians.

29213. I think any reasonable wish they express that way they have power to carry out; I know plenty of Poor Law hospitals where they get nice uniforms for the sick that are not in the least objected to; people rather like them?—Some poor people had an objection to enter the hospitals before the introduction of the nurse, but since the introduction of the nurse I never heard any person object to go into the workhouse. We are the lowest rated union in the whole county.

29214. Do you think that the proper thing then is that officers should devote all their time to the Guardians, and there should be no extra pay?—That is my opinion, that they should be employed to devote all their time, as far as reasonable.

29215. You are referring to one indoor officer going away for a fortnight and another officer doing his or her duty and making a claim for extra pay?—That is so. I would entirely object to those cottage homes described by the first witness; I think it would be an inducement to all the poor in the country to look for these cottage homes. I think they would be better cared and looked after and be under better supervision in the workhouse, and, in addition to that, they would be as troublesome as ever.

29216. You would not think that supervision would be an advantage if they got on well without it?—I think there should be some supervision, and I am, furthermore, under the impression that whatever aid or assistance they got to live on they would be just as troublesome to charitable people as they are at the present moment, and they would not be relieved of the begging nuisance if those people were located in cottage homes.

29217. You think if you started cottage homes and did not give a large payment also they would be apt to make it up by charitable donations?—My belief is that unless it was illegal to resort to their former methods of living they would do so.

29218. And even if it was illegal, do you think they would still try it?—I think so; it is very hard to break an old dog of his tricks.

Mr. J. D. O'Sullivan

1895, and after hearing all the evidence that could be given the Local Government Board refused to accede to it.

29200. The proposal then was that Millstreet Union should be divided between the adjoining unions—Macroom, Kanturk, and Killybegs.

29201. There was no question then about leaving a hospital for the sick in Millstreet?—I think not.

29202. They just simply would close up all the buildings and divide the union among the other places?—Yes.

29203. And it was thought that such a proposal as that would not be proper?—Yes, but the people have considered the question very carefully, and ratepayers and all are opposed to amalgamation; they don't think it would affect any saving of the rates.

29204. Would that mean from the neighbourhood of Millstreet or the union-at-large?—I live in the neighbourhood of Millstreet, and it is of my own immediate neighbourhood I speak.

29205. Do you know whether the feeling of keeping on the workhouse as it is shared by the people all round at a distance from Millstreet, but inside the union?—Perhaps in the more remote districts which may be as near to another workhouse; I don't know what the feeling is there.

29206. What reforms do you think might be introduced?—I think without amalgamation there could be amalgamation of offices within the workhouse at present.

29207. How would you work that?—I don't know; but I don't think there are quite as many officers required for 120 inmates as there were for five times that number.

29208. From your own knowledge, as Chairman of the Board, could you point out some office that might be abolished?—I won't say; I don't think that is a question for me.

29209. I should not have dreamed of putting it to you only you suggested it yourself?—I think it could be done.

29210. What offices do you think could be abolished?—I have not considered the question.

29211. Do you think it would be possible to abolish the master's post?—I don't know; I don't think so.

29212. The matron—do you think she is unnecessary?—Yes; I should say it is unnecessary under the present system.

29213. The porter?—A porter is required, as far as the system applies at present.

Mr. J. J. CONEY, J.P., Millstreet, examined.

29214. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the District Council?—Yes; and I have been Chairman of the Board of Guardians for years.

29215. You have heard the evidence of the last witnesses?—Yes, sir.

29217. Do you remember yourself—hardly, I suppose—the foundation of Millstreet Union?—Hardly; it was in 1854.

29218. It is one of the new unions?—Yes.

29219. Of course, the reason it was opened in 1854 was because there were too many inmates to be kept in the surrounding workhouses of Kanturk and Macroom?—Oh, yes.

29220. Now that state of things has gone?—It has gone a good deal, but still there are a lot of poor in the district at present.

29221. You have between thirty and forty sick and thirty and forty aged and infirm?—We have male infirm, 28, and females, 15.

29222. Can you tell me why it is that the female infirm are always so much smaller in number in Millstreet?—I believe there are a good deal of the females after dying for the last couple of years.

29223. These are practically the only three able-bodied officers you have at Millstreet—can you tell me any change in the system that would make it possible to have fewer officers?—No, sir. Of course, we have only very few school children in the workhouse; those could be boarded out, I think.

29224. You don't pay the salary of the schoolmistress, but give her rates?—Yes. The boarding-out system is working admirably in Millstreet.

29225. Have you a Ladies Committee looking after the children?—We have not.

29226. Do you think that a desirable thing?—It would be no harm; it would have a very good effect.

29227. What other change would you make besides the children; would you be against removing the aged and infirm?—I would be utterly against it; everybody is against removing a single old person.

29228. What objection have you to it?—From my knowledge of the inmates of the workhouse at present, there are very few of the undesirable class, they are all old people, who have lived fairly respectable lives, and have had recourse to the workhouse at the latter end of their days, and it would be a very wrong thing to remove them to a distance away. Their friends would not see them, and they would be buried without their friends.

29229. Do you think that feeling about being buried among their friends is one of the chief reasons that makes people shy about going into the workhouse?—That is one of the reasons; I would not say it is the chief reason.

29230. What other reasons would there be?—They like to see their friends occasionally. These people take a week or a few days out once in a while, and go to see their friends, which it would not be possible for them to do if they were in Malrow, or anywhere else.

29231. As regards outdoor relief, have you any suggestions to make?—I have not. Outdoor relief has been reduced in our district by £300 a year; we are very well satisfied. As far as divisional relief is concerned, it would tend towards economy, but would inflict great hardship on the poorer districts where the people live, they have to bear the whole cost, while the richer districts would escape cost free.

29232. You would not care to keep females in the house?—No, sir, of course not. I would send them to some central institution, and those women with illegitimate children also.

29233. The sick and aged and infirm you would like to keep at Millstreet?—Yes.

Sept. 29, 1905.

Mr. J. D. O'Sullivan.

Mr. J. J. Coney.

Sept. 29, 1905.

Mr. J. J.
Corkery.

29253. You are very close to Kanturk—how many miles?—Nine miles.
29254. And about eleven from Macroom, is it?—Thirteen Irish.
29255. How near would Clondrohid take you to Macroom?—Nine miles.
29256. What is the boundary of the union?—Cahir-donen belongs to Millstreet.
29257. And on the Kanturk side, how far do you go towards Kanturk?—About nine miles; it would be nearer to Millstreet than to Kanturk.
29258. There are only ten miles between the two places—how far do you go on those ten miles?—I go into the electoral division of Meena.
29259. What I am asking you is, how far do you go on the direct road?—It would be as near to Millstreet as it would be to Kanturk.
29260. You would like to get those electoral divisions that would increase your valuation and lower your taxation?—Yes.
29261. I suppose that is the object of it?—Yes.
29262. You don't go into the County Kerry at all?—No, sir.
29263. You don't want to go there?—I do not; it is far away.
29264. It comes up to within a couple of miles of you?—Yes, sir. Millstreet is on the bounds between Cork and Kerry.
29265. You don't go beyond the county bounds?—

- No; the western portion of Millstreet Union is a place called Knocknacullen.
29266. You have a very good water supply at Millstreet?—As good as there is in the County Cork.
29267. You have a special gravitation water supply?—Yes, from the mountain; supplying the workhouse and the town.
29268. You tap it first?—Yes, sir.
29269. If the Millstreet people thought they could get their workhouse turned into a sanatorium, or something of that sort, do you think they would have the same objection?—They would not, if there would be room enough.
29270. If they had 300 or 400 inmates there?—We would not have room for them.
29271. Well 300?—Hardly.
29272. Well as many as they would have room for?—Certainly, they would have no objection, I am sure; or to make an auxiliary asylum of it.
29273. Then, what would you do with the aged and infirm?—Keep them in a part by themselves.
29274. How could you do that if they were going to make it into a sanatorium or a lunatic asylum?—Keep them in their own part.
29275. You could not manage that. Which would you prefer—having a good, large, well-filled institution of consumptives or lunatics?—I would prefer having the poor where they belong to; they are best suited to it.

Mr. W. W. O'DWYER, J.P., M.C.C.

Mr. W. W.
O'Dwyer.

I had the honour of appearing before you at Limerick from the County Council. I have got the facts of our workhouse here. The average annual expenditure is £4,380. Salaries of intern officers, £617 per annum; average number of inmates in the workhouse, 130; number of inmates in the workhouse on the 25th of September last, 118; average number in the hospital, 23; number in the hospital on the 25th of September, 14; average cost of an inmate, 3s. 6d.; average annual expenditure for outdoor relief before 1898, for five years, £255 (I particularly asked for this to show the difference); average cost of same since 1898, £720, so you see we have a large increase; average number of persons in receipt of outdoor relief, 150; number in receipt of outdoor relief on the 25th of September, 128; average cost per week of persons in receipt of outdoor relief, 1s. 10d.; number of children boarded out, 12; monthly cost per head of children boarded out, 12s. 6d. There are no persons suffering from consumption in the workhouse, and there is no ward set apart for them.

29286. CHAIRMAN.—What are the views of your Guardians on the question of the possible breaking up of the workhouse and the re-classification of the inmates?—We are unanimous, always were; we are in favour of it; we don't want the house there at all.

29287. Do you see the same objection that the Chairman of the Millstreet Board of Guardians had to removing the aged and infirm?—No, sir, I do not; because I hold that the respectable aged and infirm could be given relief outside; and if their people thought so much about them they could keep them conveniently at home; and if they did not wish to keep them, they could be sent to some central institution.

29288. You think that really if they were proper cases for it you could give them a little relief outside?—Certainly, under the supervision of the relieving officer. They are quite safe with their people; these people would be very useful about a house.

29289. You would be willing to enlarge your outdoor relief, and think you could save on it?—Certainly.

29290. The people that could go to the central institution are people that in your opinion would not have anyone to look after them?—That is the point of it—if there was anyone to care for them they could take them.

29291. As a rule, the people who go to workhouses are people who have no relations or friends to take an interest in them?—The majority. Of course there are some cases. There would be no hardship in the world in amalgamating our union. I have a converging union around me—Tipperary, Kilmallock, Malvern, Fermoy, and Clonmel. I don't think you could take a centre anywhere that would be more than ten miles from either of those, and the people, naturally, would wish to go there, because they think better of the other institutions than they do of ours. I have known of instances where people went out of my own immediate district into Kilmallock Union to qualify for that hospital—they don't care about ours.

29292. Why is that?—They seem to say they are not as well treated and cared for, and there must be something in it, because we could hardly get a cut drier there but we must telegraph for an expert from Cork. We had one last week.

29293. Would you entirely close the hospital or keep one there?—Our hospital is isolated from the main building, and we could keep that.

29294. As a hospital for acute and serious cases, that could not be removed?—Yes.

29295. You think that would be quite sufficient?—More than sufficient; but it is better to have it, all the same.

29296. The lunatics you would send to the asylum?—It is no place for them; it is a pity to see them there.

29297. The children?—Out they would go; I would board them all out; then they would become useful for the country people.

29298. Tramps?—I would deal with them very sternly; they are the greatest blot we have in the whole thing. If they were properly weeded out our average would be down nearly half. They are a perfect nuisance to the country, and dangerous, too, especially in the summer time. They go round sleeping in farmers' yards and places, and we have a lot of burnings that we have to pay very dearly for in account of these people. If they go into a farmer's house, begging, and are refused, they will, perhaps, burn his place down.

29299. Do you think that these notorious vagrants and tramps, for their own good and the good sometimes of their little children, should be brought before magistrates, who should have power to commit them to institutions, one for the whole province of Munster, where they would be kept at hard work?—Yes; I would put them into a labour colony, or something of the kind.

29300. As regards outdoor relief, do you think the area of charge is satisfactory?—Oh, it is, as we are.

29301. There is a question that affects you at Mitchelstown a good deal. You are in two counties. What would you do, then—you have two District Councils there?—Yes, Cork and Limerick—No. 1 and No. 2.

29302. At present the outdoor relief is on both rural districts. If the workhouse were closed, what sort of charge would you have?—Divisional rating certainly, and let each division account for itself. We are up 50 per cent. on account of union rating. What is everybody's business is nobody's business—they take no interest in it. My district runs within three miles of Fermoy, at Knocklong Railway Station, and from Kildorrery, it is very near Claghogue. I am chairman for a number of years, and was long a Guardian, and I am nearly a proper relief; but what else have I of regulating outdoor relief so far from me? I got so much annoyance as chairman—some relief being put on to-day and taken off to-morrow—that I made a rule there should be a notice of motion, so that every Guardian could see for himself, and that stopped it a little. When it was divisional rating a man had to pay himself, and was watched by the ratepayers; now he is more charitable, when the man in Limerick sees the man in Cork has to pay portion. It is a common pot, a regular hotch-potch.

Sept. 22, 1905.

29303. Of course, going back to the old divisional rating would be very hard, and might be considered unfair on towns—I would not think so, because the class of people that are harboured in towns are the people we want to get rid of. The deserving people don't go into towns. The town rating in my district is very low. A farmer pays, pro rata, on his farm more than twenty of the slightest shopkeepers in the town. Beggars or tramps go into the country begging, and then they go to the town in the evening, and spend what they get in the shops—the shopkeepers have the benefit of the farmers' charity in the evening.

Mr. W. W. O'Dwyer.

Mr. WILLIAM MANNING, Manager, Mitchelstown Union, examined.

29304. CHAIRMAN.—Now, we would be glad to hear the evidence which you wish to give?—It is in reference to the number in the house. I had expressed my views on this question before I became master.

29305. Give us the opinion you expressed?—There are only about 120 at present in the house, and between ten and fifteen of these are in the infirmary, and the cost of nursing and medical attendance alone at present is about £3 a week; it is nearly £6 all the year round, exclusive of the cost of maintenance. The maintenance for the infirmary and for the attendants, the whole staff, is about £900 a year for 120 persons.

29306. Do you think it would be better to close the workhouse?—Well, I think it would be better put to something else—the Limerick side to go to Kilmallock and the Cork side to Fermoy. I don't see there would be any grievance on the poor—the aged and infirm. A great many would be kept at home if there was a share of relief given.

29307. You have not been long an officer?—Seven years.

29308. And your pension would not be very material?—It would be small, I expect. I am a small ratepayer in the union.

Mr. WILLIAM MANNING.

29309. You think it would be quite possible, without hardship to the sick, to close the workhouse?—I think so. The house was built to contain 600 people; there are about 120, on an average, now. I think it would make an industrial school for the male and female children of the county, or for the imbeciles, as an auxiliary house to Youghal; it would be more advantageous to the public.

29310. You were for some years a Guardian?—I was. It was at that time I acquired any knowledge I have of the Poor Law system. I was in close association with the old officials, and I made it a study, and I think it is quite unnecessary to have so many workhouses.

29311. Do you know the feeling of the ratepayers generally to be in favour of these views?—I do, sir.

Mr. W. W. O'DWYER, J.P., further examined.

I forgot to mention about these women with children. Send them off to a penitentiary, under some religious body, where they could be trained as good servants, and take the children from them.

29312. Where they could get a fresh start again?—Yes; because many of these would be very superior people if they got a start.

29313. Under the present system they are not often reclaimed?—We are handicapped with these for years, because they are rearing their children in the house, and we cannot send them out.

29314. And they deteriorate in character?—And the worst of it is they don't serve other people. You are looking for a vocationism, of great expense, now; we will give you our Mitchelstown Workhouse. We have ten acres of land round it, and any amount of scenery and Geline air, and you need not go in for sheltia. We won't be very hard to bargain with, if you take that white elephant off our hands.

Mr. W. W. O'Dwyer.

Mr. R. E. LONGFORD, M.P., Mallow, examined.

29315. CHAIRMAN.—The Mallow Board of Guardians have considered the question of amalgamation?—I don't think we have ever had it before us, but we have considered it.

29316. Personally, if Mallow Workhouse could be applied to some other use, the greater part of it, keeping the hospital, do you think the Guardians would be in favour of classifying the present inmates, and putting them elsewhere? Supposing your aged and infirm were kept at Mallow, and you took into Mallow Workhouse the aged and infirm from other surrounding unions?—I don't think we ever thought we could close Mallow Union.

29317. That did not seem to be possible?—No, I don't think so. We have a very considerable number of inmates.

29318. But a great many of these could be drafted elsewhere—the children, for instance?—I would be in favour of boarding out the children.

29319. So that you would have no children in the future workhouse. Then, as regards the mothers of those children, would you be in favour of putting them in penitentiaries, under religious management, according to the belief of the penitents?—I think that is a very difficult question. I don't think you must assume of necessity that every woman who has had an illegitimate child must be classed as a woman of bad character.

29320. It is quite the other point of view. Putting into the workhouse a girl who has fallen, she speedily becomes demoralised. The point of view in which the suggestion was made to us was that such a girl should never be put into association with other women who had fallen in that way; that she should instead be sent to a religious institution, with a view to her reclamation within, say, a year or so; that she should have her child with her in that institution, and nurse her child; and that as soon as it was fit it should be boarded out, and the mother should be placed in a situation, or put forward again in life?—It sounds a very good plan. The only danger I see is, that it might tend to the increase of illegitimate children, if it is made too easy.

Mr. R. E. Longford.

29321. Don't you see, on the other hand, it would tend to a reduction in the number of illegitimate children, as regards this particular woman?—It would be very good for the individual; the question is, whether it would tend to bring other individuals into the same position.

29322. That is a possibility. But take the individual herself first: The woman who falls, certainly, has a bitter time of it, and when she is approached and influenced for good at the time of her first fall reclamation might be hoped for?—Oh I think so.

29323. She, of course, would disappear most likely from her friends, and there would be nothing to encourage other poor girls to think that they might sin because things would be made so comfortable as possible for them—you don't really think that would operate, or that a girl ever calculates in that way?—I don't say not; I think it would be a great matter to help those.

Sept. 23, 1905.
Mr. R. E.
Longfield.

29324. We have relatively very few in the country, but it would tend to put those who are here back again into a respectable position, as far as possible—Oh, yes, I think so.

29325. Then you would agree to that?—Yes.

29326. Then as regards inmates—I don't think they ought to be kept in a workhouse.

29327. Taking away the children and the mothers of children and the lunatics would give you a very large amount of vacant space; would you object that that vacant space should be used towards making the main body of your houses an institution for receiving the aged and infirm from the surrounding districts—such as Mitchelstown?—I don't it would give an space enough.

29328. As far as your space went, would you be in favour of using it in that way?—I have not considered that. It is a very difficult question, I think; I don't that we could do it.

29329. You could not do it without legislation?—I doubt there would be room.

29330. You would have a large amount of room, for you would exclude a great many classes?—I don't think it would make such a very great difference—taking away the tramps and children and lunatics.

29331. Then, as regards the tramps, you would exclude tramps?—I think the tramps are a very serious question. I have some figures here about them. The total number of admissions to Mallow Workhouse for the year ending 30th September, 1897, was 3,398, and the numbers for the year ending 30th September, 1898, were 2,467; for 1899, 1,868; for 1900, 1,689; for 1901, 1,698; for 1902, 1,584; for 1903, 1,648; for 1904, 1,897. I think it might be well if the Guardians had power to detain them longer than they can at present. They are very often making for races or a fair, and if you could keep them, so as to make them miss it, it would discourage them a great deal, I think; and perhaps it would be a good thing to have them seen by the police before they are discharged.

29332. Would you not be in favour of putting them into a provincial institution, or workhouse, one for the whole of Munster, where these people could be detained under a magistrate's warrant for habitual vagrancy?—A magistrate can send them to jail at present.

29333. Only for a short term; but if power were given to the magistrate to commit for three years?—That is rather a serious punishment.

29334. Not a punishment, but with a view to their reformation?—A great many of them are a great deal too old to be reformed.

29335. At all events, they would be kept from doing much harm?—I think it is very doubtful whether it would work well.

29336. Would you be willing to try it?—Oh, yes.

29337. Then you are not prepared to offer an opinion as to the expediency of making Mallow a county institution, or portion of a county institution, for the aged and infirm?—No, sir, I am not.

29338. Is there anything as regards outdoor relief or any other matter of Poor Law administration you would like to refer to?—The outdoor relief has gone up enormously. We pay in Mallow a little over £2,000 a year; that has risen since the change from divisional rating. In the case of a very poor district, there formerly was power, when the rate reached a certain maximum, to make the balance a union charge.

29339. There was an antiseptic scale, so that they could get relief in that way—you would go back to that system?—I think so.

29340. You would not give the towns any further benefit than that?—No. Then I think the power of the Guardians might be extended. We sometimes have the case of a very poor family, holding a few acres of worthless land, and we cannot give them relief.

29341. At present the quarter-acre class is a bug. What would you propose to substitute for that?—It is very difficult to say. They might have a dozen acres of mountain that would be as worthless as this face—would not feed a goat.

29342. Would you propose just simply to knock out the limit, and leave it to the discretion of the Guardians to give relief?—I think so, because the acre might be on the top of a mountain.

29343. Mr. MURPHY.—Suppose it was on a valuation of £3 or £5—I would make destination the test.

29344. You would want to place some restriction on giving outdoor relief, and if you could not put it on the number of acres, it could be put on the valuation?—I suppose there might be some limit of valuation. I think the Guardians should judge of it.

29345. Then you would give the Guardians absolute power to give relief to any person who applied?—Destitute person.

29346. CHAIRMAN.—No proviso or limitation?—No; I think not. I think we might try to make the hospitals more popular, and take away the stigma of pauperism from the patients, and we might give them better clothes.

29347. That you have power to do?—Yes, as you have said.

29348. Dr. BRUCE.—How would you propose to make them more popular?—I think they might be made nicer in different ways.

29349. Would you suggest that it should be separated from the workhouse?—I don't think I would go in for new buildings where there are already good buildings. There are many ways in which people of experience could improve the comforts—many small ways to improve the comforts and appearance of hospitals.

29350. The Guardians have a good deal more power than they have exercised?—Oh, yes. I think we have improved it a good deal.

29351. CHAIRMAN.—How many nurses have you in Mallow Infirmary?—Four.

29352. What class of nurses?—Four trained nurses besides the fever hospital nurse.

29353. Was it with respect to the nursing that you saw some possibility of improving the house?—Yes; I think they should be duly qualified. The whole present system is enormously costly; and going through the accounts it sometimes looks as if you could not mend it without ending it. It is too big a question for me. Only yesterday I heard of a case of a cottage home, such as Mr. O'Gorman spoke of. This was in France, and it did not work very well. There could be no supervision of it.

29354. It would not be intended in these cottage homes that there should be any supervision—the idea would be to enable people to live in their former method?—They fought in this one so much so that some months ago happened to live opposite had complained very much.

29355. So you think it would be desirable to have a master or constable on the premises?—I think we must go on as we are, as far as that goes.

Mr. L. BRADEN-CHAMBERLAIN, J.P., Mallow, examined.

Mr. L. Braden-Chambers.

29356. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the union?—I am.

29357. What is your view on the question of amalgamation of unions or classification of inmates?—Do you mean my individual view?

29358. Yes?—I don't think I am empowered to mention the view of the Guardians; I don't think we have discussed the matter sufficiently.

29359. What is your individual opinion?—My individual opinion is that I think it would be a very good thing to amalgamate the unions as far as possible in the County Cork.

29360. With a view of saving some of the expenditure that is going on?—Yes; principally that matter of the salaries of officials and nurses and everybody.

29361. If a number of workhouses were closed, keeping their hospitals open, do you think that in some central place, such as Mallow, it would be desirable to keep the aged and infirm of the other districts?—Certainly. I think that the best way would be to give the aged and infirm some extra outdoor relief to enable them to live with their own people. In suitable cases I don't think they would come in at all. Of course there are a few cases that have no person belonging to them at all, and are so aged and infirm that they would need to be minded. They would have to be provided for; an indoor place would be necessary for these.

29362. You think it would be good to have a central institution, such as the healthy wards of Mallow, after removing the children and other classes that might be removed?—I do certainly.

23353. You have heard a good deal of the discussion this morning about removing lamenies, children, and girls who had illegitimate children—you are in favour of that?—Yes; I think that these children ought to be taken away. I know that there are a great number of cases in which women have illegitimate children over and over again. They come into the workhouse; they have a child; they go out again, and the same thing goes on.

23354. It would be less likely to happen if a woman on the occasion of her first fall was not put into such company as this at all, but put under religious influences?—Yes; but it was with regard to the boarding out of children chiefly I meant. These children are kept in the workhouse, and as we are so circumstanced at present, as long as they are not absolutely without parents you cannot board them out, and you are bringing up a lot of children in a very bad atmosphere, and you bring them up in such a way that they are no good to the State. They won't try to work. Whereas, if you had power to take these children and board them out, they would be brought up with industrious people, and be a credit to the State.

23355. Therefore you would be in favour of enlarging the power of the Guardians, so that they could board out all children supported out of the rates?—Exactly.

23356. As regards outdoor relief, you would also enlarge that, so that aged and infirm people, some of whom are now in the workhouse, could be boarded out instead of being given indoor relief?—That would naturally happen consequent on amalgamation.

23357. Quite so, as part of the whole scheme; not if nothing else is done?—No; as long as the institution is there, and being occupied as it is at present, I think the system is all right.

23358. Assuming the system to be changed, then you would be in favour of giving the larger outdoor relief?—Yes; I don't think it would be at any expense to the union either, because my theory is that what you would save in salaries and other expenses of amalgamation would go to augment the sum of money given out for the relief of these infirm people.

23359. And you think it quite possible, on the whole, that there would be a saving?—A saving. In the case of the Mitchelstown Union, and some other unions, they said it was £7 a head for salaries; that divided among 120 people boarded out would keep them comfortably outside. The tramp question is a very large one, and I have probably theories of my own on the question. I spent a good many years abroad, and what is done in Australia, where I have been a good deal, and in New Zealand, is that the State has power there to arrest any person who is a vagrant, who cannot show some visible means of support, and in those cases they are brought before the magistrates, or authorities, whoever they may be, and if they won't work for themselves they are bound to work for the State; and my idea is that those tramps should go to the police, where inquiries could be made.

23360. Or would you not rather say that the police should look after such people?—What I mean to say is, that they should not go into the union without getting a ticket from the police.

23361. Or even not make them eligible for the union at all; but as in Australia, they should be placed in a labour workhouse, or colony, so that they might be taught habits of industry?—Exactly so. But as against that we cannot lose sight of the fact that there are a number of people who may be on tramp from absolute necessity, and are only going from place to place for work.

23362. Don't you think it would advantage such people if they were going to look for work, they would soon get to know if there was a farm to be filled up by their clergyman or a magistrate, or some person of that kind, that would operate as a kind of passport, to see them safe through the police?—Certainly.

23363. That would be a sufficient protection for them?—I think it would.

23364. And a man having that would not be molested?—The children also of these tramps should be taken from them, because at present they are leading the life that their father and mother are doing, so that they are only bringing up a lot of vagrants in the country—raising them up to vagrancy. There ought to be some means by which these children could be taken from them, and, as it were, boarded out, or put into some place or other where they could learn industry of some sort. It is a large charge this tramp business. We feel a good deal of it. We are on the direct road here, at the Mallory Union.

23365. At the cross-roads going from Waterford to Tralee and from Cork to Dublin?—Yes; it is a very good centre for them. I think another thing might be adopted, and that is, if the law did not step in in the way I say, if the master was to go on as it is, I would suggest that all tramps as they come into the house be vaccinated; it is a top-top thing.

23366. Supposing they were sufficiently protected against smallpox, would you still vaccinate them?—I would vaccinate every one of them; they could not be too protected. I don't think they would come back more than once.

23367. You would rather have the Australian system introduced?—Yes, as a national system.

23368. You are aware that that system exists in Germany and part of the United States of America?—No, I only speak of the countries I know. I have absolute experience of the ones I speak of.

MR. J. J. FITZGERALD, M.C.C., F.R.S., Mallow, examined.

23369. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, and a member of the County Council and Chairman of the Urban Council.

23370. Has the Urban Council considered the matter at all?—No, I have been simply asked to represent them, and my views are individual views. With regard to the boarding out of children, I have rather strong views, being somewhat of an educationalist myself, and being a Guardian who has visited the union very constantly for the last three years, during my period of Guardianship. I think that the present system is hardly worthy of civilisation. These children are reared in an evil atmosphere; not kept in a cleanly manner; and something ought to be done to remove them from the surroundings of the union. With regard to the teaching, of course, they are properly taught them. I don't know whether the Local Government Board have a want of confidence in the ultimate findings of the Commission or not, but they seem to think that whatever the result of your findings will be, that we will have to appoint a schoolmaster in Mallow next Friday. It would be ridiculous to ask us to appoint a schoolmaster if the ultimate result is that the children are to be boarded out. I think the children ought to be boarded out, or, preferably, if you had one good county industrial school, that might possibly contain all the children that are at present cared for in unions.

23371. Why do you say preferably an institution?—Because if you board them out eventually they become added to the mass of agricultural labourers. You sometimes board them in the vicinity of towns, and they naturally gravitate at once there, where there is no work for them.

23372. You are aware that the boarding out in towns is not possible at present?—I understood that, but eventually they do gravitate to the towns. I would rather give them trades.

23373. That would be a very expensive method of education?—I admit that, but eventually it would pay for itself; you would be decreasing the number of the poorest.

23374. Are you aware tradesmen complain of the difficulty of getting employment in Ireland at present?—I think there will be more tradesmen for which employment, if not immediately, will eventually be found from the industrial revival.

23375. But at present are you aware there is a difficulty in the way of tradesmen getting employment?—Yes, there is.

23376. And there is a dearth of agricultural labour?—I know that.

23377. Don't you think the employment of an agricultural labourer is a respectable, healthy, and manly employment, such as would be an important provision in life for a child who had to be supported out of the rates?—I agree it is both respectable and healthy; but still, previous experience has told us they won't stay at it.

23378. From that point of view don't you think we ought to put as many into it as we can, to help the country, which wants labourers!—Yes; I am not at all, of course, for depriving the farmers of labour, but I was looking to the ultimate gain of the boy.

29389. Which would be problematical if he took up a trade?—And not certain if he became an agricultural labourer.

29390. He would have his earning there as long as his health lasted?—Well, of course, I have not thought out the question of the school thoroughly, but I am altogether in favour of having them removed from the union.

29391. Putting them into an industrial school would be spending money on their education, and giving them opportunities of becoming tradesmen, that small retopayers could not give to their children. That would be putting the well class into a better position than the lower class of independent retopayers?—I think when you are doing anything for them you ought not to treat them as absolutely belonging to the well class.

29392. It is not a term of contempt, but they are a well class. The majority are illegitimate, and they have to be supported by the district, and the question is, whether you would put that class into a better position, and give them facilities that could not be got by the independent class?—I have not studied that particular phase of the question; but whenever you put them my own opinion would be, take them out of the workhouse.

29393. Then as regards their mothers?—I would be altogether in favour of a penitentiary.

29394. Then lunatics and all mental diseases?—Yes. I have experience that they are not at present properly cared for at all in the union. Sometimes you meet with caretakers who may be people who take care, and sometimes you meet caretakers who don't take care. An instance came under my notice at Mallow, where imbeciles were without any care for twenty-four hours, and we dismissed the man. Though the idiot ward, as it is called, is, properly speaking, an assistant infirmary, I don't believe it is visited sufficiently by nurses; and idiots require an amount of care which they cannot get in a workhouse.

29395. You would prefer sending these cases to Finghly?—Yes, to another auxiliary asylum. You have sufficient cases in the county to fill another.

29396. You did not refer to the trumpet?—I am entirely in favour of Mr. O'neagh's views.

29397. Then you would only have the sick and aged and infirm left. What do you think might be done with regard to the aged and infirm—not merely looking at it with regard to Mallow, but taking the six or eight unions round it?—The local surroundings and the memory of the past would always be the prevailing sentiment in the mind of the old person. He would have a preference for ill-treatment in his own district to better treatment elsewhere; but that would not justify keeping him in ill-treatment; he would gradually become reconciled to better treatment.

29398. Even that objection is not sustained by experience, because some workhouses have been dissolved, and we have found that the inmates who were moved are just as happy, and in some cases even happier, in the new building?—I think their lot is a very unhappy one as it is at present. Now and then a relative does visit them, but, in the main, their life is a blank. A lady visitor who went to the union remarked to me that the old men appear to get into the bed and remain there, not because they are actually weak, but that they feel, as they are approaching death gradually, they may as well remain in bed as walk round.

29399. And very often in these rooms there are not any seats with backs, that these people can rest?—There are seats with backs, but not a sufficient number.

29400. As regards outdoor relief?—I would be against it. I am living in the town, but I think it would be a great incentive to towns, even from that individual standpoint, to have the system of divisional rating. There is a natural provision of poor people to towns. Not only have they the outdoor relief to look for, that they can get in the country, but if they want charity, it is natural that where the population would be most that they would get most charity. They will meet with charitable assistance, and have a hundred more chances of picking up something to eat in towns. The towns would suffer greatly by divisional rating, and I don't think it would be right from that point of view to introduce it. The statement was made that there were only four nurses. There are four trained nurses; but I think there is a staff of seven or eight paid nurses in the Mallow Union. The untrained nurses are doing the same work as the trained nurses.

Mr. Longfield?—I spoke about the infirmary. 29401. You cannot say anything about their qualifications?—No. I have to add that I agree with what some previous witnesses said with regard to making the hospitals more cheery. I think they could be made very much more attractive, and I also think that where you have idiot wards or assistant infirmaries that there is a certain amount of temptation to send patients from the main hospitals to these, especially Mallow patients. Two notable cases have come before us recently, in one of which a man was removed from the hospital by the doctor's instructions to the idiot ward, although he was suffering from lumbago. It is a matter sub judice, but the man died the morning after removal into the idiot ward. He had been transferred without any instructions having been given to the caretaker as to looking after him. I think that if patients do become disagreeable, some arrangements ought to be made to keep them in a separate ward, rather than transfer them to a ward for which they were never intended. I notice also in Mr. Longfield's evidence—he lives in the country and I live in the town—but I agree with him with regard to cases where people holding land are ineligible for relief. We have met some really hard cases of that kind, and I would be in favour of having some such limit as £5 valuation. And, also, if a man happens to be in the body of the house, I understand it is illegal to give his wife outdoor relief; it is a hardship that we frequently meet with.

29402. If he is in the hospital she can get it?—Yes; but if he is in the body of the house she cannot get it; and we have known cases where a man has gone in through want of work, and the wife, who has a family, would like to keep her home without breaking it up.

29403. Would you say the head of the family could be in the workhouse and the people outside getting relief all the same?—I think so, in proper cases certified by the relieving officer.

29404. Mr. MURPHY?—You would make it a temporary provision only?—A temporary provision only.

Mr. L. BRASIER-ORRISON, J.R., further examined.

Mr. L. Brasier-Orrison.

May I add to what I said—that I think the £5 valuation would be very excellent. I know in my own division cases of real hardship owing to that quarter-acre clause, where people were absolutely destitute, and in need of relief. I have two cases which I had to relieve out of my own pocket, sooner than see them in the state they were in.

29405. CHAIRMAN.—You think the £5 limit would be a good change?—I do. It also referred to giving tickets to attend them.

29406. We have nothing to do with the Medical Charities Act?—I mean the workhouse doctor or the dispensary doctor. These doctors don't like attending people if they have any land at all. I am altogether in favour of divisional rating; because, as it is at present, what is everybody's business is nobody's.

29407. Dr. Bigger mentions to me that there is no limit; any poor person can get medical attendance; a red ticket may be given for a person having £50 valuation?—The general question the doctor asks is, "Have you any land?" If you have land, they won't attend you.

29408. Well, that is irregular!—On the ground that if they have land they must have money.

MR. WILLIAM FITZGERALD, Chairman, Rural District Council, Mallow, examined.

29406. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Mallow Union?—I am Chairman of the Rural District Council.

29410. You have heard a number of the other Guardians giving evidence?—I fully agree with them, and I agree with Mr. O'neagh and Mr. Longfield, especially in the case of outdoor relief for the holders of small holdings. One request I wish to put before you—in the case of labourers' cottages, they are excluded from outdoor relief altogether.

29411. That is owing to the quarter-acre clause, but the 65 valuation would let them in?—I know a few cases of it myself, where it was a special hardship, and I would wish that they be included. I know a case where a young man died, and left a large family of five or six children and his wife, and it is a great hardship on her to have to leave that cottage; and she must leave it if she does not get relief. Sept. 29, 1907.

Mr. William Fitzgerald.

29412. That is a very difficult question?—It is a question that should be looked into. It is a great grievance in many cases.

29413. Those cottages were built for agricultural labourers?—But when an agricultural labourer dies, leaving a wife and young family, how are they to be supported; they must leave the cottage, and go to live in some other place. If that was introduced, it would be a great blessing to the parish. I know of several cases myself.

MR. EDWARD FITZGERALD, F.R.S., Mallow, examined.

Mr. Edward Fitzgerald.

29414. CHAIRMAN.—What statement do you wish to make?—I am in accord with a great deal of what Mr. O'neagh said, with the exception of divisional rating and the vaccination of tramps. I think the vaccination of tramps would be very expensive. In other respects I agree with him with regard to the suggestion he has made as to the extended powers of outdoor relief.

29415. And as regards the necessity for trying to reduce the Poor Law expenditure by re-classification of inmates?—I am in thorough favour of amalgamation, but I would prefer abolition, if it could be done.

29416. You would not propose to abolish the hospital?—No, sir.

29417. You would give outdoor relief to so many as were suitable cases?—Yes.

29418. And reduce the number of aged and infirm?—Yes; and I would encourage a great many of the aged and infirm to go out on the outdoor relief system.

29419. And those that would not be eligible cases for outdoor relief, you think, ought to be maintained in the central institution?—That is the great crux of the inquiry. I would go a great deal in favour of cottage homes, but I am afraid the answer would be rather great; but failing the practicability of that I would be in favour of having them in some central institution.

29420. If cottage homes were established, would you contemplate any caretaker, or should the people be left altogether to their own common sense?—Infirm people are not altogether so delicate. If they were really bad cases they should be sent into the hospital, and my experience of them is that they are pretty well able to take care of themselves. In towns like this you have a pretty good nursing staff and officials, and I would give them a little more to do than at present, by compelling them to visit these homes, and, in addition, you have an excellent Jubilee nurse, so I don't fear there would be any great abuse. I would also, in some cases of outdoor relief, be in favour of giving it in kind, where people, although not actually drunkards are addicted to drunkenness.

29421. Where they could not be trusted to spend the money discreetly?—Yes; and I would limit the supply of goods at a time to them, so that they might not dispose of their bread or goods.

29422. You mean a system such as they have in Dublin, of a daily delivery of food?—Yes.

29423. That would be possible in towns, but hardly in the country?—I think it would be in country places.

29424. It would involve the keeping up of a van?—I think you can establish one supplier for each district. Let them come or send for it. You have a village in each electoral division.

29425. A number of these old people would not be able to send?—I would deliver it in that case.

29426. When you come to distant parts of the country, where people are living up bye-roads, you would find it difficult?—I don't think it would be necessary in these cases, because if these people could not come to the villages they would not be addicted to drink. I would give them cash. I think the system of divisional rating would be very expensive in towns. The tendency is when people get poor to come into towns. You would have them coming in from all the electoral divisions of the Mallow Union, and if you had divisional rating you would have the poor cast entirely on the rates in Mallow.

29427. Except such relief as you used to get under the law before 1898?—Yes.

29428. And there you might suffer a great deal of hardship before you got to the point that would satisfy you to relief?—Yes. With regard to the quarter-acre of land, I have seen cases where people had three or four acres of land, and were absolutely destitute—people who were so old that they could not work the place.

29429. I suppose they had it let out?—It was too small to let out. The quality of the land was not very good. I may say I am in accord also with a great deal of the evidence given by Mr. O'Gorman; I think his suggestions have been very practical and very good. The tramp nuisance, of course, is one that it is very difficult to face.

29430. You agree with Mr. O'neagh?—Yes; but I think a great deal of use might be made of some of the hedges for the purpose of accommodating tramps. You have a hedge in every large town in Cork.

29431. That would be entirely from the point of view of punishment?—I would not call it that; I would call it better supervision.

29432. If you put a man into an institution and accustomed him to work that would be interesting to him if he was a working man, and the possibility is you will get a number of them, at all events, to take to work?—I am afraid you would not. I have seen some of the best-looking and most able-bodied men you could get in any part of the world going round on tramp. Mallow is pestered with them.

29433. Are there many of these people who have been in the army?—A great many of these—army deserters, and a great many tradesmen. I am not in favour of the suggestion made by my brother, with regard to giving trades to poor boys, because I think, after all, it would be doing too well for them. Of course, the system does exist at the present moment in some of the institutions of the country, such as the Presentation Industrial School, in Cork, where boys who have been committed by magistrates after being deserted by their parents are turned out as tradesmen. We have two or three of them in town, and our experience is that the moment they come out with their trade they turn round and drive vans, or do some other kind of work; the trade is lost on them. One great thing in favour of amalgamation will be the wonderful economy wrought by having one staff instead of seven or eight. This country is the most efficient in the world, and you would have greater efficiency and much greater economy if you had the amalgamation. I am in favour also of the 25 valuation that has been suggested.

29434. MR. MURPHY.—You think that would be better than an indefinite discretion?—I would not give discretion; it is a very dangerous thing on public boards. It may be protected, but I suppose it is common to all mankind to have it abused.

29435. CHAIRMAN.—You would rather, as a Guardian yourself, have certain limits?—Undoubtedly.

MR. JOHN MARCOS, F.R.S., Mallow, examined.

Gentlemen, I don't intend to defend you with my evidence. I fully agree with the majority of the evidence from Mallow district—that is, Mr. O'neagh,

Mr. Longfield, and the three Mr. Fitzgeralds; and I would be for divisional rating; that would be the most economical thing.

Sept. 19, 1905.

Mr. John Madden.

29435. CHAISEMAN.—You are from the country district yourself?—I am; and I believe a countryman pays more rates than a man turning over £2,000 a year in the town. I pay £20 rates on an average, and a man having seven or eight times my income pays £4 or £5 in the town.

Mr. J. O'Leary, F.R.S.,

29437. You think he should be rated on his profits?—If he has poor around him he should be rated for them.

29438. But, except on that point, you agree in the desirability of removing these various classes out of the workhouse?—I am fully in accord with it.

Doneraile, examined.

29439. CHAISEMAN.—You also are a Guardian?—Yes, sir.

29440. Is there any special matter that you would wish to mention?—I hardly believe that if these workhouses were wiped out of existence it would be the greatest boon to humanity, because they are a scourge.

29441. You would go as far as the abolition of the system as you can?—As near, if they could be cleared out, even at a sacrifice of human life. I know it is a very drastic measure. Workhouses only serve three purposes in this country—they are monuments to commemorate the memory of latter days of starvation in Ireland. The second is, they are hotbeds of officialism; and thirdly, they are homes for the creation of paupers.

29442. You find that you have two or three generations in the workhouse?—Three or four generations. I quite agree with Dr. Bigger. Generation after generation of paupers you have in these institutions; and I know myself that the children that are sent to these institutions from these houses become paupers again, however, as soon as they come back into the world again with inside, they only drift back into the army, and return back to the poorhouse, where their fathers and mothers left them.

29443. You would not propose to do anything to take away assistance from the sick?—No; I would propose a cottage hospital in every town and hamlet in Ireland, and a dispensary doctor to look after them. There is a portion of the population that I represent that are suffering under a great grievance with regard to doctorship. There are men that actually die, never seeing a doctor or doctor's medicines; the best portion of the community, the working population, small farmers, whose valuation is under £50 or £40, these men never see a doctor, and die without a doctor. With regard to outdoor relief, I would be in favour of its being largely increased to these poor people; and I certainly agree with Mr. O'Gorman, that cottages or houses should be got in a town. I know it myself in my own district there are decent old women that won't go into poorhouses, because they won't rub shoulders with contaminated people. If these houses were taken for them, and give them a little cash, they are quite well able to manage for themselves, and do so. In Doneraile there are a lot of old women only getting 1s. 6d. a week; there is 1s. of that going for rent, and they have to exist on the 6d., but we have, under the presidency of Canon Sheehan, a St. Vincent de Paul Society in Doneraile, and that every week supplements the 6d. by 2s. 6d. or 2s. in kind, not in coin, to these poor people. That actually keeps them, and these poor people will not come in here, and yet they would exist outside if they had nothing to do, only live on the 6d. a week and the charity of the neighbours to give them a little until the St. Vincent de Paul Society was started.

29444. Is that society maintained altogether by local contributions?—By local contributions.

29445. Charitably disposed people place a sum of money at the disposal of the committee?—Yes, and they inquire into every case very carefully, in fact too carefully.

29446. Mr. MURKIN.—You believe in giving it in kind?—Yes, to giving it in coin. In Mallow Union the statistics is £2,000, and it is the firm belief of every one of my constituents that 50 per cent. of this money is spent in drink, and it is not a terrible thing that in Mallow Union £1,000 is spent in Spanish and Crawford's porter or Gilbey's whiskey—is not that a scourge?—out of the rates. If it was given in kind it would prevent those people coming forward, because if they get a coupon from the relieving officer they cannot turn it into drink.

29447. CHAISEMAN.—They might?—Not to give them the power to do so; it is very difficult to stop it, because I know cases in which these orders for relief in kind are given to a man or woman, say for a quartation of tea, and they may take that out in stout.

29448. It would be marked as tea—that would be a fraud of the shopkeeper himself?—It is not considered much sin, you know.

29449. Mr. MURKIN.—If the coupons were made payable only in houses that have no licenses?—That is what I was going to suggest.

29450. CHAISEMAN.—Have you many provision houses in country towns that are not licensed?—We have in Doneraile—the Co-operative Society and several bakeries.

29451. Most places that sell tea have licenses?—There are a share of them. There are fifteen public-houses in Doneraile to a population of 500. With regard to idiots, I would certainly say an institution such as Mr. O'Gorman suggested would be the proper place to put them.

29452. Then as regards tramps?—I am in favour of a colony for them, and making them work for their existence. They are a scourge to society, and if you have so many poor people coming from any locality to every official; all the rest are tramps. As long as the numbers are up the officials will be kept there. That is a fact; it is no hearsay at all. I know it full well. From my place alone there are only one or two poor aged women. I take care of those; all the rest are the travellers of the highway.

29453. So you think it would be even a more important matter than it seems at first sight to abolish the tramps?—I certainly say so, and take the children from them; and certainly the country is the proper place to board them out. No man need be ashamed to be a decent labourer; I, as a small farmer, call myself a labourer, and the man who works on the land with me eats the same food as I do, and he is paid £17 or £20 a year. And I cannot after ten years say I will see myself with £10, because every penny goes to the landlord under the frightfully cruel, harsh, and tyrannical land system we have in this country. Any man need not be ashamed of being a decent labourer; they are the best of men. Any man whose hand is turned from honest toil may say he cares for no man. Most of the tramps are shoemakers and bakers, and these are men that were turned out from these institutions with trades. Labouring is the very best trade that these people could be put to; it is free and healthy. You get open air and good meals, such as you won't see in towns; it is there you will find the best of men and women. I would suggest that the children be put into the homes of cottagers, where they will get a very good training, morally and otherwise. It is a great grievance that poor people cannot get the service of a doctor.

29454. It is a grievance they need not stay under—If a person is poor he is entitled to relief?—If a farmer has four or five cows or a couple of sheep the doctor will say, "Here you my money," and he won't go to him except he gets £3 in his hand.

29455. Mr. MURKIN.—You issue him a ticket, and say him?—I would wish to have that publicly known, for if it was publicly known people would avail of it.

29456. CHAISEMAN.—If the man is poor?—You say he has means, but he has not, owing to the system of land tenure in Ireland.

29457. Dr. Bigger.—Would you be in favour of paying the doctor of the district a proper salary, and exclude him entirely from fees—make him available for everybody?—I certainly would. It is a system that should be largely brought into use in this country.

Mr. Madden.—We would all fall in with that suggestion.

Dr. Bigger.—As long as you have the dual system there must be a line of demarcation between the two.

29458. CHAISEMAN.—Any poor person is entitled to medical relief?—I knew a poor woman myself, and her family happened to have the misfortune to get typhoid fever, and she only had ten acres of land, a couple of sheep, and a couple of cows, which in most cases she was grazing on the road, and that woman had to pay a doctor's fee. After paying all the expenses of the sickness she had to pay the doctor £10, whereas her rent was £10 a year also.

Mr. E. E. LONGFIELD, D.M., further examined.

May I say one word about the consumption hospital. I think a witness from Mitchelstown suggested the workhouse there might possibly be used as a sanatorium for consumptives. I am on the Joint Hospital Board and on the sub-committee. I attend every meeting, and I take a great interest in the subject. The question of the site was decided by a considerable majority. I don't like to appear to differ from my brethren, but in this matter I am very much afraid a huge blunder has been made. No later than yesterday a doctor, quite unconnected with the scheme, was talking to me, and he had not language strong enough to condemn the site that is chosen.

CHAIRMAN.—That is hardly for us.

Mr. Longfield.—May I ask do the Local Government Board do anything further in the matter?

CHAIRMAN.—We have nothing to do with that. Our position is this—if there is a workhouse that could be closed, we have got power to recommend that it should be assigned for any useful purpose, such as a sanatorium.

Mr. O'Gorman.—It has been stated that I represent no one but myself. I have been a member of the County Council since the Local Government Act passed, and I have been a member of the Ferny Board of Guardians, elected again and again.

Sept. 28, 1905.

Mr. E. E.
Longfield.

The Sitting terminated.

ADDENDUM.

MEMORANDUM for the consideration of the IRISH POOR LAW COMMISSION, drawn up by a special Committee of the Irish Division of the Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland.

[Page 337. Question 16076.]

1. The question as to the provision of auxiliary asylums for the treatment of the insane poor at present in workhouses must necessarily affect the general condition of the district asylums. A reduction, or an increment, of patients must follow in case such auxiliaries are, or are not, established, on the recommendation of the Commission.

2. Hence it is evident that the question is one which materially affects the administration and finance of the district asylums, and is one in which the Resident Medical Superintendents are especially entitled, and are particularly qualified, to express opinions based on valuable experience.

3. If it is decided to establish auxiliaries on one or other of the lines laid down by the Act, the erroneous opinions which led to the framing of such propositions should be reviewed with the object of their correction as to (1) the proper standard of care for the special classes of the insane, and (2) the extent to which that standard has been reached in this country.

4. It is submitted that the insane require particular lines of treatment, as regards which, for administrative purposes, they may be broadly divided into acute and chronic. The former need the specialised system of a hospital, the latter the care and treatment of a home or refuge, with special precautions for the safety of the inmates and the protection of society. It must be borne in mind that the chronic insane include very many cases dangerous to themselves and others, while of the rest the habits are frequently such as to call for constant care. The bodily health of this class is almost always depreciated, and often requires close medical attention. The lunatics at present in workhouses belong to both classes.

5. It is submitted that in Irish asylums the highest degree of perfection has not been generally reached in the treatment of either class, hence the ordinary district asylum cannot be fairly taken as forming such a standard as could be lowered, consistently with efficiency, in fixing the limits necessary in a less specialised asylum for the chronic and feeble class.

6. It is submitted that the standard, such as it is, in district asylums involves considerable expense, and the relief from Imperial funds to local taxation still leaves a burden which may be thought heavy under the special circumstances of this agricultural country.

7. The question then arises as to the wisdom of establishing a new set of institutions which are to be supported in a still greater degree by local taxation, and which are to receive a grant-in-aid half the amount of the sum which is inadequate to the needs of existing institutions.

8. It must also be remembered that in the workhouse the insane cost relatively more than the other inmates. The actual establishment charges cannot be arrived at, but, apart from these, the cost of maintenance in many unions amounts to 6s. to 7s. a week per head.

9. Yet, at this stated cost their condition was so deplorable that certain sections of the Act of 1838 were designed to effect those improvements which humanity demands.

10. It is difficult to see how this end can be efficiently and economically effected in the new establishments contemplated, if such are to enjoy the care and supervision by a competent staff, which are essential to their well-being.

11. It would appear that any measures of success which is likely to attend the proposed new departure would be in the direction of creating the auxiliaries as special departments of the existing district asylums. The continuation of establishment charges, the facilities for more specialised treatment of the different classes of the insane, and the utilisation of an experienced resident medical staff, would tend to a higher degree of efficiency, and hence result in a possibility of that economy which the Act contemplates.

12. We are, however, of opinion that the grant of 2s. should be increased, as it is clear from the actual cost of lunatics in workhouses, and in district asylums, that neither efficiency nor economy will be promoted, under the present terms, by the creation of auxiliary asylums for the insane in workhouses, many of whom will require greater care and more skilled treatment than the estimated limit of expense could possibly allow.

13. In any future legislative measures for the care of the insane, it is our opinion that the system of boarding-out patients in families should be legalised, and also that sanction should be given to the payment of the rate-in-aid for the maintenance of patients on probation for long periods, a system successfully operating in Scotland.

14. We are strongly of opinion that the mental condition of a number of persons who come and go through the Irish workhouses should be made the subject of serious investigation. These people are often weak-minded, sometimes personated imbeciles. They tend (especially the women) to the perpetration of vagrancy and larceny among the population. This class seems hitherto to have escaped attention.

AGED AND INFIRM INMATES OF WORKHOUSES.—(See "WORKHOUSE INMATES—AGED AND INFIRM").

AMALGAMATION OF UNIONS:—

Would be unworkable, owing to local differences and interests, unless despotic authority to carry it out were temporarily vested in some Board.—Lofan, Dr., 242.

Desires such as would set free workhouses for treatment of particular classes.—Montague, Lord, 504.

Under present facilities of intercommunication it seems advisable.—Scott, Miss, 690.

In favour of County Councils, but the Boards of Guardians should be retained in their respective districts.—Corry, Mr., 3755.

There are a great deal too many workhouses in the country.—Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5527.

The joining of Gort with Oung and Strahan resulted in an average reduction of 4d. in the £ in the rates.—Clarke, C., 5551.

There should be only one workhouse centrally situated in each county.—Scott, Dr., 7287. See also evidence of Strathairn, E. W., 8254; Payson, E. B., 13337; Wolke, P., 25354.

Would not effect any economy.—Payson, T., 15515-17; Loxley, M., 24465; Murphy, J., 28933.

Would result in a substantial saving to the ratepayers.—Maguire, P., 22235; Moore, W. N., 3792.

Would reduce the number of tramps by making the distance between the workhouses greater.—Moore, W. N., p. 755; McCurry, J. S. P., 11430; Crauford, E., 12590; Shawley, J., 22261.

Would be undesirable unless union rating were abolished.—Loxley, M., 24705.

If carried out local bodies should be retained to administer the affairs of their own districts.—Loxley, M., 23706-8.

The whole system of union treatment ought to be amalgamated, and a National rate.—Harrington, T. C., 15492.

If workhouses were long distances apart the aged and infirm may not go to them, but ask for outdoor relief instead.—Symonds, N. J., 17635.

Is necessary in the interests of economy and efficiency.—Meekes, P. A., 18005; Fitzgerald, E., 25433.

The Thomastown Guardians are in favour of, if outdoor relief be made a divisional charge, and a per capita rate charged for maintenance in another union.—Murphy, N. J., 12521-2.

Would be beneficial where a number of workhouses are near one another.—Doyle, P., 17785.

Would abolish unions entirely, and delegate to dispensary districts committees the control and management of Poor Law Relief.—Cogan, D. J., 19233-35.

The divisions of existing unions, and Boards of Guardians should remain, and the latter be empowered to board their paupers in another workhouse.—Higgins, T., 24455.

If universally carried out the ultimate saving would not be as large as supposed.—Clear, R., 23545-54.

In favour of, generally:—Howard, Major, 5478; Clarke, P., 5530; Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5527; Callaghan, W., 5350; *Clements, R. BASTARDY LAW—See ILLUSORY CHILDREN.

BEDS, TEN—

Should be provided for by the State—Kenny, J., 662; Peacocke, C. H., 19766.

Those in institutions aided by the Poor Law are trained in industries which are of no practical benefit to them—Kenny, J., 663.

Those who are inmates of workhouses should be cared for in some central institution—Wilson, R. H., 11427; Peacocke, C. H., 19766; Lane, J., 28704.

BOARDING-OUT OF CHILDREN.—

Children over three and under thirteen years should be boarded out—Magennis, Dr. E., 115.

The Dispensary Medical Officer should have supervision of the children—Moorehead, Dr. T. H., 323.

Unless carefully supervised is productive of vast evils—Buchanan, Mrs., 353-4.

BOARDING-OUT OF CHILDREN.—continued.

Infants should not be sent out until two or three years of age—Maguire, Dr. Katherine, 586-6; Montague, Lady, 603; Montague, Lady, 26121.

They should then be sent out—Smith, Rev. J., 586; Stoker, Sir Wm., 10491; 10492.

Scheme of boarding-out, inspection, &c., of R.C. orphans in the archdiocese of Armagh, by means of a fund left for charitable purposes, explained—Rogers, Rev. Canon, 12735-45.

Children of all ages should be boarded out—Smith, Dr. J., 105-3; Fog, Dr. G., 189-93; Emy, Lady, 26143; Harrington, Mrs., 26160.

They ought to be sent to small cottage homes where they would cost less than in workhouses—Smith, Rev. J., 105-3; 104-8. See also evidence of Hazlam, Mrs., 715.

Children should not be kept in workhouses at all—Hazlam, Mrs., 715; Adams, T. M., 722; McLaughlin, T., 12674; Delaney, W. M., 22677; Connolly, F., 2108. See also evidence of Martin, Dr., 11021; Brown, S. J., 17425; Synnott, N. J., 17079.

Children should be boarded out as soon as possible with young married mothers—Wynne, Mrs., 745.

Those boarded out hardly ever return to the workhouse—Scott, Major W. E., 1227.

While these resided in the workhouses usually do—Smith, Rev. J., 105-3; 104-8; Walker, W., 11033; Connolly, F., 2108; Collier, R., 22774; O'Malley, P. J., 24393.

The children of respectable parents should not be separated from them and sent out to nurse—Mooney, J., 15040.

Suggestions for the care and supervision of the children—Foy, Dr. G., 126-7.

Should be compulsory in the case of deserted children—Cuthbert, W., 555.

Children should on no account be brought back to the workhouse for inspection—Cuthbert, W., 555.

Those that cannot legally be boarded out should be sent to "scattered homes" under a foster-mother—Clark, Mrs., 11110-30; Macintosh, Dr., 11103; Payne, Mrs., 11334.

Children placed in such homes do not get rid of the workhouse taint—MacArthur, D., 11108.

Foster-parents often get attached to children and treat them as their own—Small, J. F., 12032; Green, Mrs., p. 417.

Would send them to industrial institutions instead—Howard, Major, 5428-30; Wilson, Dr., 7352-4; Shannon, T., 8792-9; Wallace, R., 22711. See also evidence of Bradford, W., 12043-4; Green, C., 12304; Clark, Jan., 22803; Fitzgibbon, John, 22633; Daly, Jos., 22872; O'Malley, P. J., 24273; Harrington, D. R., 23944-54.

Is entirely opposed to the proposal to place children in institutions—Bell, Dr. Fitzgibbon, 18049.

Children should be sent out as soon as they can use the food of the neighbourhood, and before they acquire the habits of the workhouse—Higgins, Wm., 22014-5.

Guardians should be empowered to board out with their mothers the legitimate children of widows and of women deserted by their husbands—MacArthur, D., 11108.

They should be empowered to adopt the children of "ins-and-outs" and board them out—O'Ryan, W., 11273.

They should also be empowered to adopt the children of undesirable parents with a view to boarding them out, and at the same time be authorised to control and detain the parents—Wilson, R. H., 11426; O'Grady, J. S., 17729; Meekler, E., 10921; Hazlam, Mrs., 18946-9; Thompson, Dr., Norman, 12131-2.

Only one of about 200 that were boarded out in Newry Union returned to the workhouse—Bell, W. E., 12055.

A number of unions should combine and appoint an Inspector of the children—Rennet, M., 14463.

In boarding-out preference should be given to foster-mothers who would guarantee to support, or provide a situation for, the child after the age limit had been reached—Shaw, T. J., 14553.

The payments offered by Guardians are not sufficient to induce people to take children—Cagran, Mrs., M.D., 426; Clarke, J., 10494;

Adams, W., 15493. See also evidence of Healy, M., 30756; Hayes, P., 25933.

Guardians should be empowered in suitable cases to board out children whose mothers are widows—Byrne, J., 16258; Clarke, T., 16317.

And the children of vicious and thriftless parents—Barnes, Chas., 16413; Brown, S. J., 17423; M'Mahon, J., 17944.

And also the children of parents who, through indigence, are likely to remain in the workhouse—Crimmins, W. C., 17328.

Should be left, if possible, universal—Brown, S. J., 17423; Sunderland, J., 17579.

Too close an inspection of the children is undesirable—Fitzgerald, Lady M., 20223-4.

It should be left to the discretion of Guardians to send children either to a town or to the country—Barry, T., 25578; O'Connor, B., 27765.

Would board out all children, but take them back at a certain age and give them an industrial training—Macdonald, J. C., 24267; O'Connor, B., 27778.

Guardians should have a discretion to either board out the children of habitual criminals or send them to a reformatory or industrial institution—Linahan, T., 22560; Lane, J., 28701.

Guardians should be empowered to board out a greater number of children than they can legally at present—Smith, Rev. J. Patterson, 504; Brown, Miss, 606; Montgomery, H. De P., 8204-8; Lindsay, H. B., 6249.

BOARDING-OUT OF AGED AND INFIRM PAUPERS:—

Would be better for old people, and a saving to the rates—Moorehead, Dr. T. H., 386.

The Dispensary Medical Officer would be the proper person to have supervision of—Moorehead, Dr. T. H., 383.

Objections to, and dangers of, the system set forth—Miss Buchanan, 608.

Considerable economy might be effected by—Kidd, Dr. L., 1764, 6473.

Would lead to abuse, as those who could be so disposed of are those who now get outdoor relief—Montgomery, H. De P., 6030.

Would extend the principle to married couples, and harmless imbeciles—Swell, J. F., 3406.

The idea is practically carried out in Banbridge Union by granting outdoor relief on a liberal scale—Johnston, J., 11655-7.

In neither desirable nor feasible—Curry, W., 12627; Sheridan, P., 13829.

Guardians should be empowered to board out in a neighbouring union—M'Harpe, J., 10503; M'Conne, Col., p. 382; Andrews, T., 12194; O'Neil, P. J., 15371-2.

The poor would prefer to be boarded-out in their own neighbourhood to being sent to a distant workhouse—Mooney, J., 16002.

It should be left optional with the Guardians to adopt the system—Murphy, N. J., 10333-3.

Would board-out old married couples of the labouring class—Condon, Dr., 15355; Farrell, T., 28177; Walsh, P., 29455.

And also widows with one or two children—Walsh, P., 29456-7.

Grants should be made by Parliament for the purpose—Rice, M. A., 13528-3.

Would empower Guardians to board-out in an institution—Linahan, T., 28572-5.

Guardians should be enabled to rent houses for them in villages, to give them coals, and a few shillings a week—O'Gorman, D. L., p. 978; 28115-7; O'Leary, J., 29453.

They would not be so well looked after if placed in such houses as they are in the workhouse—O'Mahony, P., 29214; Noonan, J., 32013.

In favour of boarding-out:—Byrd, J., 10213; Wilson, Dr. J., 6536; Sullivan, J., 6586; Bayly, J., 10223; Hannan, P., 10415; Clarke, J., 10483; Macintosh, Dr., 11178-9; Wilson, R. H., 11400.

Hayes, P., 25938; Dawson, Miss, 26676; Brannigan-Croagh, L., 29366.

Opposed to boarding-out:—Kierman, P., 7582; Ryan, Dr., 8580; Hennessy, Dr., 13479-5; Hackett, G., 15670; Bobbett, W., 16631; Moyle, M., 18284-5; Byrne, M., 18451; Stegford, Lord, 19424-5; Doyle, M., 20673; O'Gorman, P., 27032-4; Webb, C. C., 21365; Lorcinn, A. C., 23637.

BOARDING-OUT COMPARED WITH INSTITUTION-REARING FOR CHILDREN:—

Advantages of the former system over the latter set forth—Lagden, Dr., 251.

Those boarded out hardly ever return to the workhouse, whilst those reared therein do so incessantly—Scott, Major W. E., 1327.

Children get better training even in small farmers' houses than in the workhouse—Curry, M., 2762.

It is more desirable to train pauper children as agricultural labourers than to give them a higher education, and thus bring them into competition with the children of ratepayers—McCarthy, J., 13235.

The "barrack life" unfit a boy to care about a home of his own afterwards—Barnard, Col., 13093.

The system adopted in Trim Joint School is at variance with human nature—Owen, C., 13355.

Approves of the manner in which children are brought up in Trim School, which is a splendid institution—Clarke, J., 13456.

It is far better for children to be in an institution like the Trim School than to be boarded-out—Dowry, A., 13479; Carpenter, T., 13493; Skelton, F., 13520.

The knowledge imparted to the girls in Trim School is not practical for everyday life afterwards, and it would be better to board them out if proper homes could be got for them—Cullane, Mrs., 13551-4.

Boarded out children turn out better than those reared in Trim School—Hewitt, T., 13788.

Details of the expenditure on the Trim School—Sheridan, L., 13807-945; Kelly, S., 13946-73.

The institution system is radically wrong from its foundation—Owen, C., 13361-2.

In favour of the institution system, as boarded-out children have no future before them—Sullivan, Dr., 13424.

The taint of the workhouse attaches to those reared within its precincts, and children are likely to become more useful members of society if reared in a family circle—O'Neill, P. J., 13531-2.

Boarding out is far superior to retaining in schools or other institutions—Owen, J., 17161; Walsh, P., 20373, 20385; Delany, B., 21571; Foxon, Mrs., 25431; Lee, Rev. T., 27326.

When institution-reared children lose their situation they have nowhere to go but to the workhouse—Cogswell, Mrs. M'D., 467; Egan, Mrs., 17176.

But those boarded out get absorbed in the population—Egan, Mrs., 17173; Healy, M., 20756; O'Leahy, D., 24346.

Children reared in the workhouse school at Cebre frequently return to the workhouse, and some of the boys have become tramps—Egan, Mrs., 17173.

Industrial school boys who do not settle down to regular pursuits become either soldiers or sailors—Egan, Mrs., 17182.

Industrial school boys turn out well—Donovan, St. J. H., 26562-4.

Boarded out children get infused in the population, lose whatever brand of pauperism they might have been on them and become good members of society, but those reared in workhouses usually return to them—Mahan, P. A., 13027. See also evidence of Phelan, C., 13153; Smith, Miss R., 21543; Scully, M., p. 722; McDonald, W. F., 27723.

Institution-trained children are brought up as machines, and turn out very badly—Wanderford, R. H. F., 12245-6.

Boarded out children have a better chance of getting on in life than those reared in a workhouse or industrial school—Byrne, M., 19413; McCarthy, P., 20613-4.

Twenty years' experience in the Millagh Union has shown that children boarded-out have done much better than those reared in the workhouse—Byrne, R. J., 19432.

Children should be brought up in an institution, where they would get technical training—Cocklin, W. C., 20543-60; Byrne, T., 24430; O'Flaherty, T., 26420.

Institution-rearing cannot compensate for the loss of home associations secured by boarding-out—Holland, D., 20077.

BOARDING-OUT COMPARED WITH INSTITUTION-REARING FOR CHILDREN.—continued.

Children should be taught trades in industrial schools, as if a boy has more intellect than an ordinary labourer he should be encouraged to rise above that position—Tierney, Dr., 7031-62.

Children should not be taught trades at the expense of the ratepayers—Healy, M., 20773; Fitzgerald, R., 25633.

Except a few who may have a natural taste for trades—Burke, D., 25318-9.

Children brought up in Glen Joint School are unfit for anything when they leave it—Healy, J., 25425; Harrigan, Mrs., 25634-5; McInerney, J., 25907-8.

Children reared in a workhouse are unfitted for the ordinary duties of life—Foley, P., 26424; O'Flaherty, T., 26478; Foxon, Mrs., 26429; Murphy, J., 26519.

(See also "BOARDING-OUT OF CHILDREN," and "CHILDREN.")

C.

CARPENTERS:—

Should not be admitted to workhouses at all—Grogg, J., 1244.

Power should be given to detain in workhouses for varying periods—Scott, Major W. E., 987-1009; Burke, D., 28335.

Should be detained until they have completed a certain amount of work—McCauley, Col., 11430.

Should be compelled to give twelve hours' notice before taking their discharge from workhouses—Owen, W. C., 17323.

If of good character should get outdoor relief—Thompson, Dr. Norman, 19123. (See also "TRAMP.")

CHILDREN:—

Those under three years of age should be placed in district or cottage hospitals—Mogensen, Dr. E., 117.

Should be separated from adults in workhouses after three years of age, or after they are fit to be taken from their mothers—Buckanan, Miss, 277.

It is not advisable to relieve mothers from the responsibility of rearing—Buckanan, Miss, 270-80.

An abundance of good character, not a pauper, should be in charge of, and the "in-and-outs" should not be allowed to mix with the permanent, in workhouses—Cogswell, Mrs. M'Dowell, 444-60.

If children of widows could be paid for in day industrial schools, the mothers would be free to work, and the condition of the family materially improved thereby—Mogensen, Dr. Katherine, 291-2.

In favour of children being sent from the workhouse to an outside school daily—Smith, L., 3251.

Guardians should be empowered to assume control of the children of destitute persons, casuals, tramps, and other objectionable persons—Macdonald, Lord, 617; Scott, Major W. E., 989; McLaughlin, Dr. T., 1356-9; McGee, J. J., 5124; Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5702; Johnston, R. H., 8543; Davies, Dr., 5237; O'Hare, W., 11273-3; McCauley, Colonel, 11285, 11430; Payne, Mrs., 11329; Eynon, Dr., 11265-7; Robb, J. A., p. 635; O'Neill, P. J., 12533-5; Walsh, J., 16538; McDonald, John, 16555; Grogg, J. J., 16561; O'Mahony, W. C., 17227; Wanderford, R. H. F., 12271; O'Connell, D., 12423; Murphy, N. J., 12545; Mogensen, M., 12635; Penelope, C. H., 12739; Stopford, Lord, 12617-8; Pope, P. A., 20151; Fitzgerald, Lady M., 20237; Walsh, P., 20440; Doyle, M., 20560; Burke, T., 22579; Fitzgibbon, J., 22672; MacDonnell, Rev. M., 23734; Cogswell, J., 24034; Martin, J., 24090; Carr, M., 24357; Higgins, T., 24377; Barrington, Miss, 24192; Lane, J., 25600; O'Gorman, D. L., 26211; Brainerd-O'Leary, L., 26374.

CHILDREN.—continued.

If children are taken from parents the latter should have the right of appeal to a court of law—O'Neill, P. J., 18837.

Should not be taken from unmarried mothers—Here, J., 26264-6.

There is not much necessity for an alteration in the law which at present enables Guardians to take children from objectionable parents—Mooney, J., 18978.

Guardians should have complete control over all children maintained by them—McNab, N., 14163-6.

Should be admitted to workhouses without their parents, and then sent to industrial schools, or boarded-out—Moore, W. N., p. 763.

Industrial outside homes, under an administrative authority, should be established for those who find employment, and any deficiency between their earnings and the cost of the upkeep of the house should be charged on the Poor Rate—Walter, W., 15334; Clark, Miss F. F., 11118; Macintosh, Dr., 11182; Wilson, R. H., 11432.

Guardians should be empowered to apprentice for a stated period—McGee, Colonel, 11295; Hall, Dr., 11332-3.

Guardians should also be empowered to send crippled children, after undergoing operations, to convalescent homes—Walter, R. H., 11427.

Those who are not boarded out should be sent to a large school where they could be taught trades—McGee, Colonel, p. 322; Hall, Dr., 11351.

During removal, by magistrates, children should not be sent to workhouses—Cogswell, Mrs. M. A., 451; Macintosh, Dr., 11183; Wilson, R. H., 11433; Payne, J. G. C., p. 321; Harrington, T. C., 16487; Fetherill, Dr., 17005; Brown, S. J., 17428-9; Wolf, P., 20356.

Children entering workhouses with their parents should be separated from them—Cressford, Col. S., 12237.

Those for whom no homes could be found for boarding-out should be kept in an institution for children only—O'Neill, P. J., 18837-9; Dagg, J. R., 17993; Webb, C. C., 23324.

A separate building should be provided in which the Protestant children of the North and South Dublin Unions should be kept—Dowse, Rev. J. C., 16332.

Guardians should be urged to send a greater number of, to certified schools—Evans, C., 18457-8. Should be a National charge, and not liable to be paid for by the locality in which they come under the Poor Law—Evans, C., 18453.

It ought to be permissible to bring children together in one workhouse, to be paid for by the Guardians that send them—Evans, C., 18453-6.

There should be some means of giving girls an industrial training before they leave the workhouse—Evans, C., 18415; Harrington, T. C., 16488; Powell, Dr., 17115; McGough, S., 17141.

Boys should also get some technical training before being put out to service—Powell, Dr., 17114-5; McGough, S., 17141-2.

Every union should have the right to send to an industrial school a percentage of the children in its charge—Harrington, T. C., 16480.

The children of tramps should be sent to an industrial school, as if boarded out the parents trace them—Egan, Mrs., 17181-2.

Those whose parents are undergoing imprisonment ought not to be placed in a workhouse, but passed on to an industrial school—Wright, Miss, 17320.

Should not be brought into contact with the workhouse at all—Pope, P. A., 20141; Ripples, T., 24475; Fitzgerald, F., 26548; Dowse, Miss, 26648-4; Lord Mayor of Cork, 18974.

Should not get trades at the expense of the ratepayers—Healy, M., 20707; Fitzgerald, E., 26423.

All in workhouses should be either boarded out or apprenticed—Buller, J., 21173; Fitzgerald, J. J., 20335-62.

Those of weak intellect should be sent to a central school—Harrington, Miss, 26135.

CHILDREN.—continued.

The children of respectable parents should be kept in the workhouse while the latter are in search of work—Harrington, Miss, 26135.

Are entitled to an industrial training by State aid—Harrington, D. D., 26265.

(See also "BOARDING-OUT OF CHILDREN," and "BOARDING-OUT COMPARED WITH INSTITUTION-REARING FOR CHILDREN.")

CLASSIFICATION OF WORKHOUSE INMATES.—

Acute and curable hospital cases should be separated from the chronic—Smith, Dr. J., 40. Does not exist in the infirmaries, and the absence of it is demoralising to the medical and nursing staff, and injurious to the sick—Smith, Dr. J., 41-5.

Proportion of suitable to unsuitable cases in hospitals set forth—Smith, Dr. J., 48-54.

Bed-ridden aged and infirm persons should be removed from the hospitals—Smith, Dr. J., 53.

A number of people get unjustifiably expensive treatment which they do not need, in the hospitals—Smith, Dr. J., 66.

Division of inmates into five classes suggested—Morgan, Dr. E., 115.

To be of any real benefit necessitates separation in different wards, as the mixing together of people of all ages on the ground of destination is radically wrong—Buchanan, Miss, 368.

Fricking wards should be set apart for the second aged poor—Hemilton, Miss, 484; Smith, Dr. J., 67; Paterson, 515-7; Holman, Mrs., 720; Howard, Major, 6484; Montagu, Lady, 26123; Fenn, Mrs., 26317.

Would have the common workhouse, as at present, for the vicious, degraded, and idle—Smith, Rev. J. Paterson, 515.

The aged and infirm should be treated separately in institutions of the workhouse, type, and the deserving amongst these sub-classified for better treatment—Montagu, Lord, 630. See also evidence of McGee, N., 12384; Byrne, T., 2437-8.

Special arrangements should be made to preserve young women with their first child from contact with habitual offenders—Montagu, Lord, 630; Bodley, W., 5087.

The wards and nurseries should be supervised by Lady Inspectors—Montagu, Lord, 630.

Any setting apart of workhouses for the maintenance of different classes would tend to greatly increase the cost without any compensating advantage—Pearson, D. C., 4571.

Old married couples should not be separated—Cogswell, Mrs. M. A., 467; Greig, J., 1253; Larkin, J. G., 3258; Wamsell, Dr., 4443; Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5733; Belmont, Earl of, 6155; Kiersey, F., 7682; Wilson, F., 7765; Atkinson, A., 11702; Andrews, T., 12256; O'Brien, Mrs., 18667; Murray, M., 14250; Ginnell, M., 14379; MacDonnell, J. C., 24516; Montagu, Lady, 26122; Moore, W. N., p. 768.

Inmates should be classed according to character—Buchanan, Miss, 403; Larkin, J. G., 3258; Smith, Rev. J. H., 7977; Macintosh, S., 9486; Wilson, G. R., 10323; Wilson, R. H., 11422; McGee, N., 12385; McDonnell, Dr. H., 12337; Hamilton, B., 12507-9; Payne, S. R., 13340, 13346; Murray, M., 14250; Ginnell, M., 14379; Kenny, Dr. J. M. S., 16346; Cogswell, Mrs. M. A., 16793; Crozier, J., 17183-4; Clew, R., 20094-77; Brown, Miss E. M., 22456-64.

The deserving ought to get better treatment than the undeserving, but the sending of inmates to a distant workhouse would affect both—Mooney, J., 18901-4.

Persons suffering from alcoholism should be placed in isolated wards—Gwynne, Dr., 11354-5.

Setting apart one workhouse in each county for the aged and infirm would prevent them from entering it, and consequently increase outdoor relief—Andrews, T., 12395; O'Brien, J., 27933.

It would be desirable to have such a workhouse for all who could be transferred thereto without injury to their health—Bodley, R., 5239; Wilson, Rev. Canon, 3035; McGee, N., 3410, 3420.

Abolished males and females should be in separate institutions—Dagg, J. R., 17901.

CLASSIFICATION OF WORKHOUSE INMATES.—continued.

Classification in separate workhouses is necessary if amalgamation of unions is to be carried out—Walsh, P., 20265.

(See also "WORKHOUSE INMATES—AIDS-ROBBER," and "WORKHOUSE INMATES—AGED AND INFIRM.")

CONSUMPTION.—(See "SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES.")

COTTAGE HOSPITALS:—

The sick and infirm should be placed in—Magenau, Dr. E., 117.

Could not be worked economically in rural districts—Gregg, J., 1250.

Should be established in Co. Donegal, if workhouses were abolished—Doherty, W., 2628-31.

Should be maintained by the union—Doherty, W., 3655.

The districts of Glenties and the Rosses in Co. Donegal should be provided with—Pearson, D. C., 498.

And also Dungloe or Burtonport, and Carrick, and the island of Arranmore—Farrock, Dr., 1120, 4055.

It would not be possible to use them in common for infectious and non-infectious cases—Farrock, Dr., 4869-72.

Patients would not be so well looked after in as in hospitals with a large staff—Irwin, J., 4155-60.

The expense would be out of proportion to their usefulness—Cuskert, W., 6835.

It is necessary to provide them in remote districts—O'Connell, Dr., 20763-3; O'Hara, P., 24506; O'Malley, P. J., 24520; Hogan, P. J., 24532.

Are required in Co. Galway at Carris, Bealaden, Carragee, Liscannoe, Costello, and the Aran Islands—M'Hugh, Rev. H., 24224; M'Hugh, Rev. M., 24355-1; Moody, Rev. J., 24380; Moody, Rev. J., 24382, 24383; Lofan, D. A., 24536; Farragher, Rev. M., 24654-68.

There should be one in each Dispensary District for cases of scurvy and sudden illness—Clarke, J., 10490; Martin, M., 22570-1.

Should be provided where workhouses are abolished—O'Connell, Dr., 10755-8.

There is urgent need for in country towns and villages—Kirk, Dr., 12250-3; Lynn, Dr., 11365-5; Walsh, P., 20471; O'Leary, J., 29443.

Local authorities ought to be empowered to pay for the support of the destitute poor in—Kirk, Dr., 11255-6; Flanagan, J. H., 11495.

Is in favour of a law enabling small fever hospitals, such as Oulart (Co. Wexford), to be converted into, for medical and surgical cases—Stepford, Lord, 12851-2.

Would be necessary at Slieve and Waterville, and at Castlegregory or Annascaul, in the event of the amalgamation of unions in Co. Kerry—Piegan, M. J., 26332-7.

One is required at Tarbert (Co. Kerry)—Foran, Mrs., 26520.

(See also "DISTRICT HOSPITALS," "HOSPITALS," and "INFIRMARIES—COUNTY.")

COUNTY AND UNION BOUNDARIES CONTINUOUS:—

A county should be self-contained for administrative purposes—Doherty, W., 3785-83; Dunlavy, J., 1933. See also evidence of Montgomery, H. De P., 5068; Kirkpatrick, H., 6626; Kiernan, P., 7543, 7611; Daly, J., 4226; Smith, E., 8758; M'Arthur, D., 11216; Johnston, J., 11562; McConnell, G. B., p. 407; Andrews, T., 12213; Curran, T., 13429-4; Moore, A., 14012; O'Neill, P. J., 12639-30.

To make unions county units would be very inconvenient and injurious to the sick poor—Sweeney, R., 4271-2.

Opposed to the proposal to confine unions to counties—McGee, Colonel, 11413; Malone, T., 12016; Hackett, G., 15525-6; Ward, J., 16570. See also evidence in having—Malone, P., 16798.

The county borough and union boundaries should be continuous in Belfast—Gill, J., 10623; Johnston, J., 11563.

COUNTY AND UNION BOUNDARIES CONTINUOUS.—continued.

The proposal would be advantageous so far as Co. Kildare is concerned—Brace, S. J., 17401, 17432; Sunderland, J., 17676.

It could not possibly be given effect to in Co. Wick—Low—O'Kelly, E. P., 17834.

The contrary view held—Ogden, D. J., 18272-4.

COUNTY INFIRMARY.—(See "INFIRMARIES—COUNTY.")

D.

DETENTION, COMPULSORY, OF TRAMPS OR VAGRANTS.—(See "TRAMPS.")

DISPENSARY COMMITTEES:—

Since their abolition Guardians have lost touch with dispensaries, and they should be empowered to appoint local committees instead to look after dispensaries—Scott, Major W. E., 921-5, 940.

Dispensaries have never been thoroughly looked after since their abolition—Gregg, J., 1256.

Should be restored for the purpose of granting outdoor relief if unions were dissolved—Seaton, C., 16423-4.

(See also "OUTDOOR RELIEF.")

DISTRICT COUNSELLORS.—See GUARDIANS.

DISTRICT HOSPITALS:—

Small ones should be provided in localities at present served by workhouse hospitals; they should be for really hospital cases, and be dissociated from workhouses—Smith, Dr. J., 78.

Workhouse hospitals should be compulsorily converted into—Lofan, Dr., 267. See also evidence of Farrock, Dr., 1120; M'Grath, H., 12367; Kenny, Dr., J. M. S., 15328; Kennedy, E., 17543; Brennan, H., 23520; Foran, Mrs., 26517; Clear, R., 26539.

The County Council, through a Committee, should have control of—MacLeod, Dr. T. H., 245-6; Collyer, R., 23324.

Instead of utilizing dissolved workhouses, it would better meet the general desire to provide a small district hospital in each Dispensary District—Popd, J. D., 13656.

One should be in each town where there is a workhouse at present—Hoff, Dr., 7426; Kiernan, P., 7632; Cullen, Dr., 3422.

Should be so equipped that major operations could be performed in them—McDonnell, Dr. H., 12852.

(See also "HOSPITALS," and "INFIRMARIES—COUNTY.")

DISTRICT SCHOOLS:—

Dissolved workhouses could be utilized as such for pauper children not eligible under the existing law for boarding out; they should be of the regular industrial type, and be inspected by the Inspector of Reformatories and Industrial Schools—Montague, Lord, 602, 618.

DUBLIN UNIONS:—

The County Council consider that some effort should be made to relieve the congestion in the North and South Unions—O'Neill, P. J., 12806.

They ought to be amalgamated under the control of one administrative body, and there ought to be a uniform rate for both—O'Neill, P. J., 15806-2, 15806, 15879-81.

Reform could be effected by amalgamation, which would not result in much difference in the rating in the South Union—Mooney, J., 15975-6.

The existence of two workhouses in the city induces the pauper population to go from one to the other—Mooney, J., 15978.

Congestion in the workhouses could be relieved by discontinuing the practice of transferring inmates from the hospitals to the infirm wards—Mooney, J., 15931, 15943.

It would be desirable to have the boys of the two unions housed in one place, and the girls in another—O'Neill, P. J., 15833-5.

And an age classification should be introduced, so that the old might be kept by themselves—O'Neill, P. J., 15935.

It would not be desirable to interfere with the South Union, either by amalgamation or otherwise—Byrne, J., 16125-266.

To amalgamate the two unions would render the concern unwieldy—Byrne, J., 16246.

It is necessary to amalgamate the two unions, or, at least, to assimilate the rates—Harrington, T. C., 16448-50; Dolaney, Dr., p. 503.

As at present constitutes the union with the higher valuation contributes to the maintenance of a smaller proportion of the poor—Harrington, T. C., 16453-3; Donaghy, T. W., 16607.

Amalgamation would lead to economy in administration—Harrington, T. C., 16463.

In favour of the proposal to reserve one workhouse for males and the other for females—Harrington, T. C., 16453; Donaghy, T. W., 16558.

If amalgamation took place, the number of Guardians should be reduced by one-half—Harrington, T. C., 16476.

In favour of absolute amalgamation—Donaghy, T. W., 16508; McDonnell, J., 16877-30; Carolan, J., 16779; McGough, E., 17133; Crosier, J., 17156.

In consequence of the amount of business to be done, amalgamation would not make for efficiency, but a uniform rate is required—McWalter, Dr., 16673, 16728.

The South Dublin Workhouse should be converted into a hospital for the two unions—McDonnell, J., 16812-3; Patrol, Dr., 17042-6.

Classification could be immensely improved by amalgamation—Patrol, Dr., 17095.

Amalgamation would relieve the congestion in the North Union, and be a great benefit to the ratepayers and the poor—Crosier, J., 17167, 17162; Long, J., 17217-8.

Amalgamation would be unfair to the ratepayers of the South Union, and would not effect any saving in establishment charges—O'Connell, W. C., 17228, 17233.

E

EVIDENCE:—

The view that epilepsy is largely hereditary is not well founded, as it is due to various causes—Foy, Dr., 303.

Certain classes of should be boarded out with farmers, but confirmed epileptics should be sent to an epileptic asylum—Foy, Dr., 303-5.

Should always be separated from the young—Foy, Dr., 302.

Suggests the formation of two colonies for the same—Buckton, Miss, 371.

Should be removed out of workhouses altogether—Buckton, Miss, 375; O'Connor, Mrs. M. Dowd, 437; Kidd, Dr. L., 1775, 1671. See also evidence of McLeish, Dr., 11339; Adams, W., 15430; Shall, Dr., 15553; Crosier, J., 17160; O'Connell, W. C., 17254; Synott, N. J., 17664; Wanderford, B. H. P., 18276; Ogilby, W. C., 23239; Hegarty, T., 21350; Crabb, Miss B., 23584; Ferns, Mrs., 26611.

The same should be provided for in a National Institution, which should receive the same capitation grant as a lunatic asylum—Montague, Lord, 500.

Separate provision, by settlements in the shape of villages with small auxiliary asylums attached, should be made for, but the permanently insane should be sent to the district asylum—Stoker, Sir Wm. Flanagan, 644.

EPILEPTICS—continued.

A provincial institute under the control of a doctor, where they could get suitable employment with proper classification, should be provided for—McArthur, D., 11112. See also evidence of Macintosh, Dr., 11172; Patrol, Dr., 17000-32.

The colony system, with cottages containing a dozen or twenty each, would amply suit the requirements of—McLeish, Dr., 11290.

There should be an institution for the care of the whole country—McGrath, H., 12397; Sturges, Miss, 23224.

Boards of Guardians should be empowered to establish a home for the same—Sturges, C., 16363.

Owing to the want of suitable means of recreation and occupation proper treatment cannot be given to them in workhouses—Sturges, C., 16364.

Opposed to any proposal to board them out—Synott, N. J., 17584; O'Drudy, J. S., 17702.

Separate wards in one workhouse in each county should be provided for—O'Drudy, J. S., 17605.

In favour of employing them on a farm—Pennock, C. H., 17728.

Would send them to a separate institution, where they could get special treatment—Butler, J., 21173.

(See also "IMBESILES AND IMBECILES.")

F.

FEVER HOSPITALS:

There should be four, unconnected with the workhouses, in central places in County Donegal—Doherty, W., 3051.

The number of could not be reduced with safety, and in certain localities small hospitals should be established that could be used either as fever or as district hospitals, as occasion required—Worlock, Dr., 4967.

History, financial position of, and scale of charges for patients in the Carrickmacross hospital—McCool, Dr., 8335-40.

Should be abolished, and isolation hospitals in charge of sanitary authorities provided instead—Byrne, Dr., 6333.

Should be separated from workhouses, both structurally and in names—Byrne, Dr., 11364.

Treatment in should be free, in order to encourage patients to enter, and to protect the public—Kidd, Dr. L., 16471; Salmon, Dr. F. W., 15399.

Would retain the present number of, but place them in charge of caretakers, and employ nurses when required—Hevitt, T., 17373.

(See also "HOSPITALS.")

G.

GRANTS (PARLIAMENTARY) IN AID OF LOCAL TAXATION:

The present system of distribution, under which a large sum is given to the rich, and very little to the poor, union, which needs assistance most, should be revised—McGee, T., 8977-80; Harrington, T. C., 16439-53; Bagley, A., 23160-4; O'Kelly, C., 23517-25; Henry, M. C., 23360-3; Daly, J., 23872.

In consequence of the adoption by the Guardians of an insufficient estimate in the Standard Year, the rural portion of the North Dublin Union has since received out of the Agricultural Grant £1000 per annum less than what it is entitled to—O'Neill, J., 17128-33.

Very poor unions should get such assistance as would enable them to keep their institutions at the minimum standard of efficiency—Harrington, T. C., 16462.

GUARDIANS:

The present Boards are too large, and the number of members should be reduced—Doherty, W., 3014; Peacock, D. C., 4588-90; Lindsay, H. R., 6295; Flanagan, B. M., 6334; Quinn, J., 6802; Byrne, Dr., 2650-2; Small, J. P., 6413-4. See also evidence of Gill, J., 10880; Johnston, J., 11554; Field, J., 15560; Walsh, P., 15560.

GUARDIANS—continued:

20493; O'Ryan, Dr., 21155; Butler, J., 21173, 21255; Masey, Lieut.-General, 21229; Daly, J., 22070; Hogan, J., 25034; Harrington, J. B., 25093; Maher, M., 25095; Foley, P., 25412-3; O'Donnell, T., 25552; Sullivan, T. J., 27225; Shahan, J. J., 27149; Healy, D. J., 27175; Shea, J., 27199; Lane, J., 27173.

An electoral division under £2,000 valuation should have only one representative—McLaughlin, G., 4908.

It would be sufficient that Guardians should meet monthly instead of weekly—Smith, J., 5493; O'Rourke, E., 2224; Small, J. P., 9415.

In favour of dispensary district representation—McGovern, T., 9431; Johnston, R. H., 8673.

It should be an essential condition of the amalgamation of unions that the number of Guardians be reduced by one-half at least—Jordan, J., 6049-51; McGovern, T., 8447-8; Edwards, C., 12078; Mooney, J., 12079-81. See also evidence of Bradford, W., 12023; Louden, J. B., 22705.

In favour of a property qualification for—Mooney, J., 15582-3; Walsh, P., 20494-505.

Would abolish all Boards, and let the ratepayers appoint three paid officers for each union—Coffey, W. C., 25604. See also evidence of Fitzgerald, P., 25333.

Should be disqualified for not attending meetings at least once a month—Bradford, W., 12025.

Boards should have power to co-opt lady Guardians—Hosken, Mrs., 715; Harrington, J. B., 25553; McInerney, J., 25528-31; Fitzgerald, P., 25333-5.

There should be a much larger proportion of women on the Boards, or on Committees—Greene, Mrs. M., p. 417.

Should be allowed to meet in conference, the necessary expenses being defrayed out of the rates—Eaton, O., 16443.

The accumulation of members on a Board takes away from its efficiency—Butler, J., 21255.

H.

HOSPITALS:

Treatment in a hospital is a necessity for the sick who are not destitute, and they ought not to be obliged to seek in through the workhouse as paupers—Smith, Dr. J., 77-3. See also evidence of Watkins, G. R., 19810; Mooney, J., 15531-2; Shaw, M. A., 19334; Gaffney, P., 22527.

An isolation hospital for cases of suspected infectious disease should be in each county—Maynard, Dr. E., 132-3.

There is no hospital in Dublin except the workhouse infirmaries into which a sick person has the right to go—McWalter, Dr., 154.

District hospitals should be established, for treatment in which working people should be asked to pay only the bare cost of maintenance—McWalter, Dr., 154.

One hospital system for each county would raise the standard, and increase the efficiency of—Montagu, Lord, 526.

Should be completely separated from workhouses—Montagu, Lord, 526; Stoker, Sir William Thorneycroft, 522; Warcock, Dr., 1127-8, 1145-7; Darling, Dr., 6245; Agnew, Dr., 6335; St. George, Dr., 10539; O'Donnell, Dr., 10755; Lyons, Dr., 11354; Lawry, Dr., 12033. See also evidence of Curry, W., 12627; Gannon, F., 12559; Mooney, J., 12530; Clarke, T., 12530; McDonnell, J., 12534-5; Powell, Dr., 17122; Kenny, Dr. R. D., p. 599; Brown, S. J., 17433; Dugg, J. N., 17323; Meahan, P. A., 18049; Wandersford, R. H. P., 18229; Wallace, Dr., 22717; Courtenay, Dr., 25228-30; Guinness, Dr. W. A., 27530; O'Gorman, D. L., 28130.

Should be free from direct workhouse control, and each under a doctor, and a matron or superintendent who should be a fully trained nurse—Stoker, Sir William Thorneycroft, 523.

The existing number of should be increased—Reese, Miss, 536.

Patients in workhouse hospitals should not be compelled to wear the workhouse clothes—McWalter, Dr., 155; Laffan, Dr., 278; Ryan, Dr., 5553.

HOSPITALS—continued:

All hospitals in a county should be under the control of a Commission, who would have power to transfer nurses to places where their services were required—Warcock, Dr., 1127-34, 4635-7; Doherty, W., 3853.

For simple surgical and medical cases there are about eighty too many in Ireland. The majority of the counties could be amply served by one hospital of sixty or eighty beds, and a certain number of cottage hospitals in outlying districts (explain scheme)—Kidd, Dr. L., 1745, 6470.

The usefulness of workhouse hospitals could be increased by providing wards therein for private patients under the care of their own doctor—Hegarty, Dr. A., 3163-75.

If workhouses were abolished, the hospitals should be retained—O'Neill, J. B., 3015-7; McGee, Dr., 4198, 4212; Boyd, J., 32571. See also evidence of Andrews, T., 12125; Rogers, Rev. Canon, 12734; Sullivan, Dr., 13413-4; Curry, W., 12527; Sheridan, P., 12528; Gannon, F., 12550; Cullinan, Mrs., 12713; McNaboe, N., 14125; Murray, M., 14238; Keenan, P., 15051; Lawton, Very Rev. Dr., 15235; O'Neill, P. J., 15352; Wandersford, R. H. P., 18227; O'Ryan, Dr., 21149; Maguire, P., 22453-5; Louden, J. B., 22674-6; McNamara, Dr., 22820; Harrington, J. B., 25505; McMeekin, W., 25534; Murphy, Dr. D. J., 25530; Kelleher, D. C., p. 954; O'Dwyer, W., 25523-5.

Would be in favour of the Dublin County Council being enabled to make a contribution to all hospitals within their taxable area if it were believed that they were conferring a sufficient benefit on the sick poor—O'Neill, P. J., 15359-33.

The sick should get medical relief near where they live—Mooney, J., 15540.

Amounts contributed by the Denagel County Council to the Letterkenny Fever Hospital and the Ramoth Hospital—McFadden, R., 403-6.

The Ramoth Hospital does a great deal of good, and it would be a mistake to have it removed—Mooney, J., 4271-2.

Conditions of admission, &c., to the Shill Hospital at Ballyshannon—O'Connell, Dr., 4613-47.

It would be desirable to separate the present hospitals from the workhouses, and to turn the fever hospitals into workhouse hospitals—Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5531.

A perfect system of district hospitals in each county, with a good central county hospital for the treatment of surgical cases, is desirable in the interests of the poor—Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5544. See also evidence of Moorhead, Dr. G. A., 15376.

All hospitals should be under the control of the Asylum and Hospitals' Committee of the County Council—Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5525. See also evidence of Kidd, Dr. L., 6470; Darling, Dr., 6233; Agnew, Dr., 6332; Mooney, J., 12515-6; Brown, S. J., 17437; Copan, D. J., 18035-6; Butler, J., 21173.

The medical staff should have representation on the Managing Committees of—Powell, Dr., 17122-3; Foley, P., 24424.

Should be left under the control of the Guardians—Synnott, N. J., 17652; O'Grady, J. S., 17722; Meahan, P. A., 18049-1; Doherty, W., 18424.

The number of in Ireland should not be diminished—Ryan, Dr., 5540.

If separated from workhouses, hospitals would be enabled by a larger circle—Warcock, Dr., 1145-7; Turner, Dr., 3527. See also evidence of Doyle, M. E., 18240-1; Makery, T., 18435-6; Courtenay, Dr., 25229.

In view of the population, it would be advisable to have a hospital at Fethard—Fleming, J., 9240; Darling, Dr., 6335; Strong, Sir J. R., 5520; Wilson, W., 9332-3; Anderson, J., 9510; Odell, J., 9534-7.

A uniform service is necessary, which would take in all the hospitals in the country, beginning with cottage and small endowed hospitals, and grading up to large central hospitals, according to population and requirements—Darling, Dr., 6247-57.

HOSPITALS—continued:

- There should be a small hospital for cases of accident and sudden illness in each dispensary district—Clarke, J., 10493-3; Martin, M., 22670-1.
- Guardians should be empowered to pay for persons sent direct to external hospitals, without their passing through the workhouse—McHarg, J., 10637-26; Finlay, P. M., 12017.
- They should also be empowered to pay for the treatment of their sick in hospitals other than their own—McCann, Colonel, 11421.
- Many are deterred until too late from seeking necessary treatment in workhouse hospitals chiefly by a sentimental repugnance to a workhouse institution—Lyness, Dr., 11354.
- Convalescent departments, with associated sick wards, should be established in every infirmary—Lyness, Dr., 11357.
- Persons suffering from venereal diseases should not be treated in workhouse hospitals—Macintosh, Dr., 11184.
- Such persons should be detained in isolated wards until pronounced free from the disease—Macintosh, Dr., 11184; Lyness, Dr., 11357.
- Those suffering from alcoholism should be sent to general hospitals—Macintosh, Dr., 11184-5.
- It is very important to dislocate hospitals, which are solely for the treatment of the sick, from the Guardians and the workhouse—MacDonnell, Dr. H., 12861.
- The standard of accommodation in a county for hospital patients should be one bed for every 800 of the population—Swiftn, Dr., 12401.
- There ought to be one ambulance service available for an entire county—Swiftn, Dr., 12403.
- Acute cases in hospitals should be separated from the chronic—Powell, Dr., 17005-6.
- Patients when discharged from workhouse hospitals should be sent direct to their own homes, and not to the body of the house—Grimes, W. C., 17551.
- Would wish to see workhouse hospitals raised to the level of county infirmaries—Evans, M. A., 19635-6; Cavanagh, Dr., 26585, 26589.
- Should be in charge of a matron, with a staff of trained nurses, and a medical officer—Buller, J., 21173.
- The conversion of workhouses into district hospitals should be made compulsory—Laffan, Dr., 21704.
- Temporary movable hospitals should be kept by the Local Government Board to deal with epidemics—Edd, Dr. L., 2471; Finlay, Rev. J., 24389-91.
- Galway Hospital should be abolished—Corr, M., 24377; Byrne, T., 24393-25.
- It should be retained and made a county charge, and brought under the control of the County Council—MacDonnell, J. C., 24385-6.
- All existing workhouse hospitals should be retained, placed in charge of a matron, and attended by the dispensary medical officer—MacDonnell, J. C., 24390.
- System of management, &c. of Queenstown Hospital explained—French, S., 25477-80.
- (See also "COTTAGE HOSPITALS," "DISTRICT HOSPITALS," "INFIRMARIES—COUNTY," and "PATIENTS IN HOSPITALS AND INFIRMARIES.")

I.

IDLETS AND IDLENESS:

- Idlers who are capable should not be sent to an asylum at all, but to an institution where they could be taught trades, and means of assisting in carrying their own living—Norman, Dr. Canolly, 16131-2, 16138.
- Female-minded girls should be detained for life in some institution—Clark, Miss F. F., 11144-5.
- Harmless imbeciles should be kept in auxiliary lunatic asylums—Rosson, Miss, 582; Donovan, St. J. H., 5937.
- Ought not to be kept with lunatics—Flanagan, Dr. Norman, 5145; MacDonnell, W., 57705.
- Imbeciles should be kept in workhouse on account of their usefulness—Dwyer, J. D., 19323-6.
- There should be an institution for, for all Ireland—Cavanagh, Dr., 26586-92.
- (See also "EMERGENCY" and "LUNACY.")

ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN:—

- The Irish law as to the recovery of the cost of maintenance from putative fathers should be assimilated to the English Bastardy Law—Montague, Lord, 637; Bodden, W., 10347; Walker, W., 11035; MacArthur, D., 11801-3; O'Hare, W., 11266; Andrews, T., 12265-8; Evans, O., 15463-3; Donoghue, T. W., 15607; Murphy, J., 20248-9; Grubb, Miss R., 21505; Burke, D., 22613; O'Garra, D. L., 29114.
- Guardians should be empowered to have the children looked after in properly-equipped day nurseries, so that the mothers might obtain employment—Wheen, R. H., 11411.
- The law should be amended so as to enable the mother herself to proceed against the putative father of—Macdon, P. A., 18032.
- (See also "EPIDEMIOLOGY" and "LUNACY.")

ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN—MOTHERS OF:—

- In favour of sending girls, who are about to become mothers for the first time, to a penitentiary or reformatory, and paying for them out of the rates, instead of allowing them to enter the workhouse—Smith, Rev. J. Paterson, 618. See also evidence of Kennedy, C., 3294; Montague, H. de F., 3010-3; Corry, Vincent, 3350-2; Hall, Dr., 7434-6; *Smith, Rev. R. - Should be placed in a house where they could be looked after, and situations provided for them—Lyness, Dr., 11358-9.
- It would be desirable if the Local Government Board authorized the appointment of Ladies' Committees that could assist these women to obtain suitable employment—Wheen, R. H., 11411.
- In favour of sending them to a central institution—Lee, Rev. T., 27317.

INFORMALITIES—COUNTY:—

Should be on the same level, and under the same management as district hospitals—Smyth, Dr. J., 86.

Should be amalgamated with workhouse hospitals, and managed by small committees representative of the County and District Councils—Magennis, Dr. E., 128-30; Montague, Lord, 608.

The treatment of the sick should be unified so that cases requiring surgical treatment would be transferable from the district hospitals to the county infirmary, and the surgeon attached to the latter be available to assist at operations in the former—Thompson, Dr. E. G., 5667-72; Davis, M. A., 18645-7; MacDonnell, Dr., 22430-3; Faria, Dr., 24025; Donovan, St. J. H., 25659.

Major operations should be performed in—Wernock, Dr., 1135-10; M'Loughlin, Dr., 1383-8; Hall, Dr., 7623-4; Moorhead, Dr. G. A., 15752.

The necessary expenditure of should be defrayed out of the rates—Thompson, Dr. E. G., 5613; MacDonnell, Dr. H., 13317-8; O'Loughlin, Dr., 24028; Faria, Dr., 24025; Shaw, A. W., 26140-51.

A County Council should be empowered to pay for patients sent to the infirmary of another county—McGuire, T., 8525-6; St. George, Dr., 10651-2; Hughes, E. P., 18389-90; O'Meara, Dr., 16003; Fitzgibbon, J., 22079; Maguire, P., 22560-60.

County Councils should be empowered to spend on infirmaries as much as they thought was absolutely necessary—St. George, Dr., 10655; MacDonnell, Dr., 22477; Brennan, H., 22511; Broadshaw, Dr., 22514.

Placing the whole expense of on the rates would tend to stop private contributions—Crawford S., 12251-4.

Should be under the inspection and control of the Local Government Board—Sullivan, Dr., 13391.

Every medical officer and clergyman should have power to issue tickets for—Ronan, M., 14522.

It is an injustice to places that do not send patients to infirmaries to be obliged to contribute to the maintenance of—Ryan, Dr., 8541; Shell, D., 15534; Brown, S. J., 17458, 17617.

Are the proper places for carrying out operations—Moorhead, Dr. G. A., 15752; Neenan, Dr. G., 22510.

Are needed in addition to district hospitals—Meenan, P. A., 18643.

Qualifications necessary for appointments to the positions of surgeon, matron, and nurses in, see forth—MacDonnell, Dr., 22478-9.

The area around the infirmary should be constituted the maintaining area—Wright, C. C. R., 22500-3.

Should continue to be a county charge—Donovan, St. J. H., 25635.

The Kerry County Council think it unfair that the entire county should contribute to the expenses of the county infirmary and fever hospital at Tralee, and the fever hospital at Killarney—McCarthy, D. M., 25681. See also evidence of Sullivan, Dr. J., 22077; Sheehan, J. J., 27150.

(See also "COTTAGE HOSPITALS," "DISTRICT HOSPITALS," "HOSPITALS," and "PAYING PATIENTS IN HOSPITALS AND INFIRMARIES.")

INFORMANTS:—

There should be a Lady Inspector of Workhouses under the Local Government Board—Ronan, C., 15445; O'Connell, Mrs. M., 18707-805; MacDonnell, J., 16913-43; Fitzgibbon, Miss, p. 593.

There is no necessity for making such an appointment—O'Connell, W. C., 17512.

An Inspector should be appointed to supervise the granting of outdoor relief—Donovan, Mrs., 22079; Lincoln, T., 22633-3; Lane, J., 22713.

L.

LABOUR BUREAU:—

It would be advisable to have a central one in Belfast, where an inspector could receive applications from employers from the city and surrounding districts for unskilled workmen—Wilson, R. H., 11430.

LABOUR BUREAU—continued:—

A register should be kept either at the police barracks or the workhouses of places where labour is required, and tramps should be forced to go there and work—M'Graith, H., 12402.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD:—

The attitude which it takes up towards Boards of Guardians needs change—Ronan M., 14525-519. There ought to be popular representation on the—Sheehan, W., 17327.

LUNATICS:—

Should not be kept in workhouses, but sent to asylums—*Wernock, Dr., 1137; Long, J. A., 1206-10; Gregg, J., 1253; Boyd, J. Lunatics should be treated in the district asylums rather than in an auxiliary—McGuire, Colonel, p. 382. See also evidence of Martin, Dr., 1123; Andrews, T., 12226; Howard, Col., 13092; Heaton, P., 13337; Many, Lieut.-Genl., 21308; Healy, D. J., 27162-3.

Is not in favour of transferring all lunatics to district asylums, where extravagant notions prevail—McCarthy, J., 16553.

The harmless should be kept in workhouses, but Guardians should get the capitation grant for their maintenance, and be compelled to make better provision for them—Orr, J., 9531, 9574; Stronge, Sir J. H., 3051. See also evidence of Byrne, J., 15565, 15567.

Lunatics could not be put in a worse place than with the aged and infirm in a Poor Law hospital—MacDonnell, Dr. H., 12326.

The system of sending destitute persons of unsound mind to workhouses, without either legal warrant or commitment, should be changed—Bever, Col., 13064.

LUNATICS.—continued.

The Irish people would not favour the idea of boarding out—O'Neill, P. J., 15426-7.

The class called "chronic harmless lunatics" is extremely limited, as apparently harmless individuals will sometimes develop dangerous tendencies, and chronic cases are often liable to sudden outbreaks—Nolan, Dr. M. J., 15076, 15081.

The continental method of boarding out could not be introduced into this country with the same measure of success, but there is no reason why it should not be legalised for experimental adoption—Nolan, Dr. M. J., 15076.

Is in favour of the adoption of the boarding out system if administered under careful supervision—Norman, Dr. Conolly, 15125-8. See also evidence of Brown, S. J., 17414; Bonies, P., 16794; Gaffney, P., 23586; Hagan, P., 25414; O'Dwyer, W. W., 25477; Lee, Rev. T., 27295-300.

Opposed to boarding-out—Swyth, L., 3215-8; McLeish, Dr., 11373; O'Farrell, A. K., 16326; Synnott, N. J., 17694.

The maximum number of lunatics that should be in an asylum is 1,000—Norman, Dr. Conolly, 15159.

There is great need to have the mental condition of the women classed as healthy paupers in workhouses inquired into—Lagar, Dr., 15192.

Lunatics should be a National charge—Ronan, C., 16447.

The harmless should be treated in separate institutions, with a largely diminished staff, from the violent—Horriple, T. C., 16477.

A disused workhouse should be set apart for the harmless of two or three counties—Dinnage, T. W., 16532.

Suggests emasculation as a remedy—Thompson, Dr. Norman, 15136-10.

The harmless should be treated in separate asylums, which should get the full capitation grant—Cogan, D. J., 19377-81.

There would be no financial gain in transferring the harmless from workhouses to auxiliary asylums—Moriarty, D. M., 22843-508.

It would be cheaper to send cases to the central asylum, and board out others, than to provide an auxiliary asylum—Lee, Rev. T., 27393-6.

The labour energy of the acute insane and of imbeciles is quite different; and it would be hopeless to attempt to teach trades to chronic lunatics and imbeciles—Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23453, 23455.

Crazies and dangerous cases ought to be kept in the principal asylum, but the chronic and quiet should be transferred to auxiliaries—Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23451; Gorry, Vincent, 5945.

Chronic cases in good physical health, and not too old, might be as transferred with a certain degree of safety, but in removing them you take away those who do a good deal of the work of the asylums—Norman, Dr. Conolly, 15132.

(See also "EPILEPTIC," and "IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.")

LUNATIC ASYLUMS:—

Disused workhouses could be used as auxiliary asylums—Montague, Lord, 600. See also evidence of Linden, H. R., 5274; Swyth, J., 5430; Ryan, Dr., 8559; Johnston, R. H., 8547; Orr, J., 1652; McConne, Colonel, 11325; Carpenter, T., 15465; Gorry, W., 15427; McLaughlin, J., 23128-5; Galloway, R., 23125, 23126; McGuire, P., 23524; Hagan, P. J., 24703; Connelley, M., 25004-5; O'Dwyer, W. W., 25479; Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23451.

There should be an auxiliary asylum for harmless imbeciles in each county—Ronan, Mfr., 682.

The capitation grant should be the same for auxiliary as for principal asylums—McGovern, P., 2405-7; Johnston, R. H., 8565; Gorman, P., 12985; Brown, S. J., 17415; Cogan, D. J., 19779; Keogh, M. A., 19435; Gaffney, P., 23590; Wallace, R., 23712; Shanley, J., 23819; O'Kelly, C., 23538-44; Jennings, P., 23703; Hagan, P. J., 24801.

The contrary view held—McGuire, P., 23535-7; Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23536-7.

LUNATIC ASYLUMS.—continued.

The capitation grant of 2s. to auxiliary asylums is utterly inadequate to provide for the necessary care and maintenance of the pauper insane—Nolan, Dr. M. J., 15076.

It would be a grave error to institute independent auxiliaries which would not be departments of existing asylums—Noise, Dr. M. J., 15075.

Independent auxiliaries would not be a success either medically or financially—Nolan, Dr. M. J., 15075; Norman, Dr. Conolly, 15129-30.

The county district asylum should be constituted so as to embrace all classes of the insane—Nolan, Dr. M. J., 15076.

In favour of building annexes to the present asylums, rather than providing auxiliary asylums, for the accommodation of additional patients—McLeish, Dr., 11373; Thomson, J. M., 11522; Sheridan, P., 12522; Lynch, M., 23320-9; Harding, W., 23556; McInerney, J., 23893-91.

In favour of extending the auxiliary system—Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23452.

Compulsory power should be given to take lead for the purposes of asylums—Hagan, P. J., 24710.

System pursued in establishing the Youghal Auxiliary Asylum explained—Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23451-51.

The ideas and traditions of existing asylums if allowed to enter into auxiliaries would prevent their being worked as they ought, which should be more on the home than on the asylum principle—Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23454-5.

The way in which the Youghal auxiliary is managed saves the Local Taxation Account £2,000, and the county rates £1,200, per year—Kelly, Most Rev. Dr., 23454.

M.

MEDICAL OFFICERS:—

Of the dispensary district should have medical care of the workhouse after being separated from the hospital—Stoker, Sir Wm. Thornley, 525. There should be a county medical officer of health for each county in Ireland, as in England—Owen, Dr. F. J., 27661.

MENSAI (POOR LAW) SERVICE:—

Should be converted into a State service—Warwick, Dr., 1127.

Admission to should be by examination, and promotion by professional ability—Thompson, Dr., E. C., 5552-7, 5726.

(See also "CERTIFICATES—APPOINTMENT OR.")

N.

NURSES—TRAINING AND QUALIFICATION OF:

Any nurse called a trained, certificated nurse ought to have the fever qualifications—Maguire, Dr. Katherine, 530.

Every nurse should be both "qualified" and "trained," and should be trained in all the branches of her profession—Stoker, Sir Wm. Thornley, 521, 537-50.

Superintendents, or fully-trained nurses, should serve about a year in a clinical hospital—Stoker, Sir Wm. Thornley, 545.

It would be desirable to have an Advisory Board associated with the Local Government Board, whose duty it would be to consider the qualifications and fitness of nurses for appointments—Stoker, Sir Wm. Thornley, 547.

The central surgical hospital should be the training school for the nurses of the district hospitals—Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5553.

Every nurse employed in a rate-supported hospital should have a midwifery training, especially if district nursing is to be developed—Kidd, Dr. L., 5470.

System of training in Waterford Workhouse Hospital and County Infirmary explained—Thomson, Mfr., 20989-21054.

NURSING—INDOOR:

The skill of trained nurses is wasted by making them night nurses in hospitals largely occupied by chronic cases, and it is not necessary that all nurses in a hospital should be trained—Mooney, J., 15947-8.

Is strongly in favour of nursing being carried out by nurses—Mooney, J., 15947.

Is opposed to nursing being carried out by nurses—Daly, M. C., 23976-3.

Pauper inmate helpers should not be in hospital wards under any conditions—Power, Dr., 17082; O'Donnell, W. C., 17263.

No hospital can be carried on without a male nurse—Laffan, Dr., 21719.

NURSING—OUTDOOR:

In favour of the extension of the system of district nursing—Montague, Lord, 509-10; Gregg, J., 1339-8; Brown, W., 1674-5; Thompson, Dr. R. C., 3941; Hall, Dr., 7374-6; Dolan, J., 12678; Reverend, Colonel, 12673-4; Sheridan, F., 13303; Kenny, Dr. J. M., 8, 13353; Moss, Acad., Dr. G. A., 15787-8; Stepford, Lord, 16834; Hogan, P. J., 24938-9; Faria, Dr., 24994; Mooney, Dr., 27384-6.

NURSING—GENERALLY:

Would favour a nursing scheme for the various centres, under which nurses could be trained at a central hospital, and be under the control of a central body, who could transfer them from place to place according as their services were required—Warrack, Dr., 1131-4. See also evidence of Kidd, Dr. L., 1739, 5670; Deherly, W., 3033; Gunning-Moore, J. B., 5332-4; Sullivan, Dr., 13392-3; Mooney, J., 16018-9; Kent, M. A., 16648-3; Walsh, P., 20333-3; O'Byrne, Dr., 21155-9; Grubb, Miss N., 21590; McDonald, Dr., 23499; O'Loughlin, Dr., 24528-7; Faria, Dr., 24615-7; Shaw, A. W., 26523-3; Donovan, St. J. H., 29623.

It is worthy of consideration whether Boards of Guardians should be empowered to subsidise charitable bodies who supply district nurses to the sick poor—Lynan, Dr., 11389-60.

O.

OUTDOOR—APPOINTMENT OF:

Admission to the Poor Law Medical Service should be by examination, and promotion by professional ability—Thompson, Dr. R. C., 5623-7, 5735.

Appointments should be by examination—McCarthy, T., 15929-32.

Appointments should be in the hands of the Local Government Board—Casgrove, Mrs. McDonald, 16761.

Unions should be classified, so that an officer might be transferred from one to the other, and be afforded an opportunity of rising from the lowest to the highest position—O'Connell, D., 18405.

A minimum and maximum salary should be fixed for officers on appointment, the latter to be reached by quinquennial increments—O'Connell, D., 18503. See also evidence of O'Loughlin, Dr., 24827-8.

Appointments should be made by ballot—Foley, P., 26475.

See also evidence of Clarke, J., 22855-7; Burke, P., 25769-70.

OLD-AGE PENSIONERS:

In favour of the granting of in certain cases—Brown, Miss, 563; Walker, W., 11023; Cramer, J., 17152-9; Sheridan, W., 17361.

OUTDOOR RELIEF:

Could be given to some workhouse inmates at a saving to the ratepayers, but rates of 1s. and 1s. 6d. weekly are inadequate, and invite to begging—Brown, Miss, 560-1.

Should be given to convalescents after discharge from hospital—Brown, Miss, 561.

Should be given more generously to the sick than at present—Brown, Miss, 763.

The administration of relief to be decentralised rather than further centralised—Montgomery, H. Dr. L., 4891.

In favour of increasing the Guardians' powers with regard to the granting of—Bodgers, M., 5855-89; Crumley, P., 5939. See also evidence of Macdonald, Dr., 10335; Walker, W., 11354; Ball, Dr., 11363; 12045; McGrath, M., 13311-3; Dolan, J., 13377; O'Meara, M., P., 595; McCarthy, J., 13385; O'Neill, P., 15822; Clarke, T., 16206-17; Owen, D. J., 19312-3; Hooley, M., 20746-9; Cellery, R., 22325; MacDonnell, J. C., 24558.

Guardians should be empowered to grant to a widow with one child—O'Neill, P. J., 15822-3; Boney, R., 16330; Clarke, T., 16354; McDonnell, J., 16849; Candran, D., 19669; *Byrne, E. Granting to single persons results eventually in the employment of nurses to take care of them—Gunning-Moore, J. B., 5316; Howard, Major, 5491.

Should be given only on the report of the dispensary medical officer—Kearran, P., 7564-71.

Is the most extravagant and demoralising manner in which the poor can be helped—Hugh, Dr., 8340.

Is given in Londonderry Union only when a doctor certifies that a patient is unable to be removed to hospital—Fury, W. L., 906.

Is far more economical, if judiciously administered, than indoor maintenance—Hooley, D. J., 27156.

The recipients of should not be disfranchised—Crumley, P., 5939.

Guardians should be empowered to grant to mothers of legitimate children who have been deserted by their husbands—McArthur, D., 11185.

Poverty and not destitution should be the test of qualification for—McConnell, G. B., 11792; McGrath, H., 12309; Marney, M., 18820; Murphy, J., 23910-1.

The converse view held—O'Donnell, W. C., 17322. Should be given in cases of disablement—Dolan, J., 12554.

It should be left discretionary with Guardians to grant to those who have more than a quarter of an acre of land—Halligan, T., 13336-44; Owen, C., 13372-81; Corcoran, T., 13422; McGee, Mrs., 13723; Griffith, M., 14377; Gargy, P., 14561; Boney, R., 14855; Byrne, M., 15401; Byrne, E. H., 29041; Lonfield, B. A., 33342; Fitzgerald, W., 29410-3.

Should be only granted provisionally to occupants of labourers' cottages—Bolger, T., 12072. 25 maximum limit of valuation should disqualify for—Fitzgerald, J. J., 29425; Bracken-Crough, L., 29405; Fitzgerald, E., 29433-4.

The present quarter-acre limit is fair—Hewitt, T., 12759.

It would be necessary if unions were dissolved to restore Dispensary Committees for the purpose of granting—Brown, C., 16423-4.

Would give Guardians more discretion to grant in cases of temporary distress—McArthur, D., 11185; Byrne, J., 16330; Harrington, T. C., 16572; McWalter, Dr., 18738; McGough, E., 17137; Harrington, J. B., 23355-66; O'Keefe, J., 23280-1; Murphy, J., 23909; Fitzgerald, J. J., 29403-4.

Would not grant to people who say they cannot get work, or to families deserted by their fathers, or whose fathers are in prison—Crimmins, W. O., 17374.

OUTDOOR RELIEF—continued:

To augment the income of the needy, as distinguished from the destitute, by means of, at the cost of a class similarly circumstanced, would be discouraging efforts—Oriniana, W. C., 17774.

Unless diminished as much as possible, expenditure cannot be controlled—Symcott, N. J., 17679.

The workhouse test should be maintained—Symcott, N. J., 17679; Field, E., 17791; Healy, D. J., 77158.

Should be granted to the aged and infirm who are suitably housed—Dogg, J. R., 17302.

Relief Committees appointed by Guardians for the granting of in each dispensary district would be an improvement on the present system—Evans, M. A., 19335; Boiger, T., 19935; Hefferman, P., 21337; O'Malley, P. J., 24257; Roberts, T. B., 24086-9.

Should be granted to all aged and infirm inmates of workhouses—Butler, J., 21175.

Should be given in kind—Harding, W., 25358; Hogan, J., 25453; O'Dwyer, W. W., 25464; Foley, P., 26429; Donovan, Miss., 26703; Fitzgerald, J., 26565; Linsden, T., 26566; O'Leary, J., 26445.

Opposed to the giving of in kind—Harley, T., 25598; McCarthy, D., 25627; Barrington, J. B., 25848-54; McGuire, W., 25791; Duggan, J., 26744.

In favour of the granting of in kind when the recipients are addicted to drink—Fitzgerald, A., 26429.

Should not be given at all to persons addicted to drink—Barrington, J. B., 25845-7; O'Garra, D. L., 26097.

Power should be given to grant to a widower with a young family—Foley, P., 25452-4.

And to orphan children who had some relative to take charge of them—Linsden, T., 26562.

An Inspector should be appointed to supervise the granting of—Donovan, Miss., 26709; Linsden, T., 26569; Loas, J., 26715.

See to advantage in making such an appointment—Burke, D., 26940-1.

OUTDOOR RELIEF—CHARGEABILITY OF:

In favour of divisional chargeability—Montague, Lord., 620; Adams, T. B., 769; Grigg, J., 1221-37; O'Neill, J. E., 3564-6; Watters, S., 3558; Dearty, W., 3584; Colgan, M., 4253; Corry, P., 6069-50; Byrne, Dr., 6593; McCona, R., 6790; Montague, S., 6970-1; McCree, J. J., 27105; O'Brien, J., 27621; O'Dwyer, W. W., 28202.

In favour of dispensary district chargeability—Montgomery, H. De F., 4661, 5284-5; Gunning-Moore, J. B., 5247-8; Pope, P. A., 22155; Walsh, P., 20429-33; Hefferman, T., 21338; Delany, H., 21335; Stanley, J., 22254; Jones, R., 22915.

In favour of union chargeability—Looby, S., 1778; Maguire, M., 4354; Gannon, P., 12555;

Moore, A., 19044; Meekon, P. A., 19333; Boiger, T., 19960; Neary, J., 23566; Doris, W., 23334; Laraine, A. C., 23555; Sheehan, J. J., 27148; Stee, D., 27124; Corry, P., 27209; Morgan, D., 28119; Forrest, J. E., 28159; Fitzgerald, J. J., 28430; Fitzgerald, E., 28425.

A limit should be fixed to the amount to be spent, under union chargeability, in each division, and any excess should be charged to the division—Evans, M. A., 19317-8; Walsh, P., 20453-4; Moore, Lieut-General., 21338; Fitzgerald, J. J., 21374; Gannon, P., 21308; Burke, T., 22361-73; Foley, P., 25452-41; Linsden, T., 26536-42; Coster, W., 27551.

Such an arrangement would complicate financial matters—Forrest, J. E., 28158.

Would give to the Local Government Act, 1908—Higgins, W., 26022.

Towns should pay the entire cost of the relief given therein—Quinn, C., 13384; Maguire, P., 25559; Wallace, R., 22722; Gaffney, P., 22776.

Would make two-thirds a county and one-third a dispensary district charge—O'Malley, P. J., 24257.

Would make three-fourths divisional and one-fourth union—Moore, M., 26343.

J.*, 23525; Jennings, J., 23757; Hogan, J., 25455; Montague, Lady., 26094.

Having separate wards would induce persons to enter workhouse hospitals who would not do so under present circumstances—Smith, L., 3224; McElderry, T., 10197-8.

Those who desire separate wards should pay the entire cost of maintenance—Byrne, Dr., 6593.

Those who can do so should pay the full cost of treatment, and their payments should also cover the remuneration of the medical officers—Smith, L., 3224.

Persons who are not destitute should contribute in proportion to their means—Sicker, Sir Wm. Thomas., 625; McEoy, J., 11929; Parker, J. K., 11979; Andrews, Thos., 12225; Corry, W., 12227; Marple, J. J., 12545.

Every person should pay something in a rate-aided hospital—Kidd, Dr. L., 1780-2.

Persons suffering from infectious diseases should not be charged unless they wished to pay—Byrne, Dr., 6593.

It would be desirable to introduce the system of payment—Strogo, Sir J. H., 9569; Byrne, T., 10541; St. George, Dr., 10530; Gill, J., 10585; Hall, Dr., 11338; Stuart, P., 19435; Webb, C. C. G., 21252; Fitzgibbon, J., 22264.

For law authorities ought not to be called upon at all to provide for persons able to pay—Byrne, Dr., 6593.

Those suffering from alcoholism should be charged above the average cost of maintenance—Ignace, Dr., 13354.

Would establish two scales of payment—a minimum for general wards, and a maximum for private wards—Sullivan, Dr. F. W., 13395-6.

Treatment in fever hospitals should be free, in order to encourage patients to enter, and so protect the public—Kidd, Dr. L., 5471; Sullivan, Dr. F. W., 13394.

If there were hospitals where people of moderate means could be treated for a small sum, several lives would be saved, which are now lost through inability to pay for medical attendance—White, Rev. H. W., 14122.

PAYING PATIENTS IN HOSPITALS AND INFIRMARIES—continued:

Patients from other counties should pay for treatment in county infirmaries—Flynn, P., 25770. It is desirable that a person should pay something, and not feel that he is taking charity—Cooke, Dr., 1561; Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5729.

On an average occupation of thirty-eight beds, £300 a year can be collected from the patients in County Fermanagh Infirmary without entailing the smallest hardship on them—Kidd, Dr. L., 1793-6, 6470.

In favour of leaving it discretionary with the governing body to fix the charge for—*Warnock, Dr., 1148-51; Long, J. A., 1203; Smyth, L., 2228-9; Larkin, J. G., 3251; Walters, R., 3510; Maguire, M., 4364; Gunning-Moore, J. B., 6395; Lindsay, H. B., 6537; Fleming, J., 9053; Darling, Dr., 9239; McCann, J. S. P., 7730; Fawc, C. SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES:—

Consumptives not sufficiently bad to go to hospital should be under inspection, and obliged to report themselves to trained inspectors, in order that they might receive instruction as to how they could diminish the risk of spreading the disease—Kidd, Dr. L., 1777.

Closed workhouses in favorable localities might be converted into—Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5712; Corbridge, W., 5855; Conroy, W. R., 6961; Hall, Dr., 7433; McElderry, T., 10166; Boyd, J., 10269; Johnston, J., 11600; Fitzgibbon, J., 22240; Judge, P. W., 22820; Conway, Rev. W., 24154; Colahan, Dr., 24545; Connelley, M., 25015; Lindsay, T., 27746; Kelly, J. H., 30050-2.

Disputed workhouses are unsuitable as—O'Connell, Dr., 10794; Thompson, J. M., 11533.

There is no workhouse in Ireland, as at present constructed, suitable for the reception of consumptives—MacDonnell, Dr. E., 12933.

Groups of counties should combine and provide—Warnock, Dr., 1144, 4261; Kidd, Dr. L., 1778, 6471; Hearty, Dr., 3163-4; Darling, Dr., 9217; Fitzgibbon, Lady M., 20286; Collier, B., 23277; Hogan, P. J., 24715.

To equalize expenditure they should be placed in counties not having a lunatic asylum—Kidd, Dr. L., 6471.

Workhouse hospitals are unsuitable for the treatment of consumption—Warnock, Dr., 1144; Kidd, Dr. L., 1778. See also evidence of Smith, J. F., 9337; Hall, Dr., 11334; Lyness, Dr., 11354; Wilson, R. H., 11461; Fawc, Dr., 17061-2; O'Neill, Dr., 17867.

Consumption should be made compulsory notifiable, so as to diminish the risk of spreading—Kidd, Dr. L., 1777, 6468. See also evidence of Moorehead, Dr. T. H., 8385; McArthur, Dr., 11216; Hall, Dr., 11350; Lyness, Dr., 11354; Lavery, Dr., 13043; Moorehead, Dr. G. A., 15748; Powell, Dr., 17063-6; Colahan, Dr., 24528; Ferris, Dr., 24974; O'Brien, Dr. P. J., 25961.

Unless persons suffering from consumption are isolated the disease will spread—Thompson, Dr. E. C., 5712; McDonnell, Rev. M., 22734-9; O'Connell, Dr., 25054-8; Lee, Rev. T., 27320-1. History of, and the details of treatment in, the workhouse sanatorium at Coochill—Moorehead, Dr. T. H., 8341-75.

A sanatorium should be local at first, and when the people get accustomed to it larger institutions might be established throughout the country—Moorehead, Dr. T. H., 8343.

Dispensary doctors should have the means of having the sputum of consumptive patients examined in the early stages—Moorehead, Dr. T. H., 8361.

The removal to a special hospital of consumptives chargeable to the rates should be compulsory, subject to the opinion of the medical officer as to their fitness for removal—Callaghan, W., 5855.

A large number of consumptives could be treated in local hospitals if isolation wards were provided—Darling, Dr., 9228. See also evidence of Lee, Rev. T., 27322-25; O'Connor, J., 27730.

Each county should have its own sanatorium, which should be under the control of the County Council—Agnew, Dr., 6236-7. See also evidence of Smyth, Dr. B., 11525-4; Russell, Dr., 25108; Ferris, Dr., 24974; Connelley, Dr., 25029.

Would compel consumptives to go to a sanatorium if they cannot carry out the open-air treatment in their own homes—Lavery, Dr., 13043-4.

PENITENTIARIES:—

A suitable institution for could be erected by the military authorities on the grounds of some disused workhouse—MacDonnell, Dr., 12932.

Guardians should be empowered to charge those who enter the workhouse something more than the actual cost of maintenance—MacArthur, Dr., 11211-2.

The system of permitting penitentiaries to stay in the workhouse and charging them only the actual cost of food and clothing is most objectionable—Wilson, R. H., 11406.

Should be lodged in a hostel under military or civil control, in which food, &c., might be given to them at costless prices—Wilson, R. H., 11406.

Might be boarded out by the Guardians, the cost being deducted from their pensions—McCann, Colonel, 11431.

Should not be admitted to workhouses on payment, as the fact of their being able to pay is proof that they are not fit subjects for admission—O'Gorman, Dr. L. p. 970.

PENITENTS (See "SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES.")

SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES.—continued.

Those who would pay whatever they could afford should be admitted to—Johnston, J., 11632-3. Consumption is contagious, curable, and preventable—Kidd, Dr. L., 1777; Moorehead, Dr. G. A., 15733-4. See also evidence of Crawford, Dr., 26067-8; MacNamara, Dr., 25826.

Statistics seem to show that sanatorium treatment has been successful—Moorehead, Dr. G. A., 15733. It would be an immense saving to the rates if sanatoria were established for the poor and destitute—Moorehead, Dr. G. A., 15733.

Local bodies should be empowered to pay for patients in if established in counties—O'Neill, P. J., 15615-7.

Are very urgently required in the country—Clarke, T., 15217; McDonnell, J., 15658; O'Neill, Dr., 17668; O'Meara, Dr., 19039; Colgan, Dr., 16648; Thompson, Dr., Norman, 16165-71; Shaw, A. W., 26032.

Should be subsidised by Government—Lacey, Dr., 12660; O'Grady, J. S., 17793; Flavin, M. J., 26371-2; Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27687; O'Callaghan, D., 27741.

Results of treatment in sanatoria set forth—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27689-8; Smyth, Dr. J. C., 27646.

The mortality from phthisis in Cork City increased from 35 to 45 per 10,000 between the years 1821 and 1894, and is the highest in Great Britain—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27625, 27632.

It is estimated that there are 5,000 consumptives, two-thirds of whom belong to the working class, in the county and city of Cork—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27633.

Returned emigrants spread consumption—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27633-4; Burke, D., 26947-52.

Ventilation of schools, and proper sanitary accommodation in connexion therewith, are necessary to prevent the spread of consumption—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27636-9.

Would limit treatment in sanatoria to cases in the early stage, and a very large percentage of cases if taken at that stage would recover—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27642-3.

A curative sanatorium should be a county-at-large charge—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27631.

Should be managed by Committees of the County Councils, with members added—O'Neill, P. J., 15919; Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27639-42.

Details of treatment in, the results of which are most encouraging—Smyth, Dr. J. C., 27614-26, 27628-35.

Surgical cases of tuberculosis might be treated with the early stage cases of phthisis—Smyth, Dr. J. C., 27641.

Are very necessary for cases which are curable, or might become stationary under treatment—Cremen, Dr. P. J., 27660.

Details of estimated cost of providing a sanatorium—Corby, Dr., 26391-433.

Places where sanatoria are stated to be required:—Co. Antrim, St. George, Dr., 16634. Connought (for the province), Fitzgerald, J., 22659; Daly, J., 25872. Co. Cork, *Cremen, Dr. P. Guardians should have the same power to deport paupers as in England and Scotland—McCance, Colonel, 11237; MacDonnell, Dr. H., 15944; O'Neill, J., 15235-6; Crawley, J., 17125; O'Grady, J. S., 17784.

SETTLEMENT.—continued.

Dublin suffers from the absence of a law of settlement for Ireland—Baron, C., 16446; Harrington, T. C., 16480; Deasey, T. W., 16603; Orlowski, W. O., 17706.

Would not send young mothers of illegitimate children to the places whence they came—Orlowski, W. O., 17702.

NOTE.—(See "HOSPITALS," and "AREA OF CHARGE FOR EMPLOYMENT.")

T.

TRAFFIC:—

Should be dealt with on reformatory lines, altogether apart from other paupers—Montague, Lord, 610; Porter, J. E., 11980; Goffey, F., 22777-8.

Vagrants and casuals or inn-and-outs should be deprived of the custody of their children, who should be adopted by the Guardians—Montague, Lord, 617; Johnston, E. H., 8546. (See also "Children.")

The Casual Poor Act, 1882, should be extended to Ireland—Adams, T. B., 732; McLoughlin, Dr., 1376; O'Neill, J. E., 3382; McNelis, M., 3362; McGovern, T., 8412. T.*, 27293; O'Keefe, J., 27375; Jordan, Miss, 28230; Fitzgerald, J., 28318-9; Lincoln, T., 28608; O'Leary, W., 28708; O'Connor, B., 28702; O'Mahony, P., 29512; O'Dwyer, W. W., 29299; Longfield, E. E., 29536; O'Leary, J., 29552.

Militiamen about to join their regiments should be allowed to leave their wives and children in the workhouse while absent, and men really seeking employment should be allowed to do so temporarily—Wilson, R. M., 11418-9.

Militiamen should be treated as criminals—McCune, Colend., 11436.

A register should be kept either by the police or at the workhouses, of places where labour is required, and tramps should be forced to go there and work—McGrath, H., 12403.

Provision should be made for those honestly seeking work—Ford, Rev. Canon, 11778; Hewitt, T., 12095; Ennis, M. A., 19863; Ryan, D., 20330. Magistrates should be empowered to deal with judicially without their being summoned to Petty Sessions—Montague, Lord, 610; MacDonnell, Dr. H., 12630.

Would be fewer if the militia and army short-service systems were abolished—Ford, L., 12202. See also evidence of Halligan, T., 13226; Vaughan, J. S., 14364; O'Donnell, D., 16473-9; Realy, M., 20764; Hibbert, T. B., 24533.

The majority of being militia or army-reserve men, the number would be lessened by changing the period of training from summer to winter—Vaughan, J. S., 14364.

Should be registered—O'Farrell, A. K., 16323; Field, J., 16492-1; O'Rourke, W. C., 17302; Brown, S. J., 17486.

Should be an Imperial charge, as the greater number are militiamen—Field, J., 16552.

Should be sent to the unions whence they came—Walsh, P., 20423.

There are a good number of beggars, old men and women, who do not enter workhouses, but are willingly given assistance by their neighbours, and who need not be taken into consideration when dealing with the ordinary able-bodied tramps—Murphy, N. J., 18532-5; O'Neill, M., 18565-601; Thompson, Dr. Norman, 19141-2. (See also "CASTLES.")

WORKHOUSE INMATES.—(AGED AND INFIRM).—

Should not be kept in workhouses, but should be registered and given provisional relief until they obtained employment—Montague, Dr. E., 119-120. See also evidence of Kenny, Dr. E. D., 17391; Coyne, D. J., 19274.

A number of unions should combine for the purpose of relieving outside the workhouse—Wilson, R. H., 11262.

More stringent regulations should be framed for the admission, detention, and discharge of—Shaw, T. J., 14584.

Farm colonies should be established where they should be sent for a stated period—Walker, W., 11028-9.

If paid for their labour, and the cost of maintenance deducted, it would encourage them to work, and fit them for outside employment—O'Rourke, W. C., 17394.

Should be compelled to work—Sheridan, W., 17353.

Guardians should be empowered to hire out the deserving, and give them their earnings, so as to give them a fresh start in life—Doyle, J. R., 12345.

Militia and army-reserve men should be compelled to pay for their maintenance—Lincoln, T., 28642.

WORKHOUSE INMATES (AGED AND INFIRM).—

There should be national hospitals for—Smyth, Rev. J., Peterson, 515.

Should be treated separately in institutions of the poorhouse, as distinguished from the workhouse type—Montague, Lord, 610.

Are not suitable for boarding out, or for outdoor relief—O'Neill, J. E., 3018-25.

Those who are under the doctor's care should be provided for in a cottage hospital—Burke, H., 5203.

It would be desirable to have one institution in each county for all capable of being transferred thereto—Worlock, Dr., 4341-2, 4345; Burke, H., 5220; Wilson, Rev. Canon, 9205; McGovern, T., 9410, 9490. See also evidence of Dagg, J. R., 17900; Brown, S. J., 17533-5; Meahan, P. A., 18313; Phelan, O., 18122; Finnan, T., 18310; O'Neill, M., 18505; Ennis, M. A., 19535-9; Doyle, M., 20672; O'Gorman, P., 20584; Hayes, *P. It would be a hardship to transfer them to a central institution—O'Neill, J. E., 3018; Wilson, G. B., 10950; Meekier, E., 10987; Shaw, D., 15543; Mooney, J., 15940; Wunderserde, R. H. P., 16221; Byrne, M., 19400; Thorne, W., 20003; Fitzgerald, Lady M., 20193-5; Hyland, D., 20670-1. See also evidence of Symant, N. J., 17540; O'Donoghue, P., 19165; Lee, Rev. T., 27292, 27313; McDonald, W., 27768-808; Jones, B., 27875-8; O'Brien, J., 27945; O'Brien, Jan., 27965; Cleary, R., 28264; Harrington, D. B., 28370; O'Mahony, P., 29150-4; Sullivan, J. D., 29229; Ockerry, J. J., 29247.

WORKHOUSE INMATES (AGED AND INFIRM).—continued.

The fact of their having to go a distance to a central institution would prevent them from going, and cause an increase in outdoor relief—Greasing-Moore, J. B., 2537-8; Andrew, T., 12206; O'Brien, J., 27335.

Having to go a distance to a central institution might induce their relatives to support them at home—Burke, D., 28333.

Would keep the respectable in their own locality, but send the underclass to a central institution—Crowley, P., 23353-4. See also evidence of O'Garra, D. L., 25102-3.

Guardians should be allowed the discretion of either sending them to a central institution or boarding them out—Adams, W., 15427; Wandesford, R. H. P., 13325; Dunne, Miss, 26676.

Those who have no friends should be sent to a central institution—Dagg, J. B., 17698-9.

The idea of sending them to a central institution would be excellent, except for the objection of the people to being removed from their own localities—Jones, B., 27376.

The dread of being buried in a pauper's grave would prevent a great many from going to a central institution—Blackett, Geo., 12900; McDonnell, W., 27031; Harrington, D. D., 22935; Boyscott, B., 29020.

It would mitigate the hardship of removal if they received a definite right of burial in their own district—Jones, B., 27376; Linahan, T., 28573.

A diurnal workhouse in the country should be set apart for the aged and infirm in the North Dublin Workhouse—McDonnell, J., 12873-53.

Guardians should be empowered to board out in a neighbouring workhouse—McHarge, J., 20603; O'Neill, P. J., 15871.

Establishing a system of treatment for higher than they receive at home encourages them to enter the workhouse—Spanett, N. J., 17532.

Arrangements should be made in workhouses to provide some occupation for those able to work—Green, Mrs. M., p. 617; Meehan, P. A., 12011.

Cottage almshouses should be provided for the destitute of good character—Dawling, Dr., 9194-61.

Cottage residences should be provided for married couples—Macanabell, A., 9623; O'Garra, D. L., p. 978; 29115-7.

Opposed to the providing of cottage residences for married couples—Thomson, J. M., 11533.
